Among the automotives on ABC are General Motors, the Pontiac and Buick divisions of GM, Kaiser-Frazer dealers and Pontiac dealers of N. Y. Web had Packard and Chrysler on tele last year, but those spenders have ankled the medium.

Philly Now Edging Chi as Major Origination Point for TV Shows

Philadelphia, Jan. 8.

With several major network television shows having closed down in Chicago this season, Philadelphia is gradually assuming a top role as a network origination point. Check on the nets' current schedules reveals that Chi still leads Philly, with 12 network originations to Philly's eight, but with the webs still cramped for studio space in N. Y., they're turning to Philly more and more for shows they can pick up and feed to their affiliates cross the country.

Situation is somewhat of a ripley in the trade, since Philly never meant much for network radio, while Chi staked out its place in the radio programming picture early in broadcasting's history. One answer may be the fact that CBS-TV which has no primary affiliate in Chi, has turned to Philly for most of its programming outside N. Y. and Hollywood. CBS now has four programs emanating from Philly's WCAU-TV. Web will buy WBKB, the Balaban & Katz station in Chi, if and when the United Paramount-ABC merger plan goes through. At that time, it's believed, CBS

Coke Fizzes Out On Kosty TVer

Future status of Coca-Cola in radio and television appears to be up in the air, and the anticipated Coke company sponsorship of the Andre Kostelanetz TV musical series is now out the window. It's understood that in the forthcoming weeks, the soft drink outfit will reappraise its programming setup with an eye toward staking a major claim in the video sweepstakes. Initially it was planned to install Kostelanetz as a Sunday afternoon attraction on CBS-TV, with Columbia putting considerable stress on a Kosty audition show.

It's virtually a certainty that Edgar Bergen will wash up with Coca Cola at the end of the current season, when his radio contract expires. Coke company also sponsors Mario Lanza on NBC radio.

Hallicrafters' Come-On: 150 Miles or Money Back

Chicago, Jan. 8.

In a move to increase tele set sales in fringe areas, Hallicrafters Co. is guaranteeing 150-mile reception on nine 1952 models unwrapped yesterday (Mon.) at National Sales Convention. Manufacturer is placing a money-back warranty on sets with provision that buyers get "satisfactory" reception up to 150 miles from station.

Company claims guarantee is possible because of new powerful "super dynamic tuner" and the fact that the FCC recently approved a boost of transmitter signal strength.

Walter O'Keefe 'Big Store' Gets CBS-TV Test Kine

Walter O'Keefe, whose "Double Or Nothing" has been a longtime feature on the radio nets, may wind up in television on CBS. Latter web is cutting an audition kine of a new audience participation show, with O'Keefe as emcee, during the next several weeks in N. Y.

Show, titled "Big Store," is the brainchild of CBS producer Irving Mansfield. If the test kine is successful, it's believed O'Keefe will move to N. Y., which means his "Double Or Nothing" would also emanate from the east.

United Nations Radio Division is launching one of its most extensive projects, "UN Communications Campaign," to get 20,000,000 more listeners to UN broadcasts by June.

Among the reasons for the drive is the fact that 1952 is an election year and interest in national affairs may result in radio stations tending to devote more time to political airers at the expense of UN programs.

Backing the campaign are some 35 national organizations, including the League of Women Voters, Rotary International, National Education Assn., YMCA, YWCA, United Church Women and National Conference of Christians and Jews. Over 8,000 civic leaders in 250 cities are being invited to form

MIKE, BUFF WALLACE'S CBS POLITICO STRIP

CBS-TV, furthering its plans for coverage of the political conventions in Chicago next summer, has decided to send its husband-and-wife team of Mike and Buff (Cobb) Wallace to Chi to originate a daily show during the run of the political conclaves. In addition, the web will stage a "Man of the Day" show, with both programs to be grooved mainly for the housewife audiences.

Mike and Buff show now is aired cross-the-board from 3 to 3:30 p.m., but the specific time at which it will be aired from Chi will depend on the conventions' schedules. Duo is expected to interview top politicos and party potentates. "Man of the Day" will also be an interview-type show, with George Allen, White House confidante who's serving as a consultant to CBS, helping to line up the subject each day.

NETS FEAR THEY EXPOSE LIVE TELE

After more than two years of growing anxieties over inability to grab off some of the more recent-vintaged feature pix for television, the TV impresarios today are beginning to reverse themselves.

Now that some of the more respectable-budgeted, well-produced films dating back only a year or two are beginning to find their way into television, there is a mounting concern, particularly around the TV networks, that they may do more harm than good in the overall programming picture.

Primarily, the worriment stems from a sudden realization that the more qualitative feature pix that have reached the TV screens are beginning to show up the poorness of the slovenly-produced live dramatic shows, notably those in the adventure-mysterioso idiom. In contrast to these latter attractions, of which there is an abundance on the various webs, the well-produced, carefully-directed feature film presentations are leaving an indelible impression on the viewers and are already beginning to stand out as beacon lights.

The TV moguls right now are thinking a year and two ahead when, it's virtually conceded, the TV floodgates will be open to all pix comers. How, they are asking, will the moderate-budgeted live dramatic show be able to compete, production-wise, with the lavish pix presentations? It's these half-hour, run-of-the-mill live series that have been the come-on for sponsors with medium-sized bankrolls. And these are the clients who, basically, are the life blood of network television.

It's still too early to accurately gauge the seriousness of what many feel may be the new TV Frankenstein, since only a handful of the more qualitative feature films have been released for video screening. But they see as a straw in the wind the unprecedented TV audience reaction among stations around the country that have had access to such pix.

The fact that Cincinnati's WLW-T, to cite but one example, has been engaging in some virtual handsprings in jubilation over the manner in which the city has flocked to its channel for its newly-acquired feature pix presentations (and this is one of the basic NBC affiliates taking the cable ride on live dramatic shows) is but one facet in the growing dismay over what the future may portend.

CBS-TV Mulls Own 'Quiz-Panel Dept.'

CBS-TV is switching its stand against panel-quizzers in cream time. Although the web had been trying to move Sanka's "It's News to Me" out of the Monday 9:30 p.m. period, against wishes of the client and Young & Rubicam, CBS-TV has now okayed the panel stanza's right to the berth.

Web is also allowing another participationer, "Break the Bank," to go into the 9:30 p.m. slot on Sundays, in the cutback of the General Electric "Fred Waring Show."

Change of heart is reportedly due to the good showing in viewers-per-dollar data made by the Mark Goodson-Bill Todman airers, "News," "Beat the Clock" and "What's My Line."

CBS is understood to be considering setting up its own department to produce audience participation and quiz shows, thus competing with the Goodson-Todman outfit, an indie packaging operation. Previously CBS took all of the G-T shows, but recently the packager sold "The Name's the Same" to ABC-TV.

DF&S Tops Agencies in B'casting For 18th Consecutive Year, Billing $21, 334,172; Y&R 2d, BBD&O, 3d

Red Face

Hollywood, Jan. 8.

Shall Stalin's face appear in the montage opening used by United Press Movietone News on KECA-TV? That's the burning question of the day.

Station had so many squawks about the inclusion of the Russian leader's phiz in the opening shot that it decided to toss the problem in the laps of the town's televiewers. Squawkers weren't satisfied by the explanation that Stalin is considered a newsworthy personage so a mail poll is underway to determine public reaction.

Dancer-Fitzgerald-Sample topped the agency field in combined AM and TV time billings for 1951, the 18th consecutive year it has led the pack.

Time billings for the top agencies, as supplied by the four radio and four tele nets and released by D-F-S, follow: (1) D-F-S, $21,334,172; (2) Young & Rubicam, $18,356,745; (3) BBD&O, $15,056,657; (4) Benton & Bowles, $13,043,067; (5) J. Walter Thompson, $12,813,868; (6) William Esty, $10,967,224; (7) Cunningham & Walsh, $8,593,080; (8) Leo Burnett, $8,496,843; (9) Compton, $7,921,081; (10) McCann-Erickson, $6.582.448; (11) Ruthrauff & Ryan, $5,767,826; (12) Blow, $5,449,331; (13) Lennen & Mitchell, $5,419,869; (14) Cecil & Presbrey, $5,235,649; (15) J. F. Murray (AM billings only), $5,086,993; (16) Ward Wheelock (AM only), $4,321,635; (17) Wade (AM only), $3,593,243; (18) Foote, Cone & Belding (AM only), $3.513,500; (19) Kenyon & Eckhardt (TV billings only), $2,871,766; and (20) William H. Weintraub (TV only), $2,479,559.

Inclusion of the omitted AM or TV billings on the last six agencies would place them in higher positions in the list, although probably not jumping them into the top 10. It should be noted that these billings represent biz placed on the networks and don't include local and spot allocations.

Individual reports supplied to VARIETY from the networks follow, with CBS and DuMont providing only the ranking and omitting billings. NBC did not make its figures available.

'Goldbergs' Set As 15-Min. Strip Minus Phil Loeb

Deal was finalized last week for Gertrude Berg to move her "Goldbergs" situation comedy into the 7:15-7:30 p.m. slot on NBC-TV on a three-times-a-week basis (Monday-Wednesday-Friday). Thus the "Goldbergs" will be a back-to-back attraction with "Kukla, Fran and Ollie," which was recently shaved from 30 to 15 minutes.

Show preems Feb. 4, minus the services of Philip Loeb, who has been dropped from the cast as an aftermath of the "Red Channels" publication. Loeb, denying any affiliation with the Communist Party or sharing Communist sympathies, says he will appeal the ouster to Television Authority and Actors Equity Assn. for right to a hearing. (When, two months ago, VARIETY first learned and printed that Loeb was being dropped when "Goldbergs" would resume, it drew a round of denials.)

In a protest letter sent yesterday (Tues.) to George Heller, Television Authority prez, and Louis Simon, exec secretary of Actors Equity, the American Civil Liberties Union asked that Loeb be granted a hearing to answer the charges.

"Action toward Loeb," the ACLU letter added, "is one more instance of the growing trend toward making political opinion rather than competent performance the criterion for employment in radio-TV field." Patrick Murphy, ACLU exec director, and Elmer Rice, chairman of the National Council of Freedom for Democracy,' signed the letter.

The 7:15-7:30 time has been occupied on a cross-the-board basis by the "Bob and Ray Show." Latter show will continue in the Tuesday-Thursday segments, having been repacted for another 13-week cycle.

"Goldbergs" has been sold for the Monday spot to the American Vitamin Corp. The network is currently negotiating for a food company to pick up the Wednesday-Friday strips.

60G RAP FOR KFVD IN NIGHTTIME FADE

Hollywood, Jan. 8.

KFVD is fading from nighttime broadcasting because KDKA, Pittsburgh, has been designated as the key station in event of a national emergency, going round the clock on Jan. 13.

Indie station manager Frank Burke, Jr., says it will cost the station about $5,000 monthly in lost commercials. Clear channel KDKA has dominant control of the band.

'Town Meeting' Set for ABC-TV

"America's Town Meeting of the Air," veteran radio discussion program, will get a televersion on ABC-TV in the 6:30-7 p. m. period Sundays, starting Jan. 27. Reichhold Chemicals, Inc., is picking up the tab, via MacManus, John & Adams agency.

Show will be beamed on all five ABC-TV o-and-o stations, plus Cleveland, Washington and Philly. It will be live in the east, with kine airings in Frisco and L.A.

George V. Denny, Jr., will be moderator. Program will originate from ABC's Elysee Theatre rather than Town Hall, and a replica of the old legislative chambers at Philly's Independence Hall will be used as settings. In the switch from AM to TV, film clips will be used and members of the studio audience will be permitted to discuss issues with the guest speakers rather than merely tossing questions at them.

Transit Radio Fades In Omaha; Revenue Off

Omaha, Jan. 8.

Omaha bus riders will no longer get music and news with their rides. President Paul Fry of the Inland Broadcasting Co. said last Friday (4) that KBON-FM, which had supplied broadcasts for buses the last two years, will cease on Jan. 15. KBON-FM's license will be surrendered to the FCC, he said.

"It has become impossible to maintain—the top programs and technical standards the street railway officials insist upon," he said. He added that advertising revenues, originally an important part of the service, have declined to nothing, due to the uncertainty clouding FM.

ARTHUR GODFREY

With Mariners, Janette Davis, Tony Marvin, Archie Bleyer's Orch, others Producer: Will Roland
15 Mins., Mon.-thru-Thurs., 10:15 a.m.
LEVER BROS.
CBS-TV, from N. Y.

(Ruthrauff & Ryan, McCann-Erickson)

Now that NBC has embarked on a full scale morning semester of programs, CBS has come back with a short segment of Arthur Godfrey to solidify its own ayem TV position. This section is, of course, Godfrey's radio program wired for sight, and it will be sufficiently effective in enticing a hefty section of the audience away from the competition for that time period.

The fact that the cameras are trained on the show apparently makes little difference to Godfrey and the rest of the cast. The atmosphere is that of radio studio, the cast reads from script and the singers look at their music while performing.

Godfrey, of course, was in his usually good form when caught. He kidded the script and the commercials. Some of his stuff sounds as though it might offend the sponsor, but apparently, he's in a position to tell off a bankroller and it seems that his ribs can sell the product.

The simulcast is sponsored on alternate days by Rinso and Pepsodent. There will be no simulcast on Fridays when Godfrey works from his Virginia farm while the rest of his cast works from the studio. CBS-TV has apparently latched onto an inexpensive but comparatively effective method of stopping some of the effectiveness of the NBC lineup. Jose.

A CHRISTMAS CAROL

With Sir Ralph Richardson, Arthur Treacher, Melville Cooper, Norman Barr, Margaret Phillips, Robert Hay Smith, Malcolm Keen, Bobby White, Alan Napier, Gypsy Raine, others Producer: Fred Coe
Director: Gordon Duff
Adapter: David Swift
30 Mins.; Tues., 9 p.m.
U. S. Steel
NBC-TV, from New York

(BBD&O)

U. S. Steel made its first venture into television with this one-shot dramatization of "A Christmas Carol" in the Procter & Gamble "Fireside Theatre" time slot on Christmas Day. It was a sock offering, but something of a waste of talent with such names as Melville Cooper and Arthur Treacher cast in roles that had them before the cameras for only a few moments.

Sir Ralph Richardson, who was brought to the U. S. from England solely for this performance, was superb as Scrooge. Despite the frequency with which the Dickens classic has been told, Richardson was able to breathe life into the character of the misanthrope. It was a far-from-stereotyped handling, with his effectively projecting Scrooge's smug niggardliness in opening scenes, his quaking at the sight of the spectres, his jubilation at seeing the scene of a bygone Christmas, and his final recognition of the value of warmth and understanding. The distinguished British actor was able to get into his portrayal a full emotional range, from pathos to humor.

But, as usual in many all-star layouts, the use of top actors in lesser roles left the audience asking for more. Specifically, Treacher as the ghost of Christmas Present and Cooper as Christmas Past had little chance to display their talents. Margaret Phillips as Mrs. Cratchitt similarly had a scant part. In toto the cast did well, with Norman Barr as Bob Cratchitt, Gypsy Raine as Mrs. Fezziwig, Robert Hay Smith, (an imported-from-England moppet actor) as Tiny Tim, Malcolm Keen as Marley's Ghost and Bobby White as a young caroleer.

Despite the compression that was necessary, David Swift's adaptation caught the flavor of the piece and Fred Coe's production and Gordon Duff's direction realized most of the potentialities in the opus. Camerawork was fine, as in the unusual angle shot of Scrooge supposedly at a high window. Otis Riggs' sets were convincing and Harry Sosnik's score adept.

U. S. Steel's plug was limited to a brief holiday message by George Hicks and Irving S. Olds, Steel's board chairman. Bril.

DAVE 'N' CHARLEY

With Cliff Arquette, Dave Willock
Producers-writers, Arquette, Willock
Director: John B. Lyman III
15 Mins.; Mon.-thru-Fri., 11:30 a.m.
Sustaining
NBC-TV, from Hollywood

This looks like one of those package ideas which might have sounded good on paper but which, when transferred to the air, emerged as almost brutally static and dull. The brainchild of Cliff Arquette and Dave Willock, both w.k. radio personalities on the Coast, the preem (7) reflected radio thinking in its situation comedy format but, unless a brisk overhaul can give it the necessary sparkle, it seems like a loss for this daytime TV slot.

Initial stanza, setting the stage for the series, had Arquette and Willock as a couple of cronies, the former playing a doddering, senile oldster and Willock as a young, unemployed clerk or something. Story line had Willock working on one of those mixed-up Presidents contests from the newspapers, and visiting Arquette's shabby home to escape the noise in his boarding house. Arquette naturally offered his assistance, with the result that Willock's completed puzzles wound up in smoking embers on the stove.

Gags were sporadic, ranging from the unfunny lines arising from the old man's deafness, to a more visual one about the bath in the upstairs apartment leaking. Judging from Arquette's made-up resemblance to a "Lum 'n' Abner" character, the show may have some pull in the hinterlands. Even that's doubtful, though, unless some way is found to breathe some life into it. Stal.

THE LATIN SHOW

With La Playa Orch, Bobby Escoto, Johnny Lopez, Isabella Campo, Johnny Rodriguez Trio, Afra & Vega, Maria Melendez; Art ("Pancho") Raymond, emcee
Producer: George Goldner
Director: Harvey Marlowe
30 Mins.; Wed., 7:30 p.m.
WOR-TV, N. Y.

Produced by George Goldner in association with the Tico Record Co., "The Latin Show" is an unpretentious chili variety layout, but may command a fair slice of those viewers with a leaning toward tropical tunes. Preem of the half-hour stanza on WOR-TV, N. Y., on Dec. 26 was built around the La Playa orch directed by Rene Touzet.

Ten-piece outfit adequately captured the flavor of a potpourri of Latino numbers augmented by the vocalling Bobby Escoto and Maria Melendez. Sandwiched in the session was a bit from dancer Isabella Campo, a couple of stints by the Johnny Rodiguez Trio (two guitars and maraccas), plus a spirited mambo dance by the terp team of Afra & Vega. Art ("Pancho") Raymond was a so-so emcee.

Presumably the show is designed to boost the platters of the Tico Record Co., co-producers of the program. But curiously no plugs were made on the inaugural, save for a lone production credit mention at the finale. Camerawork was conventional and the action was restricted to one small set. Withal, "The Latin Show" is a reasonably entertaining stanza with good possibilities for the future. Gilb.

KOVACS ON THE CORNER

With Edythe Adams, Dave Appell Trio, Pete Boyle
Director: Joe Behar
Writer: Kovacs
30 Mins.; Fri., 11 a.m.
NBC-TV, from Philadelphia

The uninhibited Ernie Kovacs (summer replacement for "Kukla, Fran & Ollie") swings right into his "Corner" network show a mere two hours after his 7-9 wakeup stint, "Three to Get Ready." Kovacs continues his unpredictable and zany character right from the kickoff. He walks into "Corner" all taped up and in contorted postures just so Edythe Adams can ask him how he feels, to which he responds "fine." Which is typical of what Kovacs will do to build up a visual gag.

Program has several gimmicks, notable among which is "Yoo Hoo Time." Capitalizing on the habit of most citizens waving the moment they get in front of a TV lens, Kovacs has set up a special period for the air-thrashers. A card announces the name of a lady from the audience and she gets up and waves to her heart's content, at Kovac's instigation. Another is the swapping of useless articles. Opener (7) was the first studio audience for Kovacs, station apparently figuring the laughs would help the comic, and is asked to bring things that have no conceivable use. Makes for good sight laughs; one of the articles offered being a highbuttoned ladies

MEET THE CHAMP

With servicemen of the U. S. A. and Wally Butterworth
30 Mins.; Thurs., 9:30 p.m.
LUCKY STRIKE
ABC-TV, from Washington

(BBD&O)

Lucky Strike's new sports tieup, "Meet the Champ," depends for its main appeal on dyed-in-the-wool boxing fans. Program pits servicemen against each other under amateur rules—four rounds of two minutes each. Since there are few top pros in uniform, the result is bound to be a slam-bang, get in there and slug affairs.

On the preem last Thursday (3), that's just what it was. Locale was the ring of Walter Reed Hospital in Washington. First two fisticufferies ended in round one. Third bout went the limit. Under such uncontrollable circumstances, ringside caller Wally Butterworth had his work cut out for him. This glib, smooth gent knit together the proceedings skillfully, also handling the interviews of winners after each go. Fight sequence in the initialer was Army vs. Navy, Marine vs. Air Force, Army vs. Navy.

Program rotates around various U. S. military establishments, each winner getting opportunity to grab off a title via succession of victories. In short, TV champs that may indicate future official recognition by the powers that be. This week's bouts (10) will be held at Fort Jay, Governor's Island, N. Y. Trau.

THE WHISTLING WIZARD

With marionettes
Writers: Allan Stern, Poot Pray
Producer: Bil Baird
Director: Frances Buss
30 Mins.; Sat., 11 a.m.
Sustaining
CBS-TV, from New York

Originally a 15-minute cross-the-board show when CBS was beaming its color TV, "The Whistling Wizard" is now a half-hour Saturday morning sustainer on the same net's black-and-white facilities. The Bil and Cora marionettes obviously have lost some of their eye appeal due to the missing tints. However, this has been largely overcome by clever manipulation of the dolls plus use of an entertaining story line.

For Saturday's (5) edition the program displayed a fascinating tale of a boy and a horse who were spirited away on a "flying rug" to "the land of the dragon." Perpetrators of this dastardly deed were the "spider lady" and "Kohlrabi." How the whistling wizard managed to track down the villains was a fitting climax for the "to-be-continued" yarn.

What makes "The Whistling Wizard" a notch above most of its puppet contemporaries are the lifelike figures, clever dialog and fine illusions that abound in the show. Illusion of the carpet floating in space was admirably done and the successful attempt of the horse to regain his perch on the rug represented a classic example of the art of puppeteering.

"Wizard" shapes up as a marionette airer with strong appeal to children. There's nothing complicated about the puppets' conversations, the action is logical and reminiscent of stories from fairy tale books which moppets in the six to 12 age bracket generally read with enthusiasm. Withal, the show would be a good medium for a breakfast cereal outfit or a maker of children's apparel. Gilb.

KING CALICO

With Doris Larson, Johnny Coons, Adele Scott, Warren Best, Angelo Antonucci
Director: Ed Skotch
Writer: Ray Chan
15 Mins.; Mon., Wed., Fri., 5:45 p.m.
Sustaining
WENR-TV, Chicago

"King Calico" is a pleasant little puppet offering, that should find an okay reception from the kiddies. The tri-weekly show also should garner approval from parents, because of its soft treatment and playdown of slambang violence that marks so many other moppet-angled stanzas.

Story line evolves around the activities of King Calico and his court, which includes a rag doll, raccoon, donkey, and mouse. With puppeteers Warren Best and Angelo Antonucci working in tandem there was plenty of action on show seen (2), as there were as many as four characters on stage at once.

The voices are all handled by Johnny Coons, it's a large job, but he carries it off expertly. Thanks to his adept projection, each mitten character is invested with a distinctive personality. Session is introed by Doris Larson in neat fashion.

Show is backgrounded by some highly attractive sets designed by Bill Newton. Good "mood" music is supplied by Adele Scott at the electric organ. Dave.

Tele Follow-Up Comment

Martha Raye, in her second tele show on All-Star Revue (NBC, Sat. 8 p.m.) indicated that she's one of the funniest lady buffoons around. Miss Raye was able to carry the major portion of comedy in an authoritative manner and worked the medium as though it belonged to her. The show was an excellent fusion of Miss Raye's talents with good writing and imaginative production by Leo Morgan. Robert Cummings offered additional name value as well as staunch support.

Program revolved around a dream sequence of the Cinderella theme. Miss Raye, a frustrated stay-at-home, imagines she's playing Cinderella to Cumming's Prince. There were some lusty comedic moments. There were times when Miss Raye was reminiscent of Milton Berle and Jerry Lewis. The comedienne worked energetically for most of the session, and results were commensurate with the effort put into it.

Other facets included a superior Cinderella ballet which called for use of jugglers and a midget.

There were some good comedy moments other than in the Cinderella sequences. The scene in which Miss Raye finds that she can work as a baby sitter came off exceedingly well. Nathaniel Frye aided that portion of the show.

Robert Montgomery's first production for his new sponsor, Johnson's Wax, via NBC-TV Monday night (7) turned out to be one of the smoothest he's done on NBC this season. A well-scripted adaptation by Thomas W. Phipps of John O'Hara's most recent novel, "The Farmers Hotel," the hour-long presentation was expertly cast, produced and directed. Story itself had its faults, but that was inherent in the original. (Johnson's has replaced the Bymart-sponsored "Somerset Maugham Theatre" on NBC-TV Monday nights, with the new show to alternate with "Lucky Strike Theatre," also produced by Montgomery.)

Story, which is virtually a "Grand Hotel" idea but on a smaller scale, dealt with a group of varied characters who were forced to spend an evening together in a newly-opened hotel in a small Pennsylvania town, when a snowstorm blocked the roads. Thomas Mitchell, as the hotel owner, turned in a moving performance, which was highlighted by his reaction at the denouement when news was brought to him that two of his guests had been killed by a drunken truck driver, whom they had antagonized during their short stay at the hotel. John Newland and Faith Brook scored as the couple who were murdered, heading up a fine supporting cast. Each was near-perfect for his role, including Joshua Shelley, as a smalltime vaude agent; Gretchen Hauser and Irene Dailey, as his dumb sister act; Edward Binns, as the truck driver; John Marriott, as the Negro barkeep; William Podmore, as the local medico; Katherine Raht, as the cook, and Richard Fraser, as a state patrolman.

Cast worked smoothly and efficiently under the hep direction of Dan Petrie, and the production accoutrements, particularly the settings by Syrjala, captured the mood of O'Hara's yarn. Plugs for Johnson's products, with Nelson Case as the chief blurber, were on film.

"Dragnet" is a brilliant example of the motion picture tailored for television. Withal, the camera is servant to the script, which is as it should be. This is a true police case series that has been successful in radio and preemed as a visualer on Dec. 16 as alternator to Chesterfield's Sunday evening NBC-TV "Sound Off Time" (Bob Hope, Fred Allen, Jerry Lester). With the latter scrapped the half-hour "Dragnet" moved into the skip-week Thursdays at 9 p.m. berth last week (3) for the ciggie company's (Liggett & Myers) Fatima. The actioner is a kingsize contribution to the medium and clearly Fatima's best program in the sight sphere, as per the first two efforts and particularly the new time bow-in.

Story-production-direction had unusual facets. First off, there was no waste motion, establishing the theme swiftly with racy, realistic dialog and deft locale transition. That technical advice is furnished by the chief of the Los Angeles police department is an obvious plus factor. No sadistic grilling or third-degree methods was practiced on suspects—the stock in trade of most other detectivers. Possibly more important, there was no violence or blood-letting, and none of the artificially contrived cliches to achieve suspense. "Dragnet" builds suspense sans gimmicks and machinations; it turns on movement and the spoken word, aided by what amounts to perfect blending via lensing.

In this one, concerned with the tracking down of a film player who has stolen $10,000 worth of narcotics from a hospital where he was once a patient, there were fine fillips of humor as well. The stanza in which the two sergeants trapped the suspect into a confession by relentless questioning on a picture set, while half a dozen takes were being made of one whodunit scene, was representative of TV entertainment at its best. When the criminal was being waltzed off the set by the policemen, the film director, having misconstrued the long interrogation, observed that the actor had given "a fine reading" in contrast to his inadequacies while emoting before the cameras. It gave the 30-minuter a concluding and conclusive ironic finish.

Last week's narrative was tastefully dedicated to Barton Yarborough, who died Dec. 19. He created the role of Sgt. Ben Romero. Jack Webb, who capably enacted Sgt. Joe Friday, also gave the tale taut, tense and swiftly paced direction. James E. Moser's script was clicko. Ditto Frederick Gately's photography. Producer is Homer Canfield. Latter's associate, and film editor, is Herbert L. Strock. Credit goes to all of them and the cast.

James Melton's "Ford Festival," trimmed to a half-hour from its original 60-minute running time, emerged as a much better production on the NBC-TV web Thursday night (3). Scissoring has permitted a tightening of the format, which always was virtually a straight variety presentation with little or no story line. In its new form, the show doesn't have much chance to pall on viewers and the entire cast, plus the guests, are better off for it. Ford Dealers, which bankrolls the program, cut it, of course, to save money, with Liggett & Myers picking up the vacated half-hour for the "Dragnet" series.

On the preem edition of the new format last week, Melton was suffering from a mild attack of laryngitis. He emceed, per usual, but his understudy, Joe Gaudio, took over his singing spots and did a workmanlike job on them. Rosemary Clooney scored with a couple of tunes, displaying a pert personality to go with her sock singing. Morey Amsterdam, in the other guest spot, did his standard monologing-cello playing bit, and, while some of the gags were dated, he came across well. Wally Brown, who's now a regular on the show, had little to do.

Production numbers were well-staged and executed by the singers and dancers and, in the new shortened form, were also tighter. Ford plugs, as usual, were good, with Dr. Roy K. Marshall again impressing with his erudite mechanical pitch in the middle spot.

Donald O'Connor again displayed his versatile and often socko talents on NBC-TV's "Colgate Comedy Hour" Sunday night (6), but evidenced at the same time that his writers aren't always up to him. Several of the skits, as well as one or two of the production numbers, misfired, in some cases because the necessary props failed to work on schedule but more often because the scripting failed to capture O'Connor's style of work. But, with Harpo Marx contributing his unique brand of zaniness to head a good guest lineup, the show came off as one of the better in the Colgate series.

O'Connor registered most solidly in a reprise of the song-writing team bit he did with Sid Miller in his first show this season. Backed by some clever material, he and Miller displayed a fine comedic sense, with the skit looking almost good enough to serve as the foundation of a weekly series on its own. Marx, as usual, chased the blondes around the studio and scored on his own with a pantomime skit, which featured some well-executed props. Pat Patrick, the "Ersil Twing" of Edgar Bergen's radio show, tried to do a straight emcee-type monolog and got lost in the dullness of his jokes. Gale Robbins impressed with few songs and with her work the skits.

O'Connor, of course, clicked with his singing and dancing, but the production numbers weren't up to the standard he set on his prior show. Best of them was the initial routine, based on a satiric list of New Year's resolutions about what he promised not to do on TV this year.

NBC-TV, N. Y.

Tchaikovsky's opera, "Pique Dame," "The Queen of Spades," had an exciting production last Thursday night (3) on NBC-TV, to enhance further the rep the NBC Television Opera Theatre deservedly is acquiring. Coming so soon after the unit's world preem of Menotti's "Amahl and the Night Visitors" Christmas Eve, the production did not suffer in light of "Amahl's" boff presentation, being able to stand on its own as fine TV musical entertainment.

This was accomplished even though "Pique Dame," despite its dramatic story, is a static opera (which may explain why it's rarely done in opera houses here). Peter Herman Adler, music and artistic director of this NBC series, who prepared the TV version, overcame this static quality rather ingeniously. Actually (as much as for time limitations as well as production problems), this English version gave only certain scenes from the opera. Adler pepped it up by making the production a spoken drama as well as song-story. Yarn was told in spoken dialog, with the operatic scenes serving as flashbacks, this alternating method making for variety and added interest. Segueing was smoothly done, too.

There were some defects, such as a somewhat stilted libretto and cliched dialog, in Jean Karsavina's translation, but these were of minor importance in the production as a whole. The drama moved, aided by a fluid camera. It was also very well cast and sung. Production showed imagination, in camera work, staging, direction and backgrounding.

Story concerns a young army officer in the Russia of 1830, too poor to play with the usual gambling set, hearing of an aged countess who had a magic formula for winning at cards, and ingratiating himself with the countess' young companion in order to learn the secret. Making love to the girl, he gains access to the countess' bedroom, and demands the secret under threat of death. The countess dies of fright, and the girl drowns herself when she realizes the captain's love-making was false. The captain himself goes mad after he dreams that the countess' ghost has given him the magic formula, and he loses what little money he has at the gaming table.

David Poleri, N. Y. City Opera Co. lead tenor, was an unusually stirring actor in the difficult captain's role. Although his tones at first were somewhat nasal and metallic, he shook this off to sing superbly in the strong latter scenes. Margarita Zambrana showed a nice dramatic soprano as the betrayed girl, Lisa. Winifred Heidt, also a N. Y. City Opera stalwart, had a relatively brief role as the countess, but dominated the scenes she appeared in, with her rich mezzo-soprano singing, her bearing and makeup. Ralph Herbert was an accomplished baritone as Tomsky, the card dealer. And Guy Tano, in a speaking role as the doctor-narrator, also did an impressive job.

Tchaikovsky's lush, dramatic music gave the production pulsing appeal, especially under Adler's sensitive batoning and good orchestral support. Poleri's several arias, and the French song of nostalgia which Miss Heidt sang, were standout. Long shots of the gaming room, with dancers in the background; the countess being prepared for bed by her maids; the shot through the mirror of the captain approaching the countess for the first time, were excellent TV. Carl Kent's sets and Liz Gillelan's costumes were superior. Samuel Chotzinoff, as producer, and Charles Polacheck as associate producer and television director, share in the credit, too. Bron.

REGENT CAMEO THEATRE

(Dark of the Moon)
With Alfred Drake, Rita Gam, Roy Fant, Winfield Hoeny, Maud Scheerer, Eric Fleming, Barbara Ashley, Millicent Coleman, Anita Webb, Agnes Yost, Essie Coryell, others
Producer-director: Al McCleery
Writers: Howard Richardson, William Berney
30 Mins.; Sun., 10:30 p.m.
REGENT CIGARETS
NBC-TV, from New York
(Brooke, Smith, French & Dorrence)

"Cameo Theatre," Albert McCleery's video theatre-in-the-round show, is back on NBC-TV, this time backed by Regent cigarets (which dropped "Leave It to the Girls" to take on the stanza). It should do well by the sponsor, since at 10:30 p.m. Sunday "Cameo" doesn't have opposition from other dramas, except for DuMont's "They Stand Accused" courtroom documents.

In "Dark of the Moon," the drama with music which hit Broadway in 1945, McCleery had a powerful vehicle, adapted for TV by the authors of the original, Howard Richardson and William Berney. However, though the story is potent, it is too complex to be condensed into a half-hour framework. The production suffered from the necessity for telescoping, with the rapid changes of mood resulting in a jumpy effect.

The story has a real folk-classic quality which cast its spell nevertheless. There's appeal in the tale of a witch-boy who for love of Barbara Allen is permitted to become human for a year, provided the gal stays faithful for that period. If she so much as kisses another man, she will die and the witch-boy condemned to a soulless existence, riding the sky on his eagle. When their child is stillborn, the superstitious hill people are convinced that Barbara Allen has been bewitched, and hold a meeting to drive away the evil spirits, resulting in Barbara's death and the witch-boys return to his supernatural state, underlining the theme that "humans kill the things they don't understand."

Production and direction were generally good, proving the versatility of the set-less Cameo approach. There were some lapses, however, as in the not-so-effective witch-girls and the unconvincing finale. Alfred Drake and Rita Gam handled their roles movingly and the support, which included some vets of the legit production, was good. Commercials for the king-size smoke were effective. Bril.

BASKETBALL SCOUT

With George Svendsen, Whitie Skoog, P. B. Juster, Bernie Wien
Producer-Writer: Svendsen
Director: George Anderson
15 Mins., Sun., 4:30 p.m.
JUSTER BROS.
WTCN-TV, Minneapolis

George Svendsen is a former U. of Minnesota and Green Bay gridiron star, coach and scout, who has had basketball playing and coaching experience, too. His present show, set for the cagers' season, is patterned after the 30-minute football layout which preceded it on this TV station as a prelude to the telecasts of the Sunday Chicago Bears and other pigskin clashes.

Again Svendsen proves to be right at home before the camera and possessor of a fine speaking voice, photogenic qualities and an ability to express himself well and quickly. He also demonstrates a proficiency at putting together a show that is certain to hold abundant interest for the many local hoop game enthusiasts.

In this show, Svendsen centers his attention principally on the Minneapolis Lakers and their just-played and upcoming games. His analyses are expert, of course. He illustrates various types and kinds of play on a blackboard and by means of motion picture clips, showing the Lakers and other teams in action in a way to increase his audience's knowledge of the game and, probably, their capacity for enjoying it.

Each week Svendsen has a basketball notable as a guest, such as Whitie Skoog, of the Lakers, last week. While seemingly overly long, the commercials, as in the football shows also sponsored by Justers, one of the city's leading men's stores, hold a degree of interest for men, too, because P. B. Juster, the establishment's president, and Bernie Wien, a slick announcer, give useful tips on male apparel.

There's a "basketball quiz" in connection with the show. Each week Svendsen answers questions on plays, players and rules. Questions sent in by watchers and used net the senders a $5 gift certificate and tickets to Lakers' games. For one question Svendsen himself asked Skoog how he developed a certain shot. Rees.

HALLMARK TELEVISION THEATRE

(Dr. Serocold)
With Sarah Churchill, femcee; Oscar Sterling, Isabel Elsom, Graham Velsey, Eileen Poe, June Peel, Zolya Talma, Olive Blakeney, others
Producer-director: William Corrigan
Writer: Jean Holloway
30 Mins.; Sun., 3:30 p.m.
HALLMARK
NBC-TV, from New York
(Foote, Cone & Belding)

"Hallmark Television Theatre" (which starting next week will be retitled "Hall of Fame") is making a bid for the sentimentalists in the video audience. That's an understandable sales strategy, in view of the sponsorship by Hallmark greeting cards. However, the opening vehicle went beyond sentiment into a cloying exhibit without much point.

Scripter Jean Holloway, one of radio's most prolific yarn-spinners, had a static plot in "Dr. Serocold." Tale dealt with a middle-aged British medico who took over the practice of an older colleague after the latter's death. Serocold himself feared that the was stricken with some dread disease and impatiently awaited a report from London. Meanwhile, the doc went about his duties, delivering a child, innoculating a little girl, counseling a patient, helping a blind lover, etc. The latter episode had something of a spark—the blind youth's wealthy mother wanted Serocold to help take her son away from a girl whom she feared was after her boy's dough. It was done mechanically, however, relying on the coincidences of the son's overhearing his mother's cruel remarks, followed by the girl's overhearing the medico's reassuring him of his sweetheart's love.

Show was episodic, which stemmed from the fact that the end—the doc's getting a report that his health was okay—had little to do with the events preceding it. Acting by Oscar Sterling as the physician and Isabel Elsom as his nurse was okay, and the production was good. What is needed is stronger material. Upcoming program, also by Miss Holloway, will be based on the Robert Browning-Elizabeth Barrett saga.

Sarah Churchill, who will occasionally also star in the series, did a neat job as hostess-narrator. Commercials for the greeting cards were done effectively and the date-book offer should generate interest in the client. Bril.

THOSE ENDURING YOUNG CHARMS

With Maurice Copeland, Betty Arnold, Clarence Hartzell, Norm Gottschalk, Gerald Garvey, Pat Matthews, Everett Clarke, Helen Barrett
Producer-director: Ben Park Writer: Bill Barrett
30 Mins.; Sun., 4:30 p.m.
Sustaining
NBC-TV, from Chicago

There's a kernel of a good idea in this family situation series, which debuted Dec. 30 for an alternate week ride on NBC-TV. However, on the evidence of the initialer, it's going to take a lot of nurturing in the writing department if it's to blossom into anything significant. The yarn, unreeled via competent thesping with adequate production trappings, matched the series' title in triteness.

The series is built around the doings of the Charm family, which includes the inevitable daff uncle. The characters, among them a loquacious delivery boy, are strictly stereotype, and the tale they had to tell was likewise. The pennyweight plot kicked off amidst a domestic rhubarb, with Mrs. C. griping about the lack of glamor in their life. So glamor was introduced in the person of a writer and his wife who dropped in for dinner. The scribbler turned out to be a phony and his frau a talkative bore. When the guests departed, Mrs. C. admitted her circle is pretty charmed, after all. (This pun on the family name wasn't used on the show, but several others of like quality were.)

Given something several degrees stronger in the way of material, the Charm menage might develop into something like a rural version of the Barbours. Betty Arnold and Maurice Copeland make an acceptable hubby and wife combo as Mr. and Mrs. C. Clarence Hartzell was particularly good as the eccentric uncle and Norm Gottschalk was okay as the snoopy grocery man. Gerald Garvey and Pat Matthews handled the youngsters' roles well as the Charms' son and daughter. Everett Clarke and Helen Barrett gave a fair reading of the broad roles as the author and wife. Dave.

ROY ROGERS SHOW

With Bob Hope, Dale Evans, Glenn Turnbull, Pat Brady, The Whippoorwills, Lou Bring Orch
Producer: Ed Sobol
Director: Jim Jordan
60 Mins.; Sun. (30), 6 p.m.
GENERAL FOODS
NBC-TV, from Hollywood
(Benton & Bowles)

Roy Rogers' entry into TV for the Post Cereal division of General Foods was a holiday high spot Sunday (30). Preem of his regular 30-minute filmed western on NBC-TV was preceded by a live, half-hour sendoff from Hollywood's El Capitan Theatre that included Bob Hope, Dale Evans (Mrs. Rogers) and a solid supporting cast.

Sporting a 10-gallon black chapeau a la Hopalong Cassidy, guest Hope was in fine fettle as he made with the mesa gags, aided by Rogers' straighting. The bon mots flew thick and fast in the prairie atmosphere and led into a nifty climax where Hope, Rogers and Trigger (the horse) joined in a hilarious poker game. Hand wound up with the steed knocking the table over and pushing Hope off the set.

Musical portion of the special presentation was equally topgrade. Rogers and Hope duetted a fetching "Tears in My Ears" that was highlighted by the hossopera star's yodeling. Miss Evans and The Whippoorwills, a vocal group, contribbed a couple sprightly numbers while Pat Brady, Rogers' film sidekick, crooned a novelty in the outdoor idiom. Good backing was supplied by Lou Bring's band and Glenn Turnbull scored with his eccentric dancing.

If anything, the live introduction served to strengthen Rogers' hold on the affections of his fans. He occasionally muffed a line but this was more than offset by his winsome personality and spirit of wholesomeness that have always pervaded his pictures. These qualities appeared even stronger on TV. Miss Evans was pert, relaxed and typified what everybody thinks the American girl should look like.

Film half of the inaugural layout offered no pretense at originality. There were the standard chases, the heavy, the guy who was wrongfully imprisoned, the break from jail and the happy ending. In short, the ingredients were the same to be found in almost any western. But despite a trite story, the initialer had to its credit a breezy pacing from director John English and excellent camerawork. Rogers was his sterling self and supporting players were good.

On the basis of the opening shot, "The Roy Rogers Show" will have scant difficulty in snaring a hefty slice of the juvenile supper hour audience for Post Cereals. Plugs, incidentally, were cleverly animated for the sponsor's "Sugar Crisp." Another point in bankroller's favor was the omission of blurbs for the live sendoff. Gilb.

BREAKFAST PARTY

With Mel Martin, Eileen Martin, Larry Downing, Bel-Aires Trio
Producer-director: Bob Gilbert
30 Mins.; Mon.-thru-Fri., 10 a.m.
Sustaining
NBC-TV, from Cincinnati

As the starting point of its new morning program lineup, NBC-TV is picking up this half-hour audience participationer from WLW-T, Cincinnati. Featuring Mel Martin, an exuberant-type emcee, the preem show (7) indicated the series will follow rather closely a number of similar programs on the air, which are grooved strictly for the housewives. As such, it should garner enough of an audience to lure in some participating bankrollers.

Martin and his small crew worked in a studio, which is probably the same used by Ruth Lyons for her noontime NBC video show, which was dressed up as a kaffeeklatsch. There were the usual interviews with interesting personalities in the audience (on the preem, it was an attractive policewoman), the pinning of an orchid on the oldest guest, etc. There was none of the raucous audience participation stunts, however, and little group singing, which should be an advantage for a show aired so early in the morning.

Martin displayed an affable personality and a know-how in catering to his predominantly femme audience, which should carry him through with ease. Eileen Martin, gal vocalist, treated the "Snowflakes" number capably and shared in the chit-chat among Martin and his guests. Bel-Aires, the musical trio, worked well in both the comedy and music departments, and Larry Downing, the male singer, scored solidly with his rendition of "There Goes My Heart."

Production was adequate for the show and the camera work reflected the competent professionalism of the WLW-T crew. Stal.

CLAUDIA: THE STORY OF A MARRIAGE

With Joan McCracken, Hugh Reilly, Margaret Wycherly, others Producer: Carol Irwin
Writer: Dougherty Brown
30 Mins., Sun., 6:30 p.m.
GENERAL FOODS
NBC-TV, from New York
(Y & R. Benton & Bowles)

It was inevitable that "Claudia" should reach the TV screen. Rose Franken's show biz war horse, which has done multiple duty on stage, screen and radio since graduating from the mags 14 years ago, is getting a video reincarnation under General Foods auspices, and preemed Sunday evening (6) in the 6:30 to 7 slot on NBC-TV under Carol Irwin's production aegis. Thus, GF now enjoys a 90-minute franchise on choice Sabbath evening NBC time segments, with Roy Rogers and "Young Mr. Bobbin" rounding out the triumvirate of half-hour showcases.

Fortified with such personalities as Joan McCracken in the title role and vet legit actress Margaret Wycherly as the mother, "Claudia" nonetheless was a static, listless affair on the preem installment, failing to generate any warmth or sympathy. Certainly these are two major requisites when it comes to successfully depicting the life and times of the teenager who must hurdle the transition of love for her mother to that of her husband.

Assuming that it will require a number of installments to vest the show with the necessary "heart" and project a quality of realness, the fact remains that "Claudia" in its first time up was almost totally bereft of any imaginative scripting. Even such talented performers as Miss McCracken and Miss Wycherly were handicapped by writing that was strictly out of the cliche books. Particularly in Miss McCracken, there is a distinctive quality that's refreshing, but without the much-needed sparkle in the scripting even the most inspiring performance can be wasted. Hugh Reilly, also from legit, plays the husband role, but he was given little opportunity to do more than strike up some unreal poses and mouth some innocuous lines.

Unfortunately, the first episode, on the eve of Claudia's marriage, had a phoney ring about it, since the conflict—the boy begging off from marriage because his job wouldn't permit for a honeymoon out of town—was based on such a weak premise. The resolving of the denouement, by sending mother off to the honeymoon cottage to leave the apartment free for the newlyweds, had a similar "so what?" limpness about it.

Production-wise, "Claudia" enjoyed an exactness for TV detail and maintained high pro standards. Major plugs are devoted to Swandown Cake Mixes, with Maxwell House Coffee also tagging on for the ride. Rose.

THE BATTLE OF THE AGES

With John Reed King, Peggy King, Charlie Althoff, Kirkwood & Goodman, W. C. Handy; Norman Brokenshire, announcer; Al Fanelli, music
Producer: Norman Livingston
Director: Mende Brown Writer: Tom Murray
30 Mins.; Tues., 9 p.m.
SERUTAN, GERITOL
DUMONT, from N. Y.
(Franklin Bruck)

New Year television came in like a lamb on the virgin day (1) with a contrived talent contest called "The Battle of the Ages." This one pretends to pit pro youngsters vs. show biz vets, with that unique contraption known as the applause meter deciding the winners.

Such a hook, being innocuous enough if not very bright, would get a passing mark in the presence of class showcasers. The acts presented were just routine, and with no name value save possibly that of the revered blues man and trumpeter, W. C. Handy.

The challenge pairings were young Peggy King, recently at Blue Angel, N. Y., who chanted a couple of tunes, against oldster Charlie Althoff, rube comic and fiddler, and Jim Kirkwood & Lee Goodman, young funsters (also at Blue Angel) vs. Handy. The meter gave the nod to the vets. Format provides for voting by viewers in the event that the meter indicates a Mexican standoff. In this case, the home audience was saved the trouble. There's a donation setup in which the sponsor enriches the Actors Fund of America when vets win, and the scholarship fund of the Professional Children's School if the young entertainers come out on top. Addenda gimmick has oldest and youngest members of studio audience awarded prizes.

John Reed King is permanent emcee with star billing. He delivered a hard-driving commercial for Geritol. Norman Brokenshire was in there for Serutan. Trau.

THE PEOPLE ACT

With Robert Trout, others
Producer-writer: Irving Gitlin
25 Mins.; Sun., 10:05 p.m.
Sustaining
CBS, from New York

The basic importance of "The People Act" is not in this preem of a series as such but rather what its effectiveness is and will be in galvanizing the citizenry to action. The seriousness of its lofty objective is indicated in its underwriting by the Ford Foundation for which the CBS TV-Radio Workshop has gone into the field as reporter-producer. David Moore and A. Westin are field reporter chiefs.

It is geared for 26 "representative oase histories of community problems effectively dealt with through the use of democratic procedures by interested individuals and citizens groups in widely separated and dissimilar localities." The programs consist of on-scene tape recordings made by the same CBS radio unit which produced the avocative "Nation's Nightmare" last summer. Only a few months passsage of time and the country is again faced with a fresh series of problems anent organized vice and crime which will make the Kefauver investigations small potatoes in comparison. Thus "The People Act" comes into the picture during a period when the searchlight is most needed, especially in the matter of that kind of public apathy which the Kefauver Committee itself mentioned in its summary of work done. If the public continues to display mental laziness despite everything, this series can be scrapped. But if only one person in each state is aroused out of lethargy, "The People Act" will have been eminently worthwhile and a credit to its protagonists.

The bow-in story-in-actuality concerned the 1949 murder of a schoolteacher in Gary, Ind., and what the women in that town did to bring about punishment. They didn't find the mureder, but they did the next best thing: their campaigns drove the politicians and their henchman from positions of power. It just so happens that a murder in Gary is not an isolated thing. The town was credited as being the No. 2 crime center in the U. S. A. Its proximity to Chicago was not lost sight of. The women who went to the front did so at the expense of threats, but they continued their activities, made vice and crime a key election issue, drove the rascals out, and saw to it that syndicated rackets were destroyed at the core, driven underground, where the ozone is not so pure.

Production-wise, the taped job was good, perhaps a bit halting at times, which, of course, gave it that much more realism in a done-from-life enactment. Robert Trout, in his first major program since returning to the Columbia colors, did a deft stint as narrator. The timing was slick; and the slicker this kind of "show" is, the better its homework vis-a-vis John Q. Public.

THE BLACK MUSEUM

With Orson Welles, narrator
Producer: Harry Alan Towers
Writer: Ira Marion
30 Mins., Tues., 8:30 p.m.
MBS, from N. Y.

Produced in England as an M-G-M package, "The Black Museum" is run-of-the-chill dramatic series that's above-par for this genre. Solidly scripted and persuasively performed, this show gets additional horror values from Orson Welles' portentous narration which bridges the plot sequences. Welles' mysterioso gabbing style sets an appropriately clammy atmosphere for this session and the surrounding production succeeds in sustaining the mood.

Series' title refers to the Scotland Yard collection of murder instruments and the opening show was a gory yarn about a corpse stuffed in a trunk. The airlane detective work is much the same on both sides of the Atlantic except that the British coppers are much more literate and urbane in tracking down the culprit. The substance of this yarn was otherwise grooved along familiar lines.

M-G-M THEATRE OF THE AIR
("The Feminine Touch")

With Marsha Hunt, Jay Jostyn, Louise Albritton, Howard Dietz, others
Producer: Raymond Katz
Director: Marx Loeb
Writer: William Kendall Clarke
Music: Joel Herron
60 Mins.; Sat., 8:30 p.m.
MBS, from New York

With the wealth of film script material in Metro's files, it seems that Mutual's new series "M-G-M Theatre of the Air" could have selected a better scenario for its preem offering. "The Feminine Touch" wasn't a successful pic offering in its initial release and fared no better in the radio rehash.

Story line centers on a young married couple who believe that a marriage can only be successful if it's based on mutual trust and respect. The husband even goes so far as to pen a tome on jealousy which his wife tries to peddle to a publisher. The publisher is more interested in the wife than the book and the plot moves into a weakly contrived groove from which it never pulls out. The yarn's entanglements create more noise than humor and the 60 minuter achieves little stature.

Thesps Marsha Hunt, Jay Jostyn and Louise Albritton try to keep things gay but suffer from the script's inadequacies. Marx Loeb's direction rates a kudo for its fast pace. Howard Dietz, Broadway librettist and Metro veepee, filled the emcee spot nicely. He'll also host the future stanzas, which according to skedded lineup looks like Metro is keeping its best yarns locked tightly in its vaults.

VOICES AND EVENTS OF 1951

With H. V. Kaltenborn, George Hicks, W. W. Chaplin, Lief Eid, Kenneth Banghart, Bob Trout
Producer: Joe Myers
Director: Jack Gerber
60 Mins., Sun. (30), 5 p.m.
TRAVELERS INSURANCE CO.
NBC, from New York
(Young & Rubicam)

NBC's hour-long sum up of 1951's top news stories Sunday (30) was an exciting tape compilation of the voices that made history during the past year. Web's Radio News and Special Events department rates kudos for a clear, well paced job.

Some of NBC's top commentators and news analysts pitched in on the replay of the voices and events with vivid and terse appraisals of cause and effect. It was a bangup operation in all segments. Producer Joe Myers and director Jack Gerber collected and edited the tapes of the voices which played an important role in making up the past year's history. Their choice left nothing to memory since they backgrounded each event with a lead up tape or an explanatory commentary.

Such 1951 moments as the Kefauver investigation, MacArthur's report to Congress, Washington's mink coat scandals, Judy Garland's Palace Theatre, N. Y., opening, Brooklyn Dodgers' pennant debacle, etc., were recaptured effectively. Bob Trout emceed the summary in top style and the Travelers Insurance Co.'s commercial pitches were unobtrusive. It was a fitting closeout to a hectic year.

ADVENTURES OF CASANOVA

With Errol Flynn, others
Producer-director-writer: William Robson
Music: Walter Schumann
30 Mins.; Thurs., 8 p.m.
MBS, from Hollywood

The Mutual network's 1952 build-up pitch via a series of transcribed shows featuring top Hollywood names had a weak entry in the Errol Flynn "Adventures of Casanova" teeoff. Marquee value of the Flynn label may win over some dialers but if the preem (3) was any indication of what's to come, it's doubtful if the web'll be able to hold 'em in that segment.

Series centers on the adventures of a modern-day roue whose monicker Christopher Casanova forces him into affairs with the lovelies of the world. Aside from the appellation gimmick, series is just another adventure yarn presented with little imagination. At times it borders on the banal and plays down to the listener with its trite dialog and situations. William Robson, who took on the triple role of producer-writer-director for the initialer, concocted a confusing yarn which held little interest. Series will use other scripters during the course of its Mutual ride.

In the role of the dashing Casanova, Flynn projects an ersatz charm and his thesping suffers through lack of mike savvy. The screen hero, it seems, would do better on TV where his physique and good looks would overshadow the unimpressive reading. Other cast members are adequate in their lesser assignments. Robson's direction wasn't much help.

PAULA STONE

With Phil Goulding, others
15 Mins.; Mon.-Fri., 12 (noon)
Writer: Paula Stone
PEQUOT MILLS
WMGM, N. Y.

Paula Stone, a familiar figure in radio and most other phases of show biz, is well qualified to speak on events in the entertainment field. One of the original Stepping Stones, a famous family act that toured the big time, Miss Stone has been in films, and has produced legit shows. She was co-producer with Hunt Stromberg, Jr., of "The Red Mill" and is currently represented on the Stem with "Top Banana."

Miss Stone, in her 15-minute stint, displays an interesting line of chatter. Efforts on her preem (Mon.) were concentrated on setting the stage for subsequent shows and there was a taped interview with Yvonne De Carlo. Quality of the taping was not up to par and there were some stretches in which the verbiage was hardly intelligible.

She's okay with the badinage, can conduct an interview in a manner to retain interest and has a vivid delivery. Phil Goulding, announcing the show, makes a good foil when Miss Stone needs a conversational partner.

55 Mins., Mon. thru Fri., 9:05 p.m.
WQXR, N. Y.

Although longhair devotees usually prefer their music straight with a minimum of chatter interference this new WQXR series registers as interesting mixture of music and gab. Idea underlying the "Music Magazine" stanza is the presentation of musical selections which are tied together by a historical, literary or personality theme. Frederic Grunfeld, who handles this series in a one-man operation, does an excellent job of announcing his well-written and stimulating continuity.

On one recent stanza (3), the show revolved around the musical criticism of one Corno di Bassetto, a George Bernard Shaw nom de plume in 1888-89 when he was reviewing concerts and operas. Music on this session was linked to Shaw's opinions on such composers as Wagner, whom he revered, and Brahms and Verdi, whom he initially disliked but later learned to appreciate. The show's format undoubtedly helps to stir interest in the selections played and could serve as an easy introduction to longhair music for the uninitiated.

Radio Follow-Up

"Gracie Fields Show" preemed over Mutual Friday night (4) in the 8:30 p.m. slot, but from an historical perspective it wasn't a bonafide preem for the transcribed, half-hour airer had been beamed on a number of stations over the past couple seasons. Program originally was produced by M-G-M Radio Attractions as an open-ender.

Bow on Mutual was through joint auspices of the net and Metro. Aside from Miss Fields, the variety show format included Bernard Braden, a Canadian humorist; Billy Ternent's band and "The Keynotes," a British vocal group led by Johnny Johnson.

Miss Fields' style and ability at turning a tune ably withstands the attack of time. Her vibrant delivery and her own peculiar mannerisms have an ageless quality. But even so she still requires fresh material to keep herself up among the top stars from a rating point of view.

Unfortunately, Friday's inaugural had a veneer of datedness. The songs were old and what little comedy there was hardly contemporary. Braden was unimpressive as a quasi emcee. He spoke too rapidly and had no sense of timing. Ternent's musical backing as well as the harmonies of "The Keynotes" were no more than adequate.

Show was saved only by the fine work of Miss Fields. To hear her sing such typically British airs as "One Day When We Were Young" or "Mother's Wedding Day" was well worth any dialer's time. However, before this stanza can hope to build its audience there'll have to be crisper writing and a firm emphasis on the contemporary.

In lieu of a sponsor's message, Mutual inserted some public service announcements in behalf of the National Safety Council's drive to cut down traffic deaths along with a plug for U. S. Defense Bonds. There was also a house puff pointing up "The Movie Stars Are Moving to Mutual!"

CAFE ISTANBUL

With Marlene Dietrich, Ken Lynch, Arnold Moss
Director: Murray Burnett
Producer: Leonard Blair
30 Mins.; Sun., 9:15 p.m.

"Cafe Istanbul," Marlene Dietrich's first dramatic radio series, is being showcased in a cream Sunday night spot, following the high-rated Walter Winchell show. As the title indicates, the Dietrich vehicle is an exotically upholstered soaper marked by topflight production values and an ace supporting cast. The fly in this dish of Turkish halvah, however, is the scripting which sidetracked the preem show into a bog of corny clichés.

Although each stanza will present a complete episode, the yarn for this series will center in a Near East cafe where Miss Dietrich, as the sultry Mlle. Madou, performs before a clientele made up of international spies, murderers, secret police and a smattering of old lovers. Arnold Moss, one of the cast regulars in this series, plays as a local copper while Ken Lynch, another regular, plays an American with an obsession for Miss Dietrich and a "hard buck." It's a corny assemblage of characters and the plots are tailored to fit.

The getaway stanza unfolded a purple yarn about hidden oil wells and the search for the killer of one of the international gangsters. It was an incredible and confusing succession of events in which Miss Dietrich saves her lover through an unlikely ruse after betraying him to the police. En route, she sang a few bars of "La Vie En Rose" for the high point of an otherwise silly script.

CARL SMITH SHOW

5 Mins., Mon.-thru-Fri., 3:45 p.m.
Prod.-Dir.-Writer: Nowell Digby
KELLOGG CO.
CBS, from New York
(Leo Burnett)

Kellogg's for the past few seasons has latched onto a policy of multi-weekly five-minute shows. Apparently it's found the policy to be successful. To the lay listener, it is similar to getting one cornflake on a plate. Apparently, it's enough to determine whether you like the show or not, and not enough to satiate a listener who happens to be on that segment of the dial.

In Carl Smith, apparently the one-wheatie policy is okay. The housewives caught between the welter of soap operas, may find a respite in these hillbilly renderings. It's hard to imagine a mass-movement to tune into the show.

Smith yodels the barnyard ballads in the approved manner. For devotees of that type art, he may have some appeal, but for the city dweller, the corn is not indispensable.

LET'S TALK TURKEY

With Hal Searls, Guests
Producer-director: Jerry Cohen
90 Mins.; Mon.-Sat., 10:30 p.m.
620 Club
WDGY, Mpls.

This is Minneapolis' first radio show patterned after the Jack Eigen-Barry Gray formula. It originates from the 620 Club, a popular loop specializing in turkey, hence the title. Particular program caught had emcee-disk jockey Hal Searls firing questions at four male interviewees, one of them a Congressman, regarding conditions in Israel, the U. S.-Hungarian hassle over our fliers' release, an eye-witness account of atomic bombing in Japan, and entertainment for the state's mental institution patients. Disk spinning breaks up the interviews and there's an occasional outside commercial, too. Patrons' chatter is audible and helps to provide proper atmosphere.

Show undoubtedly has potentialities for entertainment and instruction, and for enlisting a large listening audience. On this occasion most of the aforementioned potentialities remained unrealized, because the rather long-drawn-out interviews lacked sufficient general interest and were somewhat clumsily handled. Preceding shows have included verbal sessions between Searls and taxicab drivers, sports coaches, stripteasers and other performers from local niteries and theatres, and wrestling referees. They've even afforded the establishment's less colorful patrons a chance to take a whirl at the mike, to get beefs off their chest or just to let off surplus steam while having their big radio moments. In fact, some of the controversial matter discussed led to telephonic threats from irate listeners. These shows undoubtedly represented better programming and paid off larger listening dividends.

With more careful preparation, Searls, who has an excellent radio voice and easy, friendly mike manner, undoubtedly will improve as an interviewer.

JOHN CONTE SHOW

With Charles Magnante Trio
Producer: Henry Hull
5 Mins.; Mon.-thru-Fri., 8:55 a.m.
STOKELEY-VAN CAMP, INC.
ABC, from New York
(Calkins & Holden)

A five-minute show offers a challenge to agencies and sponsors. For it poses the problem of how can an opening and closing commercial be inserted within the time limit and still make the overall program an entertaining one. In "The John Conte Show" which preemed Tues. (1) on ABC as a Mon.-thru-Fri. cross-the-boarder this dilemma has been solved to some extent.

By judiciously restraining the length of the plugs for Stokeley's cut beans and Van Camp's assorted canned food products this stanza permits singer Conte to get in a minimum of two numbers accompanied by the Charles Magnante trio. His is an easy-to-listen style that concentrates upon the standards and current pops. But an additional whittling of the commercials would make the session more palatable for the hausfrau and would still permit ample sponsor identification.

WOMAN OF THE YEAR

With Bette Davis, George Brent, others; Dick Joy, announcer; Pete Rugolo, music
Producer: Raymond Katz
Director: Fred MacKaye
Writer: Jameson Brewer
30 Mins.; Mon., 8 p.m.
Sustaining
MBS, from Hollywood

From the 1942 Metro pic, "Woman of the Year," MGM Radio Attractions has fashioned a new radio series, leading off the block of MGMRA programs being beamed on Mutual. There's good marquee values in the show's stars, Bette Davis (in Katharine Hepburn's film role) and George Brent (who has taken the role played by Spencer Tracy in the original). Airer should prove one of the stronger entries in the web's new evening lineup.

Story, literally following the pic, deals with a fast-moving femme columnist who covers international affairs—presumably the role was suggested by Dorothy Thompson. However, the deep-thinking journalist fell in love with a two-fisted sports writer for the same paper (George Brent), and that forced her to change her outlook from "Woman of the Year" to just plain "woman." It's done amusingly, with bright lines and some topical references, although the basic situation is familiar one and the tone not flattering to career women.

It remains to be seen what sort of variations will be provided in future episodes, since the first broadcast didn't go beyond a condensation of the film. There was some indication that the course of the whirlwind romance will not be unruffled, since while she's tied up with diplomatic confabs he's trekking around the country to various sports events.

Both Brent and Miss Davis did well by the script. Production, including music by Pete Rugolo, was good. Plugs were devoted to the new MGMRA stanzas and touting Metro pix.

UTAH COPPER SYMPHONY HOUR

With Utah Symphony Orchestra directed by Maurice Abravanel, Allen Jensen, Joe Kjar Producer: Allen Jensen
60 Mins., Thurs., 8 p.m.
KENNECOTT COPPER
KSL, Salt Lake City
(Adamson & Buchman)

The kickoff of this year's Utah Copper Symphony Hour indicates no great changes are planned, and listeners can expect top flight music and a minimum of commercial pitching.

Programs are whipped together from tapes of the concerts held at the Tabernacle, and no effort is made to play down to the audience's musical tastes. On the preem (3) Maurice Abravanel led the orchestra through slick renditions of Ravel's "Mother Goose Suite," Debussy's "Clouds" and "Festivals," and Respighi's "The Pines of Rome."

Introductions and commentary is handled by Allen Jensen who does a nice middle of the road job, combining dignity and smoothness. His remarks on numbers to be played were held down with commendable brevity, and avoided the mistake of putting the listener to sleep while waiting for the music.

Joe Kjar followed the same pattern in the two commercials, which were basically public relations in their approach.

Everyone connected with the show rates a hand for putting together an hour concert that looks towards listener enjoyment first, and selling secondarily only.

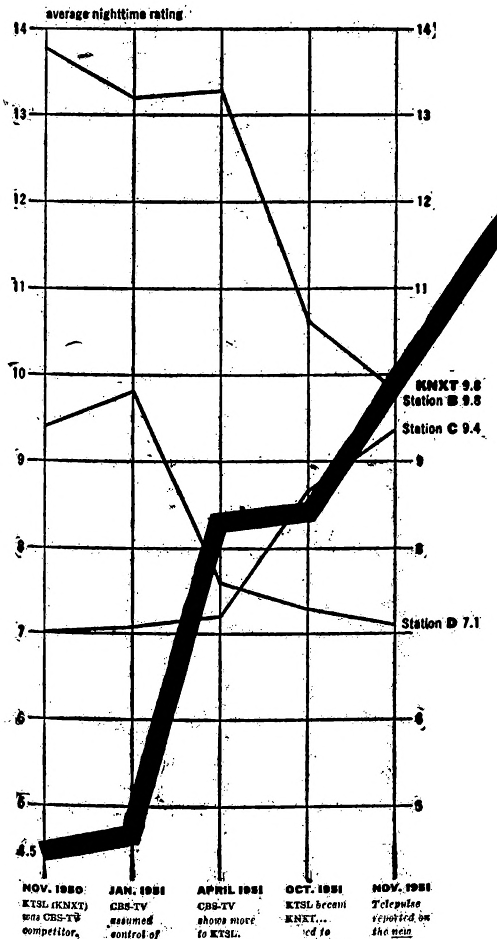
Look what's up in L.A.!

. . . already KNXT has climbed to a first-place tie!



From fifth to first in '51! It's the success story of the year in America's second television market.

In the first Telepulse survey since KNXT moved to Mt. Wilson (with 10 times more power), the new Channel 2 is tied for first in average evening ratings throughout the week. And in average evening share-of-audience as well!

KNXT's viewing is way up, but KNXT's cost-per-thousand is down . . . down 18.5% since the start of the past year!

And if KNXT is tied, it is not tied down. The new Channel 2 is just starting as CBS Television's key station on the Coast!

No wonder national spot advertisers have more than tripled their investment on KNXT during 1951. KNXT is head-and-shoulders highest as Los Angeles' best television buy.

AFL Charges NABET 'Raiding' In Move to Ink CBS' O.&O. Technicians

Moves by the National Assn. of Broadcast Engineers & Technicians (CIO) to get bargaining representation for technical workers at all of CBS' owned-and-operated stations have brought charges of "raiding" from AFL unions. National Labor Relations Board election will be held Jan. 24 at the CBS outlets between NABET and the AFL International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, which has repped the CBS technicians for 19 years.

Meanwhile NABET's actions have been brought up for discussion in the National Assn. of Broadcast Unions & Guilds, of which many AFL unions, the Authors League of America and NABET are members. A resolution censuring "raiding" practices was introduced at a NABUG meeting last October. In mid-December another NABUG meeting, with two reps from NABET present, voted to table the censure resolution and instead seek some sort of understanding. A joint NABUG-NABET committee is being set up to study the issues and make a report by end of January.

Queried by VARIETY, NABUG national chairman Oliver W. Nicoll said that an understanding of complex issues of legitimate union expansion as opposed to unfair raiding is possible. He said that first NABET has to clarify its past actions and upcoming plans, and added that the AFL and ALA unions in NABUG have an open mind on the questions.

In Chicago NLRB hearings are currently underway to determine whether NABET should rep the news writers in NBC headquarters. NABET already has a foot in the door at NBC and ABC in Chi through its pacts for technical workers.

GA.-OWNED WGST'S 126G NET FOR '51

Atlanta, Jan. 8.

WGST, Georgia Institute of Technology's radio station, netted $126,411.38 in 1951. Tech is a state-owned school.

Total income for the station for the year was set at $452,420.24 compared to $337,887.06 in 1950 and $380,034.12 in 1949.

Out of 1951's surplus, $35,000 will be turned over to Georgia Tech.

No Fancy TV Frills For Camera Pickup Of 'Met Opera Auditions'

When "Metropolitan Opera Auditions of the Air" goes to a simulcast basis over ABC and ABC-TV Tuesday (15), the present radio format will be kept intact. Television cameras will be admitted "only as spectators peeking in" and won't be allowed to change the format of the 12-year-old AM airer.

The network feels that it's not a good policy when simulcasting a sustainer to let the video end dominate the program. In the past, when a series was simulcast and the video department was dominant, the radio show suffered by its reliance on sight values. Further, if the TV time was preempted for a commercial show, the AM boys were left with a weakened airer.

The Met show, which gives a showcasing to new operatic talent, will take the 8:30 p.m. slot now occupied by "How Did They Get That Way?", psychological panel show femceed by Isabelle Leighton.

'TV ROYAL SHOWCASE' AS U.S. RUBBER ENTRY

"TV Royal Showcase," a new show in which an established star each week will salute a lesser-known, has been selected by U. S. Rubber as its Sunday night entry on NBC-TV show. Series preems this week (13) in the 7 to 7:30 p.m. slot, filling the time vacated by Chesterfield's "Sound Off Time."

For the initialer, Bert Lahr will introduce TV viewers to Guy Raymond. Show is to be emceed and directed by legit director George Abbott, although he may decide not to serve as permanent emcee. Gordon Jenkins and his orch will handle the music for the series, with Rosemary Clooney also guesting on the preem. Format will also have the stars saluting their choices of the "bests," such as the best recording, best film, etc.

Series is to be produced by Joe Bigelow, chief of NBC-TV's comedy development program. Ernest Walling will be production supervisor.

Admiral Repacts For All-Star Grid, Glovers

Chicago, Jan. 8.

Admiral Corp. has ordered a repeat on radio-TV rights to this year's All-Star football game and the finals of the Golden Gloves fisticuff tourney. The set manufacturer bankrolled both events last year with DuMont again getting the video nod and Mutual carrying the AM version.

The boxing show is slated for March 7 and the football game will be held Aug. 15. Both events are sponsored by the Chicago Tribune Charities.

Ekco Exiting As Sinatra Sponsor

Despite earlier indications that CBS-TV's "Frank Sinatra Show" might be able to hold its own against Milton Berle's "Texaco Star Theatre" on the rival NBC video web, Sinatra this week lost his single participating sponsor, Ekco Products. Show, as a result, resumed a sustaining basis, with CBS forced to shell out the entire budget each week. Program's commercial fee is $41,500 for an hour, or $11,000 for a quarter-hour segment.

Sinatra's rating has run consistently over a 15 and the only reason ascribed to the lack of sponsor interest is that the show is probably too expensive a package to carry against the 50s and over being drawn by Berle. While Sinatra has never threatened Berle on a point-for-point basis, he nonetheless succeeded at one time in chipping enough points off Berle's rating to permit CBS-TV's "Talent Scouts" to overtake Berle in the ratings parade.

Ekco had bankrolled the first quarter-hour of the Sinatra show for 13 weeks, with the cycle having expired Jan. 1. Only other sponsor was the Susquehanna Waist Co., which came in on a one-shot deal for a 15-minute segment prior to Christmas. Web is planning no changes in the show and will not cut back on the budget, hoping it can snare other sponsors.

tion that it violates antitrust laws, association spokesmen contend they had the D. of J. blessing before the start of last season. Most of the hints, they contend, were the results of organized pressure brought to bear by alumni groups and other interested parties who objected to not seeing their alma maters' games televised.

Whether the plan for '52 will follow that used during the last season may not be decided until next summer. In '51, each interconnected TV market area in the country had a game on the air on all but three Saturdays during the season. Those three blacked out weekends were designed to give the member colleges a chance to judge the gates without TV, as compared to those at games which were televised. Colleges polled all fans who attended their games during the season, with results of the polls having been turned over to the National Opinion Research Centre for a final breakdown of results. NORC study will be unveiled for the first time at tomorrow's conclave in Cincy.

Date for the forum has been set for Jan. 12 from (of all places) the State Capitol, where the issue has been traveling in one big, wide circle.

Radio row statewide reports this gesture on the part of Martin is one of the biggest bits of station promotion and public service of radio in the state in a long time. It is pointed out that at least 50,000 persons (friends, family and employees) will have been sold a bill of sale for the station as a result of this move.

The five-station network will include WCCC, WICH, Norwich; WLIZ, Bridgeport; WWCO, Waterbury, and probably WAVZ, New Haven. One odd fact is that the titular head of a competition station, WTHT, Francis Murphy will top the forum committee. He is the publisher of the Hartford Times, which owns the station. Several other bigwigs of both parties have joined the bandwagon and will appear at the forum.

local committees to hypo UN audiences.

At present the broadcasting industry is giving the UN programs cuffo time valued at $12,000,000 a year. UN Radio wants to up this figure by at least 30%. Currently, five AM networks release regular daily or weekly UN broadcasts and another 500 stations carry a weekly transcriber. Three video nets—ABC-TV, CBS-TV and NBC-TV—are releasing programs from the Paris General Assembly. Additionally, 900 AM station news desks receive weekly news summaries from UN headquarters.

Dorothy Lewis, UN Radio coordinator for U. S. station relations, said that the new drive was conceived in Minnesota by the Minnesota Broadcasters Assn. and local groups. It was then expanded to 30 cities as a pilot operation, with experience gained there applied to the upcoming campaign.

The pitch for more UN listeners will be promoted through ganizations, radio, tele, displays, industry and newspapers.

Elected vice president was Martin Agrensky of ABC; secretary, Joseph C. Harsch of Liberty, and treasurer, Richard Harkness of NBC. Named to executive board were Rudolph Block of KOMO, Seattle; Howard L. Kany, of AP, and Charles E. Shutt, of Telenews.

Vast Negro Market Potential Surveyed

Importance of the Negro market in New York City is underlined in a comprehensive survey made by WLIB, which reports that in the metropolitan area there are 1,012,883 Negroes, making this "city within a city" the sixth largest in the U. S.—bigger than Cleveland, St. Louis and Boston.

The Negro population in N. Y. is growing, increasing 63.1% in the past 10 years. Shift away from Harlem—with 30% of the Harlem residents leaving the area—was noted, with Brooklyn's Negro population growing fastest. With more than 200,000 Negroes moving into new homes, they are therefore in the market for new household appliances, clothing, furniture, etc. the indie declares.

Calling the Negroes in N. Y. a "billion dollar plus" market, study states that the average income of Negro families in the U. S. has tripled since 1940, compared to a 100% increase for the general population. Close to 96% of all employable Negroes were working in a typical week, and new avenues of work are opening. High school attendance of Negroes is at its highest and college enrollment is up 1,000% in 10 years.

With respect to buying habits, the survey reports that nationally advertised brand names are preferred. Radio saturation is almost complete.

WLIB, since it was taken over from the New York Post by Harry Novik, has been increasing its Negro programming and now has 38 hours weekly directed to this market. Stations has studios in Harlem and a talent roster that includes Ruth Ellington James, Joe Bostic, Lorenzo Fuller and Nipsey Russell. Sales in the Negro programming block last year were up 49% over '50, Novik declared.

GODFREY SIMULCAST MAY GO TO HALF-HOUR

Simulcast of Arthur Godfrey's morning radio show via CBS, which preemed Monday (7) as a 15-minute spot, may be expanded to a half-hour in the near future. Ovaltine this week bought into the radio side of the show, picking up the 10 to 10:15 a.m. segment alternate days, which was dropped by Reid-Murdock. Ovaltine reportedly wants to put that segment on TV as well, as soon as the necessary arrangements can be worked out.

Currently, the 10:15 to 10:30 portion of the show, which is bankrolled cross-the-board by Lever Bros., is the only part to take the simulcast route. If Ovaltine succeeds in getting its part of the show on TV also, it's believed that CBS will first have to get Toni, which shares the segment with Ovaltine, to go along.

Exploding That TV Bromide—'It's Just A Radio Show . . . .'

By MARK GOODSON

You don't hear it today as much as you did a year ago but the phrase is still used by those who approach television down the cliche alley: "It's a good radio show—but honest, fellas, it's not for TV."

If show lacks the classic hopped-up production of an expensive variety or dramatic show, it can expect comments along these lines: "What's there to look at?" "Where are your visual values?" "Where's the movement . . . the show is so static." "Haven't you learned that the eye is more demanding than the ear?" Bill Todman and I had all of these challenges, and more, tossed at "What's My Line" in the early days before the ratings began to roll in.

Certainly, on the basis of the old-time text book criteria for a good television show, "What's My Line," makes not very much sense. The pictures are relatively static, there's no production, no movement to speak of—just people asking questions and talking to each other. Sure, it's interesting and amusing—but pictorially, for the picture-conscious critic, it's a goose egg.

This same lack of traditional pictorial values holds true with the Groucho Marx quiz show—in fact, it's a simulcast. It holds true—take a deep breath—for the now highly regarded Kefauver Committee hearings. Naturally, it's easy enough after the fact to praise all these shows as good TV fare—to explain with hindsight analysis why these programs became successful without the classic picture elements. But, it is my belief that a majority of program buyers, faced with these shows before the test of audience reaction, would have turned them down cold because they were ". . . just radio shows with cameras put on them."

What, then, do I think counts?

Essentially—content. If what goes on in front of the camera has human values, i.e., is exciting and real—then the pictorial quotient takes a back seat. Shows like "What's My Line?" present real people in an unrehearsed situation. They are seated. The set never changes, nor the costumes. The cameras shoot from fixed positions in the rear of the theatre so as not to interfere with the audible reaction of the studio audience. All these are in reverse in terms of classic TV production. But they make sense on a real people show, where the emphasis is on content, and primarily on spoken material. Yes—nasty word—on audio!

As a matter of fact, our mail reflects a growing popular reaction against over-elaborate production. A great deal of the mail on "What's My Line?" expresses pleasure with the basis?" simplicity and relaxed quality of the program. One viewer writes: "By 10:30 Sunday night I'm exhausted with razzle-dazzle vaudeville."

Naturally, we do not oppose making a show visual. To the contrary, we try to use the camera with maximum effectiveness as a flexible reporting instrument. We do object, however, to plush production for its own sake—and particularly where it is used to cover up a lack of real substance underneath.

It's time to revise the criteria.

Mind less how expensive the production, how dazzling the costumes or set, how pretty the pictures, how "visual" the concept. Mind more how rich the content, how absorbing the story or people, how vital and gutsy the genuine substance of the show.

If you want a laboratory example of this conflict—between visual values and content values—go see the First Drama Quartet read "Don Juan in Hell."

Heck, that's no play—it's a radio show.

CBS-TV Ups Hylan As Eastern Sales Chief

William Hylan, CBS-TV assistant sales manager, has been upped to the post of eastern sales chief by sales veepee Fred M. Thrower. Job is a new one created by Thrower since he succeeded David Sutton at the web. As an assistant sales manager, Hylan had been in charge of color TV sales until color was jettisoned and then became an assistant on black-and-white.

In another change in the web's sales department this week, Ben Margolis shifted from his post as contract manager of the sales service department into the job of business manager of CBS-TV Spot Sales. He was succeeded by George A. Koplin, who was promoted from the web's accounting department.

KSTP's 'R.F.D.-TV'

Minneapolis, Jan. 8.

KSTP-TV has launched this area's first TV farm service program. Titled "R.F.D.-TV," the 30-minute show has an 11:30 a. m. Saturday slot and features Cal Karnstedt, KSTP farm editor, and guest experts from all agriculture fields.

Portion of the show will carry complete summaries of livestock, grain produce and commodity markets, as well as top farm news, headlines, weather and road reports.

Guests will include swine and poultry specialists, among others. Live animals will be used in most programs, and from time to time viewers will see film reports on future agricultural activities.

'House Party' on Radio Takes Up Where Video Version Leaves Off

Deal concluded this week by CBS with indie packager John Guedel for the latter's "House Party" show will result in the most rapid television-to-radio transposal yet devised. Under terms of the deal, the cross-the-board series, starring Ralph Linkletter, is to originate in Hollywood as a TV production on CBS from 2:45 to 3:15 p.m. Audio portion of the TV show will be taped and go on the CBS Radio web immediately following, from 3:15 to 3:40 p.m. (with the five-minute differential to be edited out).

Show is currently sponsored on CBS Radio in the same time slot by Pillsbury, which also bankrolls the Cedric Adams show in the 3:40 to 3:45 p.m. strip. Under the new radio-TV system, Pillsbury plans to drop the first 15 minutes of the AM version, picking up instead the 3 to 3:15 segment on TV. That means that CBS will have a quarter-hour segment of the show available for sponsorship five days weekly on both AM and TV.

New setup is scheduled to preem sometime in March. Deal between Guedel and CBS means basically that the packager is turning the AM-TV versions of "House Party" over to CBS to sell for him.

Mars Candy Makes Switch, Buying Into 'Super Circus'

Chicago, Jan. 8.

Mars Candy has about-faced and is buying into ABC-TV's "Super Circus," after having originally shied away because of the several other confection outfits using the video circus format. Starting Feb. 3, Mars will bankroll the final half-hour of the hour-long Chi origination beamed at 4 p. m.

The Mars purchase enables the web to keep the high-rated show completely sold out. M&M Candy is bowing out from its alternate week ride, and Canada Dry is cutting back from a weekly to a skip-a-week basis.

Leo Burnett is the Mars agency.

Inside Stuff—Radio

Sol Chain, WBIB, New Haven, station director, pulled a literary "man bites dog" last week with the inception of Vol. 1, No. 1, of Info, local amusement monthly. The "bite" angle stems from fact that the publication is put out by Chain's station but its content plugs all local rival stations as well as his own.

Periodical, 32 pages and cover, lists schedules of WELI, WNHC, WAVZ and also contains editorial material on those stations. Initial issue carries cover photos of WNHC-TV execs, with a bow to them for bringing video to Connecticut.

An outcropping of a previous throwaway, Info is handled on a subscription basis as a guide to tele, radio, art, lectures, sports, music, entertainment.

Act of contrition to help radio artists driven out of Germany under the Hitler regime is accomplished by South German Radio, which operates Radio Stuttgart, the State Department reports.

Radio Stuttgart has established an "Artists Fund" of 4,000 marks per month from the proceeds of radio advertising to help "indigent German artists in foreign countries who were forced to leave Germany because of persecution during Hitler's era."

Eligible recipients are actors, musicians, singers, composers and writers who left Germany between 1933 and 1945 for political or racial reasons and who are in financial straits. Priority goes to those who were born or who worked in Wuerttemberg-Baden.

A series of 13 transcribed quarter-hour programs dramatizing techniques used by the Voice of America will be made available, beginning Jan. 15, to domestic radio stations at no cost, the State Department announced last week. The programs, entitled "Your Voice of America," have been contributed by Wesley I. Dumm, member of the U.S. Advisory Commission on Education and president of Associated Broadcasters, Inc. (KSFO) of San Francisco which is recording, processing and distributing the series.

Programs employ a documentary format, with film actor Gerald Mohr as narrator. Producer is Will H. Voeller and writer is Robert C. Vinson. Direction is by Frank K. Danzig and music by Del Castillio and his orchestra.

Broadcasters may obtain the disks by writing Associated Broadcasters, Box 87, Hollywood, Calif.

Poll by the Amsterdam News, Negro weekly, for unofficial mayor of Harlem, saw Jack Kuney, program director of WLIB, N. Y., finish in 112th position with 27 votes. Kuney, who is white, pulled more ballots than Billy Eckstine or Father Divine.

Election was won by Willie Bryant, who beams over WHOM, N. Y.

Crosley Broadcasting Corp. furnished display kits to 5,000 grocery stores in Ohio, Kentucky, Indiana and West Virginia for merchandising promotion this month of 65 products, glorified as the "Parade of Stars." Material includes window streamers, shelf and counter displays.

According to J. M. Zinselmeier, director of merchandising for Crosley's WLW, 50,000-watt Cincinnati station, and its TV outlets in Cincy, Dayton and Columbus, O., the campaign is the largest mass merchandising promotion sponsored in the grocery field by any single radio or TV company. Campaign also is backed by station facilities.

PITT MIKER QUITS AIR WHEN ASCENDING BENCH

Pittsburgh, Jan. 8.

Reconsidering his original decision to remain on the air as a newscaster after becoming a judge of the Allegheny County Court, Louis L. Kaufmann, vet Pittsburgh radio man, had a change of mind upon being sworn in as a jurst and decided to quit being a mikeman.

When originally elected by an overwhelming majority last November despite lack of organized party support, Kaufmann gave credit for his upset victory to his loyal listeners, and said they'd have to make the decision for him whether to stay on the air or not. Mail was heavy and most of its favored his continuing after becoming a judge.

However, in some quarters it was felt that a commercially-sponsored newscaster would possibly be beneath the dignity of the court, and although Kaufmann said he'd leave it up to the Bar Assn., newscaster made his own decision before lawyers group came up with any recommendation.

Negotiating for the station were president Sam Sague, James P. Miller, station labor relations, and Ted Smoot and Walt Davis, the latter two representing AFRA.

B'casts of N.Y. Pix Preems Seen Paying Off at WINS

WINS, Crosley-owned indie in Gotham, is picking up extra change by beaming broadcasts of the New York preems of new pictures. In the past year the outlet aired eight film openings.

The Hollywood companies sponsor the preems as an important adjunct of their tubthumping for a new feature. At the same time, the station feels that clearing time for the special broadcasts pays off, in terms of the stars and celebs who are brought to the mike during the show.

Handling the interviewing assignments for the station since 1947 is Martin Starr, who has been doing Hollywood commentary on the air for 17 years. He's now heard on WINS with Hollywood and Broadway news cross-the-board at 7 p.m.

Companies which used WINS for their preems in '51 included Warner Bros., Universal-International, RKO and 20th-Fox. WINS got practically all the major preem broadcasts in Gotham, except for Metro product, which was plugged via the Loew's-owned WMGM .

FCC Plan for Patents Filing Stirs Protests; Called 'Un-American'

Washington, Jan. 8.

A proposal of the Federal Communications Commission to require companies and individuals to file annual reports on patents used in services under the agency's jurisdiction, including radio and television, is bringing in a rash of protests. So far, about 50 oppositions have been registered, while about 100 requests have been made for more time to comment. The Commission has extended the deadline to Jan. 31.

Protests run the whole gamut from objection to expense involved to charges of un-Americanism. A number of patent attorneys, apparently aroused by the National Patent Council, question the Commission's authority to require the reports. One of them, John J. Regan of New York, declares the proposal is "an unconstitutional seizure of power by a mere administrative body."

Another lawyer, Harold R. Savage of Medford, Mass., asserts the proposal is "utterly un-American and in violation of the most fundamental concepts" of the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution. Savage calls it "an insult to the people of the U. S."

Globe Wireless Co. fears the proposal would be burdensome not only for those affected, "but also in the possible effects growing out of interpretation of reports by persons having access to certain or all of the matters appearing on the public records."

Allen B. DuMont Labs., which owns 164 patents largely used in production of TV and other electronics apparatus, claims the proposal goes beyond the broad jurisdiction of the Commission. The material required, it declares, "would be practically useless for any such comprehensive investigation as might relate to monopoly arising from the use or suppression of patent rights."

Ackerman East For CBS-TV Program Talks

CBS programming veepee Harry Ackerman is slated to arrive in N. Y. from the Coast tomorrow (Thurs.) for a week's huddles with CBS-TV program veepee Hubbell Robinson, Jr. Since CBS has virtually no time open in the current schedule, the two veeps will talk, for the most part, on programming plans for next fall, including the tying down of plans for several new shows.

Robinson will return to the Coast with Ackerman next week to continue the talks in Hollywood. While there, he'll look over the web's TV city, currently under construction, which is expected to be ready for occupancy next September.

Iron-Man Stone

Ezra Stone pulled an unusual stunt last weekend, acting as director on three TV shows in as many days.

He was supervisor-stager of the Ezio Pinza program Friday night (4); director of the Martha Raye All-Star show Saturday night (5), and stager of Fred Allen's fourth and last "Sound Off" airer Sunday night (6). All shows were on NBC-TV.

Miller Likely Pick If McGrath Quits

Washington, Jan. 8.

Reports that Justin Miller, board chairman and general counsel of National Assn. of Radio-Television Broadcasters, may become U. S. Attorney General in event J. Howard McGrath resigns, are regarded here as well-founded.

Appointment of Miller for the post is understood to have been urged on President Truman by two intimates, Charles Murphy, White House legal counsel, and Chief Justice Fred M. Vinson of the Supreme Court. Murphy is a former student of Miller's and Vinson served with him for five years on the U. S. Court of Appeals for the D. C. circuit.

Miller, 64, a native of California and a Democrat, was special assistant to the U. S. Atty. General from 1934 to 1936 and chairman of the Atty. General's Advisory Commission on Crime from 1935 to 1937. Previously, he taught at Duke, Stanford, Columbia and other universities.

According to informed sources, selection of Miller was urged when the heat was on the President to oust McGrath as result of the tax scandals. However, after a meeting last Friday (4), with the President, McGrath told newsmen he was not quitting and indicated he had Presidential sanction for his statement.

Masland Starts on 'Tales' With Verne's 'Leagues'

ABC-TV's "Tales of Tomorrow" will take a tale of yesterday, Jules Verne's "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea," to kick off the Masland cosponsorship of the science fiction series. Thomas Mitchell will be starred in the classic, which will be dramatized in two installments, Jan. 25 and Feb. 1.

Interestingly, while "Leagues" will be done with a combination of animation and live action by Walt Disney in Hollywood, producers of "Tomorrow" feel that they can achieve all the undersea effects live on TV.

Jacques Kreisler (watchbands) is currently sponsoring the George Foley-Dick Gordon package on alternate weeks, with Masland carpets buying in as a skip-week backer effective Jan. 25.

Minneapolis—Bruce F. Anderson, formerly with WMT, Cedar Rapids, has joined the WCCO news bureau staff. He'll supervise all morning news programs and assist on documentary productions.

Inside Stuff—Television

Clay B. Daniel, production manager of WNBC, N. Y., is traveling 3,000 miles to make the switch from AM to TV. He leaves Friday (11) for a post with another NBC owned-and-operated outlet, KNBH, Hollywood, where he'll work for Tom McFadden, another former WNBC exec.

Daniel had been trying to get into the video end of the NBC station in Gotham for two years, without success. Last month, while setting up a WNBC show for which Danny Kaye was picked up from Hollywood, he was on the phone with the Coast and jokingly asked whether there were any vacancies in tele—which resulted in his new job.

A demonstration of what TV can do skyrocketing station values is the sale of Garo W. Ray, Connecticut consultant, of his 10% interest in WNHC, New Haven, for $80,000. Seven years ago Ray invested $2,500 in the station, then radio only, which makes his profit 3,500%. WNHC added video four years ago and is yet the only TV operation in Connecticut.

Ray continues a consultant relationship with WNHC and is also i telefilm production.

CBS-TV, in a move to inform the viewing public of its program packaging activities, has tacked a slide on the end of each house-produced show on the air, which says that "This has been a CBS-TV network production."

Slide is being used strictly to let viewers know that the web is in the packaging, as well as time-selling, business, according to network execs, and has nothing to do with any copyright protection problems. Since most of the shows on CBS-TV are now house packages, the slide is used a number of times each day.

Television activities have paid off at the William Morris agency during the past year. Expansion in that direction is so marked that office has acquired additional space on the 25th floor of the Mutual Life Building in N. Y., where it already occupies two full floors. New space will also house office of Helen Harvey who will work in the play dept. She'll move over from Music Corp. of America.

Strength of television activity is also seen in the fact that activities in this sector was sufficiently profitable to provide the bulk of the revenue for Christmas bonuses to the staff.

Agency also restored the cuts which several top execs took during the past year. Cuts were retroactive to the time of the pay slice. Several members of the N.Y. staff got raises.

ABC-TV's "Celanese Theatre," which had been sending out printed texts of the original plays dramatized on the series, has switched to distributing copies of the tele scripts instead.

Reason for the change is that the editors and critics who had received the original published editions were raising questions on why one or another scene was not included in the telecast version. Producers feel that due to the need for condensation all the critics can't be satisfied, and thus have stopped releasing scripts of the legiters as presented on Broadway. The members of The Playwrights, whose works comprise the offerings on the TV show, have final approval of the scripts as televised.

Legal hassle appears imminent between telepix producers Irving Allen and Cubby Broccoli, and estate of late Sir Arthur Conan Doyle over video rights to shorts and novels not covered by U. S. copyright. Allen-Broccoli, repped by attorney Fulton Brylawski, have determined there are 26 short stories and two novels not covered, 31 more shorts on which the lawyer is certain of clearance. Producers plan to shoot series in Hollywood immediately.

Republic plans to build television talent from within studio ranks instead of buying names, with prexy Herbert J. Yates formulating TV policy patterned after his motion picture operation. Yates has nixed several deals involving top names in favoring of building, then promoting names on TV.

WNBT, Gotham key of NBC-TV, is wrapping up four five-minute programs to be inserted in the local cut-in breaks in the web's upcoming two-hour-long "Today" stanza.

The capsule shows include a sports news segment, a weather report to be handled by a puppet, a strip with Mary Kay (who does the station's late-night trailer announcements), and "Weather Station," with Milton DeLugg. Latter, former accompanist for Abe Burrows and later orch leader on "Broadway Open House," will do a comic weather bulletin feature.

Machinists Union's Non-Partisan Political League is setting up a 52-week television series which will start on three west Coast stations Friday (11). Half-hour program, "Without Fear," will feature Bill Grago as narrator and Wendy Patterson and Carl Ruffing as a young American couple discussing various public questions.

Show will be heard on KTTV, L.A., Fridays, at 8:30 p.m., with the kinescope recording going on KFMB, San Diego, Mondays, at 10 p.m., and on KGO, San Francisco, Tuesdays, at 9:30.

First airer will be on U. S. Communism, with second to cover the price situation.

ED SIMMONS and NORMAN LEAR
1259 North Flores
Hollywood, California.

Dear Ed and Norm:

For five years we wrote our own material—but when television loomed on the horizon—frankly, we were pretty frightened. We needed writers—but who could write for two idiots? Where would we find the perfect marriage?

Then we met you, ED SIMMONS AND NORMAN LEAR—and television changed from a monster to a picnic, from the first rehearsal to the present. This is to tell you publicly how grateful we are for all the wonderful sketches you've written for us.

We also want you to know how proud we are to have the only writers who made the switch from TV to radio. And we want to thank you again for the wonderful things you are doing for us in that medium, too.

Writers have always been the unsung heros of our business. This is to sing songs of praise for two great guys, as well as great talents.

Gratefully,

Dean and Jerry

P.S.: So where's the script????

BOB CONSIDINE MAKES SWITCH TO TUES. NIGHT

Deal for Pontiac to take over the 10:45 to 11 p. m. Tuesday night slot on NBC-TV has fallen through. (Time opened up when Old Gold shaved its "Original Amateur Hour" from a full hour to 45 minutes.)

Instead, NBC is turning over the 15-minute segment to Mutual of Omaha, which sponsors the Bob Considine show. Considine moves his program over from the current 5:45 to 6 p. m. Saturday slot, effective Jan. 15.

CBS Chi Logjam

was unable to handle. The WGN-TV deal opened the Chi market to Colgate's "Strike It Rich;" American Home Products' "Love of Life," and Procter & Gamble's "Search For Tomorrow."

And with the WGN-TV arrangement having the effect of breaking up WBKB's monopoly on CBS-TV pickups, the latter outlet's management has been looking further ahead before nixing web offerings. Also there's been a noticeable slowdown of local daytime sales with WBKB currently having a somewhat looser schedule in which to carry more network shows.

Since WBKB has first refusal rights over WGN-TV on any commercial shows offered by CBS, manager John Mitchell lost no time in grabbing off the Arthur Godfrey simulcast which bowed yesterday (Mon.) and the tri-weekly Bert Parks show which goes next Monday (14) in the 2:30 to 3 p.m. CST period.

And Mitchell has made additional concessions to the network in order to have first crack at any sponsored shows CBS might put into the post-Godfrey 9:30 to 10 a.m. slot. This segment is currently being filled locally by WBKB with the "O'Neil's At Home" show bankrolled by the Charles Antell hair tonic firm. But the local sponsor will be bumped when and if CBS sells the time nationally. WBKB is also beaming the 15-minute CBS news show that preceeds Godfrey in anticipation of the portion being sold by the web.

Incidentally, WBKB's reservation of the 9:30 to 10 morning segment for potential CBS shows has knocked out the planned breakfast remote from Isbell's restaurant which was to have been emceed by Ernie Simon.

Although the daytime Chicago CBS picture looks the rosiest it's ever been the web may again run into a snag when the baseball season rolls around. Although no diamond deals have yet been set, both WBKB and WGN-TV have beamed baseball for the past several seasons. What's to happen with the CBS afternoon programs should both stations again carry baseball is a highly moot question at this point.

Despite the reasonably good arrangement now in effect, there's no doubt the CBS hierarchy will heave a sigh of relief if and when the FCC okays its purchase of WBKB as a byproduct of the pending United Paramount-ABC melding.

5 Kilo is Killo-Dillo
In WFIL-adelphia

You can't stand on ceremony if you want to be heard by shoppers in all 14 counties of Philadelphia's $6 billion market zone.

Best way to break the ice in this area of 4,400,000 people and $6 billion in buying power, is to get 'em at home, where more radio owners tune WFIL than ever before.

BMB says two-thirds of all radio-equipped homes listen regularly to WFIL—5,000 watts at 560 kilocycles. You hit hard, fast, and clean—not only in Philly but in all 147 "home markets" outside city limits where a majority of the area's population lives and shops.

And these same five kilos sweep way out into a huge bonus area in many nearby counties, giving WFIL total coverage of 6,800,000 people with more than $9 billion effective buying income.

To be first on the dial in America's third largest market, schedule WFIL.

Monday (31) with a marked departure from its usual dramatic format. The special New Year's Eve show was a documentary on film, with the live portions consisting of host-producer Robert Montgomery narrating a pictorial record of 1951 for a little girl who was born only 30 minutes before airtime. The program will be kept on kinescope and presented to the girl on her 16th birthday in 1967.

Airer had a sock opening in the shots picked up live from the maternity wing of New York's Presbyterian Hospital and the universal interest in seeing a newborn babe, the nurses, her father and other impatiently-waiting prospective dads. The latter, all smoking cigarets (undoubtedly Luckies) nervously, appeared stiff and posed, but the overall effect was interesting.

The film record of the year was not as effectively done. It was slow-moving, dull, without much point, and generalized when it should have been specific. There was a pleasant-enough feeling in the various sections—"How We Played," "How We Worked," "Our Beliefs and Ideals," "How We Worshipped," etc. But the individual clips lacked potency and there was only superficial integration and editing. Shots such as Bobby Thompson's pennant-winning homerun against the Dodgers were good, but there weren't enough of these. Greater use of cream newsreel sequences, such as those on NBC-TV's "Camel Newsreel,"—would have helped.

is the Gopher coach and right now he's somewhat in the limelight because his club is one of two throughout the nation which have defeated the supposedly invincible Kentucky quintet.

The coach is right at home on the ether waves in consequence of a slick speaking voice and a faculty to express himself quickly and well during his experting which carries authority. Hall, a leading local newspaper sports writer and radio sportscaster, is right in the groove, too, during the interviewing session with Cowles, for he, of course, knows what he's talking about and his own opinions, which he occasionally gives voice to, carry weight. His radio voice leaves nothing to be desired. Farrell, a local high school coach and basketball official, also is at home on the air, while Peterson, an organist, interrupts the gabbing with well spotted renditions of college songs.

Ordinarily Cowles appears in person on the show, but on the one caught he was in Milwaukee for a Minnesota game with Marquette, and the Hall interview was conducted over the long distance telephone and tape recorded.

Commercials at the start and end are held down. The show for the basketball season's duration replaces a similar football program featuring Bernie Bierman, longtime Minnesota gridiron coach, with Hall doing the interviewing on that, too. Rees.

Peter Potter's Switch

Hollywood, Jan. 8.

KFWB prexy Harry Maizlish fired deejay Peter Potter Monday (7) afternoon. Latter wound up half-hour later at KLAC with a two-year pact calling for a guarantee $45,000 annually in the spot vacated by Al Jarvis.

Maizlish heard that Potter was dickering for the spot and demanded the deejay give 90-day notice or be fired when finished his afternoon program. When no notice was forthcoming Potter was ousted.

Joe Yocam and Red Rowe will share Potter's time on KFWB.

Kefauver Gab Series Set for WMCA, N.Y.

WMCA, Nathan Straus-owned indie in N. Y., has wrapped up a series of four broadcasts by Sen. Estes Kefauver (D., Tenn.) in which the former chairman of the Senate crime probe committee will state his stand on foreign and domestic policies. Series kicks off Friday (11) at 9:30-9:45 p.m.

Straus announced that the station will permit rebroadcast of the Kefauver series by other stations, either on a live or recorded basis. He said the program is designed to promote public understanding of important national issues and will be followed by other airers originating from Washington or N. Y.

Boston — WHDH, which incubated NBC's Bob and Ray, has come up this week with another d.j. and a new show. Called "The Cloud Club," this will be an across-the-board feature aired from 10:35 till midnight with announcer New Powers acting as host.

GREYSTONE PRESS TO ABC SUN. NIGHT SLOT

Greystone Press has bought the Sunday 9:45-10 p.m. slot on ABC to plug a number of its books for 13 weeks, via Huber Hoge agency.

Purchase takes the web off the hook for half of the period left vacant by Ronson's dropping of "Hollywood Stars on Stage" in the 9:30-10 p.m. slot. Web put Marlene Dietrich's "Cafe Istanbul" into the 9:15-9:45 position and had been mulling a musical stanza at 9:45.

Greystone is using a 71-station lineup. Press, which generally uses one-time shows, was committed to a 13-week cycle. In addition it bought two 15-minute one-shots last night (Tues.), booked back-to-back in the 8 p.m. half-hour.

KSL'S BANNER '51 BIZ

Salt Lake City, Jan. 8.

"Irma" takes off for Cavalier cigarets tonight (8) with Marie Wilson and Kathy Lewis essaying their radio leads, supported by Sig Arno, who replaces Hans Conried, Hal March in the John Brown role, Brooks West, husband of Eve Arden, and Gloria Gordon. Richard Whorf directs and Frank Galen heads up the writing staff.

Al Pearce half hour morning strip, airing from here at 8 a. m. Monday through Friday, starting Feb. 15, will be patterned after Arthur Godfrey's daytime show and originate at the Earl Carroll Theatre. Slated for an early April start is the Ginger Rogers series, with the film star appearing in half-hour dramatics. No producer or director has been picked.

New shows now being ready for spring duty are "Our Miss Brooks," which will be pilot-filmed Jan. 29; "Life With Luigi," also to be filmed, and "Johnny Dollar," with Edmund O'Brien likely as the lead. Another departing show from N.Y. is "Man Against Crime," which will be filmed in Hollywood.

Ackerman has several other shows on the planning board, including a variety layout with a top name. He is also talking a deal with John Guedel and Art Linkletter for TV'ing "House Party."

Heavy schedule of shows, both customed here and moved from N. Y., is forcing Ackerman to expand his personnel. He is now on the search for a production executive and a casting director. Ben Feiner is executive producer and assistant to Ackerman on the production side, and Hal Hudson is manager of the TV department. In the search for new talent, Larry Burns is auditioning and scouting this territory, while Bill Dozier pursues these duties out of N. Y.

CBS has concluded a new deal with Hal Roach for continuance of the Amos ' ' Andy series. "Corliss Archer" will have Helen Mack as producer until she leaves for N. Y. to join her husband, Tom McAvity, an executive with NBC-TV.

Others on the "Corner" are a cat named Tondelayo, which is visible enough although the pretense is made that only Kovacs and little children can see it. Pete Boyle, WPTZ staffer, plays the Irish cop on the beat. Setting, incidentally, is good with street corner background giving an appearance of depth despite the small studio stage. Singer Edythe Adams works in nicely with the Kovacs antics furnishing quiet-contrast for the extrovert lead. Together they did takeoff on "The Third Man" in dialect. Miss Adams also sings a couple numbers in pleasant melodic style, with backing by Dave Appell's Trio, well known here on the musical bar circuits who wear street cleaners outfits for the "Corner" motif. Finale had cast doing "On Top of Old Smoky" with Kovacs reading the lines to a vocal background.

Kovacs has the faculty of making everything seem ad-lib, and no doubt a lot of it is. Gagh.

TRADE INN
With Pat Tobin, Todd Purse
Producer-Director: Grover J. Allen
30 Mins.; Mon.-thru-Fri., 4 p.m.
Sustaining
WENR-TV, Chicago

With a little tightening this gadget-laden affair looks likely to gain momentum with later afternoon housewife viewers. It's hosted by a couple of personable people—Pat Tobin and Todd Purse—and its basic ingredients are essentially sound.

The session is divided into four segments and is laid out in sort of a rural swap shop setting. On the show seen (4) the first portion was given over to guest participation with viewers invited to bring to the program articles they wish to swap. With the show just getting underway the couple who appeared to exchange a meatgrinder for a coffee maker smacked pretty much as "plants." However, once the project gets rolling there'll probably be an oversupply of David Harums anxious to appear on TV.

Other items included a personal service section with the usual appeals for apartments, etc., which provided the hearts and flowers touch. Then there was a letter writing contest and a white elephant game which had two guests attempting to guess the knickknacks brought in the other. This bit seemed the weakest link and overlong.

It's an offbeat format at least as far as the local video scene is concerned and therein lies its strength. That and the fact Miss Tobin and Purse work the show with a nicely relaxed style. Miss Tobin would impress even more if she would remember to check that "intimate" wink at the door.

Dave.

the survey on FM ownership made for WFDR manager Lou Frankel. Survey showed that 260,000 of the 950,000 FM set owners in the metropolitan N. Y. area listen to the union-owned station.

Study also indicated that the FM owners are in a very high income bracket, the median family being in the over $6,000 group. FM listeners also have more education than the general population, with 46% being college graduates and 72% having high school diplomas. Survey also reported that FM families have 20% less television set ownership than the general population of New York, and that they listen to FM more than they watch TV.

On the basis of these figures, Frankel is making pitches for class bankrollers, who direct their appeals to a high-income audience.

Philly vs. Chi

may turn to WBKB for some net shows.

Status of affiliation, in fact, determines to a large extent which cities get the networks' blessings as origination points. While CBS has no shows coming from Chi, DuMont, on the basis of its close ties with WGN-TV, now has five Chi-originated packages on its schedule. DuMont, at the same time, has no primary affiliate in Philly, so has no network feeds from that city. ABC, with its o.&o. outlet in Chi, WENR-TV, has five show from there, but also has three from WFIL-TV, Philly, which is a primary affiliate.

NBC, which sparked the move to Chi originally for TV and helped establish the so-called Chi technique with programs like "Garroway at Large," is using both cities less than any of the other nets. NBC now has two shows from Chi and one from Philly.

Hot Assignment

Chicago, Jan. 8.

It looks to be a really hot assignment for the radio and television staffers who will converge upon Chicago for the national political conventions next June. Work was started last week on the installation of a $300,000 air-conditioning unit at the International Amphitheatre, where the political powwows will be held. But the cooling plant will only serve the arena portion of the building where the convention proper will be held.

This means the big side rooms, which will be largely taken over by the radio-TV contingent, will not have the benefit of the air conditioner to take the curse off the usually hot Windy City summer temperatures.

Westinghouse May Be Initial User of CBS 'Selective Facilities'

Westinghouse may become the first CBS radio sponsor to adopt the web's new "selective facilities" plan, by signing for only a part of CBS' 206 stations to carry the upcoming political conventions coverage. Under the plan, devised by CBS Radio prexy Howard Meighan, the web will have the right to sell the conventions to one or more sponsors for the remaining markets if Westinghouse limits its station lineup.

Westinghouse originally ordered only 60 AM markets, on the assumption that it would need the rest of its budget to pay the costs for the complete CBS-TV station lineup. On the video side, however, CBS is having difficulty in single-station markets. As a result, if Westinghouse is frozen out of those TV areas, it may decide to take the entire CBS Radio lineup.

Under the "selective facilities" plan, CBS will allow a sponsor to take a network as small as the basic group of 26 stations, but retains the right in all such cases to sell the remaining markets to one or more other bankrollers. Web is attempting to insure, in that way, that its affiliates will have as few sustaining holes as possible in their network schedules.

POOL PICKUPS IN WEST FOR POLITICAL TV'ER

Confronted with the fact that there is only one networking channel available from Omaha to the Coast, the television webs, in the middle of their hassles last week over station clearances for the political conventions coverage, decided to pool all pickups west of Omaha. Local commercials will probably be cut in on the Coast stations, which means that Westinghouse, which is sponsoring on CBS, and Philco, which will bankroll the NBC coverage, will not be represented in the far west.

Situation will apply to the four interconnected markets west of Omaha, including Salt Lake City, San Francisco, Los Angeles and San Diego. If present plans go through for the insertion of local commercials in each market, it would mean the convention coverage would be sold on virtually a co-op basis among the four networks on the Coast.

blacked-out single stations markets via use of other promotional methods that may well cost them twice as much as the original $400,000 saving.

Under terms of its CBS deal, Westinghouse will compensate stations for 34 hours, including 30 hours of the conventions and four hours of election coverage. In addition, there will be 13 half-hour pre-election campaign programs. NBC demanded that Westinghouse buy 45 hours, including 40 hours of conventions and five hours of election coverage. The additional 11 hours would have hiked the Westinghouse tab by $400,000. Westinghouse pointed out that it had a limited budget and grabbed the CBS deal. Two days later NBC prexy Joseph H. McConnell sold Philco (see separate story) on buying the conventions-election package that was originally offered to Westinghouse.

As it shapes up, Westinghouse will have a 30-station interconnected lineup of CBS stations, with Philco totaling 51 on NBC.

mission, Robert Jones, vigorously dissented to lumping the issues in one package. Since the Commission has not yet acted on Par's application to transfer WBKB to United Paramount, Jones contended that Par's status as a licensee should first be determined before taking up the merger.

The hearings will tee off with testimony on the Par-DuMont issues, which is expected to consume a week. The proceedings will then be recessed until Feb. 4 when the Paramount anti-trust issues will be heard, followed by testimony on the merger. Proceedings should wind up by March 1, with a final decision in the fall.

The Par-DuMont question is being heard first at the request of William A. Roberts, counsel for DuMont, who has indicated he will afterward petition the Commission to sever the testimony from the proceedings and decide the control issue before the hearings are completed. If his request is granted, DuMont will be in a position to act one way or another on its TV applications when the freeze is lifted.

The hearings are almost certain to be confined to the parties involved—Paramount Pictures, UPT, DuMont, ABC and CBS. Fanchon & Marco, theatre operaters, and Gordon Brown, owner of radio station WSAY in Rochester, N. Y., were still fighting doggedly last week to enter the proceedings as intervenors but their chances appeared slim.

It also appeared unlikely that the Dept. of Justice will participate directly.

Ziv's 'I Was a Commie' FBI Open-End Series Set for March 30 Bow

Stepping up its production of new transcribed programs, Frederic W. Ziv Co. has started waxing "I Was a Communist for the FBI," starring Dana Andrews. Ziv bought the rights to the property from Matt Cvetic, for nine years an undercover agent for the FBI.

The open-ender, to be released March 30, is budgeted at $12,500, according to John L. Sinn, executive veepee of Ziv. Sinn plans to have 52 half-hours taped by July 30. Musical director will be David Rose, with Henry Hayward directing. A stable of four or five writers will script the show, with yarns by Milton Geiger and Herb Purdum having already been waxed.

Cvetic, who has been lecturing on his experiences as an FBI eye in the Communist Party, joined the Reds in 1941 at the request of the FBI. In February, 1950, he appeared before the House Committee on Un-American Affairs with 93 pounds of Red letters, records, files, etc., gathered while he held posts in the party. While he was a member he supplied the FBI with 20,000 typewritten pages of reports, 30,000 pages of exhibits, letters and publications. He also gave the FBI the names of nearly 1,000 CP members.

Sinn said that Cvetic will be available for lectures and appearances on behalf of local sponsors of the program on payment of a fee. Material for the show was gathered over a four-week period by sitting Cvetic down with a team of writers and stenographers while he spieled. Cvetic, who authored a Saturday Evening Post series with Pete Martin, is also checking over the finished scripts.

Show will be in first-person narrative form, with episodes dramatizing incidents from Cvetic's experience and testimony. Sinn said that the program's aim is not to get people "to look under their beds for Commies" but to achieve a documentary style. In New York this week Cvetic said that when he left the FBI he declared that he would continue to fight Communism.

FAST GETAWAY FOR DISKS IN '52

Col Records Warns N.Y. Dealers On Peddling of Counterfeit Disks

In a drastic step to halt distribution of counterfeit platters of its hits, Columbia Records last week warned all New York metropolitan dealers that they would be criminally prosecuted if they handled the illegal merchandise. Col's latest move against the bootleggers was prompted by the flagrant marketing of Johnnie Ray disks by shady operators.

Columbia discovered that at least one outfit was issuing copies of Ray's "Little White Cloud That Cried" and "Cry" platters to record retailers under the Okeh label, latter being a Columbia subsid. The extent of the circulation of the counterfeit disks has been difficult to determine, but it's estimated that a big, fast deal was swung by the counterfeiters involving several thousands copies. Ray's disk has already hit the 600,000 mark for the legitimate Okeh label.

It's believed that the counterfeiters latched onto the Ray disks because of the strike at Columbia's Bridgeport plant. Although Columbia is being serviced by other majors' pressing facilities, notably RCA Victor and M-G-M Records, shortages on the top hits have developed in some areas, leaving an opening for the bootleggers.

The strike of Col's factory workers at Bridgeport has also had a negative impact on several minor disk labels which were pressed by Columbia. Such longhair companies as Westminister and Cetra-Soria, among others, have been finding it tough making deliveries in the last couple of weeks.

MPCE Exec Committee Pronoses Amendments To End Factionalism

At the initial meeting of the newly elected exec committee of the Music Publishers Contact Employees last week, amendments and bylaws to the union's constitution were suggested for submission to the MPCE membership. The constitutional innovations will be voted on at a general meeting Jan. 17.

Changes in the constitution were necessitated by the factionalism which sprang up among the contactmen during the election campaign last month. Charges of unconstitutionality in the election procedure weren't pressed, but the exec board hopes to tighten the loopholes with the new amendments.

An MPCE relief committee was also appointed at last week's conclave. The committee, which will be headed by Joe Santly, includes Irving Tanz, Bernie Pollack, Harry Santly and Jack Johnstone.

Bob Miller, MPCE prexy, leaves for the Coast at the end of January to conduct board meetings there. He'll be gone about a month.

ARS' Distrib Deal In Young People's Records

The American Recording Society, which was launched last year via a grant from the Alice M. Ditson Fund of Columbia Records, is expanding its operation with the takeover of distribution services for the Young People's Records label. New move puts the ARS into a key position in the educational-juve field since it already produces its own long-play classical disk line and acts as rep for the Children's Record Guild.

Lester Troob, YPR prexy, said the distrib deal with ARS will be timed with an extensive promotion of the kidisk line on radio and TV. Although under ARS direction, YPR sales will remain under the direction of Jerome Gordon, sales manager since the disk diskery was founded six years ago.

Krupa Revives Trio

Gene Krupa has revived his jazz trio, comprising Charlie Ventura on sax and Teddy Napoleon on piano. Combo will break in at Ventura's Open House Club, Lindenwood, N. J., prior to opening at the State Theatre, Hartford, Jan. 19.

Trio last worked together in 1946.

Stalemate on Exec For New Disk Org

Initial full membership meeting of newly-formed Record Industry Assn. of America, originally projected for this month, has been set back by the failure of the screening committee to come up with a candidate for the exec director's post. Top disk companies, which have taken the initiative in organizing the industry association, have indicated that they wanted all member companies, even the smallest, to have an equal voice in selecting the exec director.

Committee, headed by Leonard Schneider, exec veepee of Decca Records, has been interviewing candidates for the spot and will continue to screen additional applicants until a selection is made. Serving with Schneider on the committee are Howard Letts, RCA Victor; Kenneth Raine, Columbia Records; Wallace Early, M-G-M Records, and Martin Edelstein, Capitol Records.

ECKSTINE-BASIE UNIT IN SOUTHERN 50-DATER

New package unit of Billy Eckstine and Count Basie orch heads out on a southern tour of concert and ballroom dates next month. The 50-date tour tees off in Houston, Feb. 8. Eckstine recently concertized in a package deal with George Shearing.

Unit is being booked by Shaw Artists Corp., which bought the package via William Morris, which represents Eckstine, and Willard Alexander, Basie's rep.

MAJOR LABELS PERK NEW HITS

Expectations of a bullish disk year by industry execs has been buttressed by the fast getaway in the first week of the new year. Although sales have dipped a bit off the Christmas season pace, diskeries are hitting a solid January clip with the new releases which have begun rolling for them. General pickup has been evidenced during the past week when the majority of the new issues began to step out.

Columbia, meantime, is still riding high with Johnnie Ray's "Cry" and "Little White Cloud That Cried," which cleared the 600,000 sales mark during the past week. Col's other powerhouse items Frankie Laine's "Jealousy," Jo Stafford's "Shrimp Boats" and Tony Bennett's "Cold, Cold Heart" are rolling along in high gear.

Of Col's first of the year issues, Ray's "Broken Hearted" and Guy Mitchell's "Wimmi " are moving fast.

With the Four Ace waxing of "Tell Me Why" and Louis Armstrong's "A Kiss to Build a Dream On" on the Decca label building into hit proportions, the diskery is expected to be very strong in January. Early sales figures indicate it will be the company's biggest month in many years. RCA Victor, under its new pop artists and repertory head, Dave Kapp, is

Victor's Pre-Yule Disk Biz Okay

RCA Victor's pre-Christmas business during 1951 maintained an even keel as compared with the previous year, according to the diskery's royalty statements to the major publishers. Although the payments to the majors for the three-month period ending Nov. 30 fell off about 10%, the drop in this category was compensated by the pickup in payments to the smaller publishers which have been handling the novelty and country hits.

Victor's royalty payments for the last quarter were 12% over the previous quarter ending Aug. 30, 1950. Top click on the Victor roster during the last three-month period has been Tony Martin's "I Get Ideas."

Decca-U Merger Plans

Decca attorneys are understood to be working out a reorganization plan by which the diskery would be merged with Universal Pictures, in which Decca recently acquired controlling interest. Decca prexy Milton R. Rackmil, currently on the Coast, is slated to become prez of the new company.

Uruguay Fiesta's 150G Band Coin

The Montevideo Carnivals, which open in the Uruguayan capital this year in February, is shelling out over $150,000 for bookings of three name bands, including two from the U. S. Coin will be spread among the Tommy Dorsey, Miguelito Valdes and Perez Prado orch. In addition, the carnival organizers are paying about $65,000 for round-trip air transportation for the three musicrews to and from Montevideo.

Perez Prado and a 20-man troupe will play in Montevideo from Feb. 16 to March 7. Dorsey and a 26-man outfit will play a month-long stand from Feb. 23 to March 21, while Valdes's 22-man organization will play from March 1 to March 23. The Carnivals have options on each orch for two or more weeks. McConkey Artists Corp. has handled the deals for the Carnival.

RICHMOND SETS TIE WITH AUSSIE FIRM

Augmenting his tie-ins with foreign publishing houses, Howie Richmond has pacted a three-year exclusive deal with Dee Davis & Co., Australian pubbery. Richmond inked a similar three-year exclusive pact last spring with Edizeoni Curci, Italian firm.

Pact with the Aussie firm includes catalogs of the Richmond subsids, Ludlow, Hollis, Dartmouth, Cromwell and Folkways. Publishing rights to the songs in other foreign countries are contracted on a per-tune basis.

A sharp upward swing for the disk biz in 1952 is predicted by Frank M. Folsom, RCA prexy, as part of the general optimistic outlook for industry execs for the new year. Folsom said that "the sales trend of records should continue sharply upwards, unless material shortages cause a slackening in the present production rates of the new-speed instruments. But then, sales should be above those of 1951, due to the increased number of these instruments now in use."

Accenting the role of the new speed systems in the business upbeat, Folsom said sales of 45 rpm and 33 rpm disks accounted for 90% of the year's industry-wide total in the classical field. Folsom particularly plugged the Victor 45 rpm system, declaring that demand for 45 rpm turntables had created shortages in many areas during the latter part of 1951.

Indicating the complete adjustment of the retail end of the industry to the three-speed setup, Folsom reported that inventories were approaching "effective levels," for the first time in many years. He said that dealers also were sold on the new speed platters because of the "ease in handling, the lack of breakage and the over-all superiority in recording."

Folsom declared that new techniques for improving the sound quality of the old masters has proved highly successful in stimulating interest in reissues of the classics. As a striking example, Folsom pointed out that more Caruso records were bought in 1951 than in any year since the tenor died in 1921. Folsom announced that RCA Victor is planning an extensive series of reissues from its old catalog as part of its "Treasury of Immortal Performance" series.

Cugat's 16 Sides For Mercury; Goes Hillbilly In Bid to Widen Market

Following his switch from Columbia to Mercury Records, Xavier Cugat cut 16 sides for the new label in the last three weeks. Although still accenting the rhumba rhythms, Cugat is making a bid for a wider market via orch slices of mambo and hillbilly tunes, the latter being an unusual departure for the Cugat orch. Among the numbers just cut is an English rendition of "Babulu," with Richard Hayes vocalling.

Cugat, who just closed a stand at the Copacabana, N. Y., opens at the Edgewater Beach Hotel in Chicago Jan. 25 for four weeks and then goes into the Schroeder Hotel in Milwaukee for one week. Subsequently, Cugat will play the Last Frontier in Las Vegas for three weeks, and the Riverside Hotel in Reno.

Cugat, meantime, has been inked to two-a-year pic deal by RKO for three years with his next assignment to be Tony Martin starrer.

Burke & Van Heusen, Simon Pub Partnership

Burke & Van Heusen Music, Johnny Burke's and Jimmy Van Heusen' firm, has tied up with George Simon's publishing company in a partnership deal.

Burke & Van Heusen Associates, a separate company and subsid of Famous, will continue to operate for publication of Paramount pic scores. Of this subsid, Famous owns one-half, Burke & Van Heusen, one-quarter; and Bing Crosby, one-quarter.

Jocks, Jukes and Disks

By MIKE GROSS

Perry Como: "Tulips and Heather"-"Please Mr. Sun" (Victor). Perry Como's expert workover of these two top ballads should rack up plenty of spins. It's Como's best job in some months. "Tulips and Heather" is a solid romantic item rich in melody and mood. Tune's sentimental flavor is projected excellently by Como's understanding delivery. "Please Mr. Sun" is another of the new year's strong ballad entries and should nab an equal number of juke and jock plays. Tune's plaintive quality is aided by Como's simple and direct styling. Mitchell Ayres orch lends an able assist on both sides.

Mindy Carson: "Allegheny Fiddler"-"Dance Me Loose" (Victor). "Allegheny Fiddler" is a jaunty novelty item due for big returns. Blending of a bouncy beat and an ingratiating lyric makes it a sure jock and juke bet. Mindy Carson handles the vocal with an infectious gaiety. Hugo Winterhalter's spirited orch backing gives the side another important plus. Although Miss Carson gets across an okay rendition of "Dance Me Loose," she'll find it tough pulling ahead of Arthur Godfrey's Columbia waxing.

Les Paul & Mary Ford: "Tiger Rag"-"It's a Lonesome Old Town" (Capitol). Paul-Ford team tees off the 1952 platter sweepstakes with one of its best entries. Combo's electric workover of the oldie "Tiger Rag," should dominate for some time. Paul's effective guitaring and Miss Ford's multiple-voiced handling of the lyric blend into an exciting platter. Reverse is a change of pace but a continuation of the Paul-Ford electronic gimmickry.

Gordon Jenkins Orch: "Somebody" - "Anna Maria" (Decca). "Somebody" is a pleasant waltz item which is handled affectionately by Gordon Jenkins' orch and chorus. It's easy on the ear and with a proper juke jolt could move into the big seller class. Bob Carroll is effective on the vocal. "Anna Maria," although given a bright Jenkins' interpretation, is just a so-so side.

Johnnie Ray: "Please Mr. Sun"-"Broken Hearted" (Columbia). Currently riding high with "Little White Cloud That Cried" and "Cry," Johnnie Ray has a potent entry in "Please Mr. Sun." His pulsating delivery of the tender lyric will build his stock as a bobbysox fave. On the M-G-M label, Tommy Edwards dishes out a sincere, straightforward rendition of "Sun." It should catch on despite the Ray phenomenon. On "Broken Hearted," Ray's vocal vibrattos seem overly dramatic achieving an unintentional ludicrous effect.

Johnny Desmond: "Until"-"Oh, My Darlin'" (Coral). Johnny Desmond, who recently ankled the M-G-M fold, gets off to a fair start with initial Coral release. "Until" is an okay entry which Desmond sells convincingly. Tune, however, isn't strong enough to stand up in current big ballad market despite the standout piping. Reverse is an Americanization of the French tune "Alouette." Desmond's saucy workover makes it a good juke bet.

Victor Marchese: "Flamingo"-"When I Dream of Home" (M-G-M). M-G-M has a potent tenor attraction in Victor Marchese. On his initial sides for the diskery, Marchese displays an exciting wax personality whose well-trained pipes should build a following of pop and semi-longhair platter fans. His voice is pure and clear and his vocal range is an ear-arrester. Although the oldies "Flamingo" and "When I Dream of Home" are aptly suited to his top styling, Marchese's entry in the male disk sweeps would have been stronger with at least one new pop tune.

Doris Day: "Oops"-"Baby Doll" (Columbia). "Oops," a novelty number from the forthcoming Metro filmusical "Belle of New York," has a good chance to click via Doris Day's workover. Cute lyric idea is well complemented by a refreshing melody with Miss Day projecting the happy refrain in standout style. Margaret Whiting's cut on Capitol captures the same spark while Debbie Reynolds, on the M-G-M label, is okay but lacks the disk savvy displayed by Misses Day and Whiting. "Baby Doll," also from the pic score, is given an effective rendition by Miss Day in a more serious vein. Paul Weston's orch scores with a firstrate backing assist.

Ricky Vallo: "Trust in Me"-"Ruby Lips - Emerald Eyes" (M-G-M). Ricky Vallo impresses as a strong addition to the M-G-M stable with his solid etching of the oldie "Trust in Me." Young baritone knows the value of a lyric and projects the romantic mood with ease. Vallo is also sock on the lighter reverse item. It's a gay cornfed number which he belts out with exuberance. This side could make him another juve set fave.

Guy Mitchell: "Wimmin"-"We Won't Live in a Castle" (Columbia). "Wimmin" is potent fodder for the folk faddists who've been warily watching the folktune decline during the past few months. This side could bring a resurgence with full force. It's got a charming lilt and an infectious lyric. Mitchell boosts his stock with his captivating, highly humorous vocal rendition while Mitch Miller's orch backing (French horns stressed) adds a spicy flavor. It's headed for top jock and juke spins. Mitchell changes pace nicely on the flipover. It's a sentimental number which he delivers with feeling.

Ella Fitzgerald: "Baby Doll"-"Lady Bug" (Decca). Ella Fitzgerald handles "Baby Doll," ballad entry from Metro's "Belle of New York," with enough warmth and care to make it a sock wax potential. Miss Fitzgerald's rich piping builds a mellow mood which should capture the juke trade. Bottom slice is a Miss Fitzgerald-styled blues number but not so effective.

Dinah Shore: "Life Is a Beautiful Thing"-"Why Should I Believe in Love" (Victor). Coupling of tunes from the Paramount film "Aaron Slick From Punkin Crick" should net only moderate returns in the jock and juke market. Dinah Shore gets the most out of "Life Is a Beautiful Thing" with her warm thrushing. Tune has a pleasant lilt and a charming sentiment but is too reminiscent in both lyric though and melodic line to click. Bottom deck is a ballad item, too heavy for popular appeal.

Platter Pointers

The late Charley Christian, guitarist, is featured on an exciting 10 inch LP waxing of a jam session taped in 1941 by the indie Esoteric label. Christian is expertly backed by Thelonius Monk, piano; Joe Guy, trumpet; Kenny Clark, drums, and Nick Finton, bass . . . Rita Moss shows off some top blues styling in her Decca initialer, "Darlin" . . . Red Foley is headed for big returns with his workover of the "Snow White" fave, "Whistle While You Work" (Decca) . . . Norman Kaye continues to impress on "Once I Loved You" (Capitol) . . . Thea Weavers and Gordon Jenkins Orch have an exciting African folk number in "Wimoweh" (Decca).

U. S. Tour of Valencia Orch From Spain, With Iturbi As Guest Maestro, in Works

Columbia Artists Mgt. is dickering to bring over the Valencia Orchestra from Spain, for a tour of North and South America this spring, with Jose Iturbi as guest conductor. Tour would be managed by the Coppicus, Schang & Brown division of Columbia, and cover eight weeks in the U. S., prior to the South American visit.

Frederick C. Schang, prez of Columbia, made a special trip to the Coast over the holidays to discuss the matter with Iturbi, and got his okay. Schang is now in cable negotiations with Valencia town authorities (the orch is a muny venture), to see if the trip can be made this spring, and a muny guarantee provided.

Iturbi, who is well known as conductor as well as pianist, formed the Spanish orchestra some years ago (Valencia is his home town). He not only toured Spain with it, but also took it on a successful tour of England and France.

There's also been some question of Columbia taking on concert management of Iturbi as solo artist, since Jean Dalrymple relinquished the post due to her recent marriage and stay abroad. Iturbi's pix and foreign concert commitments are likely to prevent this tieup, however, although Columbia's recital department is handling (as a one-shot) the special concert which Iturbi is presenting at Carnegie Hall, N. Y., Saturday afternoon (12). Iturbi will direct the RCA Victor Symphony in four concertos, by Mozart, Beethoven, Mendelssohn and Liszt, conducting from the piano.

Mills Inks Deal With RKO For Pix Scores, Tunes Back to '50

Hollywood, Jan. 8.

Irving Mills, head of Mills Music, Inc., opened an office at RKO studios to serve as liaison with production executives under the terms of a new agreement giving the pubbery exclusive rights to all background music used in RKO films. Deal, retroactive to 1950, also includes individual film tunes owned by the studio rather than by the songwriters involved.

Pact covers all films made or released by RKO exclusive of Walt Disney product. Some 40 films now in release, including "Two Tickets to Broadway," "I Want You," "Vendetta," "The Outlaw," "His Kind of Woman," "Flying Leathernecks" and "The Racket," are covered.

Mills will serve as a contact with Constantin Bakaleinikoff, head of the studio's music department.

Within the next few months publisher will head for Europe to begin putting the worldwide aspect of the agreement in operation and establish a pattern for royalty/collections. Mills Music, Ltd., of England will handle collections for all RKO pix and releases abroad and Mills will rep background composers to collect royalties they have coming to them apart from what is due RKO. Music royalties in Europe are on a per performance basis.

Mills, largest indie music pubbery in the U. S., has served many indie pic producers in the past, but the tie with RKO marks its first link with a major studio. RKO has for some time been the only film outfit without publisher representation.

Sees Disk Jockey Ably Fitting Into Pattern of Video

By MORT NUSBAUM
(Disk Jockey at WHAM, Rochester, N. Y.)

Rochester, N. Y., Jan. 8.

Now that the smoke of battle has cleared away, and the consensus is that the disk jockey is here to stay, new question is making the rounds—this time from within the ranks. It's not the kind of question that makes the headlines; most of the time it's a question that isn't even asked out loud. But whenever two deejays get together the conversation sooner or later drifts around to one question:

The radio picture is changing; television is changing listening habits; many artists are drifting from AM to TV. Just where does the disk jockey fit into this changing scene?

That's the $64 question right now!

First, let's examine the deejay's position in radio.

As a low-budgeted local show, the deejay (particularly the early morning man) has probably the least to worry about from the impact of TV on radio listening and consequent sales. Sponsors may cut down on high-cost AM shows, but when they want to sell their products on the local level, they still haven't found a substitute for the deejay who carries their message informally and unhurriedly to an enormous and loyal following.

Sure, listening habits may be changed by TV. Sure, TV will make some inroads on AM. But it's going to be a long, long time before TV can reach the number of people the deejays, collectively, do on radio. And if—not when, mind you—but if—TV ever cuts into radio to the point where it ceases to be as promising and lucrative as before, then what's in store for the deejay?

The Elusive Answer

Now, I'm not going to say that every deejay is going to be a second Milton Berle—but I do believe this: as a group, deejays are among the best qualified radio performers in the business to make the jump.

In the first place, the deejay is by nature an ad libber. And don't ever sell that point short!, When you can spiel off a sponsor's plug sans aid of script, you've won one of the major battles in TV.

Deejays are used to cuddling up to their audience and making with the "intimate" patter. The jockeys—more than any other group—talk to their audience, never at them—or even worse—down to them.

Now when TV opens up on a larger scale, local TV outlets are going to need local shows. So who are they going to turn to for talent? There'll be certain basic shows like news and sports—but when they want local entertainment and need guy to do the emcee jobs—who's going to be more logical for the job than the guy who (a) can ad lib commercials; (b) is already well-known locally; (c) can deliver plenty of smooth patter about this, that, and the other thing. In short, the deejay!

HUB TOOTERS BAN D.J. GUEST SHOTS

Boston, Jan. 8.

Hub's Local No. 9, American Federation of Musicians, has issued a ukase banning all members and traveling members, coming under its jurisdiction, from guesting on deejay shows on local radio stations. Action stemmed from the growing practice of several platter spinners who have lately been intensifying the acceptance of engagements to conduct "record hops" for various teen-age groups.

Union execs feel the practice is cutting into the work of local bandsmen and if allowed to mushroom would seriously hinder the casual engagements so important to local tooters. Advised by station execs that they have no jurisdiction over spielers' extra-curricular activities, union decided shutting off of guest bandleaders and card holding music personalities on offending deejays platter shows could possibly stymie the trend.

Old Pops in 2-a-Month Release by RCA Victor

Dipping further into its back catalog, RCA Victor is projecting release of its old pop hits on a two-a-month basis. Numbers will be selected in line with requests registered by dealers. Initial disk, sued this week, is Dinah Shore's "Blues in the Night" and "Yes, My Darling Daughter." Next disk will be the late George Gershwin playing his "Rhapsody in Blue" composition.

Victor is also prepping early release of an extensive folk dance program on wax, comprising 20 platters etched under the baton of Michael Herman. Series is being issued by Victor's educational department.

Music's Loaded Lingo

By ARNOLD SHAW

(V.P. and Gen. Professional Mgr., Duchess Music Corp.)

The music biz manufactures slanguage almost as fast as it does hit songs. Since April, 1950, when BMI published a "hitionary" of Tin Pan Alley lingo, which I put together, additional words and phrases have come at me from all directions. Here is a brief supplementary songlossary to make plugger conversash more intelligible and hash more edible at luncheon.

Back-Breaker: A song that's tough to put over. These days it's usually a slow, pretty ballad—the kind that gave Jerome Kern a double-A rating in ASCAP.

Big Hypo: A lot of talk and a lot of pressure, but the song hasn't got it.

Bill: The boys don't carry anything smaller. A century note.

Blast: What a publisher gives a record exec who jumps a release date. What the record exec gives the publisher when another record company jumps the gun.

Blow a Fuse: When a contactman gets curved by a plug during his drive week, he blows his fuse, his stack, his top, or anything that's handy.

Bug: What writers do to publishers, publishers do to record execs, and everybody does to everybody to get action.

Lay a Bomb: When a song doesn't happen, it lays one. Shortened to "bombsville."

Dipsy: Short for "dipsy doodle." What everyone is trying to pull but recognizes only when the other guy is doing it.

Down Tempo: Slow. Opposite of "up tempo."

Fasti Short for "fast one." See "dipsy."

Feelsville: What an artist gives a song when he's trying it on for size.

Finagle: See "fastie. Also "dipsy." This one also goes as a verb.

Flip One's Lid: What every songwriter believes publishers should do about his songs. Abbreviated to: "He flipped."

Flub a Dub: To make a boo-boo.

In Front: Where writers want their money on a new song.

Get Him: Believe it or not.

Hassle: What you get into when a dipsy doesn't come off.

Head Arrangement: The boys start playing and where they go, nobody knows. You see, it's not written down. It's coming out of the head.

It Doesn't Hit Me: Who let that guy in here with that song?

Hornsville: Any Mitch Miller recording.

Lift It: What they're doing to the tempo on most records and commercial shows today.

Loaded: Refers to what's in the money-clip, not the gut.

Marked Lousy: What happens to a contactman when he puts an arangement into a band's book, and the firm goes off the song.

Material: It isn't a plug song.

For No: What publishers like to get songs for. No dough.

Pickup: Could be a note (when a song begins on the last beat of a measure), a band (when the personnel is not set), or a chick.

Rack: Big order for sheet music given by jobbers on potential hits. If the song misses, the publisher feels as if he's been put on one when the returns start coming back.

Shot: A plug.

Thou: What thou wantest as an advance if thou hast a hit. A thousand.

Throwaway: What a bandleader gives a plugger when the guy needs a shot and there's no arrangement in the book.

Top: "From the top," used by musicians to mean from the beginning. "Off the top," used by agents to mean when they get their commissions. "Blow his top," used by everybody in the business.

Toughie: See "back-breaker."

Turkey: When plug songs missed, they used to be called dogs. Now they're turkeys.

Utah Symph Engineers Bankrolling Deal For Free School Concerts

Salt Lake City, Jan. 8.

Utah Symphony Orchestra has closed a long-worked-on deal for sponsorship of free concerts presented before high school audiences, which will bring in 2G to the till. Setup calls for eight concerts before local schools, with tab picked up by Deseret Book Publishing Co. to the tune of $6,000. Utah Power and Light will go for two out of towners for $1,000 each.

Deal is the culmination of three years of pioneer work by Maurice Abravanel, orchestra musical director. He kicked off the idea of free concerts over the opposition of many who felt the kids weren't interested. That teen agers will go longhair has been proved by the fact that Abravanel's concerts have been voted the best assemblies of the year at all schools.

The maestro feels he's accomplished four goals by setting up the free concerts on sponsored basis. First, income is upped. Second, an audience for the future is being built. Third, thousands of future adults are learning the importance of good music, and will be willing to lend support when needed. And fourth, kids are shown it's possible to concentrate on one subject for 45 minutes and enjoy it.

The last, thinks Abravanel, is the most important, because it reverses the concept of radio and TV, which are training our younger generation to expect constant change in entertainment.

RCA VICTOR TO WAX MENOTTI'S TV OPERA

Cued by the click preem of Gian-Carlo Menotti's new opera, "Amahl and the Night Visitors," on NBC-TV last Christmas Eve, RCA Victor is planning an early issue of the work on wax. The original cast will be used with Menotti to supervise the recording.

G. Schirmer Music will issue the score of the opera in a couple of months. The opera was commissioned by NBC's video division.

RCA Custom Record Biz Hits Peak Biz in '51

RCA's custom record business racked up its best year in sales during 1951, according to James P. Davis, manager of the division. Davis reported that an increasing number of indie disk companies has used RCA's pressing services in 1951 with an even bigger year expected during the next 12 months.

In 1952, Davis disclosed that the custom record division will introduce several new services, such as the 45 rpm system for sales training, and an extensive line of premium, promotion and children's records.

Harms Sues Celebrity Club In Infringement Action

Alan Gale's Celebrity Club, N. Y., last week was named a defendant in a song copyright infringement action brought in N. Y. Federal Court by Harms Music. Suit seeks an injunction and damages of not less than $250.

Complaint charges that under its corporate name of Cami Entertainment Corp., the Celebrity Club used Harms' copyrighted "Zing Went the Strings of My Heart," "I Get a Kick Out of You" and "Three Little Words."

M-G-M Inks Furtado

Tommy Furtado, baritone, who was formerly with Ted Mack's "Prudential Family Hour," has been pacted by M-G-M Records.

Inside Orchestras—Music

In the 1951 Christmas sweepstakes, the three-year old "Rudolph, The Red Nosed Reindeer" topped the list again, racking up close to 400,000 sheet music sales and an estimated 3,240,000 disk sales. Columbia Records, with etchings by Gene Autry, Sammy Kaye, Ken Griffi and Ray Heatherton, led with more than 970,000 sales. Versions by Bing Crosby, Guy Lombardo and Red Foley on the Decca label hit 750,000, while RCA Victor's Spike Jones waxing topped 300,000. Smiley Burnett and Sugar Chile Robinson clicked with over 100,000 for Capitol. In the kiddie division Mitch Miller's etching on Golden Records topped 400,000 while the releases issued by Peter Pan and Children's Record Guild totaled 500,000. Other indie diskers cleared about 240,000.

Sheet sales i "Rudolph's" three-year span have remained constant, bringing the total up to 1,200,000 copies. Royalty figures on the "Rudolph" tie-ins won't be completely compiled until early spring.

Launching one of its major longhair promotions, RCA Victor opened an exhibit in New York yesterday (Tues.) of a collection of personal effects and costumes of the late Enrico Caruso. The exhibit, which has been timed with the release of the second series of the "Treasury of Immortal Performances," will also be in Los Angeles, San Francisco, Chicago and other cities to hypo the longhair reissues on both the 45 rpm and 33 rpm speeds. The items in the exhibit had been stored away since Caruso's death in 1921 and were brought to light recently by Caruso's widow, now living in Baltimore.

TOSCY TO DO BENEFIT AS NBC ORCH FINALE

Arturo Toscanini will close his 15th season with the NBC Symphony March 29 with a Carnegie Hall, N. Y., performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. Concert will be a benefit for the Building Fund of the New York Infirmary. Maestro will be 85 on March 25.

situations, including many nabes turned first-run art, is running ahead of "Brief Encounter" and "Tight Little Island," two of Rank's top grossers on the art circuit.

In addition, American audiences are becoming increasingly familiar with British pix because of the large group of these films now being presented on video.

Best example of the successful conversion of a nabe to an art house is the experience of the Gramercy, N. Y., which reportedly upped its yearly gross by $30,000 since it switched to an art policy.

While the conversion of nabes to first-run art houses is a recent trend, art theatres in general have experienced the same problems as the regular houses. For awhile the sure-seaters found themselves without sufficient suitable product. With the fall-off of top French and Italian imports, these situations desperately sought replacements, and it wasn't until only recently that outstanding British films came along to fill the gap.

Stress Comfort

Besides presenting film fare of special appeal to the "lost audience," the art houses stress comfort and convenience. They arrange for appropriate starting times for the main feature, frequently serve free coffee and cigarets in the lounge, and many have installed wide, comfortable seats. Theatre managers also make a special pitch to this "special" audience by maintaining accurate mailing lists, inserting appropriate ads in the local newspapers, and offering other "extras" such as art exhibits,, etc.

According to Jeff Livingston, J. Arthur Rank's U. S. pub-ad topper, the so-called art films do not have to be arty per se, "but they must be adult." They have to be fresh, says Livingston, "and must get away from the hackneyed." It is Livingston's view that the art house presentations have been instrumental in bringing part of the "lost audience" back to the regular theatres, and it is this group that has returned to see such "adult" films as "A Place in the Sun," "A Streetcar Named Desire," "Death of a Salesman," 'Detective Story" and "Bright Victory."

Disk Biz' Fast Getaway

prepping a big splash with its stable of name artists. Victor is already pushing Perry Como's "Tulips and Heather," which was released last week. Also on tap for a Victor push are the newly released Mindy Carson's "Allegheny Fiddler" and Dinah Shore's "Life Is a Beautiful Thing."

Capitol is booming with its first of the year release of Les Paul-Mary Ford etching of "Tiger Rag." It's estimated that 50,000 copies were sold in the first week. Mercury launched the year with four etchings which racked up 175,000 sales in its initial week. Disks include Patti Page's "Retreat," Eddy Howard's "Stolen Love," Richard Hayes' "River Stay Away From My Door" and harpist Bobby Maxwell's "Chinatown." Also from preem week reaction, Tommy Edward's "Please Mr. Sun" points to a click for M-G-M.

In the rhythm and blues field, both the majors and the indies report a sales upbeat in the grassroots areas. The indies are again anticipating a boom year despite inroads made by the majors into the r.&b. waxings. Okeh, Columbia subsid reactivated last fall, and Mercury's reorganized r.&b. setup are beginning to click in areas heretofore dominated by the indie companies.

Diskers feel that the shortage of materials due to the war effort will channelize the extra spending coin into the wax market. With an increasing number of consumer items being dropped or curtailed production wise, the diskery execs expect that 1952 will be one of the industry's biggest years.

BMI record report

BILLBOARD PICK ● BERMUDA (Goday)—The youthful Bell Sisters (Vic.), rate a vigorous Billboard "Pick" for "an impressive wax bow with an unusual piece of material," and a "Best Bet" from Cash Box. Roberta Lee's (Dec.) version also earns Cash Box praise for a number that "certainly sounds terrific."

"SLEEPER OF THE WEEK" ● I WANNA SAY HELLO (Johnstone-Montei)—Breaking for a smash with Sir Hubert Pimm and Ellen Sutton (Kem) showing the way. Treatment and sound are tops. Disc is named "Sleeper of the Week" by Cash Box and "strong sleeper potential" by Billboard. Ditty is covered by Sophie Tucker (Mer.), Four Knights (Cap.), Frank Petty Trio (MGM), Lawrence Welk (Coral), Dorothy Louden (Vic.) and Eddie Piano Miller (Rain.) All rate as contenders.

"DISK OF THE WEEK" ● WHY DON'T YOU LOVE ME (Acuff-Rose)—Rosemary Clooney (Col.) picks another winner. Billboard gives the "countryish item" its "PICK" honors while Cash Box hails it "Disk of the Week."

WINS HONORS ● TELL ME WHY (Signet)—Eddie Fisher (Vic.) vies with the Four Aces (Dec.) for honors. Eddie lands a Billboard "PICK" and Al Alberts and the Aces win "Sleeper of the Week" choice from Cash Box. Tune is climbing to the fore rapidly. (Non-exclusive BMI).

* * * * * *

EFFECTIVE "SLEEPER" ● WHISPERING SHADOWS (Algonquin)—Guy Lombardo (Dec.) and Tommy Tucker (MGM) have turned out effective interpretations of this mid-western sleeper. Cash Box labels the discs "strong material...worthwhile ...pleasant and listenable." Billboard gives Lombardo an 84 deejay rating.

* * * *

NEW ORLEANS SMASH ● ALL OVER AGAIN (Lockrae)—Folks in New Orleans started this one off via Tommy Edwards' (MGM) outstanding disc. Comes now a big-voiced Tony Fontane (Mer.) version which Cash Box recommends and Billboard calls "first-rate." Ballad is authored by Edwards. Bettie Clooney (King) gives it the distaff treatment which helps put the tune over.

* * * *

COMING UP ● GONE FIVE MINUTES (And Already I'm Lonely) (Melody Lane)—Showing every sign of delivering, tune is nicely presented by Frankie Carle (Vic.), Anne Shelton (Lon.), Tommy Tucker (MGM) and Rosalind Paige (Dubonnet).

Copacabana, N. Y.

Jackie Miles, Mitzi Green, Harrison & Fisher, Elaine Dunn, Harry Snow, Sheila Arnold, Copa Girls, Michael Durso Orch, Frank Marti Samba Band; $3.50 minimum weekdays, $5 weekends & holidays.

With Jackie Miles and Mitzi Green headlining, there is no lack of entertainment on the current Copa layout, which is generally a breezy mixture of vet and new talent. It's a great combination for business as well in a two-ply comedy thrust that finds both headliners neatly complementing each other.

If Mitzi Green was nervous at her opener, it must have been only because she said so. It wasn't otherwise discernible, except, perhaps, in her choice of an opening number, "Lady Was a Tramp," the old standby which she introduced in the years-ago Rodgers & Hart musical, "Babes in Arms." This is always a sure click, and she was home all the way from then on.

Her "Country Gal," from the latest Abbott & Costello picture, in which she appears, is an okay followup, but it's when she gets into her satirical personality bits that Miss Green really takes off. Her number kidding Milton Berle and his Texaco Star Theatre is a neat laugh-getter that allows her to shift into impersonations of "guests" such as Richman, Garbo, Cantor and, of course, the inevitable Sophie Tucker. Miss Green seems to out-Tucker Soph more and more, and if ever they do "The Sophie Tucker Story" in pictures, Mitzi Green should be a cinch to play the part, which would probably make the William Morris office happy for two reasons.

A "surprise" guest to work with Miss Green on opening night was Gene Baxter (formerly Gene Wesson of the ex-Wesson Bros.), who came out of the audience to do several click personality takeoffs with the headliner. They had a nifty few moments of comedy revolving around such caricatures as Robinson, Bogart, Lorre, Greenstreet, Bergen-McCarthy and the like.

Back to her solo chore, she does a nifty Joe E. Lewis, done with great affection, while her finale, the "The Good Old Two-a-Day," is a nostalgic, effective piece of material revolving around the Palace Theatre on Broadway, past and present. This gives Miss Green a chance to impersonate in song some of the oldtimers who used to play the Palace, up to the current responsibility for once again reviving the old two-a-day stand, Judy Garland.

Miss Green did around 30 minutes on her opening show; she could probably have done at least 30 more, if she had heeded the mob's demand.

Like the Lindy's comics say, the next spot shouldn't go to a leopard, but generally speaking Jackie Miles can handle it. If he doesn't click all the way, it's because he's using practically all of his older material. A Copa returnee has always got to have a completely new routine, because of the constant repeat trade here; that is, except for the staples that the customers really want to hear all over again. Withal, Miles gets a strong quota of laughs. His racetrack yarn is one of his oldies that can always bear repeating, and this gets him off the hook as his closer. That reefer routine, however, is something Miles should dispense with; it's in bad taste during these times of crusading to stamp out the dope traffic. Generally speaking, though, he remains one of the great cafe comics. He has a nifty flair for telling a story and, what is probably very important for a nitery comedian, he keeps it clean.

The bill also features Harrison & Fisher with their standard and entertaining ballroom dancing. Specialty hoofer Elaine Dunn (New Acts) is a youngster who shows lots of personality and ability—someone for the legit musicals. Harry Snow, production singer, is better than usual for this type of Copa singer with his neat sense of phrasing and feel for a lyric. Sheila Arnold is the girl production singer.

Michael Durso's Copa orch is still a nifty accomp for the show, while Frank Marti's band does neatly as replacement for the longtime standby, Fernando Alvares, on the Latin dance music.

Normandie, Montreal

Montreal, Jan. 4.

Billy De Wolfe, Max Chamitov Orch (9), with Norma Hutton, Hal White Trio; $1.50 cover Sat. only.

For Billy De Wolfe, the current stint at the Normandie Room is something of a re-intro to local cafeites. In 1939 he did his first single at the old Chez Maurice, appeared at the Normandie Roof a year later and this is his first crack at Montrealers since that time.

In the years between, De Wolfe spent much of his time on the Coast and elsewhere developing a brand of comedy that has kept him popular with those who saw him start. And many of those people were in the room when De Wolfe opened present stand.

His style and ingratiating manner project as smoothly in person as on celluloid, and without any apparent routine, he draws salvos for a fast 30-minute session. Opening is a clicko as he runs through a series of film parts he has done and those of other screenites sans the usual hokum. Building easily he avoids, for the most part, any contrived humor and begs off with the inevitable "Mrs. Murgatroyd" bit which picks up heftiest palming. This is De Wolfe's trademark no matter how hard he tries to ignore it. Until such time as he hits on something as solid, he is stuck with it despite the signs of wear and tear that are beginning to show both from his usage and takeoffs by other comics.

On night caught, De Wolfe worked his offering in a nervous rush that took the edge off some of his material. Fact that he was the entire show without any warm-up act seemed to knock him off balance for the first few minutes. As a single, he could do at least another 10 minutes without larding present stuff. Even a brace of new bits midway through stanza wouldn't hurt overall viewing.

The Chamitov orch backs the De Wolfe session with authority and sets up some fine terp arrangements for the patrons, sparked by the vocalizing of Norma Hutton. Hal White's trio takes over the interlude spots.

La Vie En Rose, N. Y.

Anita Ellis, Bill Bailey, Les Mains Joly (4), Nancy Reed Trio, Joe Candullo; $5 minimum.

Making their American debut at La Vie en Rose, Les Mains Joly (The Hands of Joly) are an extremely novel, amusing act of two men and two women who project their gloved hands to simulate a series of characterizations. They're currently sharing the billing here with Bill Bailey, the vet hoofer, and Anita Ellis, songstress (New Acts).

Working behind a black curtain, with only the four pairs of hands seen, they go through a number of assorted characterizations comprising an underwater ballet of fish, an unusually humorous bit depicting two lovers in a moonlight bathing scene on the Cote d'Azur, an Apache number, etc.

Heading the group is Yves Joly, former French legiter. The act is under management of Lou Levy, the music publisher-manager, who "discovered" them recently while in France. It is an extremely enterprising turn that requires an intimate spot such as La Vie; its subtlety is certainly not for mass audiences.

Bailey remains one of the great tapsters in what he hopes will be just a temporary comeback after having turned preacher some years ago. Preaching apparently doesn't pay off for an itinerant pulpiteer, except in salvaged souls, and that's not enough to feed the wife and kids, which is the reason Bailey is taking dates here and there. Here he has been substituting for his sister, Pearl Bailey, during her illness.

Hotel Bellerive, K. C.

(EL CASBAH)

Kansas City, Dec. 30.

Sammy Walsh, Harry McMasters Orch (5); no cover or minimum.

Sammy Walsh is back in show biz as a comic after a recent fling into the booking side of the game. He's also back at the Bellerive, his second time in eight months, indicating the warmth of his welcome here. It's all to the good, for the Walsh routines make for plenty of laughter and fun.

This time around, Walsh is larding some of his proved routines with a couple of new sequences, and it all makes for an enjoyable half hour. It's the sort of informal, parlor antics where most anthing can happen, and Walsh keeps the proceedings fairly varied. After some amusing chatter, he gets into his song cycle with "Got To Get a Room Tonight," and follows with his shoe store salesman's lament, "Making a Buck for Becks."

Then turns to caricatures, getting yocks as he carbons name players on his beat up trumpet. There's also some kicks in a stanza of harmony with a bus boy before he goes into a terp session. His softshoe number kids Fred Astaire, and full dance routine done on a regulation tray winds work with loud response from customers.

Ciro's, Hollywood

Les Paul & Mary Ford, Mayo Bros. (2), Dick Stabile Orch (8), Bobby Ramos Rhumband (5); $1.50, $2 covers.

Initial offering of the new year at this Sunset Strip boite should get '52 off to a pleasant start for boniface H. D. Hover. Business will be brisk, if not earth-shaking, with Les Paul & Mary Ford serving as the lure in their local bow.

Platter faves have dropped the backstage voices and gimmicks that, in eastern engagements, abled them to simulate on stage the multi-voiced and multi-part guitar playing that has zoomed their disks into the top seller brackets. Rather, they're depending solely on their individual abilities to sell the turn and they do it well. Dexterous fingering, of course, is the basis of the act, but it's larded with Miss Ford's okay, vocalizing of such disk clicks as "Mocking Bird Hill," "Can't Give You Anything But Love" and "How High the Moon." Pair remain on a strictly instrumental kick for other hits including "Whispering," "Lover" and "Nola." Occasional bits of humor such as the husband-wife rivalry and the comic hick number, "No Place Like Home" (with an assist from bassist Wally Kamin) provide the needed change of pace.

Layout boasts a smash opener in the Mayo Bros., tap twain who win a hefty response. Far above average, they work swiftly, showcasing some difficult routines atop a small platform and winding up with some acro touches that provide a begoff finish.

Dick Stabile and Bobby Ramos musicrews share the dance assignments with the former backstopping the show.

Riverside Hotel, Reno

Reno, Jan. 3.

Olsen & Johnson "Hellzapoppin' Revue," with Marty May, Tessie O'Shae, Riverside Starlets (12), Bill Clifford Orch; no cover or minimum.

Olsen & Johnson make their first nitery appearance in two years with their "Hellzapoppin' Revue." Show still possesses the original formula of continuous and total chaos, with midgets, girls and gadgets popping out of the woodwork every few moments.

Layout starts off with a solemn rendition of "Perfect Day" on the dim stage. Then, after a waiter falls flat on his face with a tray full of dishes, the show is really underway. Curtain opens with a "bang," shots from all over, and the Riverside Starlets open with a smart, eye-filling prance in top hats and white briefs—a very abandoned and sexy number. This George Moro line, as always, is wonderful to see.

Best comedy in show is Johnson and Marty May. The two from out of the early 1900's cause near apoplexy with this bit. May sings about a number of dolls, each a flower by name, and Johnson discusses their reps under his breath with great contempt. When a girl named Lily is mentioned, he breaks up in grief. Act has no apparent reason, but is showstopper.

Tessie O'Shae is a mammoth English red-hot mama who impresses. She warms up from a fairly slow start as she exudes great energy and bounce for some jazz (dancing and singing until the place rocks. She clicks in impressions of Sophie Tucker, Kate Smith, et al.

Marty May is smooth when he wanders on alone, explaining he has to kill time while acts are changed. With his violin and chatter, he deadpans for fine reception. One of mainstays in organization, he works in most routines. His takeoff on crooners gets fine results.

"Winter Wonderland" chorus shows Starlets to best advantage in intricate layout, costumed fluffily in red and white. Number impresses with its taste and charm. Four showgirls appear in breathtaking costumes. Johnson tries to break this up with his running gag, chasing woman around the ringside, both in pajamas. On return trip, they wear part of each other's nightie. Then another run-through with Johnson pushing a lawnmower after the babe in a grass skirt. And fourth trip sees gal in metal chastity shorts and Johnson on the trail with a blow torch. Through it all, Starlets never miss a step.

Audience is dragged into acts throughout. When Starlets pick out dance partners from the male table opulace—in a sort of square dance routine called by Olsen—they manage to get all the men mixed up in each other's coats. Customers are also plagued with cakes of ice, chickens, mice, and parts of cast coming to life among the tables.

Most puzzling aud participation is Olsen leading a community sing in "Glory Glory Hallelujuh," with girls singing and men singing and everyone waving handkerchiefs and jumping up and down out of their chairs. Very confusing and totally out of place.

Props seem to be invaluable in this operation. First 10 minutes of show is so confusing, people are won't to wonder what they've gotten into. Also, although forewarned, show is too long (hour and a half).

Show is success for holiday season and is packing this showcase of the west. Somehow, the Riverside, with all its occasional miscasting of talent and improperly timed shows, remains the elite spot, containing (even with Olsen & Johnson) taste and reserve.

Although this show may seem thrown together, there are 135 cues in the whole run.

Southern Mansion, K. C.

Kansas City, Jan. 3.

Henny Youngman, Billy Williams Orch (9); no cover or minimum.

This time around, funnyman is playing a fortnight in this downtown spot, in contrast to his three former sorties at El Casbah in the midtown sector. It's a fortunate booking for the Mansion, as biz was hey-hey for the week through New Year's eve and is holding its own nicely in the week following, when many spots report a post-holiday sag. Judging from current results the new connection should be good for a reprise in the near future.

Show tees off with orch leader Billy Williams doing one of his first rate vocals on "There'll Be Some Changes Made," and handling the m.c. role. Youngman enters on a vocal note, but gets right into his comedy chatter. He propounds his "people are nuts" theme for some clever and chuckling lines about any number of subjects, including tailors, the Trumans, psychiatrists.

Change of pace comes on Youngman vocal with orch backing of a parody to "All of a Sudden My Heart Sings," and follows with funny bit, "Miami," a takeoff on "Mammy." Then pokes some flippant fun at push-button cars, drunks, girl friends, before another parody to "Enjoy Yourself." For a final fillip he drags out the fiddle, and cracks away as he saws out "Smoke Gets in Your Eyes." It's good for keeping the customers chuckling all the way.

Carousel, Pitt.

Tony Reese & Pepper Davis, Peter Higgins, Virginia Ayres, Johnny Marino's Orch (5); $3-$3.50 minimum.

Third time in less than a year at Jackie Heller's room for team of Tony Reese & Pepper Davis, and the boys are definitely comers. They've shown an improvement each succeeding visit, and with just a little more polish and perhaps some sharper material for the gag interludes, boys will be ready for the biggest of the big.

They're on for around 40 minutes and hardly one dull spot in the entire routine. Guys are loaded with dynamite, and are plenty versatile. Their song impressions are played for laughs. Bit of Reese interviewing the bigger, clownish Davis as a punch-drunk pug is a four-alarm howl, hoofing's out of the topdrawer in a funny follow-the-leader session, and team winds up at a pair of drums (Davis used to be with Stan Kenton) for a sock finish. Carousel hasn't had a sock like this in a blue moon.

Jackie Heller's on the sick shelf, so Peter Higgins is pinch-hitting for him as singer and m.c. But Higgins is no ordinary sub. He's a solid performer on his own. Those tenor pipes may not be quite what they were some years ago, but Higgins still packs a mighty vocal wallop. And on the showmanship end, they don't come much better. He's as much at home on a nitery floor, with the knack for making the ringsiders feel the same way, as anybody in the business.

Layout opens with shapely blonde Virginia Ayres in a terp session. Gal's built to whistling proportions, is costumed to do her shapely figure a favor, and although the tap number she does at the teeoff is only so-so, Miss Ayres really rocks them upon changing to ballet slippers and going into some acrobatic spins and tumbles.

Carousel band is now under baton of Johnny Marino, trumpet player, since Herman Middleman left to work at Heller's new Dinner Key Terrace restaurant in Florida (Joe Lescak has replaced Middleman at the piano), but quality of both show and dance music remains high for a five-piece combo.

Chez Paree, Chi

Danny Thomas, Ginny Scott, Marion Callahan, Johnny Martin, Chez Adorables (8), Cee Davidson Orch (8); $3.50 minimum, $1 cover.

It's been a long, long, time here since tables have been jammed on the dance floor. The answer is Danny Thomas. Originally set for a four-day fill-in, comic extended his visit to two weeks. It's mainly a labor of love, as the TV star points out, hinting that with his new schedule of four pix yearly, plus his video commitments, it will be many moons before he ventures out on bistro floors again. So it lessens the number of star attractions still available for niteries.

Thomas makes no attempt to bring any new material for this visit, relying on the demands for the standard "Jack" and "Wailing Syrian." Most of his stuff is of the hearts and flowers type, but here, where he got his real break it goes over very well, especially since he knows so many of the crowd. Comic makes cracks at the quartet of bosses here, talks to the customers, and all in all has a good time. Only new phase of his stint is several songs from "I'll See You In My Dreams," current pic in which he stars.

Ginny Scott is getting her first big break now. On the basis of her preem appearance and fighting big odds, blonde chanteuse comes off in first-rate fashion. Refugee from the teevee parlors, thrush has a bright opener with "Sing You Sinners," which gets attention, but her sexy rendition of "Better Go Now" really quiets the crowd. More in the same groove, instead of rambling specialty, "Inside Hollywood," would make for a clickier package. Svelte lass gets off well with "El Cumbanchero."

Marian Callahan, a pert brunet garbed in an abbreviated slicker, taps out "Rain" and then does a reverse strip, working from panty and bra, dons a spangled skirt and top hat, and ties things up nicely with "Birth of the Blues."

Johnny Martin does okay on production vocals and emceeship. Chez Adorables, an Arden-Fletcher line, have several new numbers. "Sans Souci," from "Top Banana," has as much life as a withered banana stalk. "Blithe Spirit" is weak.

Cee Davidson continues to baton the show in handy manner and drags the customers from the tables to the dance floor with his fine rhythms.

Baker Hotel, Dallas

(MURAL ROOM)

Sylvie St. Clair, with Joe Merman; Pierson Thal Orch (8); $1 cover, $1.50 Sat.

Departing brefly from a lineup of top thrushing talent of domestic variety, management here is showcasing Gallic charmer Sylvie St. Clair in her second U. S. nitery stint.

Pretty French chanteuse, in strapless gown, jeweled collar and beret, opens with narrative lyrics of "Mon Dimanche" in heavy accent that has the "you-all" payees giving light mitting — they no savvy. She follows quickly with a nostalgic "Charm of Paris" and, with roving mike in hand, tours the floor with "The Cat Song." Feline miming and humorous English translations get polite plaudits.

Under soft lights, after shedding collar and beret, Miss St. Clair snares them with the familiar "La Vie En Rose" and "Domino." With bubbling humor she keeps the customers with "Air Populaire" and recounts an affair with Anatole, a zesty "Bistro du Coin." Finale is a sock selling of "C'est Si Bon." Arranger-accompanist Joe Merman earns a bow for his expert backing.

Pierson Thal is an able emcee and adds keyboard artistry while his orch dispenses terp tempos.

Lady Patachou, Paris

Lady Patachou, Hilbylis (4), Pomme, Apel & Bernard, Leo Clarens Orch (6); 2,000 francs ($6) minimum.

Lady Patachou, Maurice Chevalier's protegee, sparks her own 100-seat club which recently has been remodelled into a finely panelled, well lighted spot. The old bakery shop still fronts the club and she still dispenses her gastronomic specialties. Place is restaurant until 10 p.m. and then converts to cabaret. Minimum for two includes a bottle of champagne.

Show tees off with a harmonica quartet called the Hilbylis (Gallic for hillbillies). Dressed in cowboy regalia, act is a pleasant opener. Followed by obese, sparkling eyed Pomme, whose Aunt Jemima ap-

It's Post-New Year's, So Miami Finds Time to Count Coin of 10-Day Spree

By LARY SOLLOWAY

Miami, Jan. 8.

The holiday aftermath, following biggest 10 days in years, is on the lull side, with the heavy traffic going north rather than to this sun sector. Resultant letdown for most cafe and tavern spots is in sharp contrast. Hotels are keeping going, though not as plentifully supplied with the roomers as come season time (about Jan. 20). Same situation prevails every year. In the two-week or so break between "Happy New Year" and "Hialeah is open," the cry is again raised, where'd they all go, followed by the almost sudden change to "where are we gonna find the rooms for them?"

Same applies to majority of the cafes who've come up with either heavy personnel shows at moderate tariffs, big names that draw, or the average who are trying to make a go with at least one attraction which might bring them in. In the forefront in this respect are Latin Quarter, with Lou Walters' lavish production and five-buck food or beverage minimum; Copa City, with the names, also on a reasonable food or bev idea; Clover Club, with the Billy Gray revue that's a solid click; the Vagabonds, with their own personal draw.

Hoosier County Fair Mgr. 'Fesses Up That Annuals Can't Make It Sans Games

Indianapolis, Jan. 8.

County fairs in Indiana cannot survive without some games of chance, according to Robert M. Morse, La Porte, president of the Indiana Assn. of County & District Fairs. He said without gambling customers would not be attracted to these events.

Morse, who is secretary of the La Porte County Fair, said the amount and kind of games "is up to the individual fair manager, that is, what he wants and what his community will stand."

He said that a fair had to have a carnival to draw crowds, and carnivals refuse to come with rides and shows alone, because they can't make expenses without bringing their games of chance.

Morse said that while his group is neither "for" nor "against" anything, fair operators generally were encouraging "hanky-panks" in their fairs as the lesser of several evils.

("Hanky-pank": a game in which a player wins something every time he plays, even though the prize may not be worth the price of the game.)

'SOUTH TERRIFIC' GI UNIT IN GERMAN CLICK

By CPL. JESSE GROSS
(On Leave From VARIETY*)*

Bad Kreuznach, Germ., Jan. 2.

The 2d Armored Division, in conjunction with the Bad Kreuznach Military Sub Post, is currently touring, among its units, the first soldier show to be put on by that command since its arrival in Germany early last summer. Presentation, a musical revue label "South Terrific," was produced by two femme entertainment specialists from EUCOM (European Command) headquarters. Gals, Lee Eastwood and Faith Forte, both sport show biz backgrounds. Latter has appeared on Broadway in "Laughing Room Only" and in the revival of "Burlesque," starring Bert Lahr. She's also done some film work, having appeared in "Sleeping City" (U) and "Mr. Universe" (UA). Former was associated with little theatre groups in the states.

Running 60 minutes, production is a meritorious one. Broken up into five scenes, offering, though no "South Pacific," makes for generally relaxing viewing for entertainment-hungry GIs here.

Of the talent showcased, two acts are above average, though all performers draw a strong response for bits offered. Duo are the Noveleers, instrumental-vocal group, and Kelly Zobeck, songster. Former unit headlines and holds down the

Maxine Sullivan Set For Brit. Vaude-Concert Tour

London, Jan. 8.

Maxine Sullivan is due in London next month for a concert and vaude tour, having been signed by Harry Dawson, head of Harry Dawson Enterprises, who returned last week from New York. The tour is being arranged by Dawson in association with the Foster's Agency.

Among other artists signed for British engagements are Mary Lou Williams, Sarah Vaughan, Ella Fitzgerald and Art Tatum.

Mpls. Eve Bright Against Fahrenheit

Minneapolis, Jan. 8.

Local niteries are taking heart from the fact that New Year's eve business was much better than the earliest signs indicated it would be. The town's top supper clubs, the Hotel Nicollet Minnesota Terrace and Hotel Radisson Flame Room, were SRO and many were turned away. Because of the rush of reservations neither spot had to advertise its festivities.

Results were considered all the more encouraging because of the subzero temperature, a snowstorm and icy thoroughfares. Even the lesser spots all reported trade better than normal for the eve. Because of the weather, however, many of these filled up several hours later than usual. And in Minneapolis, owners of the establishments were required to stop selling drinks at the usual 1 a.m. hour and have their patrons out 15 minutes later.

The fact that the Minnesota Terrace and Flame Room forewent New Year's eve parties last year because it fell on a Sunday, when liquor sales are prohibited, might have been a factor in attracting capacity patronage on this occasion, the trade points out. After a two-year lapse, the public was hungry for another celebration, it's felt. Modest tariffs also are believed to have been lures. Minnesota Terrace had a new low tab of $5 per head minimum which could be used both for food and beverages. The Flame Room $10 per charge included a steak dinner, favors, dancing and entertainment.

Tel Aviv, Jan. 1.

Hazel Scott, who finished a 10-concert tour of Israel here a week ago, under management of the Yuval agency, could easily have duplicated with another 10, due to the enthusiastic reception and resultant b.o. Pianist was here with her husband, Congressman Adam Clayton Powell, Jr., and son.

Her opening concert was held under the patronage of the American Ambassador to Israel, and among those present were Henry Morgenthau, Jr., and other distinguished guests from Israel and abroad. Two days after her arrival, Miss Scott was received by Prime Minister Ben-Gurion in Jerusalem, who, upon her special request, also attended her farewell concert. The Powells were entertained several times by the Ambassador. No guest artist before Miss Scott has been as greatly honored by leading personalities as she was.

The press was full of praise, most magazines carrying front page pictures, and generally her visit aroused great interest here. All her performances were sellouts.

Reason for the transfer is reportedly caused by failure of MCA to deliver a video layout for the singer.

That'll Make 'Em Happy

Circleville, O., Jan. 8.

Ted Lewis, this town's No. 1 show biz figure, last week placed a full-page paid ad in the Circleville Herald end of year (31), "wishing all home folks best of everything in 1952."

Though Lewis hasn't been in Circleville for several years, he owns real estate here, and has a park named after him.

Palace 2-Wk. 90G, 1st Bustin' Record

The Judy Garland show at the Palace, N. Y., continues to score heavily. Last week, ending Sunday (6), house drew good $37,000 for 10 performances. Palace held a matinee and evening show on New Year's Day, and closed entirely on Wednesday (2).

Previous week, during the 11 performances, theatre hit a record $53,000, which was $2,000 more than previous high.

Tickets are still being sold into February. There is still no successor to Miss Garland as has been rumored around. According to theatre spokesman, neither the house nor Miss Garland has given the four-week closing notice as required by contract.

New Year's week saw an additional change in the layout. The Nicholas Bros. replaced Doodles & Spider, who took off for a British engagement. It's the third replacement from the starting show. The Christianis went in for the Lang troupe and Senor Wences took over from British comic Max Bygraves.

Globe Theatre Razed In $4,000,000 A.C. Fire, Worst in 97-Yr. History

Atlantic City, Jan. 8.

The Globe Theatre, a 1,500-seater which for a score of years has housed summer burlesque, was one of several buildings razed early yesterday (Mon.) as a $4,000,000 blaze took toll of three hotels, partially razed another, and consumed a dozen rooming houses and many more stores in the uptown boardwalk section of the resort.

The Globe building, facing the ocean, had been operated by the Hersch circuit, of Philadelphia, the past 14 years, with Jack Beck managing it through the 10-week summer season. It was shuttered on Labor day, although it had been rented out on several occasions.

The building was directly in the path of flames which gave the resort its worst fire in its 97-year history. Only the fact that the wind was blowing from the land to sea kept the flames from roaring through the island's big business centre. Firemen fought for six hours before getting them under control.

Hotels destroyed were the Congress, Lorraine and New Davis. Gutted and virtually wiped out was the 12-story Delaware Ave. tower of the 96-room St. Charles Hotel, which cost $1,000,000 when built. Scores of rooming houses up and down nearby streets were either razed or suffered other fire damage.

The Globe will probably have to be demolished. Standing only are its four walls. Its inside is completely gutted. No estimate of the building's damage could be made until its owners arrive. The insurance is undetermined.

Before becoming a burley house it was used by the Shuberts and other New York producers for their Atlantic City openings.

Gardiner's N.Y. Cafe

Monte Gardiner, who at various times operated cafes in New York, is prepping to open a bistro on the site of Jack Eigen's Guest Room, which had a brief run a little more than year ago. Gardiner plans to bow the spot around Jan. 20. Name and policy not yet set.

Gardiner-operated La Conga and La Martinique, both N. Y., for short periods and was boniface at the Golden Key, an after-hour private club.

Buddy De Franco signed a term deal with Music Corp. of America. He was formerly with General Artists Corp.

Jack Irving as AGVA's New Topper On Dual Chi-N.Y. Basis, One Salary?

National board of the American Guild of Variety Artists, which is meeting for three days starting Jan. 14 at Hotel Taft, N. Y., will face the major problem of selecting a new national administrative secretary to succeed Henry Dunn. Latter leaves Jan. 18 to open Hollywood office for the Lew & Leslie Grade Agency of London. Indications at this point are that Jack Irving, who has announced his candidacy for the job, will get the nod. But Irving will reportedly stipulate that he also be allowed to retain the position of midwest regional director which he now holds.

Board will come smack up against the question of whether to permit Irving to hold two union jobs simultaneously, but with one salary. Irving is determined to hold onto the Chi position and will even forego the national job in order to maintain his status in Chi. He had been previously offered the national job, but always stipulated that national headquarters be moved to the midwest. This time, he's willing to h.q. in New York.

Petrillo Precedent

Irving will likely cite as precedent the fact that James C. Petrillo, American Federation of Musicians prexy, also heads the Chi local. He stated that he feels he can handle the two jobs simultaneously. A stiff fight is expected on that score, however. For example, AGVA president Georgie Price, who has declared himself out of the running, has stated that

Boston LQ Folds; Too Many Midases

Boston, Jan. 8.

The Latin Quarter, Hub's lone nitery stronghold of name acts, shuttered New Year's eve with lessees Lee Fields, Eddie Meister and William Oxman bowing out of the operation. LQ, owned by Michael Redstone, ozoner operator, had been leased to the trio for the past three seasons, but with biz getting progressively worse and when it became apparent Hub citizens would not support a glamour spot if the tab ran into more than a buck, the boys decided to throw in the sponge.

While several policies had been tried, with cover or minimum and cover, policy of late had been a $2 minimum with reports that many customers refused to go above the limit and in some cases reluctant to even use that up. If the cafe had handled 1,000 such customers nightly, this would have worked advantageously, but with a 400 seating capacity it failed to match the topheavy nut.

Bonifaces had previously gone on all-out binge of staunch names in an effort to hypo biz, but with exception of a few they failed to click at the b.o. While the Ritz Bros. and Andrews Sisters were the biggest disappointments, Lena Horne, Danny Thomas, Frankie Lai , Billy Daniels and some others were socko here. There just weren't enough of the latter with solid draw to balance the books.

It's expected LQ will reopen within a few weeks, but definitely under new management which will of necessity be okayed by owner Redstone.

Acts Lure 28G in Ft. W. Runyon Fund Benefit

Fort Worth, Jan. 8.

More than 3,000 persons attended the pre-holiday Damon Runyon Cancer Research Fund benefit show staged here at Will Rogers Memorial Auditorium, with $28,215 earmarked for the fund. Site was changed twice due to overwhelming demand for tix, which went at $2, $100 and even $500.

There were 13 acts on tap with headliners appearing in specialty bits. Entertainment was arranged through cooperation of Vincent Lee of American Guild of Variety Artists and union-affiliated booking agencies in the Fort Worth-Dallas area, and Dick Leonard of Music Corp. of America. Other groups also gave full cooperation.

Acts included Margaret Phelan, Andy & Della Russell, Joan Frank Dancers, Wimpy, Ching Ling & Soo, Ray Riggs, Les Lamar & Poppy, the Lesters, Uncle Willie, the Harringtons, the Gascas, Henry Hale, the Dancing Kramers and Joe Reichman orch; Curly Broyles band in pit. Dink Freeman and Bobby Peters alternated as emcees.

N.Y. LQ's Foreign Acts

Lou Walters, operator of the Latin Quarter and Gilded Cage, both N.Y., is concentrating heavily on foreign talent. He's signed Freddy Bamberger & Pam to open Jan. 27, at the Cage. Others pacted are Fernanda Montell, Seven Ashtons and the Curibos.

Marilyn Hightower, originally an American act, who has been working in England, will play LQ in April.

Fairmont 2-Room Scram Leaves Frisco Hotel B.O. Wide Open to Mark Hop.

San Francisco, Jan. 8.

Folding of the Venetian Room of the Fairmont Hotel as a name talent spot $75,000 in the red, the blackout of the Birch Room and its projected removal to another spot in the hostelry, and the shuttering of the inn's coffee shop eclipse that hotel as a major centre of Frisco gaiety.

With the Rose Room of the Palace Hotel also dimmed as an entertainment spot, only the Mural Room of the St. Francis Hotel remains currently to book top names and bands in the hotel scene. The Mark Hopkins Hotel will resume its entertainment policy in June with Hildegarde, Dorothy Shay and Julie Wilson pencilled in for the season.

The Venetian Room show policy foundered in spite of bookings of stars such as Lena Horne, Denny Thomas, Martin & Lewis, Ethel Waters, Margaret Whiting and others.

FOREIGN AGENTS O.O. N.Y. TALENT, SHOWS

New York is again hosting foreign talent buyers. Among those currently gandering acts and shows are Leslie MacDonnell, partner in the Harry Foster Agency, London; Rene Fraday, on the staff of the Lido, Paris, and David N. Martin, managing director of the Tivoli Circuit, Australia, who had been in N. Y. last week and left for England. He'll return to the U. S. in about four weeks.

MacDonnell and Fraday are o.o.ing talent for the upcoming tourist season, while Martin will confer on his next trip with his U. S. rep, Eddie Elkort, of the Lew & Leslie Grade Agency, London.

Cleve., Shrine Pay 7½G For Stampeding Bulls

Cleveland, Jan. 8.

Stampeding elephants frightening a circus spectator, who suffered injuries in a fall, cost the Al Sirat Grotto and the City of Cleveland a lot of hay in a lawsuit here.

Settlement of $7,500 was made with Mrs. Geraldine Noles, who was thrown into a panic by several unruly pachyderms at a performance of the Grotto's annual winter circus in Civic Auditorium Feb. 14, 1950.

Plaintiff's attorney charged the circus sponsors and city with negligence in allowing spectators to be in a "zone of danger," and in placing seats so close to the ring.

TV's [illegible] Acts [illegible]

To C[illegible]

Inroads of television eventually figure to force nitery owners to insure themselves a fresh reservoir of talent. Video already has cut off most of the top echelon headliners from regular cafe work, and present indications are that even the lower levels are gradually divorcing themselves from dependence on the bistros because of the fact that they can often hit a full week's salary via TV one-shot.

Some indication of boniface thinking is seen in the fact that Bill Miller, Riviera, Ft. Lee, N. J., operator, has joined Town Casino (Buffalo) owner Harry Altman in the management of 19-year-old singer Bobby Lucas. Bookings have been assigned to the William Morris Agency. It's likely that other talent will be pacted by the pair. It's the first talent management venture for Altman, but Miller, a former agent, has had interests in various performers, including the Ames Bros. It's also reported that he has a financial interest in dancer Nanci Crompton.

Advantages of such a move are obvious. In the event of a click they'll be assured a headliner at a lower salary, plus participation in the act's earnings.

However, the most important facet will still be the power to call upon services of their talent whenever their own spots are in need of a topliner. If this movement reaches general acceptance among nitery owners, it's possible that a cooperative plan will be established whereby they'll be using each others' acts.

Another advantage to nitery owners is their being in a position to wrest some of the control of talent agencies in the matter of names. It remains to be seen how many b.o. lures are produced under this system, however.

Movement is not new among the nitery owners. In former years Barney Josephson, who owned Cafe Society Downtown and Cafe Society Uptown, both N. Y. (latter now defunct), had a considerable stable of talent which included Hazel Scott, Zero Mostel and others. Monte Proser (La Vie en Rose) at one time dallied in talent, as did Herbert Jacoby, co-owner with Max Gordon of the Blue Angel. Lou Walters, Latin Quarter operator, has also had acts under personal management.

Except in the case of Josephson, most of the boniface-managed acts failed to achieve headline status. There is never any guarantee, of course, that acts signed in the future will become names, but some nitery men feel that it's worth the gamble. The benefits will far outweigh the investment, they claim.

Doing five-a-day during week's engagement, plus six on Saturday, Gordon MacRae smashed the Casino house record here with a terrific $22,180. Previous peak in the 16-year history of Toronto's only surviving vaude spot was set last May by Gypsy Rose Lee unit when she grossed $18,890.

For Toronto date, MacRae was in at $10,000 flat, with 50% over $20,000, he paying the acts.

Miami, Jan. 8.

Olympia Theatre here, which dropped stageshows several weeks ago because of a dispute with the musicians union, will reinstate vaude Jan. 16. Initial bill hasn't been booked as yet.

House dropped the talent policy when tootlers demanded a considerable salary hike. A compromise with the union has been reached, although scale hasn't been revealed.

During its recent brief tenure as a straight pix house business dived sharply, despite influx of winter vacationers.

Booker Harry Levine, setting the bills out of New York, will again attempt to get acts working the cafes in this area to essay a stand at the Olympia.

Denver, Jan. 8.

Three skating shows for Denver in one season are too many, as evidenced by the poor $17,000 grossed by "Skating Vanities of 1952" (roller) in seven shows at the 6,500-seat city auditorium.

A skate show played Denver earlier in the season, and just a few days before "Vanities" opened the Denver Post announced it was bringing Sonja Henie and her show to the new Coliseum this winter. That slowed up sales. Top for "Vanities" was $2.75.

Romm Exits Arena Stars

Leonard Romm, head of Arena Stars, Inc., talent agency owned by Spike Jones and headed by Ralph Wonders, has resigned as boss of the agency's New York office, effective Feb. 13.

Romm's two-year contract will expire on that date, and he has decided not to renew. Parting is amicable. No successor appointed yet.

MCA Gives Up on Collitch 'Cadets,' Goes on Prowl for Hep Percenters

Music Corp. of America is giving up the "cadet" system. Agency is jettisoning the practice of hiring college grads and training them, and will henceforth go in for taking on agents with experience. They're looking for heavyweights in the field.

Theory with MCA execs had been that new personnel, if caught young enough, could be broken into the MCA system more easily than those with % background. Theory, however, didn't work out as well in real life. There had been a heavy staff turnover since the policy was inaugurated.

Some departments at MCA have been seeking manpower, and heads of these sectors have declared that they are looking for veteran hands. Situation holds true in radio and elsewhere. The teevee department has hired Dave Sutton, a former CBS sales veepee. The vaude division some time ago took on Jimmy Schure, who has been in the biz for a number of years.

Some rah-rah tyros have done comparatively well, but nevertheless, agency toppers came around to the belief that the percentery was handicapping itself unnecessarily. This feeling was first manifested on the video end when the agency went through a comparative slump. Position improved somewhat when men from other divisions were shifted to tele.

Vauder Sid Slate Sounds Off Vs. TV Draining Acts; Suggests 'Local' Circuit

In its heyday, Vaudeville was the staple fare of the smalltown theatregoer. Today, as we all know, two developments—radio and television—have contrived to tap that audience to a degree that the oldtime vaudevillian never dreamed of.

Yet, there exist today factors which give the variety artist grounds for hope: the theatre-owner has been crying to high heaven at the sight of his empty seats all over the country, usually blaming this disaster on television and televised needs. The vaudevillian is his hope.

Oh, we know you can pick up a fast buck on Uncle Miltie's program sometime Tuesday ight. Swell, but how often and how many of you? How about the hoofers, the acrobats, the jugglers, the novelty acts who've spent years perfecting their routines who won't get a two-week spot, or even a weekend, because their audiences are at home watching you give your all over TV. And we do mean your all.

Remember the old days when you spent a year working out a routine all your own? It was good, wasn't it? For two or three years of traveling engagements in each new town the old routine was new to audiences who hadn't seen or heard it before. Now in a five-minute spot on video you blow in that year's work. Try taking it to nightclub and roadhouse owners. They'll scream: old stuff—all the customers have seen it on TV. And all because you've just shown your act over a national hookup, allowing millions to see that one performance for which you received approximately one week's salary instead of parlaying that same act

Boston, Jan. 8.

Hub's Archbishop Cushing, who a year ago aimed a verbal slap at TV comics via his weekly column in the Sunday Advertiser, last week focused his attention on alleged immoral conditions in downtown niteries and burleys. Blasting strippers and homos at several spots (in one cafe—College Inn—they comprise the floorshow), the archbishop declared sex was "sold on a silver platter" and "vile, iniquitous and immoral" performances are common to Boston nightlife. Prelate warned that such conditions were a menace to the youth and a disgrace to the city of Boston.

Local reaction was immediate, with Navy placing College Inn off-bounds and Mayor Hynes skedding a meeting with licensing heads and ordering suspensions of activities at nine offending spots.

While nitery licenses are under the supervision of the Licensing Board, headed by Miss Mary Driscoll, she passed the buck to the police, with Commissioner Thomas F. Sullivan claiming his department was powerless to act unless complaints were received. Defending his position, City Censor Walter Milliken, who has jurisdiction over burley, stated "whenever we have difficulty with girls who refuse to carry out the orders of my

A.C. Breakers Hotel, Landmark, Is Sold

Atlantic City, Jan. 8.

Sale of the Breakers Hotel for an undisclosed price to Irving Meltzer and Herman Geller, of Lakewood, was announced here. The 500-room structure facing the ocean uptown was owned and operated by the Kend Company, Inc., Max Malamut, president. Malamut is also operator of the Shelburne, large mid-city beachfronter.

The Breakers is one of the oldest in the resort. It was built in 1895 by Charles R. Myers as the Rudolph and was acquired several years later by Joel and Julian Hillman, who changed it to present name. A large fireproof wing was added in 1915 and a $2,000,000 fireproof addition in 1924. Emanuel Katz assumed its operation in 1931 and the Malamut family in 1940. Malamut bought it in 1945.

K.C. El Casbah Shuts For 3-Month El Fixo

Kansas City, Jan. 8.

After more than seven years of operation, Hotel Bellerive has closed its entertainment room, El Casbah, for redecorating. It will be out of service for about three months, according to manager Robert Noyes.

Spot had been operating with name acts and bands, recently playing Sammy Walsh, Hoosier Hotshots, Harmonicats, Liberace, Henny Youngman, among others. Joe Vera orch held the room for more than two years, but recently gave way to the Art Devaney crew. Cover charge, in effect for many years, was recently dropped.

Change is one of several taking place among hotels of the circuit owned by Barney Goodman, who died about two months ago.

Miami Beach Post New Year

holiday season and are now girding for the upcoming plush winter weeks come end of month. There's plenty of competish from the stripperies, bellwethered by the Beachcomber with a fancy, sprawling production, with Lili St. Cyr the pull.

Hotel cafe row is on the profit side, thanks to low minimums and one-show kicks. Saxony has Miguelito Valdez & Co.; San Souci, Lenny Kent—most potent b.o.er in this segment of the area's glitterama—plussed by Sacasas and his orch; the Casablanca, introing an ice show that is not too solid but with Tito Puente drawing the mambo addicts just the same; Nautilus, back in the run with bids out for the more popular mid-budget acts.

More conservative hospices such as the Lord Tarleton are featuring well versed orchestral setups backed by club dates featuring the top acts available when their other local dates wind up.

Vexing Problems

Currently, it's a hassle for many. Typical is the Five O'Clock Club which booked in Lou Holtz as interim replacement for Martha Raye. Biz was offish throughout his run. Return of Miss Raye today (Tues.) had the place sold out.

Ciro's, opulent and well staffed, is undergoing a problem—to get the type of name that will bring them in; that looks to be solved with entry of Joe E. Lewis on the 22d, with other faves locally (Harry Richman, Frank Sinatra, et al.) being bidded for, to bring the Pollack plushery into the run for the patrons.

Holdover shows are the predominant habit, as of this week. Come end of month, however, there'll be changes and additions for all, with such marquee lighter-uppers Jimmy Durante (Copa City); aforementioned Lewis, and Lena Horne (Clover). Reservations for hotels mark the upsurge as per every Hialeah time. If you're going to get a room, get it reserved before the 20th of January.

Atlantic City, Jan. 8.

The New Year started off auspiciously here, with some hotels and niteries opening especially for the occasion. Resorters anticipate lush convention biz this month.

Prices for the eve were slightly under those a year ago, when the better-known spots got a $15 top vs. $10 this year. Fees ranged from the sawbuck right down the line, with many places plugging no cover and no minimum.

Hotel Traymore brought in Juanita Hall and drew $10 per for its swank Submarine Room, serving a filet mignon supper plus eve extras, but liquor not included.

Claridge got same tab for talent and a breakfast. Hotel President featured Larry Daniels, a show and dinner for $9. The Senator tariff was $6 for its La Vie en Rose Room, with a floorshow. Mayflower's price for its Holiday Room was $7.50 with acts. Other spots in many cases offered no talent and asked no cover or minimum.

Straight nitery prices were under those asked by hotels. The 500 Club showcased comic Myron Cohen and four other acts for its new Vermilion Room and tabbed $7.50 a copy, including breakfast. Club 15, opened in midtown Christmas week by Henry Koster and Leone Thurston, was $3.50 for its floorshow only; Margate Casino, $6 for acts and a buffet luncheon. Hialeah Club, $2 for Bob O'Neill and sitting room.

A. C. Excises Up

Atlantic City, Jan. 8.

Luxury tax collections here in 1951 were $40,476 more than in 1950. August and September continue to be the two big revenue producing months, with A. C. collecting $270,362 in August and $266,923 in September. For June, $113,615 was paid, with $161,122 the take in July. February was poorest month with only $46,227.

The tax is paid on hotel rooms, amusements, liquor and tobacco. This resort is the only one in the state to have it.

Larry Steele Negro Unit's Midwest Dates; London Out

Deal for the Larry Steele unit, "Smart Affairs of 1952," to play the Palladium, London, has fallen through. Negotiations had been going on for a six-week stand at the London house followed by a tour of the provinces and the Continent. It's reported that the Palladium is still interested in a Negro show.

The Steele unit is slated to play dates at the Circle Theatre, Cleveland; Regal, Cincinnati, and Regal, Chicago. Outfit is current at the 400 Casino, Albany.

Steele recently signed with Joe Glaser's Associated Booking Corp. to represent the show for theatres and one-nighters.

Pitt Bands Winding Long Nitery Stands

Pittsburgh, Jan. 8.

Couple of long band runs in the niteries are ending here. Walter Gable just closed at the Ankara after four and a half years, with Whitey Scharbo replacing him, and Bobby Cardillo, who has been at the Monte Carlo more than two years, winds up Jan. 17. A new outfit headed by Ross Hall takes over. Cardillo's going to concentrate on teaching and teevee work; he holds a degree in music from Carnegie Tech.

Neither Gable nor Cardillo, however, came close to the all-time mark held by a local band, that of Al Marsico, who was at the old Nixon Cafe for 12 years until that spot was torn down. Marsico's since been with Smith, Taylor and Jenkins agency as musical director, conducting the outfit's two TV programs for Pittsburgh Brewing Co., "Perfection Time" and "Tech Varieties."

Rio Righto

Hollywood, Jan. 8.

First physical skirmish in the long-smoldering American Guild of Variety Artists-Television Authority battle has been won by AGVA.

Vaude union's Coast topper Eddie Rio, incensed when TVA rep Henry Reese called him an "anti-union man" during a meeting of five showbiz unions, sprang to his feet and let fly with one right-hand punch. Reese went down and "six guys" reportedly pulled Rio off.

Rio heads east this week to continue the verbal battle over the AGVA video shows which TVA opposes on the ground that it cuts actors' earnings.

'Holiday on Ice' Bows 28-Day Buenos Stand At $10 Inflation Top

Buenos Aires, Jan. 1.

"Holiday on Ice," a Victor Sturdivant production, preemed to a capacity audience last Saturday (22) at Luna Park Stadium here. It's in for a limited 28-day booking, all that can be managed after delays caused first by the New York port strike and later by an airport personnel strike in Rio de Janeiro.

This is the third visit of the Sturdivant icer to South America. The swift pace is an eye-opener to local audiences, while choreography, lush costuming and effective programming make this a sock entertainment.

Jean Arlen and Marshall Beard are starred, together with juggler Topper Martyne and the Ryles, a hair-raising acrobatic trio of two girls and a man. There were some slight production kinks to be ironed out on opening night, natural enough as majority of costumes only reached the Stadium with seconds to spare before the teeoff number. The musical background particularly lacked careful rehearsing, but as all but four of the musicians are hired locally, that was not surprising.

Show is due back in the States by mid-March, which means cutting short the Buenos and Montevideo bookings. While the show is performing here a second tank is being erected in Montevideo. Meanwhile, the local tank has to be dismantled and sent on to Chile, while the one in Montevideo will eventually precede the performers to West Coast points from Chile to Miami. Erection of the tank in B.A. took two months and even at that it was not ready for the originally scheduled opening date.

The costumes this year are particularly striking, especially some white feather effects, while the use of plastic getups had the local audience gasping.

The program has some rapidly paced 25 numbers. The "Glamour Icers" troupe earns full marks for freshness and enthusiasm, qualities not familiar in local shows. There are plenty of thrills in the hair-raising jumping and whirling of Marshall Beard and Herman Maricich, while Kenny Rogers, Guy Longpre, Ben Dova and Tommy de Paw keep up the laughs with steady antics. Jean Arlen's grace is a click in a "Ballerina" solo. Petite Jean Cheadle's solo numbers are other highlights in a patent entertainment.

Admission scales range unusually high for this visit, from $10 for stalls to $1 for standing room, but as show will get in only two weekends, it would be hard to break even otherwise. Last year's top was $1, which indicates the current rate of local inflation. Because there are few entertainment novelties available and the Yuletide holidays induce a festive mood, the show should gross well despite the current slump in local spending and possible preoccupation with family meetings.

Mpls. Niteries' Gangup

Minneapolis, Jan. 8.

Patrons and employees were endangered when bullets were fired from autos, in gangland fashion, through the windows of four lesser niteries here. Mystified police hinted that the attacks might have been preliminaries to the oldfashioned "protection" racket.

Owners of the spots denied they had been approached by anyone asking they pay "protection" money on penalty of damage to the establishments.

Cuban Tourist Traipsing Gets Fat Teeoff With Bistros in B.O. Lead

Havana, Jan. 1.

Cuban tourist season has gotten off to a click early start with hotels jammed from mid-December on through the holidays. Airlines report solid bookings into mid-January, with reservations not easy for a month after.

Havana and Veradero took the brunt of the hordes who descended upon the island for the festivities. Niteries were at mid-season activity with all three major clubs and International Hotel sold out in advance for New Year's Eve. Overflow from the bowl games helped swell the crowds.

Regular tourists are finding Havana pretty much the same this year. The biggest change is at Hotel Presidente, which enlarged and modernized its lush Chez Merito dining room, and is rushing to complete work on a pool and cabana club which should be ready in a few weeks.

Hotel Nacional got inside repairs and paint job during the off-season, but otherwise the same. Hotel International was plagued by hard luck and strikes but is still the chief attraction in Veradero.

Big Boites No. 1 Magnet

The big lures are still the big clubs, their gaming rooms and their entertainment. So far they stand:

Montmartre had Los Chavales de Espana for seven months, and reportedly will return soon to stay till June. This is a Spanish show band which has been the hottest thing in Cuba's entertainment since their arrival. They do Latin and Yank numbers with a lot of life and schmaltz, including tremendous, elaborate costumes. Variety acts are booked for short runs now and to round out the show when the band is at the only one of the three clubs where you are sure you won't get wet if it rains.

Tropicana has a shell over a good deal of its area now to protect against rain. It's adjustable so that al fresco dancing is still possible, and it doesn't hurt the appearance of the prettiest of the clubs. Tropicana sticks pretty much to local talent, and not always the best, though the gate doesn't seem to suffer. This spot usually saves its big money talent for the height of the season and is expected to pick up the qualities of its shows soon.

Sans Souci, for the third year, is keeping its revue for the entire season. The '52 version opened in mid-December with Skippy, American dancer, as the permanent feature. Idea of this show is a continuous one-hour performance based on mixed Latin-U. S. dance numbers by the chorus and Skippy, with spots for soloists built into the pattern of the production. Good office, it is recommended to the manager that they not be contracted with in the future." Pointing out that only two burley houses are now in operation compared to the three when he took office six years ago, Milliken also revealed his censoring of nitery acts applies only to Sunday performances.

Promise Cleanup

Following a huddle with Miss Driscoll, Commissioner Sullivan, State Public Safety Commissioner Daniel Murphy and Milliken, Mayor Hynes issued a statement promising a relentless cleanup of offenders and threatening drastic action to any establishment which allows femme impersonators, strippers or other evidence of sensual performances. Femme impersonators had been banned in Hub two years ago, although, as Hynes admitted, they must have "filtered" back, and peelers, according to code laid down at the same time, were required to wear spangles and sequins and refrain from "objectionable movements of the body." From now on, only a "modified" strip will be tolerated at burleys, with strips completely outlawed at niteries.

While majority of spots punished by suspension of licenses cater to "small beer" clientele, the College Inn (apparently the fuse that ignited the archbishop's blast), Show Bar, Petty Lounge, Ranch House and the Phil Harris Cafe also got the axe. How long the suspension will last has not been indicated, but if and when it is lifted, Hub niteries will be strictly under wraps for some time to come.

Neatest crack of the week was the report that Milliken received the "shock" of his life when he attended the Old Howard, in line of duty, and glimpsed a reverse stripper. Gal began scantily clad, winding fully dressed, complete with fur coat.

into 52 weeks at 52 times as much money.

And while we're counting, name the performers who've gained fame through TV. No, don't take off your shoes—you fingers will be enough to count on.

You're probably saying: "What's the pitch?" The answer is very simple: "Keep your specialty act off all television programs that broadcast over a national hookup. By this simple self-defense you will aid in creating a new circuit of work—in the local, and locally sponsored TV stations all over the country. There are now 108 such stations in operation, each covering an area of a little more than 200 square miles. This, at the very least, means 108 days of TV shows.

The future picture is even brighter. The FCC is planning to release restrictions on local TV stations. We can anticipate that there will soon be over 2,000 outlets for variety talent. But will these local stations seek vaudevillians and, if so, who will sponsor them? The station operator cannot hope to keep his station going on ancient mystery films, horse operas and local chit chat by an untrained commentator. Yet, he has few sources of material. Sports events are being increasingly kept off TV; legitimate plays are never shown until they have closed both their Broadway and national runs; by agreement with Hollywood, a feature film must be more than 10 years old before video cameras can be pointed its way. The local station operator, therefore, needs the variety artist.

As for the sponsors, many such organizations, like automobile manufacturers, grocery chains, and all other companies which farm out their dealerships to local agencies, the existence of live talent in their immediate area would be nothing less than a godsend.

Even large national organizations will some day see the light. If they cannot purchase your act for national hookups, eventually they will have to recognize the necessity of buying it for a long series of local station appearances.

Just imagine 2,000 TV stations, 2,000 days of work, a minimum of 2,000 new sponsors! Under these circumstances your act can last 10 years instead of three or four national shots at the most. By this means we can create a national TV roadshow for each actor, and the good old days will be back again—only better than ever!

Sid Slate.

Cuban Tourists

costumes, timing and talent make this about the best in town at present.

Non-Stem Middlers

The "middle clubs" are off the beaten track and usually are touched only by the conducted tours. These hideaways are smaller than the big three, have no gaming room, play small shows and book only one orch.

Two such cafes are Bambu, out in the country, and La Colonial, down by the docks. Bambu usually features mambo dancers, Latin torch singers and lots of tom-toms in an atmosphere which is pleasant, semi-outdoor and very, very dark. The Colonial is reached via a phoney tunnel and is distinguished by the amount of light they do not have. Female impersonators doing Latin numbers has been their main attraction for some time now.

In addition, many new little places have sprung up around the areas of the Nacional and Presidente hotels. These places rely on small combos or jukeboxes, coziness, dim lighting and some really terrific decors to draw trade. Some of these are Maxim's, Club 23, Turf Club, Johnny's 88, Tally-Ho, Macambo Club and the Torreon. Tourists are usually in town a week before they find out about these places, and then frequent them for relaxing evenings.

Hemingway's Fave

The only new restaurant in town is the Radio Centro in building of same name. A good eatery, but not drawing much as yet. People stick to the spots with the reputations—Paris, Chez Merito, La Reguladora and the Florida, Ernest Hemingway's favorite spot when he's in town from his farm. Chez Merito is the only one which provides entertainment with a trio.

In addition to the jai-alai, jockey club, Cuban baseball and soccer, an autodrome has been added, matching foreign drivers against Cubans, and there is some talk but yet no action on Kennel Club opening for the season. Amusement park called Coney Island, with the only roller coaster in Cuba, is sure not to attract many tourists, though promoters are trying. Circuses are in season now, and a half-dozen of every type imaginable are operating at one time.

General opinion is that this looks like the best year yet.

'South Terrific'

bulk of the entertainment burden. Outfit took third place in the Ted Mack Amateur Hour contest held in U. S. Army installations in Germany during the past summer. Copping of the trey spot got boys a cuffo ride back to the states, where they made a video appearance on the Ted Mack show. Combo is comprised of Howard Finger, accordion; Louis Marino, guitar; Michael Short, bass; Fred Vitagliano, drums; and Jack Klaymon, trumpet. Gerard McNulty holds down the vocal chores with the combo, while Peter Hogan, who didn't appear in show caught, fills out the act with some impressions.

Zobeck demonstrates a good set of pipes via his vocaling of "Bamboo," which is one of the show's highlights. Albert Rossi, another singer, does okay with his rendition of "Temptation," with the Noveleers hitting up a nice background beat. Miss Eastwood, decked out in a flapper costume, could give a little more zest to her Lorelei Leeing of "Diamonds Are a Girl's Best Friend." Number, incidentally, paves the way for her doing a temperate Charleston with Robert Gorman.

As is the case with most production of this sort, there is little talent demonstrated in the terp department. Dances, choreographed by Miss Eastwood, are basic, and for the most part give the viewer an opportunity to orb the gams of the three femmes appearing in the show. However, terping offered does help to brighten the proceedings. Gals, incidentally, are, in addition to Miss Eastwood, Sally Good, Bad Kreuznach Sub-Post librarian, and Lt. Jo McKinney.

Irving—AGVA

he is in favor of keeping the post vacant as a come-on for a "one card union." Under Price's plan, Al Westbrook, assistant to Dunn, would perform the functions of that post until the amalgamation were effected.

Whether the majority of the board would permit Irving to hold both posts is problematical. Many are of the belief that dual functions cannot be successfully maintained. Others will oppose him because of preference for other candidates. There are some supporters for Westbrook who feel he's qualified.

There is also a movement to bring in Dave Fox, former AGVA eastern regional director, who was boomed last week by Phil Foster on the Barry Gray radio show on WMCA. Gray has shown some interest in the pitch. However, as far as is known, few members of the AGVA board are picking it up. There has been politicking for various other candidates, including Bill Feinberg, who frequently acts as the union's impartial arbitrator and who at one time was secretary of Local 802 of the AFM.

There are several AGVA board members who are reported eyeing the job for themselves and are consequently not expressing themselves in the hope of becoming the dark horse in the event of a deadlock.

Agent Jerry Rosen has objected to the appointment of Henry Dunn to the Hollywood office of London's Lew & Leslie Grade Agency. Rosen, in a letter to the Grades, declared that during Dunn's tenure at AGVA he worked against the interest of agencies.

Rosen prefaced the letter with the phrase "It's none of my business—but. . . ."

pearance belies her ribald material. She tosses off some snappy double-entendre stories that have the French clientele chortling and the tourists nudging their neighbors for quickie translations. She has good delivery and keeps the act short and piquant, finishing with a throaty rendition of a French street song. Apel & Bernard a song-mime duo, are pleasing in an intimate atmosphere, but don't quite have the timing to make them outstanding.

Then comes Lady Patachou, brilliant in showmanship and delivery. Her vivacity soon has the audience right in her hands. After a witty warmup and chiding a few customers and latecomers, she goes into her song routine. First o. is "Troulala" a bouncy ditty with audience joining. Changes pace with two haunting Gallic street songs, "The Little Ball" and "The Kid of Paris." Two blues items in low key with sensual delivery follow "Bluer Than Your Eyes" and a self-cleffed ditty. Then a torrid "Lai, Lai" and "Paris Has 2,000 Years" and an audience participation on "Alouette." Begs off to heavy mitting.

(MARINE DINING ROOM)

Chicago, Jan. 4.

Freddy Martin Orch, with Merv Griffin, Murray Arnold, Jo Sullivan, Rita & Alan Farrell, Hild Dancing Sextet; $3.50 minimum, 80c cover.

The latest package put together by producer Dorothy Hild at this North Shore hotel leans heavily on "Show Biz," tome written by Abel Green and Joe Laurie, Jr.

This semi-book show shapes up as a staunch "best seller." From the manner with which the ringsiders ogled in happy concentration at the edition caught, this offering will garner plenty of that important word-of-mouth plugging. It's a bright, splashy production with the vaude to video travelog providing the nostalgic wraparound ribbon.

Major credit must go, of course, to Freddy Martin and his smooth musical aggregation with its host of specialists who supply the basic ingredients in lush fashion. An adept emcee in his own right, Martin has surrounded himself with a personable group more than able to fill the demands of a show biz cavalcade. Besides backing the production excellently, the orch takes over the 1930 portion of the show biz "history" with a pleasing "bring-back-memories" medley of tunes played in the style of Benny Goodman, Tommy Dorsey and Glenn Miller.

Merv Griffin, band's featured singer, also registers with a hefty contribution. He's in the spotlight with an impression of the singing stars of the past several decades, starting with Al Jolson and winding with Frankie Laine. Pianist Murray Arnold likewise plays to mucho mitting with his medley of top ditties of the '20s and later the keyboard specialties associated with the Martin band — Chaikovsky's "Concerto," "Bumble Boogie" and "Cumana."

A big nod, too, must go to Jo Sullivan. The petite warbler fits superbly into the format, scoring with her "She's Only a Bird in a Gilded Cage" in the Gay '90s segment; her hat tipping to Judy Garland and the return of the two-a-day via "Over the Rainbow," and her sprightly "The Ladies Who Sing With the Bands" in the finale.

The terping department is adequately filled by Rita & Alan Farrell and the Hild Sextet. The Farrells rightfully earn heavy mitting with their reprise of the Castle Walk and softshoe steps a la Eddie Leonard. The Hild group spans the years with a diverting interpretation of Irving Berlin's "Everybody's Doing It," featuring Donna Wengert and Bob Curran, and, later, an eye appealing version of the Charleston.

Billy Gray's, L. A.

Los Angeles, Jan. 3.

Buddy Hackett, Bedell & Mattson, Anne Russell, Joe Castro's Players (4), Bill Howe; $3 minimum.

One of the toughest chores on the Coast for a comic is this off-Hollywood late spot where Billy Gray's Band Box has ruled supreme for a considerable period. Funsters who can make an immediate impression on the regulars are cinch to earn lengthy bookings—and on that basis, rotund Buddy Hackett looks like he'll be around for some time to come.

A product of the borscht belt (where else?), Hackett is the best newcomer to hit the Box in some time. A genuinely funny guy, his material is largely spiced with ad libs that fit perfectly into the audience mood. Quick-witted, he's able to gag his way into as well as out of a situation to take care of the little diversions that constantly crop up. Occasional doses of "fractured French" bring added yocks to his fund of reminiscences which range from experiences with N. Y. state police who "are in business for themselves" to the painful party he attended when he was eight days old. Friendly, open faced approach adds to impact.

Remainder of layout put together by Sammy Lewis is in the pleasant entertainment vein which is the Band Box keynote. With Bedell & Mattson (New Acts), Lewis has mimic Anne Russell who rattles off her impressions. Some are good, notably the Mae West takeoff. Others are weak and she'd do well to sharpen a few and offer three or four good ones at each show than the several so-so bits she now essays.

Joe Castro Players, three guys and a gal, keep the show rolling with some okay song stuff. Special-material ditty helps although it's sometimes too long. Bill Howe backs show and handles intermission pianistics that please. Kap.

Hotel Nicollet, Mpls.
(MINN. TERRACE)

Minneapolis, Jan. 3.

Honeydreamers (5), Bud & Cece Robinson, Cecil Golly Orch (12), with Mildred Stanley; $2.50-$3.50 minimum.

Song, dance and a smattering of comedy, all top-drawer, make the current layout a truly gala holiday show for this chi-chi spot. Both acts whip up an abundance of appetizing entertainment.

The Honeydreamers rate with the most pleasant singing groups to play the room. They're strictly big league in all departments. The two girls are a treat for the optics and the three well setup boys don't disappoint the femme trade in the s.a. groove. Presentation of their numbers includes enough clever accompanying business to give production values and lift the act from the straight singing category.

Surefire show tunes, medleys from "Kiss Me Kate" and "Oklahoma," revealing [illegible] arrangements and skillful handling, get the quintet off to a click start. As they unreel "So to Sleep Again," "Pretty Eyed Baby," the amusing "Ain't Going to Take It Sitting Down," the serious "You Never Walk Alone," from "Carousel," for a pace-changer, and "There's Something About a Home Town Band," they're always on the ball.

Attractive Bud & Cece Robinson made a hit at initial Minneapolis appearance in last summer's "Aqua Follies" and they more than duplicate it now. In this swanky supper club, at closer view, they appear to much better advantage. Their routines reflect imagination and a sense of humor as well as exceptional dancing skill.

Eccentric comedy overtones and smart routining give distinction to the act. They score equally in rhythmic duetting and solo contributions. Working at great speed throughout, they communicate their own high spirits to the customers.

The Cecil Golly orch and singer Mildred Stanley share honors with the show, as usual. Rees.

House Reviews

Chicago, Chi

Chicago, Jan. 4.

Vaughn Monroe Orch (18), with [illegible] The Moonmaids (4) and The Moonmen (4); Ziggy Talent, Earl Hummel, Dick Hayman, Roy Benson; "I'll See You My Dreams" (WB).

House booker Nate Platt has done an unusual stunt this week, setting this orch show here the second week of this picture. However, hoopla of Danny Thomas carried the film for the first week with ordinary vaude bill and, with a break in the zany Chi weather, pull of Monroe should hike the take here. There aren't many musicrew shows that can do business in the Windy City, but the aggregration here put on a relaxing 50 minutes, smoothly paced, without a letdown. Surprising is the lack of plugs for sponsor or record firm, an unusual (and welcome) novelty.

Orch is on the sweet side but on a right beat. However, band doesn't get a chance to ride on its own, being mainly backing for vocal efforts of the others. Leader, of course, does the bulk of the singing chores and pairs with the Moonmaids and Moonmen. His throaty crooning registers with "Charmaine," "Tenderly" and others, but gets his best hand for work with male group on "Sound Off." Both vocal quartets are fine, with Ruth Winston stepping forward to get a nice reception on "Granada" and duet with Monroe, "Falling in Love With Love."

Ziggy Talent, sideman, scores the best with his rendition of "Maharajah of Magador," replete with grind, and a somewhat double-entendre tune, "I Ain't Gonna Take It Settin' Down," a dissertation on the love life of chickens. Other orch member, who works as single, is Earl Hummel, who does a pleasant job on fiddling "Hora Staccato."

Dick Hayman, young harmonica player, fits in neatly with the general pattern, first with a serious "Orpheum" overture and then really registering with a Spike Jonesish "Merry Oldsmobile." Roy Benson, magician, who displays fine finger dexterity with some billiard balls and an ever running salt trick, however, gets more laughs with his corny quips and self-derision. Zabe.

Casino, Toronto

Toronto, Jan. 4.

Jimmy Dorsey Orch (16), Pat O'Connor, Amazing Mr. Ballantyne, Sandy Evans, Lea Wallace & Her Little People, Vanderbilt Boys; "Man with My Face" (UA).

Toronto break-in date of Jimmy Dorsey's new stage unit shapes up commendably on band values and integrated vaude acts. It's a swift 65 minutes of show that will definitely please the adults on the all-round stage package and the enthusiastic younger hepsters on the Jimmy Dorsey alternating brand of blaring brass and Dixie beat. Needed ear-soothing interludes with the vocals of Pat O'Connor and Sandy Evans lend astute balance to the Dorsey teeoff, plus puppet work and dance-acrobatics that add up to a neat and nifty unit. Next to the marquee lure of the band name, and an act that will do well on word-of-mouth, are the zany antics of the "Amazing Mr. Ballantyne," whose tricks of "magic" always reach frustrated fruition.

In his new unit idea, Dorsey is the suave and well mannered conductor who takes it easy, never grabs the spotlight, is generous to the band boys in their stepout specialties, commendably walks off stage while the vaude acts on the bill are doing their individual stints. Whole is marked by good taste, without any sacrifice to musicianship or comedy entertainment values.

Before the gold and blue drapes, band whams into opening "Sweet Georgia Brown," complete with the Dorsey clarinet. Then Pat O'Connor, comely brunet in blue sequined gown, works "Them There Eyes," moving into a novelty song duet of "Lover" with Shorty Sherock on the "talk-back" trumpet. Throughout the sesh, however, it's the Dorsey band as showcaser, particularly on "Kiss Me" and "Muskrat Ramble." On such ensemble numbers, the youngsters listen silently and reverently, then give their understanding and vociferous appreciation to the solo stepouts of Frank Rehak (trombone), Karl Kiffe (drums), Bill Lolatte (bass), Bob Carter (piano), Glenn Stainer (tenor sax) and, of course, the maestro on the licorice stick.

In there too are the Vanderbilt Bros. for nifty taps and acrobatics; Sandy Evans, male vocalist, for a neat log of "Taking a Chance on Love," "Take Away the Breath of Spring" and "I Hear Music"; Lea Wallace for her clever puppet work, and all over to enthusiastic returns. New Dorsey unit, even on initial Toronto break-in on first week, has speed and sophisticated polish. McStay.

Apollo, N. Y.

Cab Calloway Orch (16), Billy & Anne, Spider Bruce & Co. (3), Four Tunes, Congaroos (4); "The Threat" (RKO).

Apollo's post-holiday bill is a fast paced, music filled potpourri which clicks. Although headliner Cab Calloway topped the show here only a few months ago, it's a credit to his showmanship that he keeps the house eager and alert for his offerings.

Comprised of six brass, five reed and four rhythm, the band dishes out an assortment of jive and ballad tunes. Calloway's standard body motion and facial grimaces give the set a visual plus. He scores with his vocalling of "Lullaby" and "Old Black Magic." Band gets best mitt for its highly stylized rendition of "Smooth Sailing."

Billy & Anne set the bill's pace in the opening slot with their fast stepping turn. It's a sharp act featuring some standout cleat work. Spider Bruce and his guy and gal aides try to whip up some yocks in a vintage blackout sketch that hit only in the final stretch.

The Four Tunes, an attractive male vocal combo, are effective in their zingy songalog. Boys work through "One More Time," "How Can You Say I Don't Care," "Cool Water" and "Just in Case." Work the latter two into a solid begoff. Congaroos, two guys and two femmes, whip up plenty of terp frenzy in the closer. Team has worked here often but still score with their wild tap and ballroom dance antics. They project lots of spirit throughout and hold the house all the way. Calloway cuts the show in top style. Gros.

Capitol, Wash.

Washington, Jan. 5.

Ethel Smith, Alan Dean, Gary Morton, Reddingtons (3); "Flame of Araby" (U).

This is a trim, nicely paced layout, featuring one clicko name, two musical acts, and one newcomer. Payee reaction is good, with top enthusiasm reserved for headliner Ethel Smith at the Hammond organ.

Miss Smith does a hep job not only of wringing beautifully shaded tunes and flawless rhythm from the instrument, but of combining her technique with top-drawer showmanship. La Smith has a fine flare for comedy, which she uses to sell herself, but wisely keeps it subordinate to the music. Visually, the tiny blonde, beautifully gowned and perched on a raised platform, with a mirror cannily reflecting the nimble fingers on the organ keyboard, is showcased in a masterpiece of production.

In the music department, the "tico-tico" gal shows versatility and technique. Teeing off with "Fiddle Faddle," she goes on to a Spanish tune, a wistful melody translated "The Breeze and I." Her "Parade of Wooden Soldiers" is a flashy catchy thing, and reaps sound mitt action. Has an appealing medley of "Girl" tunes, which she introduces in inimitable style—"Clair de la Lune" (included with a pun on first word), "Charmaine," "Good Night, Irene" and others. Walks off to burst of enthusiasm.

Alan Dean, young British pop singer, got a bad break in his first American encounter with a theatre audience. At show caught, he had to beg off with two pop tunes because of a noticeable case of laryngitis. Even so, despite pitching his voice several keys lower than normal, with obvious difficulty with the higher notes, he does a very creditable job of selling himself. His patter is natural and appealing, and his stage personality projects strongly over the footlights. Takes a stab at "Because of You" and "Sin," and has to beg off. A check with Loew D. C. producer Alan Zee reveals Britisher's reception in show before his voice failed was amazing for a newcomer not known here. Lad shows promise and should go far along U. S. show biz shores.

Comic Gary Morton's routine impresses as a formless hodgepodge of patter, zany takeoffs and general inanities. Effect is uneven, with some moments of fine comedy, and others that just don't come off. His gag on the English subtitles of foreign films strikes a responsive note in galleries, as does his repeated ribbing of the Marlon Brando role in "Streetcar Named Desire." Excursions into "queer" stuff seem tasteless and out of place in this family house. Payees gave him nice sendoff at show caught.

Reddingtons, family trio consisting of mother, father and daughter, is a good trampoline act with a novel twist. Mother narrates act, with father introduced as a stooge from audience. Act is fast and entertaining, and payees liked. Lowe.

'Vadis' Tops B. O.

"Worlds Collide" (Par) and "Silver City" (Par) were the runners-up.

Besides "Vadis" and "Blue Yonder," newcomers likely to be heard from strongly include "I'll See You in My Dreams" (WB), currently fifth at the vast Radio City Music Hall after hitting an all-time money high in its fourth week with $180,000.

"Death of Salesman" (Col) also looms as a sock moneymaker, based on the first few opening dates. "Double Dynamite" (RKO), which went to $120,000 on initial stanza at the N. Y. Paramount, also is doing well as is "Decision Before Dawn" (20th). "Favorite Spy" (Par) was doing typically smash Bob Hope trade on its first playdates.

"Distant Drums" (WB) is a sockeroo entry predicated on the first eight opening weeks registered thus far. "I Want You" (RKO), big in many spots; "On Dangerous Ground" (RKO) and "Elopement" (20th) also loom as satisfactory, boxoffice wise, although "Ground" started out unevenly.

"Ft. Defiance" (UA), runnerup one week, landed some substantial coin during the month. "Streetcar Named Desire" (WB), winding up its initial string of dates in bigger key cities, showed over $110,000 gross in keys covered by VARIETY last month. It was second in November. "Golden Girl" (20th) still was doing some sizeable trade early in December.

"The Racket" (RKO) was seventh one week during the past month. "The Raging Tide" (U), on the runnerup list twice in December, showed a gross of nearly $100,000. "Starlift" (WB) gross for the month was over $140,000, being a runnerup film one week.

"I'll Never Forget You" (20th) was surprisingly mild at the boxoffice. There were too many thin, drab and light sessions for the pic to get far i the ratings. "The Highwayman" (Mono) collected some okay coin last month while "FBI Girl" (Lip) was in a like category.

"Little Egypt" (U), which had not done much in November, came through with some fine to okay stanzas. "Oliver Twist" (UA) also rated okay in a number of playdates. "Let's Make It Legal" (20th) ranged from mild to slow the few weeks it was out in the keys. "Lady Pays Off" (U) was okay and nice to mild the first week out.

scheduled to be shifted to Japan in the near future.

System of reports required by the Washington branch is being received with lifted eyebrows in Capital circles, since the MPAA office in Washington will function largely in the future as a lobbying group, and contact members of Congress, officials of the White House, State Dept., Dept. of Defense, embassies, etc.

Washington observers were wondering about a Congressional committee investigating lobbying, possibly subpoenaing these reports.

According to the order, all reports will be turned in to Robert C. Vietheer, new D. C. office manager whom prexy Eric Johnston brought over from the Economic Cooperation Administration. It's understood that highlights of the reports will be summarized by Vietheer and turned over to Johnston.

So far, according to a Washington source, it is not planned to require these reports from personnel in the New York and Hollywood offices, but it's indicated that this may come later.

New Acts

ANITA ELLIS
Songs
14 Mins.
La Vie En Rose, N. Y.

Anita Ellis, in her advertised cafe debut, is the brunet singer whose voice has been used in dubbing for film stars like Rita Hayworth ("Put the Blame on Mame" in "Gilda"), etc. She does nicely on her own.

Miss Ellis is doing mostly stock numbers, and she will obviously have to amplify her repertoire. As is, she has a nice ballad voice, neat phrasing and good feel for a lyric, but could add one or two special - material numbers. Her "Someone to Watch Over Me" is her opener, much too slow as a starter. The French followup is a fair pace-changer, while "Porgy," next, is too dramatic to be so close to the opener.

The Frenchy "Oola-la" hardly means anything in light of the stock nature of the rest of her routine, while her "Do Something to Me" is her neat get-off. Particularly noticeable in the latter are a couple of phoney mannerisms, namely that Billy Daniels trick of cracking the voice; it's something that she doesn't need, since simplicity is her forte. Miss Ellis needs a more flattering gown than the grey one she wore on her opening night, but these are all comparatively minor items when one considers that she is just embarking on an in-person career.

Miss Ellis, with a little more work and the right guidance, is a bet for any of the sight media, in addition to radio and disks. Kahn.

ELAINE DUNN
Dancing-Singing
6 Mins.
Copacabana, N. Y.

Elaine Dunn is a youngster who sings, dances and projects an amazing personality in the few moments she is on the floor of the Copa's new show. Brunet has plenty of s.a., a pair of flashy gams and a neat voice, all of which stamp her as fine musicomedy material.

Miss Dunn is cast here as a production performer, but from the moment she steps on there is no doubt this kid deserves more important position. She's not a looker in the strictest sense of the word, but she exudes sex and personality—and talent—to point up her future potentialities. Kahn.

NAT (KING) COLE & TRIO
Songs-Instrumental
Tiffany Club, Los Angeles

Personnel changes warrant a New Acts for this combo, which continues to pour out the now-accepted Nat (King) Cole stuff which finds a ready market. Backbone of the turn, of course, is still Cole's relaxed singing and pianistics.

Group draws from a vast repertoire to maintain a steady interest, working here on a five-set-a-night basis that keeps the house crowded. Newcomers are John Collins on bass and Charlie Harris on electric guitar. Bongo drummer Jack Costanzo remains with Cole from the old days.

Unit has been well put together and works easily to live up to the expected Cole standard. Kap.

ROBERT MONET
Songs
15 Mins.
Cafe Gala, Hollywood

Gallic charm is the strongpoint of Robert Monet, personable young Franco-American singer. The voice is pleasant, albeit not too big, but he's got the continental flavor that should win approval along the intime circuit.

Bulk of his stuff is un-accented pop tune material such as "That's For Me" but he occasionally showcases a French ditty in the authentic idiom to good effect. Delivery still is a little on the stiff side but he's a personable gent which overcomes some of the awkwardness. Kap.

DOMINICK BROS.
Balancing
9 Mins.; Full
Colonial, Albany

Dark-haired duo, opening the bill here, present a fine balancing act. They start mildly on darkened stage by thumping illuminated bongo drums. When the lights go on, they move into a series of spectacular lifts and balances, keeping step in dance tempo between tricks. A hazardous stunt is followed by a comedy bit in which top man walks around understander.

The Dominicks, with somewhat of a Continental appearance, are neatly dressed in light blue uniforms, with contrasting flared sleeves. Scored at early-evening show. Jaco.

MARTI STEVENS
Songs
12 Mins.
Blue Angel, N. Y.

The theatrical talents of Marti Stevens lie in a different direction from that of her father, Nicholas M. Schenck, president of Loew's, Inc. And Miss Stevens is equipped on her own to make the grade as a singer on the sophisticated circuit. Her pipes are expressive, she can create a mood and her projection is well suited for intimeries. Miss Stevens could be equally effective in larger rooms, but her current tune selection militates against mass outlets.

Songstress has apparently gone out of her way to present tunes new to niteries. She's taken songs from lesser-known works of top writers, and these hold considerable interest. One of them is "Nina from Argentina," from a Noel Coward score, which provides an adult comedy note.

"Where is the Boy," while overdramatized, also holds listener attention. Miss Stevens also reminds one that there are lyrics to "Limehouse Blues." Of the better-known numbers, the lyrics have received some working-over to inject freshness.

Miss Stevens has carefully worked-out arrangements and there's enough interest in her selections to keep a wide variety of payees entertained. She is a bet for most aural media, and also stage musicals and video. Jose.

BEDELL & MATTSON
Comedy
15 Mins.
Billy Gray's Band Box, L. A.

Having dropped their record panto act in favor of straight comedics, Lew Bedell and Doug Mattson shape up as strong entries in the humor handicap of 1952. While some of their material still needs careful culling, they've developed some okay stuff that ranges from the zany to satire, and they earn constant attention.

Takeoffs on the "Whistler" and "Dragnet" programs are okay, and their Kay Thompson bit (sole holdover from their former routines) has been needled a bit to garner more laughs. In addition, they've got the basis for a fine satire in an East Indian dance number with commentary. The gab, however, needs to be sharpened to provide a better payoff. And for the better spots they now have the potential for, they could soften some of the teeth-spitting slapstick. Kap.

BERYL ORDE
Comedy Songs
14 Mins.
Latin Quarter, N. Y.

British import Beryl Orde, who came over expressly for a stint at the Latin Quarter, N. Y., didn't work out as anticipated in her brief run (one show) at this Broadway cafe. Miss Orde indicates that she is a superior music hall artist, but lack of familiarity with U. S. cafe customs licked her before she could even get started.

She was obviously nervous at the beginning, but might have overcome that with some choice material. Instead, she elected to open with an impression of Gracie Fields doing "Biggest Aspidistra," and she lost her audience early during that number and couldn't recapture them, though her material seemed to get better as she went further into her act. Jose.

JEAN LEONARD
Comedy-Songs
15 Mins.
Cafe Gala, Hollywood

A musicomedy femme turned candlelight comedienne, Jean Leonard should do well in the intimate boites with her special material stuff. Garbed in slacks and blouses (changing blouses for each appearance), she makes an immediate visual impression which is fortified by her material and delivery.

Songs are slickly sold bits of satire, delivered with know-how and zest. Turn is carefully routined for best effect and she wins strong response on such items as "One Little Rut," "Ballet" and "A Model's Life." Even the familiar "Minnie the Moocher" gets new lyrics for additional impact.

Md. Governor Denounces Show Biz Discrimination in D. C., Baltimore

Baltimore, Jan. 8.

Gov. Theodore R. McKeldin, stepped into the problem of segregation which has been plaguing the legit theatre here, and this week instructed his Commission on Interracial Problems and Relations to solve the question of discrimination at Ford's, local legit stand, and the Lyric, concert hall housing operatic, concert and symphonic bookings.

Ford's, legit landmark, has long been picketed for its policy of restricting Negroes to second balcony seating, and is currently in the worst slough of inactivity in its history. Lyric changed its policy some years ago when the question of discrimination took on legal aspects through its use as headquarters for the Baltimore Symphony Orchestra, one of the few municipally supported musical aggregations in the country. Governor's current blast is aimed at what he claims is a discriminatory attitude by the concert hall management towards Negro artists and attractions, in spite of its liberalization of admission policy.

Ford's, operated by Marcus Heiman of the United Booking Office, who ran into similar difficulties during his leasehold of the National Theatre in Washington, has been approached by various groups, local and national, to lower its barriers, but has been reluctant to be the forerunner in breaking down a long-standing local custom and tradition. Current lack of attractions is said to have been occasioned by touring companies and stars refusing to play Baltimore because of the discrimination and picket lines.

The Governor's Commission was created by the 1951 Maryland Legislature to cope with the general question of statewide inter-

Aldrich Due Out of Navy In Month; Will Return To Legit Production

Richard Aldrich, currently on duty as a Commander in the Navy, expects to be released from the service within a month or so and return to legit production. He plans to resume active participation in Broadway production in partnership with Richard Myers and to take over operation again of his three Cape Cod strawhat operations.

Besides their presentation of the Broadway and two touring companies of "Moon Is Blue," in association with Julius Fleischmann and Otto Preminger, the Aldrich & Myers firm is mulling a production of "Hermit's Holiday," by Charles Frankel. It's set to take over May 4 as operator of the National Theatre, Washington, upon expiration of Marcus Heiman's lease of the house, and will reopen it to legit on a non-discriminatory policy.

Aldrich's strawhats on the Cape include the Cape Playhouse, Dennis; Falmouth Playhouse, Coonamessett, and Cape Cod Music Circus, Hyannis. He is also associated in an advisory capacity with the South Shore Music Circus, Cohasset, Mass. During his absence on Navy duty last summer, his attorney, David Marshall Holtzmann, represented him at all four spots.

Lester Seeking Musical To Star Mitzi Gaynor

Hollywood, Jan. 8.

Edwin Lester, Civic Light Opera Assn. producer, is hunting new musical comedy to serve as a starring vehicle for Mitzi Gaynor, 20th-Fox starlet. Musical would be produced here and then taken to Broadway if it shows sufficient promise.

Miss Gaynor, nee Mitzi Gerber, was discovered by the studio while a member of the CLO company here.

Lester's contract with CLO provides that he can produce one outside show annually if he desires. Whether the Gaynor property would be an independent venture, or included in the CLO season, remains to be decided.

Economy Size-Up

Literary agent Shirley Burke has a 12-year-old son, Stephen, who was recently chosen to sing with the children's chorus at the Met. The boy can't see why he now has to take singing lessons.

"Why spend money on teaching me singing when I can get a job at the Met without it?" he exclaims.

'Wagon' Weekly Earnings $5,000

"Paint Your Wagon," Cheryl Crawford's production of the Alan Jay Lerner-Frederick Loewe musical, earned an operating profit of about $5,000 a week for its first four-and-a-half weeks, ending Dec. 8, at the Shubert, N. Y. As of that date, the amount recouped came to $23,025, plus $2,495 representing an advance on sheet music royalties.

According to the accountant's statement sent last week to backers, the production actually cost $255,331 to bring in, excluding $18,780 in bonds and deposits. Since the last statement, additional charges had increased the production outlay to $218,318, plus $21,703 pre-opening expenses in New York and the previously reported tryout loss of $15,310.

Although the operating margin has presumably decreased in the last four weeks, during the general boxoffice slump, the expected business upturn in the next week or so may boost the show's gross back to capacity level, at which it can net around $6,000 or more a week until certain rental items are paid off, after which the margin should increase. At capacity, the company expense for the musical is approximately $26,000. The theatre's share is 30% on the first $25,000 gross and 25% of the balance.

VERNON DUKE WARMS UP 3 MUSICAL COMEDIES

Hollywood, Jan. 8.

City Center Seen Eyeing Blitzstein-Weill 'Opera'

New version of Kurt Weill's "Three Penny Opera," with a fresh libretto, lyrics and some new music, which Marc Blitzstei - pleted about six weeks ago, is being considered by several Broadway producers. It's also reported that the N.Y. City Opera Co. is interested in the work for its coming spring reason, at the City Center, N. Y., with Leonard Bernstein as conductor. Center officials, still in the middle of the "Halasz affair," won't comment.

Meantime, Blitzstein has gone to Yaddo, at Saratoga Springs, N. Y., to work for the next month or two on his play with music, "Reuben, Reuben," which Cheryl Crawford has on her production schedule for next season.

John Golden has contributed another $2,000 to the New Dramatists Committee, according to prez Howard Lindsay to aid new playwrights. Golden's latest contribution brings his gifts to the committee to a total of $5,000.

CHARTOCK SKEDS 155G FOR G&S REPERTORY

The Gilbert & Sullivan repertory skedded for Broadway production this spring by S. M. Chartock has been capitalized at $155,000. The presentations will star former D'Oyly Carte comic Martyn Green.

Although Chartock expects to cast the production with players from his former Savoyard presentations, no decision will be made until Green's arrival from England. The comedian is currently working before the cameras in Sir Alexander Korda's production of "The Lives of Gilbert & Sullivan." Date of the N. Y. preem will be set when the comic winds up his chores there.

Selection of the operettas—Chartock plans to present five or six during the four-week run on Broadway—will be made in collaboration with Green. Company will break in out of town at a city yet to be designated. Low budget for the planned repertory is explained by the fact that Chartock will use some of the sets and costumes from his former productions.

Already pacted for the repertory are Ralph Alswang, sets; Peggy Morison, costume supervision; and Lehman Engel, musical director.

Lawrence Files Petition For Bankruptcy After 'Peter Pan,' 'Opera' Flops

Peter Lawrence, co-producer of the recent "Peter Pan" revival and of last season's "Let's Make an Opera," filed a voluntary petition of bankruptcy last week in N. Y. Federal Court, listing $75,291 in liabilities and $125 assets. The debts include $12,792 in federal and state taxes, plus $62,500 due 80-odd unsecured creditors.

Among the debts listed by Lawrence as an individual were various amounts to numerous business concerns, plus $150 to Frank Mayer, $2,500 to Lester Herbert Productions, $214 to the N. Y. Hospital and $21.50 to Universal Funeral Chapel. Obligations due as sole general partner of the "Peter Pan" tour included $300 to scene designer Ralph Alswang, $2,631 to Artcraft Printing, $819 to composer-conductor Leonard Bernstein, $1,500 to attorney Everett Birch and $49 to pressagent Leo Brode.

'BANANA' BACKERS GET FIRST RETURN: $35,000

First return, amounting to $35,000, was sent last week to backers of "Top Banana." The Phil Silvers-starring musical comedy, produced by Paula Stone and her husband, Mike Sloane, has approximately $70,000 in additional assets, including bonds and a $35,000 sinking fund. The show is currently making an operating profit of around $11,000-$12,000 a week at the Winter Garden, N. Y.

Financed at $175,000, plus 20% overcall, the show involved a production cost of approximately $205,000.

Moritz in B'way Producer Debut With 'Fire Sale'

Al Moritz, television writer and former strawhat operator, will make his Broadway managerial debut with the production of "Fire Sale," a farce by Chuck Horner and Hank Miles, writers for Arthur Godfrey. Vicki Cummings is set as femme lead.

The show, already capitalized at $50,000, is slated to open on Broadway in February, after breaking in at Stamford and Boston.

Gracielo Rivera, Puerto Rico coloratura who sang with the N. Y. City Opera Co. last fall, has been signed by the Metropolitan Opera.

5 Road Closings Include 'Happy,' 'Salesman,' 'Season,' Pair of Flops

Of five out-of-town closings of the last two weeks, four represented losses on tour and one about broke even but three of the shows had previous earned sizeable profits on Broadway, one having provided a huge payoff. One of the two failures was a tryout and the other a Broadway flop.

The major money-maker of the four was "Happy Time," which Rodgers & Hamerstein folded Jan. 1 in Chicago after generally unfavorable local reviews and slim boxoffice response. The play, adapted by Samuel Taylor from Robert Fontaine's book, had done uneven business en route to Chicago. However, it earned about $330,000 on Broadway, including the producer's end of the film sale, but minus approximately $15,000 in preliminary touring expense. The production, originally financed at $100,000, cost $46,500.

Another former Broadway hit was "Death of a Salesman," Kermit Bloomgarden's road edition of the Arthur Miller drama. It finaled Saturday night (5) in Richmond after approximately breaking even on this season's tour. It had previously paid about $270,000 (including return from film sale) on an investment of $100,000.

The other Broadway hit that closed on the road was "Season in the Sun," the George Brandt touring edition of Wolcott Gibbs' comedy, which collapsed Dec. 31 under savage reviews and meagre attendance in Chicago. The shutter-

Equity Exec Out In Coast Hassle

Hollywood, Jan. 8.

Unexplained intra-union differences left Equity without duly designated assistant executive secretary on the Coast following what appeared to be the ouster of Christopher D. O'Brien, who had held the post for two years. Equity office said merely he was no longer connected there, implying his resignation. O'Brien denied he resigned, and said any statement must come from Equity Council, in N. Y.

Louis M. Simon, Equity exec secretary here for few days, refused to issue a statement pending his return to N. Y. and submission of a report to Council. Even members of the Coast advisory board were not informed. Board was to have held a final meeting Monday night (7) to wind up its business before the inauguration of a newly-elected board next week. Simon called off the session a few hours before it was to have been held, in a series of telegrams.

Simon, who'll remain on the Coast a few more days, indicated he may pick a successor before his departure.

'RAKE'S' U.S. PREEM DUE AT METOP NEXT FALL

Igor Stravinsky's latest opera, "The Rake's Progress," with libretto by W. H. Auden, is skedded for its U. S. premiere at the Metropolitan Opera in N. Y. next fall. Opera had a boff world preem at the Venice Music Festival last September before an international audience, and has since been eagerly sought by other managements, in U. S. and abroad, for their repertoires.

Opera will mark the first new opus put on at the Met since general manager Rudolf Bing took over, and be the big work of his third season there. George Balanchine, Broadway and ballet choreographer, is set to direct "Rake's," this marking his first venture as an opera stager. It's reported that Auden himself recommended Balanchine to Bing for the job.

St. P. Nixes Ads, Space As 'Gents' Books Mpls.

Minneapolis, Jan. 8.

St. Paul is getting another slap in the face this month, with "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes" passing it up entirely to spend its entire Twin Cities' eight days at the Lyceum here, starting Jan. 26. Others who did likewise this season were Ballet Theatre and "Don Juan in Hell."

Following their usual custom, the St. Paul newspapers, all under the one Ridder ownership, are refusing to accept any "Blondes" paid advertising, or to permit any mention of the impending local engagement in its news columns.

United Paramount Theatres and RKO-Theatres, however, also play their big stage shows exclusively in Minneapolis, and as far as is known there have been no protests in these instances—at least the St. Paul newspapers accept the ads for the shows the same as they do for the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra concerts, local supper clubs and the Alvin here, the only Twin Cities burlesque theatre.

'Pal Joey' Pushes Rodgers Further Into Colossal Class of Hit Composers

With the click opening of the "Pal Joey" revival in N. Y. last week, composer Richard Rodgers hit an all-time high in representation with three musicals running on Broadway, and carbons of his work being offered on tour, on records and in books.

The "Joey" revival received generally smash notices and the sale upbeat after the preem points to a solid run. Also on the same 44th Street, two Rodgers-Oscar Hammerstein 2d shows, "South Pacific" and "The King and I," are still running strong. "South Pacific" and "Oklahoma" companies are currently touring the U. S., while in England "South Pacific" is a London hit, and "Carousel" and "Oklahoma" are touring the provinces.

On disks, Rodgers is represented by albums of "Oklahoma," "South Pacific," "Carousel," "The King and I," "Pal Joey," "Connecticut Yankee" and the score to the filmusical "State Fair." Such orch leaders as Andre Kostelanetz, Fred Waring, Ralph Flanagan and Carmen Cavallaro have etched albums of Rodgers music. Lee Wiley and Margaret Whiting have waxed albums of Rodgers and Lorenz Hart tunes. Some of the single disks of Rodgers' tunes (with Hart or Hammerstein collaboration), which have been recorded by orchs or vocalists, are standard sellers. "Manhattan," which he penned in 1928 with Hart, is getting a revival via the RKO filmusical, "Two Tickets to Broadway."

Simon & Schuster recently published the "Rodgers and Hart Songbook," which includes about 47 of his compositions. Stanley Kramer is currently filming "The Happy Time," which was a Rodgers-Hammerstein Broadway production.

2d Payment to 'Camera' Backers for 50% Total

Backers of "I Am a Camera" will receive 30% payment on their investment this week, bringing the total return to 50% thus far the $65,000 venture. In letter accompanying the payment, producers Gertrude Macy and Walter Starcke predicted that the balance of the capitalization will be returned in six or seven more weeks.

Meanwhile, the management will toss a party backstage at the Empire, N. Y., after the performance tomorrow night (Thurs.) honor of Julie Harris, who is being given star billing. Actress received critical raves for her performance in the John van Druten play.

N.Y. Met's 35G Day, Record $1,034,785 In Subscriptions Cue B.O. Upbeat

Biz at the N. Y. Metropolitan Opera this season is up over last year, in sharp contrast to the dip in concert, legit and film takes everywhere. Subscriptions (the backbone of the Met's b.o.) are up $300,000 over last season, while attendance has also increased. It's considered an unusual bright spot in an otherwise general downbeat show biz picture.

Met subscriptions ran a little over $900,000 for the 1949-50 season. For 1950-51, the first year of Rudolf Bing's regime as general manager, subscription sales totaled $1,034,785, or just under 70% of capacity. This season subscriptions have increased to $1,355,210, or over 70%. The Met is offering more performances this season than last, but the percentage of sales is still up.

Where there were 7,311 subscribers last year, the number of subscribers this season ran to 7,825, the figure leveling off to 7,600 due to defections or lateness in sending in subscription checks. According to Francis Robinson, boxoffice and subscriptions head, the Met has a subscribers waiting list of nearly 1,000.

There were 5,000 fewer unsold seats in the first six weeks of this year's Met season than last. Receipts for the six weeks are up $23,100 over last season's.

At a $10 top New Year's eve, with "Die Fledermaus," the Met took in over $23,000. Regular top is $7.50. A week ago Saturday (2), for two regular performances, the Met had a $35,000-plus day. "Lucia" was the matinee show, with "Aida" done that evening. On a non-subscription night, the Met can get nearly $17,500 in the house. The "Aida" take that night was over $17,700, setting a house record this year for a regular performance. Standees to the limit accounted for the boff take.

Hypoed interest in the Met, and its result on the b.o., is explained by the innovations of the Bing regime, by new or streamlined productions, borrowings from legit technique (use of Broadway stage directors, for instance), fresh talent, etc.

Columbia Preps 3 Dance Troupes for Next Year; Special Ballet Russe Co.

An imposing list of dance attractions is being prepped by Columbia Artists Mgt. for its Community Concerts circuit next season. A trio of attractions is being set up, under supervision of Columbia prez Frederick C. Schang, Jr., to take over dates handled the past seven seasons by Mia Slavenska's Ballet Variante. Latter troupe hasn't been re-signed for next season.

Serge Denham, general director of the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo, is organizing a separate troupe of 20 dancers for Columbia, to be known as the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo Concert Co. Group will in no way affect the usual full-season tours of Denham's Ballet Russe. Schang expects to use the new troupe for 20 weeks of touring.

He has also signed Janet Colli , the Met Opera's Negro lead dancer, for a concert tour, subject to her availability next season. Miss Collins will do both a Coast and a southern tour, accompanied by a singer, pianist and drummer. Schang expects to use her for eight weeks on Community dates.

Third terp attraction will be the Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival, which Schang will also send out for eight weeks.

St. Loo Symph Drives For $175,000 Kitty

St. Louis, Jan. 8.

With its reserve funds exhausted, the St. Louis symph orch society has launched a drive to raise $175,000 for its maintenance fund, a goal of $25,000 more than was achieved last year.

Alvin S. Novack, exec of a local truck firm and chairman of the drive, declared failure to obtain the funds would make it necessary to curtail activities and would result in a fourth-rate orchestra.

St. Pete Operetta to Bow With 'Brigadoon'; Trend Seen to Tents Indoors

St. Petersburg, Fla., Jan. 8.

The Operetta is opening a ten-week season here Jan. 22 with "Brigadoon," with a hefty advance reported for the theatre-in-the-round operation. Producer Pat Hurley believes he'll establish a trend by staging the Operetta indoors this season, utilizing the Gay Blades Roller Rink instead of the tent used last year.

"If we are as successful as we hope to be, you will see the theatre-in-the-round going indoors for winter production all over the country," Hurley predicted.

The Operetta company this year will consist of 16 principals, 30 voices and a dance group of three men and three women. Name stars will be in St. Petersburg at various times during the season to permit a change of billing from week to week.

"Brigadoon" will feature several original Broadway cast members. Show will include Victoria Sherry and Ronnie Cunningham, here last winter; Lawrence Brooks, who starred three years on Broadway in "The Song of Norway," and Robert Smith and Susan Johnson, who created the roles of Jeff and Meg in the original "Brigadoon."

Director Glenn Jordan had charge of Music Circus productions last summer at Cohasset, on Cape Cod, and at Hyannis, Mass., the summer before.

As reconverted by Hurley, the roller rink will resemble a saucer, with a level area midway between the stage and the outer rim. The central level area will be a boon to company members, who can pause there for lines or song, then continue down the ramp to the stage. Orchestra pit will be set under the stage. The orchestra, this year, will again be under the direction of Roland Fiore.

J. Webb Potts and William F. Gorman, local businessmen, are associated with Hurley in underwriting the production.

The schedule of shows is "Brigadoon," Jan. 22; "New Moon," Jan. 29; "The Red Mill," Feb. 5; "Bittersweet," Feb. 12; "Sally," Feb. 19; "Music in the Air," Feb. 26; "The Merry Widow," March 4; "Carmen," March 11; "Sweethearts," March 18, and "Show Boat," March 25.

Ken Welch, recently appointed musical director for the Playhouse, who wrote the score and lyrics for two past revues, "Fifty Grand" and "Of All Things," and Dorothy Daniel are in the process of developing a tuner based on the story of Economy, Pa., which was one of the first communal settlements in America.

Mrs. Daniel, wife of Royal Daniel, managing editor of the Hearst Sun-Telegraph, is no newcomer to the Playhouse. She authored a comedy called "Remember Me," which was tried out by the community theatre here two seasons ago.

Met Repertory Presents Problems to Drive Any B'way Producer Wacky

By MAX RUDOLF

(Artistic Administrator, Metropolitan Opera)

Imagine producing four new full-scale musicals, as well as keeping 17 longrun tune shows in playing form, and you will have an idea what is involved in planning a 22-week Metropolitan Opera season many months in advance. Couple with this the necessity for integrating rehearsals so that artists will not be overburdened on performance days, and for planning a variety of musical fare for 12 different subscription series, and the general structure of an opera season becomes just slightly apparent.

The intrinsic problems facing the management are many, because the Met is a repertory theatre—the oldest of which America can boast—and repertory presents countless complications not found in the Broadway theatre.

During a season, the Met offers about 220 performances—between six and eight operas each week—within a period of 29 weeks. Approximately three-fourths of these take place in New York with the participation of 87 principal artists, while a group of 60 to 70 are involved in the seven-week road tour which brings the company, the entire orchestra, chorus, and ballet to 18 cities.

Fewer than half of the principals are engaged for the entire 22-week New York season, while others give only six to 16 weeks of their time to the Met. This is often due to the repertory, which may include only one or two operas in which certain singers may be cast, or to the fact that many prominent artists must fulfill concert engagements during the winter months. In any case, the task of relating available dates to a season's repertory, has all the aspects of a crossword puzzle worked in many languages.

Inside Stuff—Legit

Victor Samrock, general manager of the Playwrights Co., pulled a switch last week in shuffling the performance schedule of "Fourposter," at the Barrymore, N. Y. He played a Sunday show the night of Dec. 30, selling out with 30 standees, and staying dark the traditionally low-attendance New Year's night. Most shows followed the regular schedule, staying dark that Sunday night and getting relatively poor trade New Year's night. Largely as a consequence, the Jan de Hartog drama, with Jessica Tandy and Hume Cronyn starred, drew a gross of $22,100 last week, only about $500 below the previous stanza. Most other shows took sizeable drops last week.

John Chapman, drama critic of the N. Y. Daily News, commenting in a column in last Thursday's (3) edition on the fact that French dramatist Jean Anouilh has had three failures on Broadway, offered the following explanation: "I don't believe the playwright's London and Paris following is any more sensitive and intelligent than this typical American playgoer; they're more easily fooled by pretentiousness, that's all."

Which paper the New York drama critics read was demonstrated last week when the N. Y. Times erratumed that the premiere curtain for "Pal Joey" was scheduled for 8:30 p.m. Although the other dailies all announced correctly that the opening was slated for 8 o'clock, pressagent Jack Toohey was kept busy most of that day answering phone calls from confused patrons. The callers included several non-Times critics and legit editors.

Little Theatres Go Bigtime on Road, Taking Over From Fading Legiters

By NED ARMSTRONG

The community, or little theatre, activity in two major road cities — Pittsburgh and Cleveland — has grown to such proportions recently that the term "little theatre" seems no longer to apply.

The Pittsburgh Playhouse has raised $2,000,000 to build a theatre near Schenley Park. Construction is delayed by critical war shortages and may be for several years. However, the Pittsburgh Playhouse so urgently needs greater seating capacity that the next-door synagogue was purchased a few months ago and, at a cost of $400,000, is being converted into a 600-seat theatre. By April, the Pittsburgh Playhouse will be operating two "little" theatres—one seating 400, the other 600, and plans call for simultaneous operation.

In Cleveland, the Playhouse, in its 36th season, is operating three "little" theatres with a total seating capacity of 1,300. All three theatres under the same management operate simultaneously, exhibiting separate attractions. The directors of the Cleveland Playhouse recently purchased the Christian Science church at 77th and Euclid, converting this into an 800-seat house at cost of $350,000.

A local drama scribe who frequently visits all three theatres on his nightly rounds says he has often found all three filled to capacity.

Frederic McConnell, managing director of the Cleveland Play-House, estimates that their present real estate could not be duplicated for $1,000,000. Moreover, the three theatres under McConnell's direction have a budget for the 1951-1952 season of $196,000, which, McConnell anticipates, will be ap-

ATPAM Picketing Amato Off-Broadway House In Union Brushoff Claim

Failing to come to terms with the theatrical unions' Fact Finding Committee, the Amato Opera Theatre on Bleecker st., N. Y., and its play, Lynn Riggs' "The Year of Pilar," are being picketed by the Assn. of Theatrical Press Agents & Managers. Producer David Longstreet claims he could not meet the union's figure of 16% of production gross to be paid for the hire of union employees.

A union spokesman said that when the theatre last presented legit, as the New Stages Theatre, it had cooperated with the unions, and acknowledged the unions' concessions in the program. For the current production, he stated, the unions had even relaxed some of the conditions New Stages had had to meet, but despite this, theatre owner Anthony Amato and producer Longstreet would not agree to what the union felt were equitable terms.

Longstreet stated that although he had organized the production on a non-union basis, he later came to terms with Equity, agreeing to give 10% of the gross to the craft unions. The current run marks the premiere of the Riggs play, a tragedy written in the '30s and concerning the trials of a Mexican family that returns to Yucatan from New York at the insistence of the daughter, Pilar.

Another off-Broadway group, the Sunday Theatre, originally scheduled as a subscription theatre club giving Sunday performances, abandoned its program for this season after one production, and gave as the reason inability to meet union requirements. Of the four continuing off-Broadway groups, three non-union ones have been operating this season so far. The fourth, Equity Library Theatre, is union-produced.

10G More to 'Darkness' Backers; 60G to Go

Another $10,000 payment was made recently to backers of "Darkness at Noon," bringing the total return thus far to $40,000 on the Sidney Kingsley dramatization of the Arthur Koestler novel. That leaves $60,000 still to be paid on the Playwrights Co. production.

The N. Y. Drama Critics' Circle award winner, currently touring with Edward G. Robinson in the starring role played on Broadway by Claude Rains, earned an operating profit of $4,500 for the first five weeks on the road, ending Dec. 1. As of that date, the show had $12,000 in bonds and deposits and $8,749 balance available for sinking fund. There was still $39,251 production cost to be recouped. couped.

100G Budget On 'Curtain' Revue

"Curtain Going Up," intimate revue to be produced and directed by Mervyn Nelson, is financed at $100,000, without provision for overcall. The show is slated to open the week of Feb. 28 on Broadway, following a two-week tryout starting Feb. 4 at the Forrest, Philly.

Nelson will be the sole producer of the show. Theatre treasurer Daniel Melnick, who was formerly involved in the management, has withdrawn, but remains a limited partner with a $2,000 investment. Other backers include Milton Berle, $1,000; Eddie Cantor and his wife, Ida, $12,000 and $1,000 respectively; Jimmy Durante, $2,000; agent William Morris, Jr., $1,000; theatre owner Harry E. Gould, $1,000; resort operator Jennie Grossinger, $2,000, and restaurateur John R. Ruggiero, $5,000.

Sketches for the revue have been written by Max Wilk, George Axelrod, Charles Scheuer and Mel Brooks, while the songs have been supplied by Charlotte Kent, Irvin Graham, Arthur Siegel and Michael Brown. General manager of the operation is Al Goldin, while Phyllis Perlman and Marian Byram are the pressagents.

New Haven Sets Campaign To Hypo Subscriptions

New Haven, Jan. 8.

Something new for the local Shubert goes into effect with the launching of a soon-due campaign to promote subscriptions for the next five shows booked here.

List includes "Paris, '90," Jan. 24-26; "Jamie," Feb. 4-9; "The Long Watch," Feb. 14-16; "Flight Into Egypt," Feb. 25-March 1, and "Autumn Garden," March 6-8.

Actually there is no cash saving involved in the plan, the gimmick simply being a matter of choice locations. In announcing the setup, Shubert manager Ben Segal stated that it will not be necessary to sign up for all five, including any possible weak sister, in order to get a look at a possible smash. A subscriber may come in for a single play or the complete list, the only stipulation being that seats will be allocated on the basis of number of plays bought. Obviously, the patron who subscribes to all five gets a better location break than th single show customer.

Plan is a subtle reminder to the intermittent playgoer that if he wants to see a specific attraction without the aid of field glasses or a periscope, maybe he'd better do something about signing up for added plays on the list.

Campaign involves a substantial budget, utilizing 14 state newspapers.

GUEDEN TO VIENNA

Met soprano Hilde Gueden flew to Europe Sunday (6) for a month's engagement with the Vienna State Opera.

She'll return to the Met in February.

ANTA Bounces Back From Membership Slip; Breen Calls for More Criticism

Chicago, Jan. 8.

Robert Breen, in an address before the American Educational Theatre Assn. here last week, revealed that the American National Theatre & Academy is pulling out of a falling membership mire that had been threatening the organization. Roll was 1,118 in June; slipped to 946 in October, but has risen to 967 as of Dec. 15. The former executive-secretary asked for closer cooperation and more active participation of delegates from the country areas.

In line with that, he pointed out that one of the two annual board meetings would be held outside of New York. Catch, however, is that the new board of directors cannot be elected until the 2,500 membership mark is reached. While directors are supposed to be limited to a three-year term, absence of enough members might lengthen their tenure.

Breen went over the reorganization plan of ANTA, reviewing some of the highspots of the desire for a national theatre, and asked for closer cooperation and more constant criticism, remarking that ANTA could only live through active sharpshooting by members. Convention here was held in conjunction with Speech Assn. of America, American Speech and Hearing Assn. and National University Extension Assn.

MIAMI BEACH WINS OK FOR MUNY AUD BOOKING

Miami Beach, Jan. 8.

Long-pending suit seeking to prevent the City of Miami Beach from presenting theatrical and concert attractions in the new Municipal Auditorium, in competition with private enterprise, filed by Starlight Corp., which owns Copa City, came up before the Florida Supreme Court last weekend, with decision going to the city.

Original suit in County Circuit court was dismissed. Appeal found the Supreme Court ruling that "we must not lose sight of the fact that visitors to Miami Beach during winter months are an important business, and materially affect the economic life of the community. While the law . does not specifically authorize the city to employ an agency and book attractions for the city auditorium . . . its construction and ownership is clearly designed to accommodate visitors. Power to own the auditorium carries with it, by implication. power and authority to operate in behalf of public interest."

The 3,500-seater has booked a heavy schedule of concerts and operatic attractions this season, with some star names on the agenda. Attempts at ice shows and musicals like last season's ill-fated "Brigadoon," have failed to draw, as have certain percentage of concert artists. Overall, the longhair stuff has, however, managed to make a fair profit for the organizations sponsoring.

Coast Legit Is Slipping Badly Into Peoria-With-Palms Status

By MIKE KAPLAN

Los Angeles, Jan. 8.

The traditional "Happy New Year" greeting has a hollow ring in Los Angeles legit circles. The outlook is anything but happy..

Steadily declining business and a deterioration in production quality, climaxed by the "My L. A." fiasco, has legit veterans wondering uneasily whether the handwriting on the wall has assumed 24-sheet size. Certainly, there's nothing on the books to indicate that 1952 will be even as good as 1951—and the year just passed was the grimmest th local theatre has experienced in recent memory. Comparative 1950 and 1951 grosses skidded another $500,000 to hit $2,313,570—a postwar nadir. Alarmingly, losses skyrocketed out of proportion; best estimates at year's end placed the total lost here at $609,529, with another $750,000 lost elsewhere by local producers wh ventured beyond the city limits.

The crippling effect of these fantastic losses upon what remains of legit locally is already being felt. It will probably be months befor usually-interested backers start answering telephones again. Even worse, however, is the reaction of the public to another year of big promises that turned out to be bad productions.

"Complications arising from the swift shutdown of "My L. A.," for example, will undoubtedly have a deteriorating effect upon business for some time to come. The fact that the general public was "permitted" to get in on the debacle compounded the blow to general show biz prestige, and the town's handful of legit producers are pri-

Phyllis Love to Play Lead In Husband's New Comedy

Phyllis Love, who scored a personal click last season as the ingenue in "Rose Tattoo," is set for the ingenue lead in Herman Levin's production of "The Temptation of Maggie Haggarty," authored by her husband, James V. McGee. The title part in the comedy is an Irish-American biddy, for which no one is set. The other principals are her son and what is described as a lovable phony man.

The production, to be staged by Martin Ritt, requires an elaborate single setting of three levels, for which Boris Aronson will probably do the design. The show is budgeted at $80,000 and is pointed for an April 15 opening on Broadway after a tryout tour.

'Tidings' Fades Out To $25,000 Loss

"Glad Tidings," Harald Bromley's production of the Edward Mabley comedy, which closed Saturday night (5) at the Lyceum, N. Y., after a run of 100 performances, represents a loss of about $25,000, or 50% of the investment. However, a prospective film sale, plus stock rights, a projected London production and a possible tour next season may pay off th balance.

Two other shows that shuttered on Broadway last week represented profits. One was "Don Juan in Hell," Paul Gregory's lecture-style presentation of the excerpt from Shaw's "Man and Superman," with Charles Boyer, Charles Laughton, Cedric Hardwicke and Agnes Moorehead starred. It made an estimated profit of about $55,000 on its scheduled 39-performance run at the Century, N. Y., closing Dec. 31. The novelty offering, which has netted around $150,000 previously on tour (including the British Isles), is due for a return limited engagement on Broadway starting March 30.

The other closing over the weekend was "Wild Duck," the limited-engagement revival of the Ibsen drama starring Maurice Evans, Kent Smith, Mildred Dunnock and Diana Lynn. It closed Sunday night (6) at the City Center after a scheduled 16-performance run. On a fortnight's gross of over $68,900, it is figured to have netted around $19,000.

"Glad Tidings" is already set for a stock presentation during February at Winter Park, Fla., and may be booked by Bromley for another strawhat tour next summer, with the hope of repeating its cleanup of the barn circuit last year. The producer also has the idea of sending the play on the road next fall, preferably with Melvyn Douglas in his original co-starring role.

Also on Bromley's tentative schedule for next season are two new straight plays and a musical. The latter isn't identified, but the former include a dramatization by Joanna Roos and Mabley of Alexandra Orme's book, "By the Waters of the Danube," and a stage version of David Westheimer's short novel, "Magic Fallacy," for which an adaptor is being sought.

Slim B.O. Sloughs Date For 'Carmen' in Albany

Albany, Jan. 8.

The Variety Club cancelled a presentation of "Car by the London Opera Co. at the Strand set for tonight (8), because few tickets had been sold, despite several newspaper advs.

Fact that the touring troupe had done the opera, before a good-sized audience, at Proctor's in Schenectady (15 miles distant) in November, and the closeness of the Albany date to the holidays, were considered adverse factors. A later booking could not be arranged.

The San Carlo Opera Co. has drawn well on several engagements at the Palace Theatre in recent years.

Davis Buys 'Porgy' to Tour Through Europe; Ballet Overseas Trip Affected

Blevins Davis has bought the rights to Gershwin's "Porgy and Bess," after negotiations which began in June, 1950, and has mapped an ambitious schedule for the Negro folk-opera. With Robert Breen in as co-producer, Davis plans to take the musical to Europe for a tour this spring, if time permits, or if not, then next season. European trek will be followed by a U.S. tour next season. Bill Liebling will help Davis and Breen with the casting.

Overseas engagement is looked on as a natural. Opus has been done in only one or two cities abroad, and only in the opera house, with an almost exclusively white cast. (Anne Brown, Negro soprano in the Broadway original, sang it with a Scandinavian opera company.) But the musical hasn't been done as a legiter, or with a Negro cast, on the continent. And London has never seen it.

It's believe the work would be presented with the cooperation of the U.S. State Dept. as a cultural venture, similar to the official U. S. aid given to attractions that played the recent Berlin Festival, and to U.S. ballet troupes in former seasons. Breen, through his former ANTA connections, helped in the ballet-State Dept. tie.

Davis plans to devote most of his time to the "Porgy and Bess" venture, which means curtailing his activities as prez and financial patron of Ballet Theatre Foundation, sponsors of Ballet Theatre. The dance troupe, which had planned an extensive European tour this spring and summer, is reported likely to cancel its trip as result, postponing it till at least next year. Davis, although officially denying it, paid for Ballet Theatre's European tour in 1950, which resulted reported $150,000 loss to him.

Hylton to Show 'Remains' In London This Spring

Deal for the British rights of the Howard Lindsay-Russel Crouse comedy, "Remains to Be Seen," has been completed by the Kenneth Later agency. Jack Hylton will do the show, to open in London May or June.

Deal was started during Hylton's recent U. S. visit.

This revival of the Rodgers-Hart and John O'Hara musical comedy apparently has a chance to reverse the commercial failure of George Abbott's original production of 11 years ago. It has been better received than the original and is off to a promising boxoffice start.

However, certain of the basic negative factors of the show are still there, and at least one additional element may limit its staying power. But because of the obvious positive assets, chief of which are the numerous Rodgers-Hart song hits, this "Pal Joey" reincarnation appears a probable bet to pay off.

Although the original production drew generally favorable reviews and won a fanatical following, its appeal proved to be somewhat limited. It hung on for 374 performances, but failed to earn back its investment on the Broadway run and ultimately paid off only by virtue of the sale of the film rights.

It was generally agreed that the show suffered from two principal adverse factors. One was that it opened during the ASCAP-network warfare and thus failed to get the tune plugging that might have put it over at the b.o. The other was that its relatively sophisticated quality, with an array of disreputable characters, limited popular appeal.

Despite the gamey quality of many of the lyrics, the score has recently had a potent radio buildup, one song alone, "Bewitched, Bothered and Bewildered," having had the most-played rating for several months' stretch. In addition, a Columbia record album of about six months ago, with Vivienne Segal in her original role and Harold Lang in the title part originated by Gene Kelly, has had a lively sale. Finally, a strawhat edition of reportedly dubious quality did satisfactory business, so it was figured that the public would now be ready to accept a musical show with scamy characters.

But whether the Broadway crowd—the cafe clientele and show biz inside coterie—that has always had a special crush on "Pal Joey," will be extensive enough to carry this revival to payoff success, is less certain. However, there is a sizable boxoffice demand and a steady broker call since the opening, and the feeling around the street is that the show is " ."

That is where the show's basic drawbacks may hurt. For "Joey" still suffers from the fact that not only its hero but all its characters are unsympathetic. Joey himself is not just a punk and a heel, but also a conceited, lying, double-crossing small-time wolf who stumbles into his big "break" and turns nasty and odious when his luck runs out. The heroine is a not-so-young, habitual adulteress and nitery prowler, who also becomes spiteful when her latest - mance sours. With the exception of a decent but dumb ingenue, the other characters are mostly blackmailers, connivers, tramps and assorted riff-raff.

Another essential weakness in the show is that the second act is a letdown. Most of the top song hits and the more amusing, palatable incidents of the story are in the first act. But the plot turns really sordid and the characters become downright unsavory in the second act. Then there are relatively few big songs and the proceedings tend to bog down in overlong production numbers.

The paramount favorable element in the show remains the great Richard Rodgers score, coupled with some of the late Lorenz Hart's most skillful (and explicitly naughty) lyrics. The fact that such numbers as "Bewitched," "I Could Write a Book," "That Terrific Rainbow," "What Is a Man?" and "In Our Little Den" have become established via radio, recordings, etc., is a tremendous plus for this revival. Also, the dances staged by Robert Alton seem better than his routines of the original, at least in retrospect, and the Oliver Smith scenery and Miles White's gaudy costumes a la 1930-ish niteries provide an assist.

Miss Segal, who wasn't too young for the part in the original production, doesn't seem a bit older now as the two-timing heroine. In all but one gown she looks surprisingly attractive and is more relaxed, authoritative and expert than ever.

In the title part, which could be a singer or even an m.c.-comic, the producers have followed the example of the original production and cast a dancer, using Lang, apparently suggested by the Columbia record album. One of the most versatile, spectacular contemporary dancers, Lang clicks in that department and is at least acceptable as a singer.

In general, the casting of the other parts is at least equal to the original edition. Helen Gallagher scores emphatically as the roundheels nitery hoofer-singer, played originally by June Havoc. In the brief but juicy part of the newspaper interviewer, played by Jean Casto in the original, Elaine Stritch is a bit too tidy looking, but she whams the comedy song, "Zip," about burley strippers. Lionel Stander is suitably loathesome as the blackmailing talent agent, originated by Jack Durant; Pat Northrop is appealing as the ingenue "mouse," created by Leila Ernst; Helen Wood impresses in several terp spots; Jack Waldron is plausible as a seedy nitery owner, and Robert Fortier is notable as a dancer and cabaret stage manager.

Besides staging the dances, Alton has returned from a long stay in Hollywood to direct the overall production, which seems to spoof the story and locale a bit more than the original production did. David Alexander has directed the book acceptably, and Don Walker's orchestrations (by comparison with those provided by Ted Royal for the Columbia album) are particularly effective for the hot numbers, but less so for the other number.

From a management standpoint, the opening night performance was unusually well handled, especially in the coordination of house lights and curtains for the two acts. Hobe.

Yiddish Play

Let's Be Gay

Irving Jacobson and Edmund Zayenda production of musical comedy in two acts. Directed by Leo Fuchs. Stars Fuchs and Jacobson. Book, Samuel Nydell; music (and conducting), Abe Ellstein; lyrics, Jacob Jacobs; dances, Felix Sadowski; sets, Michael Saltzman; assistant director, Isidore Goldstein. At Second Ave. Theatre, N. Y., Jan. 5, '51; $3.60 top.

Prof. Leckzaltz	Leo Fuchs
Kalmen Klotz	Irving Jacobson
Moishe Leib	Jacob Zanger
Rebecca	Rose Greenfield
Sylvia	Miriam Kressyn
Millie	Esta Saltzman
Beatrice	Yetta Zwerlin
Maxie	David Lubritzky
Alex Greenber	Muni Serebrov
Frieda	Lucy Gehrman
Jack	Charles Cohan
Pauline	Mae Schoenfeld
Cantor	William Secunda

"Let's Be Gay," the new musical comedy at the Second Ave. Theatre, is in the spirit of its title. With Leo Fuchs operating at the peak of his zaniness, and with sparkling assists by co-producing character comic Irving Jacobson, that engaging buffoon called Yetta Zwerling, and other bright performers cavorting to some nifty tunes manufactured and batonned by Abe Ellstein, "Gay" is a thorough triumph.

Fuchs is by way of being a one-man laugh factory. Among the most versatile of performers in any idiom, he encases in his gaunt and flexible frame an A to Z study in quick-derived contrast. He moves easily and gracefully from sophisticated wit to Chaplinesque helplessness, from lofty song to low whining, from leer to fear. When he hoofs, his eyes dance and his long and learned gams form a pretzel, meanwhile contorting his diaphragm. As Prof. Lecksaltz, that is, "lick salt," of a book themed on marriage lost and marriage won, he can give a course in basic comedy to some of our top funsters.

Pressing him closely for Harlequin honors is co-star Irving Jacobson, as Kalmen Klotz, his stepfather while third artist bustin' the applause meter is Yetta Zwerling, a manchasing cutup in bizarre getups who combines the best elements of Martha Raye and Joan Davis.

Miriam Kressyn, in a wistful, love-crossed role, is skillful in the mood sequences and salvo in a torcher that reaches operatic proportions. In the lighter roles, the standouts are Esta Saltzman, an attractive soubret, and David Lubritzky, as her Maxie the Taxi husband. Capable performances in the serious stanzas are turned in by Lucy Gehrman, Jacob Zanger, Rose Greenfield and Muni Serebrov, while others in the cast are alive to their jobs.

"Gay" is surrounded by fresh-looking youngsters in ballet and flat dances devised by Felix Sadowski in a neat workover of the modern groove. Their best choreo is in a nitery atmosphere and in an Atlantic City bathing sequence. The Michael Saltzman sets are economical, but effective in their simplicity. Ellstein's music is nicely mated to lyrics by Jacob Jacobs, and some of them would be smasho in a Yiddish hit parade. The score is largely American in feeling.

Fuchs' overall direction is tops, giving the show good pace and splendid balance between the unfolding of the story proper and the enactment of the musical-vaude portions. Trau.

There much about "The Shrike," new play by Joseph Kramm. A localite, which preemed here tonight (7) at the Walnut for a single week's break-in, that calls for recommendation and endorsement. Most important factor is that after the play's slightly-fumbling and rather-hesitant start, it picks up momentum and rises to some real dramatic heights in act one and the early parts of act two.

Then, as a surprise to probably most of the audience, comes a semi-happy ending after grim tragedy had been indicated from all but the start. It's doubtful if this quasi-cheerful finale is going to serve as a sop to the amusement-seekers who have been moaning about the depressing note of the play's earlier scenes, and it certainly will be open to argument as far as artistic justification is concerned.

"The Shrike" (it's defined in the dictionary as a predatory bird) deals with a husband, Jim Downs, who tries to commit suicide and doesn't quite succeed. An unhappy marital setup, complicated by the usual "other woman," is the cause of his taking the unusual overdose of 156 pills. The audience first meets him in a ward of a city hospital, when he is admitted very near death. With him is his wife, Ann, apparently highly solicitous and wifely, but, as the author proceeds to prove with savage glee, the real "shrike' in this case.

On his recovery, Jim is regretful of his attempt and apparently quite normal. But the doctors and hospital authorities cannot sanction his release unless Ann gives her unqualified approval, and this she never does, although protesting her love and loyalty. A couple of misguided verbal outbreaks make Jim's position even more untenable, and it begins to look as if he may be committed to some permanent state institution.

A visit from his brother, who gives him very sane and practical advice, changes Jim's whole attitude and paves the way for the ostensibly "happy" but inconclusive climax. Acting according to the brother's theory, Jim, in a final interview with the psychiatrist who has been handling his case, professes a sincere desire to be reconciled with his wife and gives a complete brushoff to Charlotte, the "other woman." Mrs. Downs is on hand, with an overcoat and tie, to take Jim home, and they depart, in apparent complete amiability, just as the audience (or most of it) is counting on the last-minute flare-up on the part of Downs that will give the play the tragic touch indicated through most of the action.

One cannot help but conjecture what's going to happen after the final curtain of "The Shrike." Every indication points to plenty of fireworks in the Downs menage, with possibly a complete crackup on Jim's part and his eventual bestowal of a just com-uppance on the superficially sweet and sugary Ann.

Kramm has done some brilliant writing in many scenes of the play which, for setting, reminds one of Sidney Kingsley's "Men in White," as all 14 scenes are in this same city hospital.

Jose Ferrer, producer, director and co-star, has acquitted himself well in all categories. On the acting side, he underplays with great skill a part that might well have been hammy, but on the directorial end there are a couple of scenes, especially in act one that could stand re-staging. Judith Evelyn, who was the long-suffering wife in "Angel Street," is here the predatory bird as Jim Down's wife, and her main fault opening night was inaudibility at times. Most of the characters are either doctors, patients or hospital attendants and they're neatly done, with Philip Huston and Kendall Clark outstanding.

After the steady buildup of emotional interest that "The Shrike" discloses after its rather mild start, it seems rather a shame to see it slide away into what seems like a pacific attempt at audience appeal at the very end. Most onlookers, thanks to the vividness of Kramm's writing and character drawing, would most certainly have preferred to see Jim Downs stand up on his two hind legs, tell his wife where to get off, and dare the possible consequences. Waters.

Revival of "Anna Christie" is the second offering of the season here by the New York City Theatre Co. At the New Parsons for a week's tuneup before its New York stand, the drama constitutes a neatly-wrapped package of theatre fare, although some of the crix may hammer away at its relatively ancient vintage. It deals with a special era in American literary history, of hard men and ships, waterfront boozery, red light districts and elemental drives of men and women.

There were a minimum amount of opening night difficulties and show should be shipshape by the time it reaches Gotham. It has an excellent cast backed up by good direction by Michael Gordon and equally good mountings by Emeline Roche. Latter's bar and barge settings are particularly colorful.

Plot concerns the ancient seafarer who abandoned his family early in life. He turns up later in life as a hard-drinking bargeman at a waterfront saloon. There he expects his daughter—fresh from a midwest hospital—to visit him. He hasn't seen her for 15 years and envisions in her everything that is pure and fine about a woman. She turns up as a refugee from a brothel.

The femme goes to live aboard the old man's barge while she recovers her health. In the process, the bargeman's common-law wife and drinkmate is kicked out to make room. A sea rescue brings aboard the man with whom the daughter falls in love, with her father eventually finding out that the daughter had been a prostie.

Celeste Holm essays a heavy role in the title part. She does well as the daughter bruised by life's hard knocks. Opening night she seemed restrained by a fear of going overboard in the role. As the Irish bully boy who falls in love with her, Kevin McCarthy does a fine job. As the aged seafarer, Art Smith turns in a top-drawer performance with his skilled handling of varied moods. From the opening scenes with his childlike humors to the closing scenes with his childlike grief, he displays acting artistry. Grace Valentine, as the waterfront companion of the bargeman, offers an excellent portrayal. Eck.

Met Repertory

performances must be scheduled for them within a limited time. However, no leading singer wishes to perform more than twice—very rarely three times—during any week, and never on successive nights. Usually, he must be kept free of rehearsals on performance days—for very exacting roles, even the preceding day—and he will not sing a general rehearsal the morning after a performance. To a considerable, though what lesser degree, these questions also arise concerning the alternate or standby cast for each show.

The most important factor, however, is concern for the customer, and no decision regarding repertory made without hours of deliberating how to satisfy the Met's subscribers and where to place the limited number of non-subscription performances. Great care must be taken that the subscriber is offered sufficient variety from season to season. A double subscription series includes 20 subscription nights, and on at least 15 of these, operas are played which the subscriber did not hear the year before.

Chicago, Jan. 8.

Legit grosses finally rose out of the enveloping snow and zero temperatures, but more snow hit the weekend take. New Year's Eve helped most attractions. "Happy Time" and "Season in the Sun" folded New Year's Day. "Darkness of Noon" closed a strong five week stay here Saturday (5).

"Cocktail Party" is inked for the Erlanger Jan. 28. There's nothing much definite for February, although there's talk of "Bell, Book, and Candle," "Fourposter" and "Tree Grows in Brooklyn" coming in.

Estimates for Last Week

Ballet Theatre, Opera House (2nd week) ($3.71; 3.600). With New Year's Eve did okay $38,000. Closed Sunday (6).

"Darkness at Noon," Erlanger (5th week) ($4.40; 1,334). Closed Saturday (5) with strong $20,100 for final week.

"Moon is Blue," Harris (36th week) ($4.40; 1,000). Sprang back with good $17,000.

"South Pacific," Shubert (60th week) ($5; 2,100). Got back to terra firma with sound $39,700.

'Sundays' 16½G, 'Moon' 10G, Hub

Boston, Jan. 8.

Hub legit fare is at low ebb this stanza with one entry, the disappointing "Month of Sundays," in its final week at the Shubert. Two newcomers are skedded immediately ahead, the comedy, "Gertie," bowing into the Plymouth Jan. 14 and Cornelia Otis Skinner's "Paris 90" skedded for the same night at the Shubert.

Estimates for Last Week

"Month of Sundays," Shubert (2d wk) (1,700; $4.80). Sluggish at $16,500. Final week current.

"Moon is Blue," Plymouth (6th wk) (1,200; $3.60). New Year's Eve helped this to a fair $10,000 finale, following its $6,100 fifth stanza.

"Student Prince," Opera House (2d wk) (3,000; $3). Okay $21,000 for second and final week.

'BLONDES' $56,000 IN HOUSTON-DALLAS WEEK

Houston, Jan. 8.

"Gentlemen Prefer Blondes" opened here Thursday (3) for a capacity five-day engagement at the Music Hall, grossing $37,200. The show came here from Dallas, where it had a successful nine-day run of 11 performances. The show grossed $77,360 there, a substantial hike over last year's Dallas presentation of "Kiss Me, Kate," which took in $63,900.

Of the $77,360 Dallas take, $18,800 was garnered in three shows last week (31-1), while $58,560 was taken in in eight performances the previous week (25-30). The $37,200 in Houston and $18,800 in Dallas gave "Blondes" a $56,000 take for last week.

Good Kaycee Advance

Kansas City, Jan. 8.

"Gentlemen Prefer Blondes," opening tonight (Tues.) at the Orpheum here, has an advance of about $25,000, which is figured healthy.

Indications are much better, however, for next week at Kiel Auditorium, St. Louis, where the approximately $39,000 advance points toward a capacity gross for the stand.

Sadler's $116,300 for 15; Ballet Thea. $77,215 (15)

Sadler's Wells Theatre Ballet grossed $116,300 in two weeks in Los Angeles, giving 15 performances (one of which was given in Pasadena). Troupe this week is doing splits in San Antonio, Houston, Waco and Dallas.

Ballet Theatre racked up a $77,215 gross for two weeks (15 performances) in Chicago, Dec. 27-Jan. 6. Troupe this week is dancing in Lafayette, Ind., Bloomington, Ill., Louisville and Columbus, O.

Dance festival will be held at Hunter Playhouse, N. Y., this month, with Jean Erdman & Co. performing Jan. 18; Erick Hawkins, Jan. 19; Donald McKayle-Normand Maxon Co., Jan. 20 matinee, and Merce Cunningham, Jan. 20 evening.

'COCKTAIL' 15G, MPLS.; 4G FOR 3 IN ST. PAUL

Minneapolis, Jan. 8.

Considering numerous adversities, the $15,000 chalked up by "The Cocktail Party" for seven nights and one matinee at a $3.60 top ($4.80 New Year's Eve) in the 1,859-seat Lyceum was excellent. Refunds had to be made after announcement that the show's star, Vincent Price, would not appear because of illness, and when it became known that the company's stage manager, after two weeks with the Price leading role, was still reading instead of acting it. Below-zero weather and blizzards also hurt.

Show's cast was in a shakeup state here, Dennis King and Julie Haydon rehearsing with the company in Minneapolis in the Price and Marsha Hunt parts, but not opening with the play until Milwaukee this week. Miss Hunt returns to Hollywood to fulfill picture commitments. On its eastern tour attraction will have A.T.S.-Theatre Guild subscription season sponsorship and in the late spring may play a return New York engagement, according to Russell Lewis, co-producer, who flew in from the Coast to supervise rehearsals of the reorganized cast.

In St. Paul, at the 3,500-seat Auditorium at $3.60 top, the attraction did poorly, grossing under $4,000 for two nights and a matinee.

Cincinnati, Jan. 8.

"Kiss Me, Kate" was off key last week in the 2,500-seat Taft Theatre. Estimated gross for eight performances, at a $4.31 top, was $22,300, a drop of $1,600 from the previous frame. On its first Cincy visit, last season, the Cole Porter musical grossed $45,000. Letdown was in wake of the local $63,000 record bagged by "Guys and Dolls" in the same house at a higher scale.

Next road booking is "Moon Is Blue," for week of Jan. 28 in the 1,300-seat Cox theatre. Then "Bell, Book and Candle," starting Feb. 11. They will be first dramatic plays here this season, due to delayed settlement of contracts between the Shuberts and stagehands, musicians and treasurers.

An agreement including a 10% salary increase and running until Labor Day, 1954, has been reached by J. J. Shubert and theatrical unions at his Shubert and Cox Theatres here. New weekly salaries for ticket sellers are $105 for treasurers and $95 for assistants. Electricians, property men, flymen, carpenters, grips and clearers, and musicians have been granted a 10% increase.

'TATTOO' OKAY $18,400 IN FIRST WEEK AT PITT

Pittsburgh, Jan. 8.

"Rose Tattoo" at the Nixon last week got the first benefits from the bulge in local subscriptions produced by the concentrated drive of ATS-Theatre Guild and Council of Living Theatre, and did an okay $18,400.

How "Tattoo" will fare without subscription support this stanza is something else again, although there has been a pretty steady activity at the office on the strength of followup press support and raves for two stars, Maureen Stapleton and Eli Wallach.

Rosalind Russell in "Bell, Book and Candle" comes in Monday (14) for a week, followed by "Moon Is Blue" and then "Student Prince" week of Feb. 4.

'Wedding' 20G, Frisco; Andrews-'Roberts' 20G

San Francisco, Jan. 8.

"Member Of The Wedding," with Ethel Waters, chalked up a neat $20,000 for its second stanza at the 1,550-seat Curran. Theatre Guild production was scaled to $3.60.

"Mister Roberts," with Tod Andrews, moved up to a fine $20,000 for its third frame at the 1,775-seat Geary, with a $3.60 top.

Met 'Fledermaus' 32G, D.C.; 2-Week 55G Sets Record

Washington, Jan. 8.

Metropolitan Opera version of "Fledermaus" rang up the season's record for a fortnight stand at the Gayety Theatre, with a little over $55,000 in the till for the two weeks ending last Saturday (5). Actually, the run was a day short of two weeks, opening Tuesday, Dec. 25, instead of Monday (24).

First week was $23,000, and last week a boff $32,000 plus. This is a little better than "Kiss Me, Kate" did for two full weeks in October. The Jose Greco Spanish Ballet is here for two weeks, as one of the attractions on the Theatre Guild agenda.

'Bell' $30,300, Philly, 'Fancy' $16,800

Philadelphia, Jan. 8.

Philly's best legit bet, as of now, is "Bell, Book and Candle," which hit a luscious $30,300 in its second of three weeks at the Forrest, which was a substantial "up" over the initial session.

Last night (7) "The Shrike" preemed at the Walnut for a surprise single week's stay and the advance was very encouraging. Also bowing in last evening was the perennial, "The Student Prince," now announcing "positively farewell tour."

Next Monday (14) "Jane" opens a tryout at the Walnut with Basil Rathbone and Edna Best; in for two weeks as sixth and last ATS subscription offering of regular 1951-52 season.

Estimates for Last Week

"Bell, Book and Candle," Forrest (2d week) ($3.90; 1,760). Has been best business bet of holiday legit offerings. Upped to a sturdy $30,300 last week, and should do very well this final stanza, which is not on ATS subscription. "Month of Sundays" in next Wednesday (16) for week and-a-half stay.

"Fancy Meeting You Again," Locust (2d week) ($3.90; 1,580). Fine followup in press, plus good word-of-mouth, has helped this George Kaufman comedy tryout build up a solid draw here; $16.800 last week. Theatre's next is Cornelia Otis Skinner, Jan. 28.

"Seventeen," Shubert (2d week) $4.55; 1,870). This musical never did get started here and management decided to wind up tour last Saturday (5). High scale was believed a factor against it. Got $23,000. House currently has "The Student Prince," with "Venus Observed" due to preem Jan. 25.

'DOLLS' SETS DETROIT MARK; 55G IN 2D WEEK

Detroit, Jan. 8.

All house records at the Shubert were smashed last week, when "Guys and Dolls" racked up a tremendous $55,000 in the second week of a four-week run. The first week gross was $42,500.

The $55,000 take topped the previous high of $44,000 hit by "Annie Get Your Gun" a couple of seasons ago. The "Annie" gross was obtained with a $4.80 top, while the "Dolls" gross was helped by a top of $5.40, and $8.40 on New Year's Eve. The Shubert seats 2,025. "Dolls" looks like a sellout for the remaining two weeks.

Cass reopened yesterday (Mon.) with a fortnight of "Darkness at Noon," starring Edward G. Robinson.

'Garden' Tops $14,000 In Indpls.-Columbus Split

Columbus, Jan. 8.

"Autumn Garden" just topped $14,000 in a split between the Murat, Indianapolis and Hartman here last week. Show did above $6,800 at former spot Dec. 31-Jan. 2.

Four performances at the Hartman (3-5) hit a gross of $7,200. Show opened slow here but built steadily. Top was $3.75, tax included.

House lights up again Friday (11) for a two-day, three performance stand of Ballet Theatre. Next dramatic attraction is "Darkness At Noon" Jan. 21-22.

'Anna' 13G, Hartford

Hartford, Jan. 8.

N. Y. City Theatre Co. presentation of "Anna Christie" squeaked out a fair $13,000 for eight shows at the New Parsons last week.

House was scaled to a $4.20 top.

Holiday Biz Mostly Blah on B'way, But 'King' $53,698, 'Banana' 53½G, Fonda $42,177, 'Joey' $20,300 in 4

With the usual exception of the top sellouts, business was generally disappointing last week. Only the fact that the stanza included the extra-price performance New Year's Eve, kept the gross for most shows from really big drops. Coupled with the traditional post-New Year slump was the apparently shaky condition of general conditions. Because the upped scale for New Year's raised the potential capacity, the percentage of gross for the week was substantially below the preceding frame.

The total gross for all 26 shows last week was $712,100, or 78% of capacity (for the corresponding week last year the total gross for 26 current shows was $681,100, or 74% of capacity, a drop of 8% from the previous week).

Week before last the total for all 25 shows was $733,100, or 85%, a jump of 8%.

Last week's sole opening, the revival of "Pal Joey," drew a solidly favorable press (with only one qualified approval), and started with standee-limit business and a steady jam at the ticket window. Closings of the last fortnight have included the limited-engagement "Don Juan in Hell" and "Wild Duck" (the former due to return in the spring), and "Glad Tidings." Schedule to fold next weekend are "Nina" and "Legend of Lovers." This week's arrivals included the limited-run "Anna Christie" and the repeat "Kiss Me, Kate."

GRECO BALLET $13,000 IN WEEK'S BALTO STAND

Baltimore, Jan. 8.

Town's lone legit stand, Ford's, opened its long-shuttered doors last week for the Jose Greco Spanish Ballet. Ringing it into the nebulous season of five "plays" promised under American Theatre Society-Theatre Guild subscription, attraction managed to build $13,000 for eight performances. There's nothing else on the immediate calendar or in the near future.

Don Swann, Jr., is resuming his theatre-in-the-round operation at the Sheraton Belvedere Hotel, opening tonight (Tues.) with Ilka Chase in an Oldie, "A Happy Thought," a rewritten version of St. John Ervine's "Mary, Mary, Quite Contrary." Star is a repeater, being the only name to draw respectable grosses in the eight weeks previously attempted.

Plays Abroad

London, Dec. 28.

Anthony Hawtrey presentation of comedy in three acts by Thornton Wilder. Directed by Andre Van Gyseghem. At Embassy Theatre, London, Dec. 27, '51; $1.50 top.

Horace Vandergelder	Raymond Lovell
Ambrose Kemper	Robin Hunter
Corneliu Hackl	Robert Eddison
Gertrude	Miriam Brickman
Ermengarde	Maureen Hurley
Melchior Stack	Martin Miller
Barnaby Tucker	Alfie Bass
Mrs. Molloy	Jessie Evans
Miss Van Huysen	Henrietta Watson
Mrs. Levi	Sophie Stewart

This old Thornton Wilder comedy was brought to the Embassy by Anthony Hawtrey for two weeks. Little attempt is made to reproduce the American atmosphere or accent, and the result is not entirely satisfactory. Parts of the play descend to a purely farcial level, Andre Van Gyseghem having directed it with a boisterous exuberance, but the main outline is maintained in its 19th century setting.

The story of the wealthy Yonkers widower courting a new wife and endeavoring to prevent his niece from marrying a penniless painter, causes a general romp all round. His two apprentices take a day off in New York and get involved in the general mixup, with one of them, in woman's dress, being mistaken for the eloping girl. The merchant, after sampling one or two prospective brides, ends in becoming enmeshed in the matrimonial net of a widow who had acted as his go-between, and the jovial milliner whom he had marked for himself pairs off with his employee. His own plans cause a change of heart and he gives consent to his niece's betrothal, when all the characters get sorted out of the general melee.

Raymond Lovell oscillates between the roles of stern guardian and elderly wooer in his usual blithe manner. Maureen Hurley acts and looks charmingly in period costume as his wayward niece, and Robin Hunter is attractive, impetuous lover. Jessie Evans makes a sprightly figure of the Irish milliner, and Sophie Stewart gives a rich performance as the designing widow. Alfie Bass makes the most of his brief opportunities as a sly clerk, and Robert Eddison is a personable young apprentice who spikes his employer's guns. Henrietta Watson conveys to a nicety the fluttering, half-wittedness of the old friend to whose charge the defiant ward has been committed, and all supporting characters are commendably portrayed. Clem.

With the unerring instinct of Vienna theatre directors for selecting the worst plays of good playwrights, the Josefstadt disinterred this late period piece by Sascha Guitry. Its tired handling of the theme of misunderstanding along the lines of "who's looney now" does little to entertain an audience without the brittle Gallic lances of the original French. It also lacks the inimitable Guiltry who wrote the leading role strictly for himself.

Play concerns the urbane psychiatrist who finds himself in the middle of a husband and wife situation with both asking him to help cure the other of mental instability. The medico, of course, cruises into an affair with the wife which is hard to understand in this case as played by Lotte Lang. The comedy is of the type which depends on puns like the upholsterer's girl assistant who consults the doctor on chair coverings while he asks double entendre questions about her sex life.

Playing is of the routine variety (Viennese style with lots of breast beating and heavy breathing) and the direction is most noticeable for its seeming absence. Anton Edthofer, lost in the Guitry role, seemed to be playing in a trance, especially opposite the noisy ebullience of Miss Lang. Latter seems to be following a recent Austrian stage tradition to earnestly copy Susanne Almassy, a local Mae West who caricatures Diamond Lil in every role. By contrast Peter Preses, who mainly directs at the Josefstadt, is quietly competent, though patently uncomfortable playing the banker husband. He doesn't seem half as crazy as those responsible for spending time and money to put this on the stage. Isra.

racial problems and to find "orderly and peaceful solutions." Three of its members are Negroes.

McKeldin's denunciation included in a letter to William C. Rogers, chairman of Maryland's Commission on Interracial Problems and Relations. The governor wrote in part:

"Discrimination between the races in theatres and other cultural institutions is both offensive and illogical. The absurdity of the practice is illustrated by the grossly inconsistent and arbitrary manner of its application both in this state and elsewhere.

"For example, in Constitution Hall in Washington, Negroes are not permitted the stage, but may and do sit in the audience without restriction. (Constitution Hall has been quietly putting an end to its racial bias policy this season.) Simultaenously, another theatre which had no objection to Negro actors on the stage, forbade Negroes in the audience. Still other places of entertainment in that city allow Negroes to appear on the stage and also to be in the audience without any type of segregation, and apparently the general public accepts the latter pattern as normal.

"A similar capriciousness is exhibited in Baltimore. Negro artists are banished from the stage at the Lyric, but members of their race may and do sit through performances without challenge or complaint from white patrons. Ford's Theatre, on the other hand, follows the converse rule. It accepts Negro actors, but restricts Negro theatregoers.

"Curiously enough, there was an interval from 1944 to 1946 when Negroes were not segregated while attending performances at Ford's. During this period no unpleasantness arose."

ing reportedly involved a loss of around $15,000 for Brandt, but the original production of the show by Courtney Burr & Malcolm Pearson had earned about $65,000 profit on Broadway on an investment of $60,000.

"Seventeen," the musical version of Booth Tarkington's old play and book, folded Jan. 5 after a week in Philadelphia, cutting short a tour that was to have continued this week in Chicago. The Milton Berle, Sammy Lambert & Bernie Foyer production, which had involved a loss of about $175,000 on its Broadway run, dropped nearly all the balance of its $210,000 investment on the abortive tour. According to a letter sent to the backers last week, the loss will be about 98% on the venture.

"Modern Primitive," Otto Preminger's production of a comedy by Herman Wouk, expired Dec. 29 after a split-week break-in date at Hartford, cancelling out a scheduled tryout in Boston. The show, which had been scheduled to open Jan. 17 at the Playhouse, N. Y., is understood to represent a loss of nearly all the $60,000 investment. An announcement that the play will be reopened after script and cast changes is discounted.

'Time' to Coast for L&Y

Chicago, Jan. 8.

Coast producers Lewis & Young have taken over the touring rights of "Happy Time" from Rodgers & Hammerstein. Show, which had been playing here for the last two months to mediocre grosses after being a hit on Broadway, had broken up New Year's Day. Russell Lewis came in to buy the physical property, and as soon as he clears with Equity, will start lining up dates.

Cast, with the possible execption of Warren Bellinger, who played the son, and Jacques Aubuchon, as one of the uncles, will be picked up in Hollywood, with a name being sought for part of the father.

ABC's 73 New Year's Eve Shows

London, Jan. 1.

As a counter attraction to New Year's Eve revels, Associated British Cinemas organized midnight galas in 72 of its theatres. Programs comprised forthcoming pictures, and in a number of cases, stageshows were added.

Of the total midnight showings, 32 were in London and the remainer in the various part of England.

Little Theatres

proximately — at least within 5% — of the season's gross.

The same is true in Pittsburgh, where the current season's budget is $148,000, and which managing director Dick Hoover is confident will be met by the sale of tickets.

Actually, between $150,000 and $200,000 worth of show business in these two cities would look very handsome to either the downtown Nixon or Hanna Theatres. But, unlike the Hanna and Nixon, the Pittsburgh and Cleveland playhouses never have a dark week. The Pittsburgh season is from late August until July 1, and the Cleveland Playhouse is more or less around the clock.

To top all this, the Pittsburgh Playhouse operates its own restaurant and bar and is a club, and entrance to the eating and drinking department is by membership only, membership meaning season subscription to tickets. Thus, the Pittsburgh Playhouse, as a club, can keep its saloon open on Sundays for members, and the whole atmosphere and environment at the theatre is social and busy, seven days a week.

All of this "little" theatre activity has taken years to develop, and many factors are involved —the growing success of these organizations.

Decline of Road

Not the least, out-of-town showmen think, is the decline of the road, and the gradual drift from the professional stage these cities to the amateur groups.

As fewer and fewer road shows play the regular legit theatres, opportunities increase for the community acting groups. As a product of time itself, these groups have won the confidence and support of their townspeople, some of whom have plenty of heavy coin to invest in something they feel good about and want to encourage.

More and more, too, the function of the community or tributary theatre, at least in Pittsburgh and Cleveland, has worked away from the arty or experimental type of play and begun to concern itself exclusively with the comedy and dramatic Broadway hits released for stock.

As Fred Burleigh, stage director at Pittsburgh, explained the situation, their theatre is totally dependent on each Broadway season to provide them with next winter's fare, which is identical to the old road, depending on last year's hits for its triumphs on tour.

In royalties paid to playwrights, Pittsburgh and Cleveland both budget $6,000 a season. Even the little Karamu Theatre in Cleveland, with 300-seat theatre, devoted exclusively to presenting plays with Negro casts, has reached an operational nut of $42,000 a year, with $4,000 paid in royalties to authors.

An important factor in the growth of these community playhouses has been the professional attention paid them by the regular dramatic critics.

Drama Critics Help

In Pittsburgh, several of the critics feel they have contributed importantly to the growth of the popular community theatre. Karl Krug, of the Sun-Telegraph, felt that hard-hitting notices have driven the local group to reach for higher acting standards.

However this may be, both Hoover and Burleigh in Pittsburgh said they felt each play they do depends entirely for its boxoffice success on the notices received in the three big dailies downtown. Several productions at the outset of this winter's season were panned, and died at the boxoffice.

Much the same is true in Cleveland, where the three major dailies attend each opening night faithfully. In fact, the Cleveland Press, a Scripps-Howard paper, has this winter created a group of Oscars for the Cleveland Playhouse acting and technical staff known as "Omars," after Omar Ranney, the drama critic. These prizes will be given at the end of this season, and will be for best leads, male and female, best supporting roles, best direction, scenery and costume design.

All of which means, of course, professional recognition of these "little" theatre groups and increasing public support and patronage.

The "little" theatre has become a heavyweight enterprise. Despite the fact that both Pitt and Cleveland theatres enjoy a non-profit legal status, and both showshops have the flavor of amateur, their actual boxoffice success would peg them bigtime, or, if not quite that yet, at least threshold to bigtime legit.

In several ways at least, both Pittsburgh and Cleveland playgroups are in reality becoming winter stock operations with resident companies, the future and success of each group depending upon the expertness of the managing director in finding and training local talent to give at least an approximation of a professional performance.

vately fearful that all will be tarred with the same brush.

Bursting of the "My L. A." stock promotion bubble serves to emphasize the point plaintively made a year ago—that Los Angeles theatre is riddled with amateurishness on many levels. The two biggest financial flops of the year can be at least partially attributed to this factor.

Three years in preparation, "My L. A." closed after three days with an estimated loss of better than $300,000. Lost the wreckage were shareholders with pieces ranging upwards from $102. Many saw their life savings literally swept away.

Slipping Attendance

Similarly, the new backers of the Greek Theatre were non-showbiz people. Gene Mann, in former years a partner and policy maker, was on the payroll solely as producer. The decisions of the backers thus must bear some of th blame for the loss of $100,000 during the ozone's legiters' 1951 operation. Another $150,000 was lost in San Francisco through the decision to present the Greek Theatre's five musicals on a "twin city" basis.

The oft-heard complaint that Los Angeles is not a good show town gained credence during the year. Sobering analysis of the record indicated that only musicals or name-bolstered road offerings are able to elicit profitable interest locally. A three-week gross of $51,000 for "The Member of the Wedding," with Ethel Waters, underlines the fears of out-of-town producers. Many skipped Los Angeles entirely during the year and the paucity of offerings continues well into 1952.

The Biltmore, local UBO outlet, has only eight weeks scheduled i the next five months, and save for a little theatre "tryout" announced for this coming week at the 255-seat Coronet, there's nothing in th offing from local producers. The recent Yule season was indicative of the downbeat locally; save for a pair of intimate theatre (150 seats) operations, only the Philharmonic Auditorium was alight—and that with the Sadler's Wells Theatre Ballet.

Shocking change in local attendance in the last two decades has worried legit circles for some time. Legit has deteriorated in inverse proportion to the mushrooming population and no remedy appears to be in sight. Whether concerted effort might alter the situation must remain a rhetorical question, since there appears to be no group in town willing to make the test. As a result, this so-called Athens of the West appears destined to become, at best, a third-class legit town, a Peoria with Palms.

N. Y. Post Ballys Winchell Series

The New York Post allocated a heavy ad budget last week to plug a single feature, its "Inside Winchell" series which started Monday (7). Daily took a full page in the N. Y. Daily News and a half-page in the N. Y. Times. While the Times ad included 14 mentions of Walter Winchell by name, the ad in the News was a teaser that didn't name the syndicated columnist of the News' rival N. Y. Mirror.

The WW series was plugged with advance house ads in the Post, color on the front page and posters on the Post's delivery trucks. The journal's heavy promotion campaign is cued to a circulation drive, results of which are already being felt, a Post spokesman said.

How long the series will be run hasn't been set yet, Post editor James Wechsler said, due to the fact that the initial installment prompted many phone calls and letters with additional info, on the basis of which articles already written are being revised and extended. It's expected the series will run for at least two to three weeks.

Series is being written with a "group journalism" concept. Staffers who have worked on it include Alvin Davis, William Dufty, Irving Lieberman, Nancy Seely, Bennett Schiff, William V. Shannon and Robert G. Spivak. Final writing and editing are handled by Wechsler and executive editor Paul Sann. Dufty read through 11 years of WW's columns to compile Winchellisms which the Post terms "WWrongos."

Editorial in the Post, which revealed that some years back it would have welcomed WW to its pages, declared: "We take him only as seriously as the size of his audience and the volume of misinformation and venom he is capable of spreading."

Shapiro, vice-president and circulation director, has been elected a director of the company. Harold B. Hawley, a member of the Look advertising sales staff, has been named advertising manager of Quick.

The board of directors of Cowles Magazines, Inc., consists of Gardner Cowles, president; John Cowles, chairman; Fleur Cowles, associate editor; Marvin C. Whatmore, general manager; S. O. Shapiro, vice president and circulation director, and John Harding, secretary and general counsel.

Joe E. Brown's L. A. Kudos

In a poll of Los Angeles Mirror readers concluded last week, Joe E. Brown was kudosed as the town's "Citizen of '51." Citation was given for the comic's extensive stints for GIs overseas and in hospitals, for his work as a member of the State Athletic Commission, and for his humanitarian efforts in general. His nearest theatrical vote-getters were Irene Dunne and George O'Brien.

Brown piled up a record in '51 as one of the most accoladed of show bizzers.

Saturday Review Switches

Saturday Review of Literature has instituted a flock of changes in title, format and officers. Although representing no change in staff, mag has set J. R. (Jack) Cominsky as publisher, and W. D. Patterson as associate publisher. (Cominsky continues as exec veepee and treasurer). Music critic Irving Kolodin has been moved up from contributing to associate editor. When Bennett Cerf takes a prolonged vacation next month, Laura Z. Hobson will write his Trade Winds column for a month.

The 28-year-old literati weekly is dropping the "of Literature" part of its tag, as no longer descriptive of the mag, though carrying the tag on the inside, on the editorial page, for a few more weeks. Mag is also cutting out its personals or "lonely hearts" ads, which it carried since 1932, claiming that since the mag's circulation went above 110,000, it's been impossible to monitor the ads properly, and they've become "susceptible to abuse." "The correspondence personals were a pleasant tradition," said the mag. "They were fun to publish and to read. But it would cease to be fun if someone got hurt."

N. Y. City Ballet History

Alfred A. Knopf has signed with Anatole Chujoy, editor of Dance News, for a book, "History of the N. Y. City Ballet." Tome, first such history of the ballet troupe, will discuss the group's beginnings from its parent company, the American Ballet, in 1934. The 90,000-word book is to be delivered in May, for October publication. Chujoy's last book was his "Dance Encyclopedia," published by Barnes in 1949.

Life magazine is also to do an extensive photo-story on the N. Y. City Ballet in February, with Winthrop Sargent writing the feature.

McGraw-Hill's High School Catalog

McGraw-Hill is buying the high school book list of Harper & Bros. this week. Purchase includes all inventory and publishing rights for about 80 titles used in the schools, covering science, math, English, social studies and modern languages.

Curtis G. Benjamin, McGraw-Hill prexy, said the Harper list dovetails with his outfit's present high school list.

MacMillan Show Biz Tomes

MacMillan has scheduled several books on American and European show business for release during the next three month.

Tomes on the roster include a biography of Sir Henry Irving by his grandson, Laurence Irving; "Reflections on the Theatre," by Jean-Louis Barrault; "Theatre World Annual" (London), written and compiled by Frances Stephens; "Theatre of Two Decades," by Audrey Williamson; and "The Italian Cinema," by Vernon Jarratt.

Ben Bodec, former VARIETY staffer, appointed exec editor of Sponsor by publisher and editor-in-chief Norman Glenn.

Radio actor Jack Lloyd is writing feature stories on singers Tony Bennett, Merv Griffin and Mel Torme for Movies magazine.

Fay and Michael Kanin, who sold their screenplay, "How High Is Up?" to 20th-Fox, rewrote it as a two-part serial for publication in Redbook mag.

February issue of Esquire has article on Madison Ave., N. Y., by Sidney Carroll, discussing the radio, book, advertising and dinery side of the street.

Frank Rasky, Sponsor mag staffer, takes over as editor of Television mag next Monday (14). Also sold couple of articles to U. S. Crime and Everywoman's mags.

Dr. Bruno Furst, director of the School of Memory and Concentration, Steinway Hall, signed with Wilfred Funke to pen another book (his fourth) on memory training.

Random House will publish the complete screen play of "The African Queen, with added text by John Huston, S. P. Eagle, Humphrey Bogart and Katharine Hepburn.

Ernest Lehman's novelette, "The Comedian," in current Cosmopolitan mag, is an acid portrait of a television comic, particularly in the latter's treatment of his brother. Berle?

Bert Bachrach's syndicated fashion column in Parade now embraces 82 top U. S. dailies. It's probably a peak for a male fashion column; it goes into the Sunday editions as part of the mag supplement.

Columbia U. Press is preparing a condensed version of its Columbia Encyclopedia, which Viking will publish under title of Columbia-Viking Desk Encyclopedia. Editorial work is being done under direction of Dr. William Bridgwater.

"The Cyclists' Raid," short story by Frank Rooney being converted into a screenplay for production by Stanley Kramer, has been selected by Martha Foley for her collection of best stories of 1951. (Houghton-Mifflin). Yarn originally appeared in Harper's Magazine.

Theatre TV

however, the present situation had been foreseen and, in fact, had actually been planned. They pointed out that the winter season is traditionally a slow one for sports, citing as proof the condensed sports pages of the key city newspapers. As a result, they said, they had planned on the current period to give them an opportunity to expand the base of their operations. When the spring and summer sports seasons roll around, they said, there will be a sufficient number of big-screen installations to provide a solid foundation for the anticipated bidding against home TV for top events.

Theatre Network TV is now attempting to line up the Sugar Ray Robinson-Carl (Bobo) Olsen middleweight title fight for big-screen houses, which would be their first in several months. Fight will be held Jan. 24 in San Francisco.

Several projects are in the works now for the first entertainment show for theatre TV but, since each of them is to be a "first," they're necessarily progressing slowly, it was said. Big-screen execs working out such projects are now attempting to line up deals with the craft and labor unions, as well as the talent guilds. It was the inability to arrive at any compromise with the unions which precluded Nathan L. Halpern's Theatre Network TV from picking up the annual Christmas pageant from the stage of Radio City Music Hall, N. Y.

Specific number of equipped houses has been difficult to determine, since exhibitors who have recently ordered equipment are reluctant to publicize that fact until they can kick off their installations with an actual event. In that way, they hope to capitalize on a fullscale local exploitation campaign. RCA, however, reported in a year-end statement that it has now equipped 50 houses. It's believed that theatres using other systems of big-screen TV would raise the total to about 65.

on the program as Jesse Kendall, wanted to know why they didn't use his right name; and a number of the listeners thought the scripted version of the fracas made them sound too tough.

Report on how the prisoners felt came from A. Michael McGee, an inmate who edits the prison paper. He said the boys were particularly impressed with the sound effects used on the show, and all got a bang out of the casting of Randall. By coincidence, the actor who played the part sounded exactly like Randall.

Only other professional criticism concerned minor details. Clark Lobb, reporter for the Salt Lake Tribune-Telegram, whose story it was, was wondering what his reception at the prison would be the next time he was there on a story, but McGee reassured him on that score. By and large, prisoners felt no resentment against him, and they plan to greet him as "The Hero" when they see him next.

have to unlearn or relearn her part from scratch, since the TV version will be so different from the legiter version.

Another paradox in the situation is that Miss Holm receives only $80 per week (Equity minimum) for the City Center presentation (and got $100 for the tryout week in Hartford), while Miss Havoc will receive the usual top guest fee for the Celanese version, or about $2,000.

Another interesting aspect of the situation is the fact that Miss Havoc followed Miss Holm into the lead role of "Affairs of State" on Broadway, at the Music Box Theatre. Producers of "Affairs" have agreed to cancel the legiter the night of Jan. 23, to permit Miss Havoc to do the video show.

SCULLY'S SCRAPBOOK

By Frank Scully

Hollywood, Jan. 8.

Am I the first, if not in history at least in 1952, to call this The Synthetic Age? And would it be a further black mark against me if I confessed that I often found the substitute better than the original? Would it be the last straw if I went the whole hog and admitted that I had met synthetic mothers who were better at the task of raising a family than some natural mothers? Or did you catch the "Welcome Travelers" show over NBC yourself on Christmas Day? If you missed it you can thank the old Scullywag for catching it for you.

For weeks Messrs. Bartlett, Lear, Cunningham, Hatos, Barton, Olson and Clapper of "Welcome Travelers" had been combing through nominations of "the family most typifying the spirit of Christmas throughout the year." They received 50,000 nominations. The final choice was up to Judges Cornelia Otis Skinner, Joe E. Brown and Wade Nichols, editor of Red Book.

They picked a Methodist minister and his wife in Boonville, a roadside stop between the redwood lumber camps and San Francisco. Here Rev. Carl Doss and his wife Helen Grigsby Doss are raising nine children. When it became clear years ago they could have none of their own, they began adopting unwanted orphans of far-flung storms. A Methodist minister, Rev. Doss certainly has proved that there is method in his ministering and that synthetic parenthood can give all the love previously believed to be the exclusive property of the original model.

What this miniature United Nations will grow up to be none can say, but so far they have brought the family fame, and by American standards, riches. Before Christmas day was over their 11-room house had been inundated with $10,000 in merchandise and $2,000 in cash.

Procter & Gamble and its cleansing products got all but snowed under as Tommy Bartlett and Bob Cunningham began rattling off the gifts for the Doss dynasty. A four-door sedan, a complete living room set, a mahogany dining room set, two complete bedroom sets, three sets of boxsprings and mattresses (to these kids who were already sleeping on a cloud), a kitchen of a range, refrigerator, dishwasher, laundromat and drier, a home-freezer, a combination TV record-player and radio, a set of sterling silver for 12, six bikes, three gym sets, five doll buggies, five treasure chests of play tools, five coaster wagons, 10 sets of Gene Autry cowboy clothes, 15 dresses, an automatic ironer, four dozen bath towels, 10 sets of snow suits, 10 sets of underwear, and $500 in Christmas toys, decorations and gadgets from a store in San Francisco. Most of the loot was lugged overland from Chicago in two trucks that broke down more often than a relapsing A.A. But the trucks arrived in Boonville by Christmas Eve. By then the place had been decorated and dolled up by the Frisco wing of this beautiful pincer movement.

No Candy But Burnt Toast Is "Chocolate Toast"

Notably, there was no candy in all this outpouring. Why? Because the Dosses never use sugar, and since all their children have strong white teeth, this may be sufficient reason for bypassing confectioner's tic. Mrs. Doss doesn't even have the children brush their teeth. She claims that children only damage their gums trying. She believes eating fruit after each meal is a much healthier kind of cleanser.

There are no starchy foods in the loot either. It would have been wasted, because this great mother doesn't believe in starchy foods. All 11 of the family drink milk three times a day. If you want to know how they can afford that much milk three times a day, the reverend will tell you. He goes to San Francisco about five times a year and buys dried milk by the barrel. This is added to canned milk and two quarts of fresh milk. Among them they consume 12 quarts a day, but this way it costs them only 96c. Much of their vegetables are raised in their own garden. For meats they hunt out the cheaper cuts.

When they started out with their first child Rev. Doss was making $900 a year. He now is pastor of two churches and by bicycling between them, manages to amass $65 a week. Each child cleans up one room. Except the baby. That leaves three of the 11 rooms for the parents to keep in order. If they come to blows she sits the belligerents on a bench. They are sentenced to sit it out for an hour—or until they begin laughing again. This seldom exceeds 10 minutes.

At one time she had four in diapers, which meant four washings a day. She had no washing machine, nor running hot water. That came on Christmas day. Tommy Bartlett told the radio audience that she looked like a college girl. From her pictures she looks prettier than a picture star. I hear Stanley Kramer has made a "firm offer" for their story, but if he says she's not the type when he comes to casting his picture he'll get his first bad notice from me, and that's a panning not to be viewed lightly.

There is some order about the Doss house. They have nine glasses, each one a different color to take care of those too young to read. Their clothes have the same color tag. Boys sleep downstairs, girls up. I don't know where they will sleep now with all this new furniture crowding every corner. In the stable, probably.

The oldest, Don, is 9, then come four, all aged 6. Then come two aged 5. Then one aged 4 and the youngest, Alex, 2. The boys go up like stairsteps, but the girls are all the same size. They are mixed—American, Filipino, Hawaiian-Japanese, Chinese-Japanese, Indian-German-French-Irish, Mexican-Indian, Japanese-Mexican and the baby, Korean-Japanese. Part of this mixture is due to the fact that children from elsewhere are easier to adopt. California is toughest in its conditions but most states are pretty bad. It took the Dosses three years to prove to orphanages that they were fit to raise one unwanted child, and another three years to get their second. Once Mrs. Doss got $3 in cash for a Christmas present. She spent it for postage stamps and began dunning child-agencies for more children. By now practically all resistance has broken down. They suspect they could get a 100% Aryan by just lifting a little finger. "But we want to love each child," she says. "We want a normal family, not an institution."

Being Biblical students they knew the good book said: "God hath created of one blood all nations of men" and that all this nonsense about insisting that children must be a perfect match with the adopting parents in race, nationality and religion was stretching thinks a bit.

All-Color Production

These wonder parents agree that racial differences are superficial, a matter of pigmentation mostly, that social differences are learned, not inherited, and that even anthropologists have got around to agreeing with the Biblical premise.

Once a year the Dosses get out a paper of their own called The Doss Digest. It is mailed from Box 73, Methodist Parsonage, Booneville, Cal. The last one told of the whole family going to San Francisco to meet two orphans from the Orient. Two minutes before plane time they were told that the plane they were looking for would come in at another airport a mile down the road. They streaked out of there and reached the right ramp just in time.

They recognized the children from pictures. One was five-year-old Elaine of Japanese-French-Irish ancestry, the other was four-year-old Diane, with a background that included Chinese-Hawaiian-Indian-German-French and Irish extraction. But she looked mostly Hawaiian.

"I knelt down to their level," wrote Mrs. Doss, "'Hello, girls,' I said. 'I'm your new Mummy.' They hesitated and then Elaine smiled shyly, dimples flashed in her cheeks and she said, 'Hello Mummy, I'm Elaine.' Diane threw her arms tight around me and the searching look was gone from her eyes. 'I'm Diane, Mummy,' she said with a slight lisp. 'Are you really our very own Mummy, Really and always,' I hugged them both, assuring them that I would indeed be their very own Mummy for ever and always."

Now isn't this better than just wishing you a Happy New Year?

H'wood Back to Paying High Prices For Legits in Shift to 'Big' Pictures

Hollywood's interest in high-priced legit rights, which flagged during the past three years under the sagging b.o., has taken a sharp upturn in recent months. Switch reflects the full realization of a comparatively new economic manifestation—the big payoff is in the big pix.

As a result, in addition to such recent buys as "Remains to Be Seen" and "The Number," there's hot interest currently in "Paint Your Wagon," and Broadway may also see its first pre-production deal with Hollywood in several years.

Metro and Warner Bros., particularly the former, are attempting to land "Wagon." Price is said to be between $225,000 and $250,000. M-G producer Arthur Freed has been in New York huddles with Alan Jay Lerner, who wrote the book and lyrics. "Wagon" would be a natural tieup for the two, since they were associated last year in Metro's highly-successful "American in Paris."

M-G is also the possibility for entering into a pre-production deal. Show is "One Bright Day," by Sigmund Miller, which Howard Lindsay and Russel Crouse will present next month. Under a pre-

CARLSEN SAGA INSPIRES TUNES ON 'ENTERPRISE'

Tin Pan Alley latched onto the heroic saga of freighter captain Henrik Kurt Carlsen with its usual speed last week. On the same day (10) that the captain's boat went down, King Records released a cut of a new tune, "The Skipper of the Flying Enterprise," made by the Alan Holmes orch. The major diskers are rushing folk artists' versions of the same number.

Tune was originally written by Larry Clinton and Herb Hendler when it looked as if the freighter would be brought to harbor safely. A few hours after the ship went down, a revision of the lyrics was made and King pressed and shipped copies to disk jockeys. Other tunes about the Flying Enterprise have also been making the rounds of the diskers since the event. Leeds is publishing the Clinton-Hendler opus.

Skelton Sluffs Radio For More Pix, TV Time

Hollywood, Jan. 15.

Red Skelton is "kissing off" radio after this season. Comic says the strain of pictures, teevee and radio is too much of a load and now that he's pressing Milton Berle for the rating leadership wants to devote more time to his videopus.

At season's outset he told Freeman Keyes, his manager-packager, that this would be his last and was disappointed at the inability of CBS to sell his show to a single sponsor. Net put him on the market on a one-shot basis.

See Phonevision Possibly Milked By Exhib Scheme

Chicago, Jan. 15.

Number of Chicago film exhibitors, in a move to forestall any commercial success for Zenith Radio's proposed Phonevision, are reported to have been quietly registering the telephone numbers of their theatres in their own names. If and when Zenith gets a commercial go-ahead for PV, the exhibs hope they'll be able to dial the operators to hook them in on the circuit and then transmit the PV signals onto their fullsize theatres screens, for which they'll charge a flat boxoffice scale of 25c. Zenith, they claim, will never be able to buck such competition.

While it's naturally anticipated that Zenith will not take such goings-on sitting down, the exhibs contend that as "private citizens" they'll have a perfectly legal right to pick up the PV signals off the circuit and treat them in any way they desire. They point out that Dropping of Roger Rico this week as co-star of the Broadway company of "South Pacific," followed the singer's refusal to agree to a settlement of his contract. With George Britton, understudy, now singing the role permanently, the matter is apparently slated to be settled by Actors Equity, possibly after arbitration. Rico said Monday night (14) that he intends suing the management, but Equity rules compel arbitration of all disputes.

NBC, ABC DROP CUFFO STUMPING

By GEORGE ROSEN

NBC and ABC this week effected one of the major reversals of policy on political campaigning—a switch that may not only have widespread repercussions before election time rolls around and cue some D. C. eyebrow-raising, but may well determine the effectiveness of TV's impact in winning cohorts and influencing voters.

For the first time in network annals, effective immediately, both NBC and ABC are eliminating the practice of offering cuffo time to candidates before the national political conventions. From here on in, it's strictly cash on the line for the use of NBC's and ABC's extensive video facilities, which embrace many of the major outlets throughout the country. In the case of ABC, immediate commercial sponsorship extends also into its AM facilities.

The reversal practically renders impotent the broadcasting standards promulgated by NBC last October when the network high-command ruled: "When NBC facilities are used for presentations by or on behalf of a legally qualified candidate for public office, equal opportunity in the use of such facilities is afforded to all other legally qualified candidates for the same office."

Similarly it's ABC's boast that

London, Jan. 15.

Noel Coward has turned down an offer of $7,000 for one TV appearance for NBC in America.

He was also offered a suite of rooms and all his meals to play four weeks at the Waldorf-Astoria at $6,000 per, and given a concession to do one show nightly instead of the usual two. He also nixed this.

NBC, CBS Webs Make Strong Bids For 'Caesar,' 'Antony' TV 1-Shots

Both NBC and CBS have initiated overtures with Laurence Olivier and Vivien Leigh to bring their "Caesar and Cleopatra"-"Antony and Cleopatra" brace of legit attractions to television on successive nights. It's reported the competitive bidding for the TV coup has been waxing hot and heavy, and that both webs have tentative clients wrapped up in the event of an okay from the stars and their manager.

NBC is setting its sights on the dramatic entries as its major contribution to its "Operations Frontal Lobes." Web figures that, sans intermissions, the plays can be telescoped into possibly 90 minutes or two hours at the most of running time.

For the occasion, the network would preempt choice nighttime segments, with refunds to the regular sponsors. Thus it's figured a sponsorship deal for the Olivier-Leigh attractions would entail a minimum of $100,000 for each night. (Last year, it's recalled, NBC and a prospective client dangled as high as $125,000 for a one-night pickup of "South Pacific," but Richard Rodgers and Oscar Hammerstein 2d nixed the offer.)

Plan would be to pick up the two

TV Exhibs Await Theatre Guild's Series of Legits

Theatre television exhibitors greeted this week the news that the Theatre Guild is progressing rapidly on plans to produce a series of legit shows for big-screening on an experimental basis. With a lack of major sports events to light their big-screen installations in the last month or so, exhibs have found it virtually impossible to make use of their equipment. Hence, they eye the Guild plans of staging a show every two or three weeks as a major step towards solving their programming problems.

Lawrence Langner, co-director of the Guild, told Variety yesterday (Tues.) that the theatre TV plans are still in the talking stage but that the project should kick off by spring. United Paramount Theatres execs are working with the Guild in an advisory capacity.

According to Langner, the line-up of shows to be staged for big-

Thud heard here last week was WDAF-TV dropping the Monday night Arthur Godfrey Talent Scouts program, immediately following a controversial broadcast on Jan. 7. The decision ends the use of a program from which the station has received many complaints, according to Dean Fitzer, general manager.

Yanks' Perspective on Free (?) French Radio; Strictly Rue de la Payola

By JIM CARHARTT & NICKY WINTER

Cannes.

Because we both had nothing worse to do, we've spent two weeks listening to French radio. If this fact becomes widely known, we will be eligible for the Croix de Guerre with two palms, each of which may may be placed firmly over an ear to prevent such a horrible thing from recurring.

But you've got to say one thing about French radio. At least we've got to, since we're guests of the country. So we'll say one thing about French radio: there's a lot of it. And it's very enthusiastic.

Take the commercials: Please take the commercials. In the States, if the man who pays a lot of dough to bring you the best possible entertainment is silly enough to expect you to buy his product in return, he asks you to buy it. Nicely, politely, cajolingly the announcer tells you that, really, in all fairness, you ought to try this product. Just once, of course. And if you don't like it, you get your money back. They may pout about it, and consider you something less than a gentleman, but you do get your money back.

This is not how it is on the French radio. Here you are ordered to buy something. Not tomorrow when the stores are open. But now, right now, get out of bed, put on your pants, go down to the corner grocery store, break down the door and steal some Duval's Macaroni. Never mind if you get arrested. You're lucky to be allowed to go to jail for stealing Duval's Macaroni, because they serve just that in every French jail, and besides it's well worth going to jail just to taste Duval's.

Commercials

And there is none of this if-you-don't-like-it-you-get-your-dough-back stuff. Brother, if you don't like Duval's, kill yourself. Life, the announcer says, will not be worth living for you if you don't like Duval's. In fact, there's every chance that he personally will come 'round and set fire to your house if you don't. That's about the way French commercials seem to run. And they get the same effect in singing commercials, only it's more violent set to music. "You want soft, luxuriant hair, don't you?", booms a baritone. "Of course you want soft, luxuriant hair," carols a tenor. (Both of these voices sound kinda bald to us, but no matter.) "In that case," they both sing with full orchestra, "use so-and-so's brilliantine." If you don't have soft, luxuriant hair after 10 minutes of brushing your hair with this brilliantine, to blazes with you. You can dip your head in boiling bacon grease, for all the tenor and baritone care. And if you think all this is easy to express in 16 bars, just try it.

Then there is this big program every Thursday night. At least, we think it's on a Thursday. Any discrepancy between the day we name and the actual broadcast may be attributed to the stubborn refusal of the French to name the days of the week in English. Anyway, this program is called a Grand Concourse. This has nothing to do with The Bronx. In French, it means a contest. Yes, we know there's a gag in there somewhere, but you work it out, will you?

The contest is run by somebody named Zappy Max. (Don't be silly. How could we make up a name like

Detroit, Jan. 15.

A panicky public caused WJBK-TV to throw out a feature western and declare it "evidently unfit for television use."

The final scene of the film "From Texas to Bataan," included a news bulletin broadcast over a rancher's radio which said: "We interrupt this program to bring you a special news bulletin—Pearl Harbor has just been bombed."

The switchboards jammed immediately at all Detroit radio stations and newspapers. One station's news editor even called the FBI to check on possible Red sabotage before the source could be traced and the panic subsided.

WJBK-TV promptly shipped the film back to its distributor and informed its frightened public that the 1942 western had no bearing on current events.

Prospects Brighter For Sponsored TV And Radio in Britain

London, Jan. 15.

Although prospects for the introduction of commercial radio and TV in Britain are far from bright, they are not quite as dim as they were a year ago when the Beveridge Commission recommended a total thumbs down to sponsored broadcasting of any kind. Two things have happened in the year to raise the hopes of the political minority that voted in favor of commercialism in the commission's findings.

In order of importance, these developments are: (1) the change of government; and (2) the austerity program which may make it impossible for the British Broadcasting Corp. to meet demands for increased TV time.

The Beveridge report was intended as a guide for the government in framing its policy for a renewal of the BBC charter which expired Dec. 31 last. In the summer, the then Labor government indicated in broad terms its acceptance of the main provisions, but also threatened a 15% expenditure cut in view of the strain of the defense program.

With the return to power of the Conservatives, the introduction of the new BBC charter has been deferred for six months to give the Cabinet time to frame its own policy. Meantime, a number of Conservatives who came out in favor of sponsored broadcasting during the last Commons debate, now have formed a Parliamentary committee to agitate for the introduction of this.

For obvious reasons, any form of TV sponsorship would have to be on the most limited scale. At present there is only one telecasting channel. Consequently, to provide other wave bands for advertisers would make the million sets now in use out of date. The alternative would have to be the utilization of time not at present taken up by the BBC, which normally has about two hours at night and one hour in the afternoon.

Since the extension of the TV

Film Execs Outline Plans For Cantor-'Israel' Fete

Film executives met Monday (14) in New York to outline industry plans to help celebrate Eddie Cantor's 60th birthday, at a dinner being held at the Hotel Commodore, N.Y., Jan. 31, to spearhead the $500,000,000 "Bonds for Israel" drive. Cantor will be guest of honor.

Heading the film contingent is Spyros Skouras, president of 20th-Fox. Admission to the dinner is by purchase of a $1,000 bond. The drive, since its inception in May, 1951, has brought in cash or pledges exceeding $100,000,000.

Grand Ballet Keeps to '51 $50,000 'Legal' Loss Limit To Avoid $1,000,000 Snag

The Grand Ballet de Monte Carlo, owned and operated by Marquis George de Cuevas and his wife, Margaret, granddaughter of John D. Rockefeller, managed to stay within the prescribed $50,000 limit on losses in operations last year. The de Cuevases thus avoided the possibility of having to pay back to the U. S. Government well over $1,000,000 in tax deductions, plus penalties.

Their troupe, which has been playing in Europe and North Africa all during '51, finished the calendar year "well within the stipulated limit," according to the management, ending up with a loss of "around $25,000." In the previos three years, the de Cuevases had expended $987,500 on the company, half of that in 1950. (Troupe dropped $150,000 alone in a trip to America for a four-week engagement at the Century, N. Y., in November, 1950).

The Grand Ballet is a limited partnership, set up in N. Y. with the marquesa as owner of 87½% of the net profits of the partnership. Under the setup, the de Cuevases have been able to deduct the troupe's losses, which they financed, from their personal income. Tax law forbids such deduction in a fifth year, if the company has sustained losses during the four years previous, unless the loss is under $50,000. This is on the probable theory that a company dropping coin so consistently would have to be classified as a "hobby" rather than a profit-geared business. The de Cuevases would also have forfeited the deductions of over $1,000,000 taken for the previous four years, plus penalties.

It was necessary for the marquis to curtail expenditures sharply and cut down on his usual lavish way of operation. Bookings and touring were carefully watched. Troupe started touring in February, '51, with dates in Spai , France, England and elsewhere. All but one were guarantees, and troupe came out okay on that one, too.

Troupe finished the year with a week in Tunis, and began 1952 with a week in Algiers. After a couple of weeks' vacation, it goes to Cannes for the month of February, and to Belgium in March. Company, though started in Monte Carlo and playing Europe steadily (except for the brief, costly N. Y. visit in 1950), is an American troupe, with its owners U. S. citizens, and most of its lead dancers (Marjorie Tallchief, George Skibine, Rosella Hightower, etc.) Americans.

With other ventures into the dance field in the last decade, the de Cuevases have spent about $2,000,000 backing ballet. They shelled out about $800,000 in 1944 in a brief eight-week season with Ballet International at the International Theatre, N. Y.

Kelly's Appendectomy During Paris Talent O.O.

Paris, Jan. 15.

Gene Kelly, in town to hunt talent for his upcoming Metro starrer, "Invitation to the Dance," cancelled his search following a sudden appendectomy. He had also planned to visit Rome.

In addition, Kelly has a major role in Metro's "The Devil Makes Three," which producer Richard Goldstone expects to roll shortly in Germany. It's believed that in the event Kelly is not ready in time for the start the picture will be shot around him.

No One-Way Street

The other day some 65 Hollywood personalities returned from the four corners of the globe and arduous missions to entertain American GI's in Korea, Africa, Europe, Alaska and the Caribbean area. They willingly sacrificed time, effort and comfort, not to mention their Christmas and New Year's holidays with families and friends. They did a job and they did it well—and there's been no big industry hoop-la about it.

On Jan. 24 there will be released simultaneously in all U. S. theatres and Army and Navy posts, here and abroad, 18,400 prints of the 1952 March of Dimes film, "You'll Never Walk Alone," produced by Metro, which has done the job for the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis for the past 12 years. This year the film stars Howard Keel, who contributed his tim and effort; was produced and directed for the tenth year by Harry Loud, and its title song is by Richard Rodgers and Oscar Hammerstein, who donated its usage. It's an excellent, moving short, probably the best in the entire terrific money-raising series, but here again there will be no particular effort on the part of the film business in general, and Metro in particular, to take credit for a fine job in behalf of the community.

And there are numerous other instances, such as Defense Bond drives, blood bank appeals, Red Cross emergencies, and national and local fund-raising benefits for which Hollywood manpower, resources and know-how have been continuously solicited and found readily available. Yesterday, George Murphy, president of the Hollywood Coordinating Committee, released a statement to the effect that film personalities made 2,931 free appearances during 1951, double the number made during the previous year. This is not being advertised by the film industry and its people.

But it hasn't been noted that pressure groups are posting pickets urging people to see the pictures containing personalities involved in public welfare work. Neither the Wage Earners Committee, nor any other group of self-professed patriots, demagogues and bluenoses can be expected to voice commendation of the industry, since they know that being nice to Hollywood will not afford them any publicity, but smears, slander and defamation of Hollywood gets them headlines, or at least some attention.

But it's just this calloused indifference by pressure groups to the whole truth about Hollywood, and their cynical disregard of the truly remarkable patriotism and civic-consciousness of film companies and film people, that has finally aroused the motion picture industry to the point where it will make its first concerted fight against crackpot attacks and indiscriminate vilification.

Kramer Seeks Civic Group's Aid As Pic Biz Backs Stand Against Smears

Hollywood, Jan. 15.

Stanley Kramer called on the Hollywood Junior Chamber of Commerce to support his $1,000,000 libel suit against the Wage Earners Committee and voiced a warning that irresponsible attacks on the film business by pressure groups have developed into a "serious community issue as well as an industry problem."

Speaking at the chamber's annual Distinguished Service Award dinner, the producer of film "Death of a Salesman," which had been picketed by members of the WEC, urged that the subject be taken up at the next chamber meeting, adding: "Remember, any person sitting in this room tonight could be attacked irresponsibly."

"The motion picture industry," he said, "must have a yardstick by which it can clean house, but it must be a yardstick set up by responsible people."

He could have prevented the picketing of "Death of a Salesman," he said, if he had agreed to let WEC set up its own yardstick. He also declared that the group attacked Fredric March even though a retraction of the charges originally made against the actor was on file in the WEC offices. The shadowy figures in that organization, he declared, will soon be brought out into the open.

Backed By Industry

Kramer's libel suit was promised hearty support throughout the film industry. The major studios offered their backing, and so did the Independent Motion Picture Producers Assn., the Society of Independent Motion Picture Producers and civic and community groups. Joint statement by the two indie groups was:

"We commend to the fullest Stanley Kramer's forthright action. The actions of such irresponsible pressure groups have brought great harm to the motion picture industry — an industry which actually should be praised for its long and successful fight against the Communists who attempted to infiltrate and control its product. We urge all branches of the industry to get behind Stanley Kramer in this fight. We are offering the legal talent and other facilities of our organization to him."

Dore Schary said: "Good for

This is to be done without pecuniary profit to the corporation or its officers. Principal office of the Foundation is to be located in New York City. Directors shall not be less than five or more than nine. Directors listed are George Abbott; his daughter, Judith Abbott Clark; attorney Edward E. Colton; Carl Fisher, and Isabel Juergens, Abbott's sister. Supreme Court Justice Irving L. Levey approved the certificate of incorporation. Dr. Lewis A. Wilson, State Commissioner of Education, consented to its filing.

No Legit Angle

According to Abbott, there is no theatrical significance to the Foundation. It is simply intended to help young people in all fields to get an education. The producer explains that since he had to work his way through school and college, he's sympathetic to youths in the same predicament today.

Abbott indicated that the fund would be relatively small to start, but that he plans to add to it regularly, with the amounts to be determined largely by his tax situation from time to time.

U, Decca Boards Name Committees, Survey Co., to Appraise Merger

Preston Davie, chairman of a committee of Universal board members named to look into the feasibility of a merger with Decca Records, said yesterday (Tues.) that he personally felt there was sufficient "community of interest" between the two companies to make the move advantageous.

Davie added, however, that Ebasco Service Corp., an appraisal outfit, had been hired by both U and Decca to make a study of the two companies to determine the practicality of merger and how it would best be accomplished.

A committee has also been named by the Decca board for the same purpose. Until the two committees separately and then together go over all the facts and figures which have been made available to them on both companies, and until the Ebasco report is in and has been studied, Davie emphasized, no decision will be made.

There's a possibility, he pointed out, that everyone will agree with his off-the-cuff opinion concerning the "community of interest," but that fiscal studies would show a merger to be bad tax-wise or in other ways. Davie is a retired attorney and a vet member of the U board.

There may be a possibility, he said, that the two companies might best work closely together without an actual merger. Davie asserted that no plans at all had been for-

Weeks of July 7, 21 (GOP, Dem Powwows) Seen Affecting B.O.

Little note has been taken by pix companies of the weeks of next July 7 and July 21, which loom as the most disastrous b.o. wise. The political conventions are set for those periods, and with the Republican and Democratic powwows slated for televising, it's anticipated that a goodly portion of the population will be glued to their TV sets.

As far as could be ascertained, no company has arranged its release schedule with the conventions in mind. Nor would any company say that it would withhold its lesser product for distribution about that time, since no pic exec would admit that he had a weak sister on his slate.

One theatre exec discounted the effect of the convention on the b.o., feeling that the proceedings in general were boring and would not hold the viewers for a great length of time on hot summer nights. He said it was quite conceivable that theatres equipped with large-screen TV might pipe in a part of the event, especially when it got down to the decisive moment of a nomination.

In general, pic execs felt that it was too early to make any plans, and indicated that they would wait and see what happens.

N. Y.'s Jungle Aura, As 2 So. African Pix Bow

New York, which it is believed has never before seen a picture completely localed in South Africa, is about to get two of them within a couple weeks of each other. Coincidence goes even farther in that they both centre about the same native area in Johannesburg—although treatment of the subject matter is diametrically opposite.

The films are "Cry, the Beloved Country" and "The Magic Garden." Former, a very close adaptation of Alan Paton's bestselling novel, was produced under Sir Alexander Korda's banner and is being released in the U. S. by Lopert Film Distributing Corp. "Garden," produced, written and directed by Donald Swanson, an Englishman, is being released by Arthur L.

Political Squeeze

With England's dollar deficit rapidly growing, American industryites figure their greatest danger is getting caught in a political squeeze. They are fearful that if Britain does not get the financial support it is seeking in Washington, it may cut off dollar payments for films as a means of dramatizing its need.

Yank distribs have been able to thaw virtually all of their earnings during the past few years via fairly favorable agreements that allow more than half to be converted directly to dollars and the rest used for various purposes. Present pact runs until Oct. 1.

Greene Drops RKO Tally Fraud Claim; Bd. Reelects Mgt.

Dissident RKO Theatres' stockholders group will not press the claim it made last week that it was short-counted in winning only two places on the six-man board. Decision to abandon further battling was indicated by the appearance of the two minority members, David J. Greene and A. Louis Oresman, to take their places on the new directorate at its first meeting yesterday (Tues.).

Board session, held at RKO Theatres homeoffice in New York, was for the purpose of electing officers. As expected, the management, headed by prez Sol A. Schwartz, was renamed.

Isidor J. Kresel, counsel for the minority group, claimed following the stockholders meeting in Dover, Del., last Thursday (10) that disputed ballots entitled the group, headed by Greene, to at least three directors. He threatened court action.

After considering possibilities, it is understood the Greene contingent came to the conclusion that the best interests of the shareholders lay in discontinuing further battling. They felt that litigation would merely use up time of RKO execs that might be better spent in company operation.

Greene group claimed victory in the heated two-month contest for proxies in that it got a greater number of public votes than did the management. Series of appeals which both Greene and the Schwartz management sent out re-

Capra to India as U.S., Pix Rep to Festival

Hollywood, Jan. 15.

Frank Capra leaves for Washington Thursday (17), thence to Bombay to rep the American film industry and function as official delegate of the U. S. State Department at the International Film Festival Jan. 24-Feb. 27.

A number of American films will compete with English, French, Italian, Indian, Chinese and Russian entries.

Reed's N.Y. Feb. Visit

British producer-director Carol Reed is due in New York from London the first week of February. He is coming over for publicity in connection with his latest pic, "Outcast of the Islands" (Lopert), which expected to open on Broadway in February.

Reed will be in the U. S. about two weeks. He'll start production preparation on his return for another pic under the Sir Alexander Korda banner.

NO OPTIMISM ON '52 REPEAT

American film industry, which four years ago was viewing its foreign markets with complete despair, is believed to have received more coin from abroad in 1951 than any previous year in picture history. Foreign managers are not optimistic, however, that they can repeat in 1952.

Complete count is not in as yet, of course, for the 12 months ending Dec. 31. But, from preliminary tallies, it appears likely that the $120,000,000 record rung up by the majors in 1947 was exceeded.

Amount by which it was topped may be even more than the figures will indicate on the surface, because of a bookkeeping change made by most companies in the interim. Back in '47, before currency freezes were a large-size problem, all earnings abroad were taken up on the books in New York as income. Now, most companies record only actual funds received in dollars in this country.

Film b.o.s were fantastically good in most of the world during 1951. Prospects are that they will continue so. Attendance is not what's worrying the majors' foreign chiefs; the big problem is the

Hollywood, Jan. 15.

Report on the operations abroad of the State Department's International Motion Picture Division was made to the Motion Picture Industry Council's manpower committee by James B. Fainchey, foreign production staff topper. Fainchey, who has recently returned from a world-wide survey of the State Department's overseas production and distribution activities, outlined to the group the work being done by film industry manpower in various sections of the world.

Fainchey commended the pic industry for its cooperation and asked the reps of the producer associations, guilds and craft unions for continued support of

Johnston Seen Giving All to MPAA After N. Y., Miami Exec Huddles

Concentrated round of sessions which Eric Johnston and his staff held with groups of company execs at their various homeoffices last week left the clear impression that the Motion Picture Assn. of America prexy will have to ditch all other ideas, political or otherwise, and concentrate on the domestic problems facing the industry.

Johnston and his principal aide, Joyce O'Hara, are understood to be getting another feel of the down-to-work attitude of the MPAA's dues-paying members at a huddle in Miami Beach which started yesterday (Tues.) and continues today.

Sessions in New York are believed unique. Johnston and his staff went to the offices of seven different companies and sat down with their topofficers for a discussion of what they think the Association ought to be doing. While the talks were off the record, from what could be pieced together from the various companies, it appears that they considered the

Hollywood, Jan. 15.

The State Department has appointed Frank McCarthy as a consultant and set him as a member of the executive reserve. He was Assistant Secretary of State under James F. Byrnes.

New duties call for him to make occasional Washington trips. Meanwhile, he carries on at 20th, where he's to produce "Assignment Stockholm" and "Singlehanded."

'H'wood 9' Suits A Major Item For 'Biggies' Fla. Meet

Industry policy on further settlement of suits by the "Hollywood Nine" is reportedly a major item of discussion at the conclave of company prexies that began in Miami Beach yesterday (Tues.). Also reportedly on the agenda are discussions of ways and means of reducing the quantity of antitrust suits being thrown at the majors by exhibs.

General sessions are continuing today (Wed.). They are also preliminary to a meeting with James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, on a new studio pact with the AFM. Except for some presidents who are vacationing in Miami Beach, company toppers will be back in New York, Friday (18).

Eric Johnston, Motion Picture Assn. of America prez, was on hand yesterday for the talks. With him

B'way's Unexpected Hits As Kramer Pic Trailers: Boyer, Harris, '4-Poster'

Broadway is proving something of an unexpectedly sock trailer for pic producer Stanley Kramer. He has bought a play and signed two people for top roles in other pix and in each case they've unexpectedly proved to be Broadway hits before the films have been released.

Play is "Fourposter" and the pair of players are Charles Boyer and Julie Harris. Kramer acquired the Jan de Hartog legiter last spring, before Jessica Tandy and Hume Cronyn were even considering it for Broadway. They tried it out in strawhatters during the summer and it was so successful they brought it to the Stem in the fall, where it has proved a smash—

National Boxoffice Survey

Trade Tapers Off; 'Quo Vadis' Back in First Spot, 'Dreams' Strong 2d, 'Dawn' 3d, 'Spy' 4th

Current session at nation's film boxoffices is a typical post-holiday one, with biz generally sagging. Oversupply of holdovers and extended-runs naturally is contributing to the downbeat, along with bad weather in some sections and transportation strikes in Baltimore and Toronto.

"Quo Vadis" (M-G) is resuming its leadership at the wickets after dipping to second position a week ago. It will pile up over $225,000 in some nine key cities covered by VARIETY—this stanza. A strong second is "See You in My Dreams" (WB) although it's largely on holdover.

"Decision Before Dawn" (20th) is perking up to capture third place while "Favorite Spy" (Par) is running almost neck-'n'-neck with it to wind up fourth. Fifth money goes to "Westward the Women" (M-G).

"Wild Blue Yonder" (Rep) will finish in sixth spot, with "Distant Drums" (WB), which had been going great guns the two previous weeks, is seventh. "Detective Story" (Par) is capturing eighth position although it has finished most of its key first-run dates.

"Blue Veil" (RKO), "Weekend With Father" (U) and "Flame of Araby" (U) round out the top 12 list. "Lavender Hill Mob" (U) and "I Want You" (RKO) are runner-up pix.

"Greatest Show on Earth" (Par) is standout new entry, with big session at N. Y. Music Hall and prospects of an exceptionally long run. "Another Man's Poison" (UA), big in Frisco, shapes good in Pittsburgh but mild in L.A. "Model and Marriage Broker" (20th) looms as a potential winner, being big in N. Y., okay in Toronto and Washington, and fairish in Balto. "Cimarron Kid" (U) started out good in K. C., preem date. "Boots Malone" (Col), fast in Cleveland, shapes okay in Cincinnati.

"American in Paris" (M-G), which has nearly finished its initial batch of runs principal keys, is adding substantial coin this stanza. "I Want You" (RKO) is mainly holdover or extended-run currently on first test engagements.

"Strange Door" (U) shapes ice in D. C. "On Dangerous Ground" (RKO), good Buffalo, is rated weak in Philly. "Death of Salesman" (Col), big in N. Y., looks mild in L. A. "The Well" (UA) looms smash in Chi. "Bright Victory" (U), getting some new dates, is trim in Detroit and solid in Pitt.

Par Pix Co., B'way Par Theatre Just 'Strangers'; Other Upsets in Pattern

With the traditonal pattern of first-run bookings in N. Y. largely upset over the past year, it's now becoming clear which of the town's showcases and which film companies now are more or less "going steady."

Paramount Pictures and the Par Theatre, once members of the same corporate family, are behaving like total strangers. Film outfit is giving Brandt's Mayfair and Globe a big play with a recent sked of seven pix at the two spots. Par Theatre, where a Par film is now rare, has seven bookings lined up, four of them from RKO, two from Columbia and one from Warners. RKO product over recent months has been going mainly to the Par house and the Criterion, Charles Moss operation. Criterion, where RKO's release of Samuel Goldwyn's "I Want You" is current, follows this with the same distrib's "At Sword's Point" and a reissue of Walt Disney's "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs."

RKO began its romance with the Criterion last summer when a projected deal with the Mayfair for Disney's "Alice in Wonderland" fell through as Brandt balked at the terms demanded. Film company switched to the Criterion and since has been using that house and the Par for its N. Y. showcasing.

Columbia has a non-exclusive tieup with City Investing's Astor and Victoria.

Loew's State has been open to a variety of product, including Lippert's "For Men Only," which opened yesterday (Tues.). Metro-affiliated house also has had a number of Universal pix. Warners confines its top product to the

MPAA, TOA Lay Plans In D.C. for Hearings On Theatre Television

Washington, Jan. 15.

Attorneys and engineers for Motion Picture Assn. of America and Theatre Owners of America completed two days of meetings at MPAA headquarters here Saturday (12) to lay plans for the big theatre TV hearings before the Federal Communications Commission beginning Feb. 25. The organizations will be ready to go ahead on the scheduled date, a spokesman said, but recognize the possibility that the Commission may be unable to proceed if its deliberations attendant to the lifting of the TV freeze, expected in mid-February, are still in progress.

Approximately 50 witnesses, including the biggest names in the motion picture industry, have been tentatively lined up to present the case for special theatre TV frequencies. Among them will be Eric Johnston, head of MPAA; Mitchell Wolfson, head of TOA; Spyros P. Skouras, 20th-Fox prexy; Si Fabian, head of Fabian Theatres, and various Hollywood figures.

Representing MPAA as special counsel on theatre TV were Vincent Welch and James L. Fly. Frank H. McIntosh and Andrew Inglis represented the association as engineering counsel. Marcus Cohn and Stuart Bailey represented TOA as legal and engineering counsel, respectively.

Sitting in at the sessions from MPAA were Joyce O'Hara, exec assistant to Johnston; Ed Cooper, new TV director for the assn.; Sidney Schreiber and Taylor Mills. Johnston sat in for part of the meetings.

Los Angeles, Jan. 15.

Charles P. Skouras will continue as president of National Theatres until Dec. 31, 1961, under a seven-year extension of his present contract, which runs to Dec. 31, 1954. Pact calls for a yearly salary of $130,000, plus a percentage of the circuit's profits, with the total annual amount limited to $490,000.

Under the new arrangement Skouras will remain as head of the theatre chain after the divorcement from 20th-Fox next June, while his brother Spyros will remain as head of the production and distribution company.

Bernard Smith East On 'Guest' Huddles

Paramount producer Bernard Smith arrived in New York from the Coast last Saturday (12) for a week's stay. He's east to huddle with Ruth and Augustus Goetz on the picture adaptation they're prepping of Henry Handel Richardson's novel, "Maurice Guest."

Pic is the initialer on Smith's slate. He's former story editor at the studio. Also on his schedule is a filmization of F. Scott Fitzgerald's "Babylon Revisited."

Theatre Guild Maps Distrib of Own Plays For Theatre Video

Pointing up the probability that a number of theatre television entrepreneurs may soon be competing to line up events for big-screen exhibitors, the Theatre Guild, in mapping its own plans to produce a series of legit plays to be made available to theatre TV, has decided it will also handle distribution of the shows. Guild shows will be the first emanating from the New York area which have not been booked through Nathan L. Halpern's Theatre Network TV.

While the Guild's method of selling its shows to exhibitors in all parts of the country with big-screen installations has not been finalized yet, it's presumed the legit organization has decided to bypass TNT on the assumption that there's no need to cut an outside agency in for a share of the profits. In the same way it's believed that 20th-Fox will handle sales of its theatre TV shows when its long-pending plans for big-screen extravaganzas get underway. Another indie group, comprising California exhibs and realtors, has been set up on the Coast to handle sale of theatre TV events to exhibs in its area.

Halpern, as the first in the business, has lined up all the top sports events carried by theatres during the last year, except for a few college football games tied down for its own theatres last fall by the United Paramount circuit. TNT is currently working on one or two big fights coming up but, with a scarcity of major sports events during the winter season, is also mapping plans for entertainment shows. It was Halpern who sparked the move to big-screen the Christmas pageant from the stage of Radio City Music Hall, N. Y., but his plan fell through under the weight of numerous problems.

As further indications of the renewed interest in theatre TV, a spokesman for legit producer Gilbert Miller told VARIETY this week that a number of would-be promoters have attempted to obtain big-screen rights for Miller's two "Cleopatra" shows, currently playing the Ziegfeld, N. Y., with Sir Laurence Olivier and Vivien Leigh starred. Spokesman emphasized, however, that no deal has been made with any of them.

20TH ASKS CIRCUIT OPS TO BALLY CONFAB

Implementing the 20th-Fox policy of stressing merchandising approaches in advance of release of product, distribution topper Al Lichtman yesterday (Tues.) disclosed that a number of prominent eastern circuit-operators will meet at the 20th homeoffice for a discussion of the company's 1952 plans. Lichtman will present the product lineup and ad-pub director Charles Einfeld and his staff will go into detail on the promotion work which has been mapped.

Chain ops invited to the huddle, said to be the first of its kind for 20th, include Leonard Goldenson, Harry Kalmine, Joseph Vogel, Sol Schwartz, Louis Schine, George Skouras, Spyros Skouras, Jr., Gerald Shea, Samuel Rinzler, Fred Schwartz, Si Fabian, Joseph Seider, Byron Linn, Harry Brandt and Walter Reade, Jr.

New techniques in distribution and merchandising of films were urged by 20th-Fox president Spyros P. Skouras and Lichtman at the company's convention in N. Y. last week.

Billy Rose Episoder

Hollywood, Jan. 15.

Alex Gottlieb, indie producer, will make a four-episode picture, "Billy Rose's Broadway Tales," based on Billy Rose columns. Each episode will have a different director.

Shooting starts in July, with Richard Conte and Lee J. Cobb already slated for one of the episodes.

Gottlieb is Rose's brother-in-law.

Gotta Be Sock Pix For Biz in France, Ventura Reveals

Good pictures in France reap tremendous grosses, according to producer-bandleader Ray Ventura, while poor product finds it difficult to recover budgetary costs. Failure of mediocre films to excite much attention at the boxoffice, he said, stems from the country's general economic condition. Cost of living is high, the public spends its money on essentials and shops carefully for entertainment.

Though filmgoers from a numerical standpoint are fewer today than in pre-Korean War times, production financing can still be arranged for meritable projects. An incentive to film-making, Ventura pointed out, is a payment from the government. This amount equals 7% of the gross of a producer's last film and is extracted from a portion of the boxoffice admission to be applied to the budget of his next picture.

Ventura, who arrived in New York Sunday (13), revealed that producers are now campaigning for a 12% rebate instead of the existing 7% on the assertion that conditions warrant higher production aid. Also of considerable value to French film-makers is a joint production agreement recently renewed with the Italian government. Under this pact pictures screening in theatres throughout the country is indefinite but he said there's a good possibility the project may preem with George Bernard Shaw's "St. Joan," in which Uta Hagen is currently starring at the Century Theatre, N. Y. It's presumed Miss Hagen and the current Broadway cast would repeat for theatre TV.

Langner revealed that he has had several talks with representatives of the various theatrical talent and craft unions, all of whom have been favorable to the idea as an experiment and have shown a willingness to cooperate. He emphasized, though, that no wage scales have been established. Plays, he said, will be picked up directly from the stage of theatres rather than being restaged in TV studios. Langner also predicted that some shows may be televised during a regular performance, while customers are seated in the theatre audience.

He said that most of the plays to be done, at least at the start, will comprise those to which the Guild owns all rights, in order to eliminate as much as possible the problems involved in clearing rights to others. This would preclude the big-screening of several musicals produced by the Guild in cooperation with Richard Rodgers and Oscar Hammerstein 2d, such as "Oklahoma," "Carousel" and "Allegro." Langner said no formula has been worked out yet for the rental fees to theatres tying in on the legiters but estimated that it would take 50 to 100 theatres for the project to make expenses.

Recalling that the Guild had pioneered in the presentation of hour-long dramatic shows on broadcast TV, via a series of seven shows produced in cooperation with NBC TV more than four years ago, Langner said the Guild hopes to be able to pioneer similarly in the presentation of drama on theatre TV. "We're not interested so much in bringing our shows into the larger cities, which have theatre regularly," he said, "but into the smaller towns and villages which have not had theatrical presentations for a number of years."

Baltimore, Jan. 15.

Move to end film censorship in Maryland was launched last week, with the Baltimore Sun, state's leading newspaper, editorially calling for the elimination of the state censor board, which has functioned since 1917. Editorial pointed out that Maryland "is one of eight among the 48 states which has a board pass judgment on what movies can and cannot be shown here."

Terming the existence of a state censorship board as superfluous, the Sun pointed out that the picture industry has its own rigorous censorship group, and it is supported and supplemented by the action of many private groups. The editorial indicated in addition that there were Federal and local laws governing indecent matter, "plus the freedom of choice exercised by the customer."

The newspaper charged that in the past the board had extended its powers into political fields and matters of minority-group sensitivities. "Marylanders," the Sun says, "do not need to have thei movies passed on in advance by politicians any more than they need have their newspapers, books, radio programs and television shows passed on by politicians. If a movie is really indecent, the police powers will take care of it in the same way that indecent shows are closed up. If the movi is just plain distasteful, the public has a way of making its feelings known at the boxoffice and in forceful protests to the motion picture industry."

In calling for the elimination of the board, the Sun said that film censorship was costing the state $58,000 a year. However, Sydney R. Traub, head of the State Board of Motion Picture Censors, told the Sun in a letter that film censorship had actually netted the state $500,000 during the 35 years of its existence. He noted that in the fiscal year ending June, 1951, $32,195 had reverted to the state treasury. Board's income is obtained by

Divorcement Would Give Roxy Better Prod. Position

Roxy Theatre, N. Y., will be in as good, if not better, position when divorcement of 20th-Fox's theatre and production units is finalized, according to David T. Katz, new managing director of 20th's Broadway showcase. Katz feels that house will not only be able to bid for top 20th product but would also have available pix of other companies which fit into the Roxy policy.

Katz disclosed that the Roxy expects to install sometime in March the Swiss Eidophor Theatre tele system.

Problem facing the Roxy at present, Katz stressed, is the inability to sign up top talent for the stage attractions. (See story in Vaude.)

Grant, Crown Seen Resigning Col Bd. Due to Biz Pressure

Arnold Grant and Col. Henry Crown are understood resigning from the Columbia Pictures board as of the date of the next annual stockholders' meeting, Feb. 19. Amendment to the bylaws at that time will reduce the authorized size of the board from 13 to nine or 10 members. Two places on the new board will be left vacant, as required under Col's certificate of incorporation.

Grant and Crown joined the directorate in February, 1949. Board was further expanded in December, 1950, by the addition of Lewis Rosenstiel, prez and board chairman of Schenley Industries, distillers. Board's authorized size was increased to 13 when he was elected.

Rosenstiel has already submitted his resignation. That is understood to have been on a personal basis, since he was married to Col prexy Harry Cohn's niece, from whom he has since been divorced.

Grant and Crown have declined to run for reelection because of press of other business. Their departure is understood to be friendly.

Enlargement of the board was announced at the time as an effort to utilize the experience of men in other fields with broad business background, in the hope that they could bring the advantages of new thinking to the film industry.

Crown heads a large construction supply company in Chicago, is principal backer of Conrad Hilton in the latter's hotel chain and recently acquired controlling interest in the Empire State Bldg., N. Y. Grant is a film attorney and personal counsel for Harry Cohn. He's also attorney for Crown, which accounts for the Chi millionaire's interest in Col. Grant was associated with him in the Empire State Bldg. deal.

Departure of the three directors will leave a board of seven. They are Harry Cohn, Jack Cohn, Abe Schneider, Abe Montague, Nate Spingold, J. M. Blancke and Donald S. Stralem.

Under Col's certificate of incorporation, two places on the board must be left open. Directors to fill them are to be elected by holders of Col's $4.25 preferred stock in the event of default on dividend payments.

EXHIBS STEAM AT ACAD'S TV NIX

20th 'Casts Lot With Theatres'

Twentieth-Fox prez Spyros P. Skouras, in turning down the request of Skiatron for 20th films to be used in the projected tests of Skiatron's Subscriber-Vision in New York, reaffirmed his belief that in theatre TV and in no other method of "pay-as-you-see' video lies the film industry's future. Noting that 20th is now concentrating all its TV activities on its Eidophor system of big-screen TV, Skouras wrote Skiatron prexy Arthur Levey:

"We believe that the future of the motion picture industry depends on the success of theatre TV and that through it our business will have a very promising and prosperous future. We have cast our lot with the theatre because we feel that motion pictures can best be enjoyed in the surroundings and under the psychological conditions prevailing in modern properly-equipped theatres. This is a basic precept of our company, which we shall follow until such time as experience demonstrates that we are wrong.

"In view of the above, you can readily understand that it will be impossible for us to make available to you any films of this company for your forthcoming Subscriber-Vision test in New York. . . . Since the interests of your system are opposite to those of our own, we cannot depart from our present plans and objectives, which we feel will ultimately be of great benefit to our company and to our industry."

Only Par, RKO Okay Pix for Skiatron Tests; Levey Threatens D.of J. Action

Skiatron prexy Arthur Levey, who has been able to obtain promises of product from only two of the major film companies for his projected test of Subscriber-Vision in New York, indicated to VARIETY yesterday (Tues.) that he will seek aid from the Dept. of Justice to bring the other companies into line. According to Levey, the recalcitrant majors may be subject to charges of discrimination because they okayed use of their product in last year's Phonevision tests in Chicago but are nixing Skiatron's request.

In a letter sent to the president of each of the majors asking for use of their films, Levey asked for a reply by yesterday. As of yesterday, he had received the necessary okays from Paramount and RKO, but both companies set up a number of conditions with which he first must comply. Metro and 20th-Fox turned him down, while he received no reply from the others, including Warners, Columbia, Universal and Republic. It's reported that the latter four are also planning to turn down his request.

Levey said he will meet with his attorneys this weekend to determine what Skiatron's next move will be. He indicated, however, that the outfit will "be forced to take some definite action." He voiced conviction that the majors cannot discriminate against him, and said Skiatron will in all probability follow the lead of Zenith Radio, which obtained D. of J. help in getting the majors to cooperate with its Phonevision tests. Levey added, incidentally, that Skiatron has no intention of trying to buy an "influence peddler," referring to James Finnegan, former St. Louis tax collector to whom

Metro Wary of Shifts In Population as Key To Revisions in Rentals

Metro this week instructed its field sales force to keep hep on population shifts across the country with the view of abandoning rental precedents in areas which have experienced upped numbers of residents.

"Rental expectancies may need revision upward," it was noted. "It's time to be examining every ituation in your sales section with eye on the new business picture which a new, busy industrial year presents," the fieldmen were told.

Communication to the field directed that new industries, defense activities and increased military and industrial populations have been spotted in many parts of the country in 1951, and this likely will continue this year. In line with this, the M-G-ites were told that in many cases the value of a new film cannot be gauged via a comparison ith a previous pic alone, but also by up-to-the-minute knowledge of narketing conditions in each area.

Lawyer Sues Garland For 130G Pact Breach

Charles Goldring, attorney, filed suit against Judy Garland for $130,000, charging breach of contract.

Plaintiff declares he signed a contract to handle Miss Garland's business affairs on Jan. 16, 1951, but she repudiated the agreement on July 9. Pact, he said, called for 5% of her earnings for the next seven years. He figures she will earn $2,600,000 in that time.

Youngstein As Trouble-Shooter In UA's Reorg

Max E. Youngstein, United Artists v.p. in charge of advertising, publicity and exploitation, will take on an expanded management role around March 1, when the entire ad-pub department at the N. Y. homeoffice will be reorganized.

Youngstein still will hold the reins on the department but will vacate his present office to join the other exec tenants of the building's 14th floor. In the widened post, it's expected he'll function as a "troubleshooter," taking on spot assignments in distribution and handling special problem situations for the company.

Francis Winikus, now second in command of the ad-pub operation, figures to take over the top spot under Youngstein's supervision. He'll move into Youngstein's office on the 12th floor, where the department is housed.

Additionally, the distrib intends to build up the ad-pub department with a flock of new personnel. Company already is set with a number of pix which loom as important for the current year and

M-G Processes Bids On 'Vadis' Licensing

Metro this week began processing of theatremen's bids for the licensing of "Quo Vadis" in cities of 100,000 or more in population. Offers of terms for the film were received in each exchange area up until Monday (14). Exchange personnel are to inspect the proposed licensing terms and relay them to the homeoffice for contract approval.

M-G execs at the h.o. in N. Y. yesterday (Tues.) said they have no idea as yet on the number of exhibs who have bid for "Vadis" or the specific terms generally offered.

SEE TERRIF BALLY IN BIG-SCREENING

Steadfast refusal of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences to permit telecasting of the annual Oscar derby has exhibs plenty riled. Actually, the Acad's nix is not of its own choice, but a decision forced on it by a variety of factors.

With the acknowledged dearth of acceptable shows for large-screen theatre TV, exhibs are particularly hot that the annual Acad event can't at least be cleared for that purpose. Aside from that, many theatremen feel that this show on home tele could be the greatest promotion of the year for films.

Acad obviously handled its public relations badly, within the trade, at least, in its manner of turning down the request of Allied States Exhib Assn. prez Trueman Rembusch and other theatremen for putting the derby on tele. While Acad topper Charles Brackett had good reason for the negative response, exhibs don't realize it.

Acad's position vis-a-vis tele is primarily limited by the player contracts of the major studios, which forbid their stars to appear in the new medium. With a thousand or more players in the audience—let alone those who walk to the platform to get awards—it is

W. E. Heller Sued for 15G By Budd Rogers on % In 'Walk in Sun' Distrib Deal

Walter E. Heller, Chicago financing firm and owner of the Lewis Milestone production, "A Walk in the Sun," was named defendant in a $15,000 breach-of-contract suit brought by Budd Rogers in N. Y. Federal Court this week. According to papers filed by attorney Saul E. Rogers, his client negotiated a distribution deal for Heller's "Sun" in the United Kingdom, but was never paid for his services.

Rogers, who now is executive veepee of Realart Pictures, assertedly entered into a deal with Heller on Nov. 15, 1949, whereby he was to act as an agent in procuring a distribution arrangement for "Sun" in the UK. Between that time and January, 1951, the complaint charges, Rogers lined up Eros Films to handle the picture on terms which Heller considered "satisfactory."

But, Rogers contends, after he effected the release pact, Heller brushed off his claims for "services rendered." The Realart exec estimates that "Sun" grossed Heller around $150,000 in the UK and he wants 10% of that amount as his commission. Suit originally was brought in N. Y. Supreme Court but was transferred to Federal Court at the defendant's request. Picture was distributed in the U.S. by 20th-Fox in 1945 and eventually was acquired by Heller.

20TH SETS 10-MINUTE REEL AS SUPPLEMENT

Peter Levathes, short subjects sales manager for 20th-Fox, leaves N. Y. Monday (21) for a tour of key cities across the country to line up accounts for 20th's new newsreel. Company disclosed this week that it's set with a 10-minute special reel to be issued twice weekly to augment the regular issues of Movietone News. Levathes' first stop will be L. A.

Reel is designed for a limited number of theatres, and will be run along with Movietone, giving programs about 18 months of news coverage. Six theatres in N. Y., including the Roxy, will play the supplement beginning Friday (18).

Public's growing interest in world affairs prompted the added coverage. Levathes said the idea for it was conceived only last week and the company took immediate action on setting it up.

Loew's to Separate Its Theatres By Aug., '53, Via Government Decree

Loew's will separate its domestic theatres from production-distribution by Aug. 31, 1953, under terms of its antitrust consent dcree with the Department of Justice, it was indicated in N. Y. this week. Final accord between the two sides on all but one or two relatively insignificant points was reached in Washington last week.

While D. of J. and film company reps agreed to bar the official terms of the deal from public view, sources close to the negotiations said that a period of 19 months for the outfit to complete divorcement would be plausible. Loew's fiscal years ends Aug. 31, consequently it follows that the split can be expected by that date next year.

Loew's will be the last of the original eight defendants in the long-running industry trust battle to bow out. Of the other major companies, 20th-Fox aims to complete divorcement by June of this year, a full year ahead of the schedule set forth in its decree, and Warners will break off the theatre end of its operations in April, 1953.

Unlike Paramount and RKO, which effected divorcement some time ago by way of each setting up two separate companies, Loew's, WB and 20th are likely to establish only one new company each. This will be to operate domestic theatres. Three outfits' present parent corporations will continue in existence to take over production-distribution and foreign assets.

Dissolution of the parent outfit was the only way in which Par and RKO could reorganize on a tax-free basis, thus that was the course they followed. However,

277G to Schenck Tops at M-G, WB; Mayer Cut 200G

Year-end reports from Warners and Loew's disclose that Harry and Jack Warner drew slight increases in their compensation from WB and the salary collected by Louis B. Mayer in his final year as M-G studio topper dropped off over $200,000 under terms of a revised contract for the year.

For the year ended last Aug. 31, Mayer earned $299,999. In the previous year, the amounts paid to him directly or to a retirement fund in his behalf totalled $509,622. He was limited in the recent year to a total of $300,000.

On a second front, Loew's informed the Securities and Exchange Commission that Mayer's participation rights in all M-G pix made while he was on the lot have been bought out for $2,750,000. A "lump sum" in that amount was paid to Mayer last December 14 "and all obligations of the registrant to make any residual payments under his terminated employment agreement were cancelled," the company disclosed.

Other officials of the two outfits collected about the same in fiscal 1951 as they had in the preceding year.

Harry Warner received $185,900, up from $182,300 in '50. Jack Warner drew $185,550, up from $182,050 in '50. Other WB-ites, all v.p.'s, collected these amounts: Albert Warner, $105,050; Harry Kalmine, $130,000; Samuel Carlisle, $51,070; Stainleigh Friedman, $66,150; Robert W. Perkins, $105,150, and Samuel Schneider, $105,150.

Prexy Nicholas M. Schenck topped the M-G payroll, excluding Mayer, with a total of $277,863.

'Rashomon' Doing Sock, RKO Nabs Israel Film

With "Rashomon," Japanese import, doing surprisingly big biz in New York, RKO this week acquired another foreign pic for U. S. release. It is "Faithful City," produced by Moyame Friedman in Israel.

While "Rashomon" is subtitled, "City" is all English. Acquisition of both pix by RKO is part of a new policy to take on foreign product. Committee headed by Leonard Gruenberg, metropolitan division manager, is on the prowl for them.

"Rashomon" is currently at the Little Carnegie, N. Y., in its preem U. S. date. Very good reviews have resulted in strong opening and surprisingly steady biz. First week (Christmas-New Year's) was $14,100, second $10,700 and the third, ending last night (Tues.), was about $10,500. Last Saturday (12) was $2,500 against the previous Saturday's $2,100.

RKO will also release "Whispering Smith vs. Scotland Yard" in the U. S. Picture was produced in England by Julian Lesser in association with Exclusive Films. It stars Richard Carlson.

Indianapolis, Jan. 15.

Allied Theatre Owners of Indiana takes exception to a statement recently made by Cecil B. DeMille in which he sees the practice of filmgoers to "shop for the attraction" as a "healthy condition" which is bringing about a brighter outlook for the industry. It's the picture that draws them in, said the producer, not popcorn or because they want to come in out of the weather.

"We quickly agree with Mr. DeMille," the organization points out in its current bulletin, "that real showmanship must lie in selling the attraction. And probably the condition today may be healthy for the situation with enough potential to hold a strong attraction several weeks.

"But what about all the theatres so limited in their possibilities that they must use 100 or 200 pictures a year to keep a light on their screen—there are not many attractions worth high pressure selling,

Room for One More

Topnotch family-life drama, told with humor. Cary Grant and strong word-of-mouth for building grosses.

Hollywood, Jan. 10.

Warner Bros. release of Henry Blanke production. Stars Cary Grant, Betsy Drake; features Lurene Tuttle, Randy Stuart, John Ridgely, Irving Bacon, Mary Lou Treen. Directed by Norman Taurog. Screenplay, Jack Rose, Melville Shavelson, from book by Anna Perrott Rose; camera, Robert Burks; editor, Alan Crosland, Jr.; music, Max Steiner. Tradeshown Dec. 18, '51. Running time, 97 MINS.

"Poppy" Rose	Cary Grant
Anna Rose	Betsy Drake
Miss Kenyon	Lurene Tuttle
Mrs. Foreman	Randy Stuart
Harry Foreman	John Ridgely
The Mayor	Irving Bacon
Mrs. Roberts	Mary Lou Treen
Jane	Iris Mann
Teenie	George Winslow
Jimmy-John	Clifford Tatum, Jr.
Trot	Gay Gordon
Tim	Malcolm Cassell
Ben	Larry Olsen

"A happy combination of good humor and warm drama has been put together with neat results in "Room for One More." It has an unusually good word-of-mouth potential that should be a trade stimulator after initial openings, indicating profitable grossing possibilities in overall release.

Cary Grant and Betsy Drake make a smart star team to head up this story of a real-life couple who open hearts and home to unfortunate children. Themselves Mr. and Mrs., Grant and Miss Drake spark the film with the humor it needs without neglecting any of the honest tugs at the heart the story has. Both Henry Blanke's production supervision and Norman Taurog's direction are understanding and sell the mixture of naturally humorous incidents and genuinely moving sentiment.

"Poppy" and Anna Rose were a Lynwood, N. J., couple in middle-class circumstances who still found time to try to do something for the "disturbed adolescent" type of child and direct them towards being good citizens. The wife, Anna Perrott Rose, put the family adventures down in book form, and Jack Rose and Melville Shavelson have done a topnotch job of finding the natural screenplay material in it. The man-wife talk is honest, told with an open frankness that goes with the happy family flavor of the film. That frankness also lends itself to some of the most straightforward "birds and bees" talk yet to hit the screen. In fact, Grant's explanation of procreation to a curious youngster is a good model for real-life parents.

Yarn tells of the Roses, financially insecure and with three youngsters of their own, bringing into their uninhibited family life two children whom life's hard knocks are rapidly warping beyond repair. One is a sullen girl of 13, already scarred beyond her years because of being unwanted anywhere. The other is a crippled boy, already on his way towards being a mean, retarded citizen.

Humor balances the honest tear-jerking as the domestic setup is played off. Familiar situations that arise have a fresh touch and there are a number of new ones that register strongly as the two "disturbed adolescents" respond to the love, kindness and understanding generously handed out by the Roses.

Iris Mann and Clifford Tatum, Jr., are the two misfits of life remolded during their stay with the Roses, and the two youngsters play their roles for strong results. The Rose offspring are portrayed excellently by George Winslow, Gay Gordon and Malcolm Cassell. Little Winslow is a frog-voiced five-year-old and his sonorous croaks, while unintelligible mostly, make for a laugh-provoking delivery.

There are some fine, if short-footaged, performances from adults cast in supporting parts. They include Lurene Tuttle, Randy Stuart, John Ridgely, Irving Bacon and Mary Lou Treen.

Production-wise, film benefits from the excellent Robert Burks photography and the easy-listening Max Steiner music score. Brog.

Meet Danny Wilson
(SONGS)

Tailor-made Frank Sinatra starrer with Shelley Winters; okay possibilities.

Hollywood, Jan. 11.

Universal release of Leonard Goldstein production. Stars Frank Sinatra, Shelley Winters, Alex Nicol; features Raymond Burr. Directed by Joseph Pevney. Story and screenplay, Don McGuire; camera, Maury Gertsman; editor, Virgil Vogel; musical direction, Joseph Gershenson. Previewed Jan. 8, '52. Running time, 86 MINS.

Danny Wilson	Frank Sinatra
Joy Carroll	Shelley Winters
Mike Ryan	Alex Nicol
Nick Driscoll	Raymond Burr
Tommy Wells	Tommy Farrell
T. W. Hatcher	Vaughan Taylor

The resemblance to Frank Sinatra's own career is more than passably noticeable in "Meet Danny Wilson," a yarn about a nobody who rose from the streets to a top crooning position. As a result, it is believeable entertainment, told with a sense of humor most of the time. For added weight in the general market, Shelley Winters costars with Sinatra and Alex Nicol, helping to give it okay possibilities.

Title role is tailor-made for Sinatra and he plays it to the hilt with an off-hand charm that displays the various facets of his personality. Character even goes so far as to show the cocky, pugnacious side the real-life crooner demonstrates on occasion. Miss Winters and Nicol score with equal effectiveness in the other star roles, and Raymond Burr is good.

Sinatra and Nicol are buddies having a hard time making a living at barroom singing and playing until Miss Winters, nitery entertainer, comes into their lives. She gets the boys a trial in the night spot run by Burr, a racketeer. He's impressed by Sinatra's ability, promises to push him provided he is given 50% of anything the singer makes from that point on. It's a deal and the rise to the top is rapid, including a picture bid. A three-sided romance which has Sinatra going for Miss Winters and she for Nicol, and the more melodramatic racketeer angle come to a head in Hollywood when a rift develops between Sinatra and Nicol over Miss Winters and Burr shows up for his 50% cut.

There's a shooting melee climax in which Nicol is wounded by Burr, bringing Sinatra back to his senses and off to render justice to the racketeer. Windup is rather wildly melodramatic, being a chase in the Wrigley ball field that ends with Burr shot down by the crooner, but it does wrap things up logically.

Nine tunes are in the score for Sinatra to work over and several draw reprises. Songs are all standards that Sinatra has sold effectively in the past and they listen well. Included are "All of Me," "How Deep Is the Ocean," "She's Funny That Way," "That Old Black Magic," "When You're Smiling," "You're a Sweetheart," "Lonesome Man Blues," "I've Got a Crush On You" and "A Good Man Is Hard to Find." Miss Winters joins Sinatra on the latter during a party sequence, and also uses it for a talking solo in a cafe scene.

Don McGuire did the original story and script, as well as serving as associate to producer Leonard Goldstein. He earns a good writing credit for smart framing and punchy dialog although the likeable lightness featuring most of the yarn gets side-tracked a bit towards the end. Joseph Pevney's direction is responsible for the neat pace.

First-class lensing by Maury Gertsman, excellent musical direction by Joseph Gershenson and tight editing by Virgil Vogel feature the technical credits. Brog.

The Wild North
(COLOR)

Rugged adventure yarn laid in primitive reaches of Canada. Stewart Granger, Wendell Corey and good b.o. outlook.

Hollywood, Jan. 15.

Metro release of Stephen Ames production. Stars Stewart Granger, Wendell Corey; features Cyd Charisse. Directed by Andrew Marton. Written for screen by Frank Fenton; camera (Anscocolor), Robert Surtees; editor, John Dunning; music, Bronislau Kaper. Tradeshown Jan. 9, '52. Running time, 97 MINS.

Jules Vincent	Stewart Granger
Constable Pedley	Wendell Corey
Indian Girl	Cyd Charisse
Father Simon	Morgan Farley
Callahan	J. M. Kerrigan
Brody	Howard Petrie
Old Man	Houseley Stevenson
Sergeant	Lewis Martin
Indian Chief	John War Eagle
Ruger	Ray Teal
Sloan	Clancy Cooper

"The Wild North" is picturesque adventure story, told against as rugged a background as the title indicates. It comes out generally interesting, if a bit long, and has good boxoffice chances because of a combination of a number of favorable ticket-selling angles, including the re-teaming of the star, director and cameraman of the successful "King Solomon's Mines."

Picture introduces the new Ansco, single-negative color developed in cooperation with Metro, and the hues are a decided advantage in displaying the primitive locations used to tell a screen story taken from the files of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

Stewart Granger and Wendell Corey sharpen the masculine flavor of the Frank Fenton screen story, both supplying the vigorous portrayals the tale needs to get it over. Film has a leisurely start and moves along at a fairly even pace until picked up rousingly with several extremely exciting climactic sequences that add impact.

Granger, a trapper, takes to the deep woods to hide out after killing a man in self-defense. The almost impossible task of bringing him in to stand trial is handed to Corey, a Mountie who always gets his man. Finding Granger is not too hard, but bringing him back supplies the suspense. The trapper, through superior outdoor knowledge, leads Corey astray from the home trail. They battle loneliness, blinding storms, eventually run out of supplies and are attacked by wolves in a viciously-staged, exciting sequence that leaves Corey desperately wounded and in a state of shock.

Plot is then concerned with Granger's getting the wounded man out of the wilderness, nursing him back to health and then re-enacting the self-defense killing scene during a swift canoe ride through river rapids to shock Corey back to sanity. This re-enactment establishes Granger's claim that the killing was in self-defense, and he is freed to again live in the wilderness he loves.

Cyd Charisse, featured as the only femme in the cast, has minor footage as Granger's romantic interest but plays it charmingly. Film could have used more romance for popular appeal. Excellent supporting work is furnished by Morgan Farley, J. M. Kerrigan and others.

Andrew Marton's direction of the Stephen Ames production is well done, particularly in the feeling he gets in the long, lonesome treks, the wolf fight and the rapids-shooting sequences. A beautiful job of photography was turned in by Robert Surtees, capturing in full measure the grandeur of the outdoor locations. Bronislau Kaper's music score fits the story. Other technical credits are first-rate. Brog.

Here Come the Nelsons

Ozzie, Harriet, and offspring, move over from ether to film with good family comedy patterned along lines of air show.

Hollywood, Jan. 15.

Universal release of Aaron Rosenberg production. Stars Ozzie, Harriet, David and Ricky Nelson; Rock Hudson; features Barbara Lawrence, Sheldon Leonard, Jim Backus. Directed by Frederick de Cordova. Story and screenplay, Ozzie Nelson, Donald Nelson, William Davenport; based on radio show, "The Adventures of Ozzie and Harriet"; camera, Irving Glassberg; editor, Frank Gross. Previewed Jan. 2, '52. Running time, 75 MINS.

Ozzie Nelson	Ozzie Nelson
Harriet Nelson	Harriet Nelson
David Nelson	David Nelson
Ricky Nelson	Ricky Nelson
Charlie Jones	Rock Hudson
Barbara Schutzendorf	Barbara Lawrence
Duke	Sheldon Leonard
Joe	Jim Backus
Clara	Ann Doran
Bellows	Gale Gordon
S. T. Jones	Paul Harvey
Monk	Ed Max
Tex	Johnson

Basis for a domestic comedy series provided by this initial film treatment of radio's "Adventures of Ozzie and Harriet." The Nelsons and their type of situation family comedy take rather well to the screen, initialer being a chuckle-arouser that should release in the regular double bill market outside of key situations.

Ozzie and Harriet Nelson, and their two sons, David and Ricky, spark the antics pleasantly in much the same vein that has made the air show listenable and enjoyable since 1944. Laughs are allowed to flow naturally in the hokum setup, with just enough mugging by the various members of the talented family to win audience returns. Film is actually a family enterprise, because, in addition to having the Nelsons performing, Ozzie and Donald Nelson did the story and screenplay with William Davenport.

Situation plot spins around marital jealously that comes about when Ozzie invites comely Barbara Lawrence, the grownup kid sister of an old school chum, to stay at the Nelsons' home during a centennial celebration, and Harriet does the same for Rock Hudson. Each mistakes the other's attention to the guests. Events lead Ozzie to prove he is still a not-so-old male by entering a contest to ride a bucking bronc in the centennial's rodeo. Ride comes off abortively but Ozzie still manages to prove his point by leading a chase to capture two robbers who have run off with the fair's receipts and taken little Ricky along with them for cover.

Climax also solves another story point, as Ozzie, ad agency writer, needs to come up with a campaign to sell ladies' foundations for a client. Robbers are brought to bay by stretching an improvised string of foundation garments across a mountain road, giving the client publicity and furnishing a laugh windup to the wild doings.

Miss Lawrence and Hudson bring off their roles in okay fashion, and Jim Backus, as the Nelsons' neighbor Joe, rates chuckles. Sheldon Leonard and Ed Max are good comic robbers. Capable support is supplied by Ann Doran, Gale Gordon, Paul Harvey and others.

Frederick de Cordova's direction of the Aaron Rosenberg production is lightly paced to keep the fun rolling, and technical assists are good. Brog.

For Men Only

Drama on evils of uncontrolled fraternity hazing, with strong exploitation angles to rate business in ballyhoo dates.

Hollywood, Jan. 15.

Lippert Pictures release of Paul Henreid (H-N) production. Stars Henreid; features Margaret Field, James Dobson, Robert Sherman, Russell Johnson, Kathleen Hughes, Vera Miles, Douglas Kennedy, Robert Carson, Virginia Mullen, O. Z. Whitehead. Directed by Henreid. Screenplay, Lou Morheim, from original story by Morheim and Herbert Margolies; camera, Paul Ivano; editor, Sherman Rose; music, Laving Friedman. Previewed Jan. 11, '52. Running time, 93 MINS.

Dr. Stephen Brice	Paul Henreid
Tod Palmer	Robert Sherman
Ky Walker	Russell Johnson
Julie	Margaret Field
Tracy	Kathleen Hughes
Kathy	Vera Miles
Beanie	James Dobson
Mayberry	Douglas Kennedy
Hopkins	Robert Carson
Mrs. Palmer	Virginia Mullen
Roy	Steven Clark
Jack	Chris Drake
Phil	Bob Chapman
Prof. Bixby	O. Z. Whitehead
Oglethorpe	Arthur Marshall
Jerry	Frank Mathias

This is a drama on the evils of fraternity hazing, with a professor-coed angle thrown in, that will have profitable going in those exploitation dates that take advantage of the kind of strong ballyhoo selling Lippert Pictures gives to its releases. An independently-made H-N production on which Paul Henreid does the triple-threat duty of producer-director-star, film is a good entry for the exploitation market.

The story could have been stronger, but serves its selling purposes in okay fashion. Henreid's direction, too, could have been more forceful, but for market intentions all concerned combine to bring it off satisfactorily: Henreid has used many unknown faces in the young cast, giving picture a freshness that helps to put over the campus flavor. These unknowns react to the script and direction excellently.

Henreid, pathology professor, takes up the cudgels against undisciplined frat hazing when pledge Robert Sherman discloses to him a dog was killed in initiation rites. The scandal breaks over the school but the frat boys successfully conceal evidence of their crime and turn on Sherman. Driven from school, he is fatally injured in an auto accident, making Henreid even more determined to carry on his fight. A rebuffing he gives Kathleen Hughes, a coed on the make, brings down trouble on his head when she, with the connivance of Russell Johnson, campus leader, charges him with trying to make love to her.

Script gets itself out of the assorted involvements when Henreid is able to trick a confession from Johnson through a phoney blood test that would tie him in with pledge mistreatment; the school's board of regents apologizes for not believing the prof in the first place and rewards him with post of dean of the medical school.

Johnson is one of the more standouts of the unknown faces, getting a lot of punch into his mean, warped character of campus leader. Sherman, too, impresses, as does Vera Miles, his girlfriend, and Miss Hughes. Margaret Field, not new to films, is very good as Henreid's wife. James Dobson, Douglas Kennedy, Virginia Mullen, Robert Carson, Steven Clark, Chris Drake and Bob Chapman are among others providing capable support.

While picture was made on a comparatively low budget, there is no obvious cheating in its physical dress. Paul Ivano used his cameras expertly. Brog.

Woman in the Dark

Poor programmer, shy of entertainment even for that bracketing.

Hollywood, Jan. 11.

Republic release of Stephen Auer production. Features Penny Edwards, Ross Elliott, Rick Vallin, Richard Benedict. Directed by George Blair. Screenplay, Albert DeMond; based on play by Nicholas Cosentino; camera, John MacBurnie; editor, John Rich. Previewed Jan. 11, '52. Running time, 60 MINS.

Anna Reichardt	Penny Edwards
Father Tony Morello	Ross Elliott
Phil Morello	Rick Vallin
Gino Morello	Richard Benedict
Mama Morello	Argentina Brunetti
Papa Morello	Martin Garralaga
Tante Maria	Edit Angold
Nick Petzick	Peter Brocco
Evelyn	Barbara Billingsley
Dutch Bender	John Doucette
Slats Hylan	Richard Irving
Inspector Johnson	Luther Crockett
Mickey	Carl Thompson
Bartender	Charles Sullivan

Dull film material, even for fill-in lowercase bookings in the lesser situations, is provided by "Woman in the Dark." It's a hapless venture that started with an uninteresting plot and did nothing to improve it in the making.

An Italian-American family is involved in the abortive try for melodrama. The three sons of the family are, respectively, a priest, a lawyer and a ne'er-do-well. Latter is used as a patsy in a jewel robbery but, with the help of the two big brothers, he is gotten out of the jam, is later shot down by the crooks and the lawyer brother takes revenge with an assist from the police.

Cast is competent enough but has been badly used by script. Principals are Penny Edwards, Ross Elliott, the priest; Rick Vallin, the lawyer, and Richard Benedict, the ne'er-do-well. George Blair's direction does nothing to improve the Albert DeMond screenplay, based on a play by Nicholas Cosentino. Production and technical values are stock for the low-budget expenditure.

Directed by Edward Bernds. Screenplay, Bernds and Elwood Ullman, from story by Bernds; camera, Lester White; editor, Richard Fantl; musical director, Mischa Bakaleinikoff. Tradeshown N. "Harem Girl" is a weak comedy entry whose market potential appears to be limited to the lower half of the duals. Story may have been a good one on paper but it unreels for the most part as familiar slapstick with few genuine audience chuckles. Aside from Joan Davis, there is little marquee value in the lengthy cast.

The Edward Bernds-Elwood Ullman script, fashioned from Bernds' story, places the action in a mythical desert kingdom where a sheik (Donald Randolph) is attempting to dispose of a princess (Peggie Castle) in order to seize the country's oil resources. However, he fails to reckon with the powers of Miss Davis, who serves as her highness' companion-secretary.

Miss Davis rises to the occasion by posing as a harem dancer and successfully spiriting away the keys to Randolph's arsenal. Before all this is accomplished, she leads the sheik's men on a merry chase through the palace. It's a peg on which a flock of tepid gags are hung. Finale provides a typical happy ending.

Performances are none too convincing. Miss Davis milks a few laughs and does as best she can with poor material. Miss Castle, although scoring from a pulchritudinous standpoint, is never believable as an Arab princess. Randolph is adequate as the heavy while Arthur Blake, Paul Marion and other players contrib fair support.

Scripter-director Bernds wisely gives Miss Davis maximum opportunity to make with the levity but nevertheless his directorial touch isn't strong enough to overcome deficiences of the story. From a geographic aspect this Wallace MacDonald production is also somewhat artificial. Desert sands appear bonafide but the rocky hills look suspiciously Californian instead of Arabian. Lester White's camerawork is good as is Mischa Bakaleinikoff's musical score.

IN-BETWEEN BUDGETERS FADING

Only RKO, UA From U.S. Enter Films At Uruguay Fete; H'wood Stars Attend

More than a dozen Hollywood stars planed from New York yesterday (Tues.) to attend the Second International Uruguayan Film Festival at Punta del Este as guests of the Uruguayan government. Fete got underway Thursday (10) at the beach resort near Montevideo and scheduled to run through the end of the month.

Among those making the junket re Yvonne De Carlo, Rhonda Fleming, Irene Dunne, Merle Oberon, Alexis Smith, Barbara Britton, Donna Reed, Robert Cummings, Cobina Wright, Constance Moore, Reginald Gardiner, John Barrymore, Jr., Russell Hayden and husbands of several of the actresses.

While the Motion Picture Assn. of America did not recognize the festival officially this year, it had no objection if member companies chose to partcipate. However, a survey this week showed that only RKO, and United Artists indirectly, entered product.

RKO submitted three films, Samuel Goldwyn's "I Want You;" Wald-Krasna's "The Blue Veil" and Walt Disney's True Life Adventure, "Nature's Half Acre." Renown Pictures of England entered "A Christmas Carol," which UA is distributing in the U. S.

Last year the American majors participated much more extensively largely due to a suggestion of the U. S. State Department that such a move would aid hemispheric solidarity. MPAA's lack of interest this year is prompted by the belief that there have been "too many festivals."

Organization points out that most of the festivals want product that has not been entered in other competitions and this cannot be done since there aren't that many pictures of a quality suitable for such events. Cannes and Venice festivals will continue to be recognized since they have "seniority"

Last Year UA Planned Brazil Fold, Now Maps First Sales Parley There

Announcement that United Artists has set the first Brazilian sales convention in the outfit's history, to take place this month in Rio de Janeiro, was in sharp contrast to UA's plans about this time last year. At that time the distrib wanted to fold up its offices in Brazil and channel its product to a franchise operator. However, severance pay to employees, as demanded by the Brazilian government, was so steep that UA decided to maintain its own offices.

Rio sales session also points up the growing importance of that market for U. S. companies. Brazil's total film remittances last year reportedly were over $6,000,000. Presiding at the UA meeting will be Arnold Picker, foreign department v.p., who left N.Y. yesterday (Tues.) for a full swing of the Latino territory. He'll be gone about a month.

Others at the Rio conclave will include Sam Berkeris, S. A. supervisor; Enrique Baez, general manager in Brazil, and all branch managers in that country.

TV Firm Charges Mono Lured Wild Bill Elliott

Los Angeles, Jan. 15.

Monogram is charged with luring Wild Bill Elliott off the TV trail in a $225,000 damage suit filed in Superior Court by Century Television Productions.

Plaintiff declares the cowboy star signed a Century TV contract in June, 1950, and appeared in a pilot film which was shown to Monogram officials. Later, the complaint states, Monogram "enticed" Elliott to sign a film pact, ignoring his tieup with Century. Named in the action along with the studio are Steve Broidy, W. Ray Johnston and Scott R. Dunlap.

Trenet Settles Pact Suit Vs. Eagle Lion

Gallic chanteur Charles Trenet last week settled a breach-of-contract suit against Eagle Lion during trial before N. Y. Supreme Court Justice Thomas A. Aurelio. Singer had sued the film company, claiming that the firm had him pacted to a two-picture deal in 1946 at $85,000 each.

In defense, EL attorneys claimed that Trenet had violated the morals clause in the contract. Trenet was represented by Silverstone & Rosenthal.

Indie Union Fights Local 306 Move To Revoke Charter

Attempt by Projectionists Local 306, International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees, to have the N. Y. State Attorney General's office revoke the incorporation charter of the Independent Motion Picture Operators and Television Employees, was termed last week by Charles Axelrod, the indie prexy, as a pre-election "political stump" which Local 306 officials used as a campaign issue in their recent elections.

Axelrod further gave notice that the indie outfit would fight the revocation move all the way. He said that although Local 306 had filed a petition with the Attorney General in October, he has not yet been summoned to a hearing.

Election to which Axelrod referred was concluded two weeks ago, with Herman Gelber, Local 306's incumbent prexy, being returned to office for another two-year term. It was Gelber's fifth consecutive triumph.

Gelber, characterizing the indie outfit as a "rump" union, declared that Local 306 is appealing for revocation of the Axelrod union's charter because the group is misusing it. He said it was using the charter in an attempt "to put a halo on their organization." Gelber indicated that the obtaining of the charter about a year ago was an attempt to show that it has been officially sanctioned by the state. All it has, he pointed out, was an incorporation charter similar to ones held by countless business organizations. IA prexy charged that in letters soliciting the business of indie exhibs offering rates below the Local 306 standard, the Independents were prominently displaying the phrase "Chartered by the State of New York."

Herman Cooper, Local 306's attorney, said the petition asking for revocation of the indie charter had been filed and that he's awaiting word from the Attorney General's office.

UA NABS 1ST FEATURE USING NEW EK COLOR

First feature-length (47 minutes) film using the new Eastman Kodak color process has been set for distribution in the U. S. by United Artists. Pic, produced by Tom Daly for the Canadian Film Board, is a documentary account of Princess Elizabeth's recent visit to Canada. Director of photography was Osmond H. Borradaile, who had been associated with the late Robert Flaherty in documentary production.

In another deal, UA picked up distribution rights to two King Bros. productions, one of which, "Mutiny," has been completed. Film stars Patric Knowles, Angela Lansbury and Mark Stevens, and was done in Technicolor. Second is "The Ring," to be shot at the Goldwyn Studio.

'B' PIX CONTINUE IN PROD. REVAMP

In a switch from the widely expressed sentiment for the entire elimination of "B" production, film-makers now are inclined to drop from the skeds in-between budgeters. "B's" will continue but they'll be the definite unpretentious type. It's the moderately expensive product that's on the way out, in the opinion of money-minded market analysts.

Easterners who have a big voice in deciding lensing costs figure that pix budgeted at between "A" and "B" budget levels for the most part present a difficult economic problem. Unless they quality as "A" product in terms of entertainment value, there's virtually no hope for a profit. Flat rentals paid for "B's" simply no longer justify production expense in that bracket.

Continuing the production of minimum-cost films of the type which brings only the flat rentals is a matter of economic necessity so long as the majority of the nation's theatres operate on a double-feature policy. It's figured that 70% of all houses offer two pix.

Point made by the financial observers is that to fill the bill with two "A's" or one "A" and another brought in at a little below top budget would be hazardous. Second features on the program must be trimmed, budget-wise, commensurate with the continually decreasing amount of coin they give the

Hollywood, Jan. 15.

Contrary to indications of last fall, Leo Spitz is understood planning to remain active on the Universal-International lot for at least the two-years remaining under his current contract. Spitz and William Goetz, who head the studio, recently sold their stock in Universal to Decca Records.

At the time of the sale in November, it was reported that Spitz was planning to pull out because of illness. He is said now, however, to have changed his mind, since he is in better health, although he'll remain on a strict medical routine which restricts the time he can spend on the lot each day.

Spitz and Goetz both have employment contracts. They date back to 1947, when they merged their International unit into Universal via a stock swap. Spitz in November was said to be ready to ask permission to break his pact.

Milton R. Rackmil, prez of Decca, which now owns controlling interest in U, has assured both Spitz and Goetz that he would welcome their remaining at the studio. Spitz has been an important factor in guiding the production policies of the company, generally taking a conservative attitude, paralleling that of prez Nate J. Blumberg.

Goetz has been for a somewhat more expansive policy, which he has found a backer global salesmanager Alfred E. Daff. Differences have usually been general rather than specific, and always friendly. Company is now embarked on a program of more expansive production than the past three years, along the lines advocated by Goetz and Daff.

UI Ups Alland

Hollywood, Jan. 15.

Universal-International upped William Alland from assistant to full producership and handed him three stories: "Riding Kid," "Badman With a Gun" and "Sign of the Green Man."

Richard Conte will star in "Riding Kid," first of the trio to be filmed.

Warners, Universal Financial Reports Point Up Films' Economics Maneuvers

Reports by Warners and Universal covering their finances for their last fiscal year point up the measures adopted by the industry generally to get back on the road to upbeat economics.

Various of the film outfits have been cutting capitalization structures, largely by reducing the amount of common stock outstanding so that per-share earnings still can hold up even though total net earnings drop off. Second step was to cut down on pic budgets plus administrative expenses. These new policies resulted in a nice payoff for both WB and U.

As disclosed earlier, WB's operations for fiscal 1950-'51 brought earnings of $1.67 per share, up from $1.46 per share in the preceding year. Overall profit was $9,427,000, down from $10,271,000 in the preceding year. Company had cut its outstanding stock by 1,377,515 shares during the latter year, bringing the total to 5,619,785 and accounting for the jump in per-share profit.

U within the past week announced a profit of $2,092,783, representing an increase of about 30% in spite of the much heavier tax bite. U's fiscal 1951 was the best year for the company since 1947. Money-making advance largely reflected a change in lensing away from heavyweight, serious and expensive pix and toward more earthy comedy and adventure material. The turnout of "bread and butter" pix has served to fatten the b.o. for U. Company's gross business, both domestic and foreign, has been consistently on the upgrade.

Lensers Nix Concessions For Indies, Vidpic Prods.

Hollywood, Jan. 15.

Motion picture lensers will grant no concessions to indie producers or producers of TV film. Executive board of International Photographers, Local 659, announced there will be one basic contract for their craft with all film producers, regardless of the costs of their productions.

Formal notice to that effect has been sent to the Independent Motion Picture Producers Assn., the Society of Independent Motion Picture Producers and the Alliance of Television Producers. These three groups had asked special contracts with wages and working conditions below those of the major lots.

Shift From SOPEG To H-63 Causes Par Pact Delay

Problem of ironing out classifications is delaying signing of a new pact for homeoffice white collarites between Paramount and H-63, International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees. Paramount unit, formerly associated with the defunct Screen Office and Professional Employees Guild, recently entered the IA homeoffice employees union fold, and the job of shifting classifications from the SOPEG to H-63 standards is causing the temporary snag.

H-63 also is dickering for new pacts for homeoffice white collarites at 20th-Fox, RKO Pictures and RKO theatres. When these and the Paramount pacts are finalized, union will just about have sewed up all the homeoffice help in the industry. Lone exceptions are the units at National Screen Service, which voted not to affiliate with H-63, and Metro, which hasn't indicated a choice for any union.

For the first time H-63 is also repping a publicists unit, having won the right to act as bargaining agent for the Par flacks. Union is preparing a pact for the pub-ad staffers, and expects to seek a date with Par execs next week for opening of negotiations.

Local 230, Sign, Pictorial and Display Union, AFL, which reps publicity units at RKO Theatres and Loew's, expects confirmation tomorrow (Thurs.) on the dates for the opening of talks at these companies.

SCHWALBERG PUSHES INDIVIDUAL SELLING

Each film must be handled on an individual basis because conventional selling patterns are no longer reliable, A. W. Schwalberg, president of Paramount Film Distributing Co., told the outfit's convention of division managers and homeofice department heads in N. Y. yesterday (Tues.).

Others who addressed the conclave, which ends today, were Par president Barney Balaban, Adolph Zukor, board chairman; Y. Frank Freeman, studio v.p.; Paul Raibourn, v.p. in charge of budgets, planning and television; E. K. O'Shea, distribution v.p.; Oscar Morgan, shorts and newsreel salesmanager, and Jerry Pickman, ad-pub v.p.

Schwalberg Toastmaster

A. W. Schwalberg, president of Paramount Distributing Corp., will toastmaster at the N. Y. Motion Picture Bookers Club annual dinner Monday (21) at the Tavern on the Green.

New officers will be installed at the get-together.

HCL Greatest Threat To B.O., Daff Stresses; U's $2,092,783 Profit

The greatest threat to the future of the film industry is the high cost of living, according to Alfred E. Daff, Universal's global sales chief. As long as a "gap" prevails between individual incomes and the cost-of-living there will be sufficient coin for entertainment purposes, with the pic biz getting a healthy share, Daff points out.

With employment at a top peak and the general economic outlook for the country extremely encouraging, Daff believes the gap will exist for many years to come. As a result, he expects an increase in film grosses in future years. "The crisis in the film industry is over," he observes. "The recent crisis is perhaps the best thing that could have happened to the industry because it taught us that we cannot rest on our laurels."

Daff's observations were made Friday (11), the day U released its 1951 financial statement. Report showed a net profit of $2,092,783 and a world gross of $64,783,789, largest overall income in the 40-year history of the company. The global sales chief attributes the alltime top gross to a combination of factors.

"We've learned," he says, "that we can't stand still. We're con-

Asks Majors for 540G In Pittsburgh Action

Pittsburgh, Jan. 15.

Lou Kaufman, owner-operator of the Metropolitan Theatre until early 1951, has entered a conspiracy antitrust action in Federal Court, seeking triple damages amounting to $540,000. Practically all of the major distributing companies and their affiliated theatres are named defendants. Excepted from the action are the local indie exchanges, including Crown, Franklin and Screen Guild. Elliott Finkel, attorney here for Allied MPTO, is representing Kaufman.

The Metropolitan is now operated under lease from Kaufman by George Mandros.

Holdovers show more strength than newcomers, except for "See You in My Dreams," which shapes smash at the Warner. "Strange Door" at RKO Keith's looms nice. "Big Night" at Metropolitan is only so-so. "Quo Vadis," in its third week at Loew's Palace, is still sock, with last week's biz skyrocketing well above hopes. "Model and Marriage Broker" with vaude is okay at Capitol.

TORONTO STILL SLOW; 'TELL' TASTY $16,000

Toronto, Jan. 15.

With city-wide streetcar strike in second stanza, film biz is taking a terrific beating, revenue being down about 30% at downtown deluxers. Nabes are doing okay, however. Only new films are "Never Can Tell," "Model and Marriage Broker" and "Close To My Heart," but overall, including holdovers, is just fair, and no indication of normal potentialities.

B'way Steady; 'Greatest Show' Big $145,000, 'Model'-Vaude Neat 90G, 'Country' 5G, 'Detective' Sock 20½G

Launching of new, stronger product and mild weather over the past weekend is giving Broadway first-runs a somewhat better tone this stanza despite a plethora of extended-run bills. Steady rain most of last Thursday (10) put a dent in trade in all houses that day, but favorable weather Saturday-Sunday brought more encouraging business for many first-run theatres.

Standout, of course, is "Greatest Show on Earth," with stageshow, at the Music Hall. Opening Thursday (10), Cecil B. DeMille opus is heading for big $145,000 or better in first week, with every indication of an unusually long run. Patrons who stayed through more than one show slowed up turnover Saturday-Sunday, although the Hall has trimmed its stageshow to a minimum because of the lengthy picture.

"Model and Marriage Broker," with stageshow headed by Alan Dale and Beatrice Kraft Dancers, is handing the Roxy a big week. House may have been helped some by turnaways at the Hall over the weekend although the picture did well from the start. A big $90,000 is in prospect.

The Park Ave. with "Tom Brown's Schooldays," is disappointing at $7,300 for first week. In the same category is "It's a Big Country" at the Trans-Lux 52d St. "Bonnie Prince Charlie" hit a nice $7,500 on first week at the T-L 60th St.

"Detective Story" continues in smash fashion, landing $20,500 in 10th week at the Mayfair. "Quo Vadis" is following up its first week of continuous-run, lower scale, at the Astor with a great $33,000 for second frame of this policy.

"Double Dynamite," with stageshow headed by Tony Bennett, held to okay $55,000 in third round at the Paramount after great takings in first two weeks. "Death of Salesman" continues in the chips with $20,500 likely for fourth session at the Victoria.

Capitol, Globe, State, Warner and Paramount are coming in with new bills this week.

Louisville, Jan. 15.

Patrons of downtown houses are turning to theatre-going in increasing numbers as the year 1952 progresses. Excellent product on tap at first-runs may account for part of this. "Blue Veil" at the Rialto is pulling nicely but the real new champ is "I'll See You in My Dreams" smash at the Mary Anderson. "Flame of Araby" at the State is okay.

Estimates for This Week

Kentucky (Switow) (1,100; 54-75)—"Bright Victory" (U) (1d wk). Off to $2,500. Last week, bumper $4,500.

Yank Films Still Dominate Aussie Cinemas; British Seek More Dates

Sydney, Jan. 8.

Apart from topflight J. Arthur Rank films, the Aussie film theatres to start 1952 (and it will probably be the same story thruout the year) are dominated by American product in the keys, nabes and country spots. Early quality upbeat, as presently evidenced, points to a lush year for a majority of Down Under cinemas. General opinion here indicates that the New Year will see fewer empty seats than in 1951. Circuit toppers of the calibre of Norman B. Rydge, of Greater Union Theatres, and Ernest Turnbull, of Hoyts, have stated that given good product, the Aussie cinemas will have little to fear from any other brand of entertainment. (Australia has no TV yet and won't have for some years). Both Rydge and Turnbull have geared their respective loops on nation-wide specialized advertising-exploitation campaigns to sell films irrespectively of where produced.

Current lineup is one of the strongest seen here in a long time and includes "Show Boat" (M-G), playing four houses; "Mr. Belvedere Rings Bell" (20th), "David and Bathsheba" (20th), "Double Crossbones" (U), "Get It Wholesale" (20th), "The Thing" (RKO), "Alice in Wonderland" (RKO), "When Worlds Collide" (Par), "Lorna Doone" (Col), "Prince Who Was Thief" (U), "Trio" (BEF), now in third month; "That's My Boy" (Par), "Browning Version" (BEF), in second month; "On Riviera" (20th) and "Francis Goes to Races" (U).

British distribs will make a real bid this year to capture screens from Yank product. British Empire Films, handling all J. Arthur Rank pix here, already has two outstanding winners in "Trio" and "Browning Version" with "Lavender Hill Mob," "Pool of London," "Hotel Sahara," "Where No Vultures Fly," "Encore," and "White Corridors" coming up.

Associated British, via 20th-Fox, has scheduled 'The Dancing Years," "Happy Go Lovely," "Laughter in Paradise," "Tom Brown's Schooldays" and "Three Men and a Girl" plus several indie Britishers. Toppers on the London Films' schedule include "Outcast of the Islands," "Mr. Denning Drives North," "Tales of Hoffmann," "Cry Beloved Country" and "Gone to Earth." Of course, British pix will be aided by the 15% quota.

Yank Pix Top Grossers Last Year in Scotland; 'Caruso,' 'Samson' Score

Glasgow, Jan. 8.

American pix grossed the most coin at Scottish film boxoffices during 1951. Technicolor musicals and spectacle films were the biggest hits with "Annie Get Your Gun," "Great Caruso" and "Samson and Delilah" rated among the top 10. British pix showed low coin grosses. Among the few to do well here were "High Treason," "The Mudlark," "Laughter in Paradise" and "Tales of Hoffmann."

U. S. comedies that did solid biz were "The Jackpot," "Lemon Drop Kid" and "City Lights." Other moneymakers included "All About Eve," "Rio Grande" and "Iron Man." The French film "Manon" was a top draw in Glasgow. Other Continental pix which set records were "Keep Your Eye on Amelia" and "La Ronde."

Snares French 'Caroline'

Commercial Pictures, distributors of the controversial French film, "La Ronde," this week acquired U. S. distribution rights to "Edouard et Caroline." Gallic import is a UGC production starring Daniel Gelin and Anne Vernon. Jacques Becker directed.

Previously Commercial picked up U. S. release rights to another French picture, "Cheri." Directed by Pierre Billon, it stars Jean Desailly and Marcell Chantal. In another deal Walter Bibo's Excelsior Pictures secured "Maitre Apres Dieu" from Silver Films for the American market. Pic is based upon the Jan de Hartog play, "Skipper Next to God."

Italo Distrib by 1 U.S. Co. For Count Gallo's Product

Rome, Jan. 8.

Count Nazareno Gallo, who owns and operates the Gallo Film Co. (Italy), plans to produce two or three films annually in Italy, but in the future will confine distribution to one American company. He recently set a deal whereby Metro will distribute "The Forgers" throughout the country. Film stars Fosco Giachetti and Doris Duranti.

Gallo's Film's "Northern Barrier," also made for the 1950-51 season, was distributed by J. Arthur Rank It stars Louis Trenker, Emedeo Nazzari and Marianne Hold. Both of these pix now are in N. Y., where they will be screened for possible distribution by a U. S. company.

Swedish Censors Ban 14 U.S. Pix

Stockholm, Jan. 8.

The Swedish State Censorship Board (Statens Biografbyra) banned 14 films during 1951. Two of them, "Rawhide" and "Great Missouri Raid" (Par), later were okayed after some cutting. The 12 films still banned are "Kansas Raiders" (U), "Dial 119" (M-G), "Under the Gun" (U), "Highway 301" (WB), "Unknown Island" (Indie), "The Enforcer" (WB), "Guilty of Treason" (UA), "He Ran All Way" (UA), "The Hoodlum" (UA), "Double Deal" (RKO), "The Whip Hand" (RKO) and "His Kind of Woman" (RKO). All of these films wer produced in the U. S.

"Guilty of Treason" and "The Whip Hand" reported were nixed because of anti-communistic themes while most of the others were gangster or westerns with too many killings to please the Swedish censors.

Several films were passed only after numerous cuts. Often this scissoring resulted in protests when the pix were shown. For instance, the French film, "Under Paris Heaven," has a surgical operation on a human heart and this plays a great part in the story. But the censors clipped all such scenes, and the public protested when the pio was shown. Protests also were loud when "Guilty of Treason" was banned, reviewers and observers declaring that "the Swedish people would not lose anything by learning the real facts about the countries behind the "Iron Curtain."

LUSH LONDON SEASON FOR DUNHAM DANCERS

London, Jan. 15.

The Katherine Dunham Dancers look set for another lush London season. More than three years ago they did turnaway biz at the Prince of Wales, and now, at the Cambridge, under the management of Peter Daubeny, they opened last Tuesday (8) in sock style.

Although, since then, many other dancing troupes have come to town, none has made a comparable impact. In style, performance, rhythm and presentation, this company stands high above the others. The routine with its Brazilian arrangements, its dramatic voodoo number and its "Americana" sequence, is exceptionally high-grade. Colorful costuming is neatly touched off by Robert Nesbitt's expert lighting.

Show is scheduled for at least three months at the Cambridge, before going tour through England.

Gomez Set for 2 in Mexico

Mexico City, Jan. 8.

Fernando Fernan Gomez, Spanish star, has been inked by Emilio Tuero, Spanish pic producer here, to make two films in Mexico this year at the rate of $5,500 for the pair.

Jose Diaz Morales will direct the pix, still untitled. Alma Delia Fuentes will be the femme lead.

Negrete Wins Gold Medal

Mexico City, Jan. 8.

Jorge Negrete, film and radio actor and secretary of the National Actors Union, has been given medals numerous times in his film roles. And now for the first time in his career, he was awarded a gold medal as a defender of Mexico by the Defenders of the Republic. Award was made at a ceremony at the National Palace.

Negrete holds the grade of captain in the Defenders of the Republic, an organization similar to U. S. war veteran organizations.

'Folies Bergere' Quits London Hipp Soon With U.S. Legiter to Follow

London, Jan. 8.

Bernard Delfont's "Folies Bergere Revue," which Val Parnell has been running at the London Hippodrome for the last two years with profitable intake, is vacating the Hipp this spring. Although a moneymaker, Parnell feels that house should resume its once-nightly policy, which it always operated till the "Folies," so as to maintain its prestige.

But Parnell will continue to play the Delfont Parisian revue in one of his West End theatres. Present arrangements are for that show to go to the Prince of Wales Theatre in its usual twice-per-night format. It is expected to follow Parnell's "Peep Show," starring the Wiere Bros. and Sue Carson, which has just been transferred from the London Palladium. It likely will stay till end of April or early May. Show will be an entirely new version with a complete change of cast.

Although successor yet has been decided on for the Hippodrome, it is understood that it will likely be an American show in conjunction with Jack Hylton, either "Call Me Madam" or "Guys and Dolls." Hylton recently acquired the English rights to both.

ONLY 2 U.S. FILMS ON BBC PIX BALLY TV'ER

London, Jan. 15.

First of the new British Broadcasting Corp.-TV features, planned in cooperation with the picture industry to boost new product, has its initial airing over the London-Midland-Northern wavelengths on Jan. 17. Series, which will be aired fortnightly, is entitled "Current Release." The first will contain excerpts from six pictures, four being British-made.

Films selected for the first program are "Where No Vultures Fly" (GFD), "Lady Godiva Rides Again" (BL), "Encore" (GFD), "I Want You" (RKO), "Magic Box" (BL), and "Cyrano" (UA). Two of the pix are scheduled for Gaumont release, another two will have an outlet on the Associated British circuit, one is being screened in the Odeon group, and the sixth, "Cyrano," is having an independent release.

When compiling the first program, the BBC had selected "American in Paris" and "Lullaby of Broadway," but for reported technical reasons they were not available at the required time.

Govt. Grant of $476,000 For German Pix Prod.

Hamburg, Jan. 1.

The Hamburg Buergerschaft (state assembly) has approved a government plan to grant $476,000 for financing film production in the 1951-52 season. The action brought the amount of credits granted to date up to $1,309,000.

The government plans to finance eight pix with its credits, but 10% of the total being set aside for backing cultural film producers. On the average $47,600 credits are usually granted for individual pix, or about 25% of the production cost. Germany's two largest production companies, Real Film and Junge Film Union, are located here. It was believed they would get most of the credits, with the likely inclusion of Pontus Film, a smaller production company also in Hamburg.

All-Industry Setup to Iron Out Brit. Film Problems Stalled by CEA

London, Jan. 15.

The plan to create an all-industry panel to achieve unanimity on major trade problems appears headed for defeat or sweeping revision. The original idea, conceived at a meeting of four trade associations last month, envisaged employment of a full-time secretary, drawn from outside the industry. The new body was to be wholly financed from the proceeds of the Eady fund.

The proposal was referred to the four associations for their comments, and the first reaction has come from exhibitors. The Cinematograph Exhibitors Assn. general council at its meeting last Wednesday (9) flatly turned down the suggestion that Eady Fund money should be used to subsidize the new organization. Apart from opening the door for the creation of other trade organizations, it feared it might perpetuate the present levy, which, under the last agreement, is restricted to a three-year period.

Secondly, the CEA objected to a full-time secretary on the grounds that there would not be enough work to justify one, and suggested the selection of a part-time worker drawn from within the industry.

In view of the limited budget required to run the organization, the CEA considered it within the means of the four associations to provide the necessary funds.

Some of the administrative proposals for the proposed new committee were endorsed by the CEA. They found favor with the suggestion that the chairman should hold office for a full year instead of the office rotating among the four organizations from meeting to meeting. It also agreed with the proviso that action on behalf of the new panel could only be taken when there was complete unanimity among the constituent organizations.

Eckman Sees Strong Pix Winning New Patrons

London, Jan. 15.

Criticism from theatre operators on the policy of extended-runs set by Metro for "Great Caruso" was answered by Sam Eckman, Jr., company's local topper when he received a deputation from exhibitors.

Explaining that extended-runs were only adopted occasionally for pix of such calibre as "Caruso," Eckman claimed that the effect of the policy had been to draw many people to the theatre who were not regular patrons. He also pointed out that in all cases in which subsequent-runs had been agreed, exhibs had been notified of the position before confirming contracts.

NFFC's Fate Up To British Govt.

London, Jan. 15.

The new Conservative government will have to decide within the next few weeks whether it intends to prolong the life of the National Film Finance Corp. The State-owned films bank, set up under the Labor administration in 1948, has virtually exhausted the $17,000,000 already allocated and consequently is being compelled to restrict its activities.

Of its initial capital, half was diverted to the Alexander Korda group of companies. Although the interest has been paid regularly there have been no capital repayments. The remainder of the coin was mainly distributed to finance independents.

The day the House of Commons recessed last July, Sir Hartley Shawcross, then the Board of Trade prexy, promised a further ($5,600,000) advance to the NFFC. To implement that promise a minor measure of legislation was necessary, but the Labor government never had the opportunity to introduce the bill.

Since the return of the Conservatives, neither the Chancellor of the Exchequer nor the BOT prez have indicated whether they will hand out this additional cash. However, Tom O'Brien, M.P., and secretary of the National Assn. of Theatrical & Kine Employees, huddled with the new BOT chief, Peter Thorneycroft. The union leader discussed the serious situation of British film production and underlined the need for extra coin for the Finance Corp. NFFC supporters even so may have a tough time trying to squeeze the new government out of more money.

'SQUARE' IN LONDON FOLD AFTER 4 MONTHS

London, Jan. 15.

Prince Littler's $100,000 musical, "Rainbow Square," which opened at the Stoll last Sept. 21, folds at the end of next week (26). It had done little more than average biz since its inception and the run was prolonged in the hope that it would eventually attracts a wide enough audience.

Show opened originally with two Broadway vocalists, Martha King and Gloria Lane. Former left the cast before the end of last year and returned to N. Y. Sonnie Hale, who had a leading role, left the cast last month to fulfill a pantomime engagement. "Rainbow Square" has a score by Robert Stolz with the book and lyrics written by Guy Bolton and Harold Purcell.

Rome, Jan. 8.

Italian director Vittorio DeSica, recently returned from Dublin, where he received an award from the Catholic Guild of Scenic Arts. Award was a statuette of St. Patrick. Dublin Guild gives six statuettes each year to outstanding persons in various art fields.

De Sica announced that Cesare Zavatti, who writes all his scripts, is preparing his next, "My Italy." Production starts in March.

2d Rank London House Swings to Continental Films; 4 Pix Lined Up

London, Jan. 8.

For the second time within a few weeks, one of Rank's West End theatres has been leased to show Continental pix. The latest deal involves the Marble Arch Pavilion which has been taken over on a three-month tenancy by Archway Distributors. Last month it was announced that the New Gallery had been leased on a long term pact, the Regent Street house changing to its new policy last Thursday (3) with the preeming of the Italian pic, "Le Citte Si Difende."

The Archway deal is restricted to three months because of the inability of the distributors to meet the British quota requirement of 30% which the theatre has to fulfill. It will start its new policy Jan. 17 with the English-speaking film version of the Italian-made, "Les Miserables," starring Valentina Cortesa. A Sylvano Mangano picture, "Fugitive," and "The Devil is a Woman," in which Maria Felix is starred will follow.

If the policy proves successful, it is likely that Archway will negotiate another short term lease later in the year.

Mex Film Bank Tightens Reins on Immoral Pix

Mexico City, Jan. 8.

Harsh experience of pix that could get few playdates at home or abroad, particularly in the U. S., and the move by the U. S. Legion of Decency to ban Mexican films that fail to meet its moral standards, has prompted the film trade's bank, the Banco Nacional Cinematografico, to crack down on questionable themes. It will not provide one centavo for pix it considers immoral in any way. Bank's conception of film immorality covers blue stories, dialog, action, staging, costuming, and in any way offending generally accepted morals and good taste.

Producing decent but entertaining films will enable Mexico to recoup losses in Mexico and abroad resulting from the production of many cheap and bawdy films, the bank is convinced.

Living Costs Menace Aussie Pix B.O.; Offset Seen in More Good U.S. Films

By ERNEST TURNBULL
(Managing Director, Hoyts Theatres, Ltd., Australia)

Sydney, Jan. 2.

Exhibition in Australia faces the tremendous task in 1952 of increasing attendances in spite of the economic forces that threaten to reduce them. Superficially, prospects appear favorable. Out of a total population of some 8,000,000, Australian wage and salary earners number nearly 3,000,000, with an estimated 125,000 vacant jobs waiting to be filled.

Australia's overseas trade has never flourished so spectacularly. Income from exports in 1950-51, compared with the preceding year, soared by £350,000,000 to nearly £1,000,000,000, and official primary producer organizations expect the market to remain strong and become even more stable in 1952.

Could any picture be more reassuring? On the surface—no; but on simple analysis, one is reminded that all that glitters is not gold.

The villain in the story is the cost factor. Living costs in Australia (to quote official figures) showed a greater percentage increase during the 1951 fiscal year than in any country in the world except France.

Pay envelopes have bulged, but their real value has been undermined by the inflationary condition with which the Australian economy has been infected since 1948. Essential foodstuffs and clothing, household requirements of all kinds, transport, education, direct and indirect taxation — prices for all these things are constantly on the rise and individual incomes are hard-pressed to keep the pace.

How does all this affect the exhibition industry?

Operating Costs Up

Firstly, non-essentials must give way to essentials. It may be argued that entertainment is essential to a satisfactory standard of living, but at best it must run second to food, clothing, housing and transport. The entertainment industry can only hope to receive a proportion of what is left over from the worker's wage, not from the wage itself.

Secondly, wage increases, a consumer demand far in excess of goods, and production costs generally have forced up theatre operating costs to staggering levels. The last basic wage adjustment of 14 shillings added about £150,000 ($337,500) per annum to the industry's wages bill alone. Add to that the effect this adjustment has on production costs (and therefore consumer prices) and the degree of the burden shows crystal clear. Basic wage adjustments are fixed quarterly. Another is due in December-January—another £150,000 (and perhaps more) for the industry to carry in wages.

That living costs will continue to increase during 1952 is certain. Although his September budget was prepared as an anti-inflationary measure, the federal treasurer candidly admits this. Other legislation designed to halt inflation — such measures as restricted credits, capital issues control, restrictions on mortgages, hardened hire purchase repayments and the "draining off" of money in the public's pocket through heavier direct and indirect taxation — may curb the inflationary spiral but not stop it.

The real solution, of course, lies in the quality of film we receive from Hollywood, in particular, and from Great Britain. As a dual-feature country, Australian exhibition has been embarrassed by production policies which have affected the output of B features, numerically and qualitively.

Inferior B features are definitely discouraging patronage in this country and reducing the length of run to be expected from the A feature they support.

We all know that nothing that exhibition can do — in terms of marketing, presentation, service, theatre attractiveness and public relations—could be so beneficial as a supply of outstanding attractions to the industry the world over. Six to 10 more films each year of the calibre of "On the Riviera," "The Great Caruso," "Cheaper by the Dozen," "The Wooden Horse," "Treasure Island," "All About Eve," "The Third Man" — and 90% of exhibition's troubles in Australia would be solved.

Brit. Would Place 16m Under 35m Pix Setup

London, Jan. 8.

A project to bring sub-standard film shows within government control has been submitted to the Home Office by the Magistrates' Assn., which asks for extension of censorship and safely rules to 16m exhibitions. Around 600 sub-standard exhibs are operating in Great Britain, but none is governed by the 1909 Cinematograph Act which controls screenings in public theatres.

The MA is also urging the Home Office to ban moppets under the age of five from picture theatres and to refuse admission to youngsters from five to seven unless accompanied by an adult. The same provision is proposed for children under 12 at London shows. Similar proposals were made last year by a departmental committee on children in the cinema, and these are now being examined by Home Office experts.

Italo Film Prod. Hits Winter Low

Rome, Jan. 8.

Italian film production will slump to the year's lowest point this month and in February. While only last November, there were some 36 pix in some stage of production, there are only 15 now in work.

Part of this decline stems from the fact that the greater part of Italian films are made during the non-rainy period because producers depend upon natural sunlight for a major portion of footage. Then there are the festas and holidays during December which does not promote steady film production. The post Christmas season, followed by Carnival season, causes another national let-down. With other producers, it is a matter of simple economics. They are waiting for the revenue from their products, which were finished during the last quarter.

Five films are now in work, while 17 are planned for January. And only five are set to go before the camera in February.

Scarcity of Native Pix Alarms British Exhibs Because of Quota Setup

London, Jan. 15.

Exhibitors are becoming alarmed at the scarcity of British product and fear that insufficient films will be available to meet their quota requirements in the second half of current quota year beginning April 1.

The quota currently stands at 30%, but under the 1948 Films Act it has to be fulfilled in each half-yearly period. In the first half of the year the major circuits, at any rate, will be on the right side of the law and most indie managements, particularly those with modified quotas, will come very close to their legal obligations.

According to information compiled by the Cinematograph Exhibitors Assn., however, it seems likely that the situation will change drastically in the coming months. The position was considered by the association's officers, who had at first contemplated submitting a report to the board of trade.

Subsequently, they considered their case could be presented better by the exhibitor reps on the Films Council. Hence, their five members on that panel are to be briefed by the association.

O'Brien Urges Plan for U.S. Firms To Make More Films in Britain

London, Jan. 15.

Steps to persuade American companies operating in Britain to increase their film-making activities in this country, were suggested to the Board of Trade prez, Peter Thorneycroft, by Tom O'Brien, M.P., when he headed a deputation yesterday (14) on behalf of his organization, the National Assn. of Theatrical & Kine Employees.

A similar plea was made by O'Brien last summer, when he headed a delegation to Thorneycroft's predecessor, Sir Hartley Shawcross. Also, on that occasion, O'Brien advocated the formation of an Anglo-American films council and he reiterated this idea at yesterday's confab.

O'Brien's conception of the new council is that it would act as a negotiating body for film trade agreements with Hollywood, rather than having such pacts negotiated (as they are at present) directly between the BOT and foreign film interests.

As safeguards for British production, the union topper sought assurances that no studio would be sold or dismantled. He also urged a longterm financing plan spread over three years to support British producers. Figure suggested by O'Brien is around $28,000,000.

BBC's Sutherland To U.S. as Tele Liaison

London, Jan. 8.

Alec Sutherland, TV program organizer for the British Broadcasting Corp., planes to N. Y. Jan. 26 to serve under Basil Thornton, the corporation's North American rep in N. Y. His pact with the BBC calls for a three-year stay in New York. During that time Sutherland hopes to work out an exchange system for telefilms from the two countries. At present the situation is confused by union problems involved, but negotiations are in progress with the three artists' organizations with a view to getting clearance on film recordings of plays and other programs.

Mex Film Prod. Off, Quality Up

Mexico City, Jan. 15.

Film production in 1951 now definitely set as hitting total of 99 pix, new low for 15 years and far from the record high of 126 in 1950. Small crop last year is regarded as reflecting the trend to quality to conform with President Miguel Aleman's desire for only quality productions and films that would entertain everywhere as well as the grim experience with big stockpiles of films that get few playdates. Sharpening competition from U. S. films in Mexico plus credit tightening for back pix dates that screen productions also figured in the production downbeat.

Although local pic production was off last year, quality of films was apperently higher because 107 native productions were released in Mexico, all of the 99 produced plus eight of 1950 vintage.

Trade scoffs at the beef of some producers that 1951 production sagged because of too few cinemas. Trade contends that the truth is that there are already too many film houses.

Longhair Talent Seen Doing a Dive in Arg.

Buenos Aires, Jan. 8.

Concert managements are treading warily in plans for booking long-hair talent for Argentina this year. On one hand they have a hunch that the booming biz enjoyed for the last five years is no longer around and that an economic depression will make it impossible for Argentine music lovers to pay $10 for concert admission as last season. On the other hand, depreciation of Argentine currency makes it practically impossible for them to book concert performers who demand dollar payment plus transportation expenses and taxes. The $8,000 fee when multiplied by 27 for conversion into pesos represents such an astronomical sum that concert managers or theatre operators are unable to see any profit.

The singing fraternity finds it can earn more money by confining its activities to Italy. So there is marked reluctance by opera singers to accept Argentine engagements. This makes the Colon management all the more anxious to line up good concert material

Several local musical organizations are trying to persuade Britain's Sir Malcolm Sargent to visit Argentina in 1952. His first visit in 1950 was a brief one, but a great success. The British Institute, which takes care of the maestro's Latin-American booking from a prestige-for-Britain angle, reckons that he will not have time to come as far south as Argentina.

At the present time the only definite bookings are those of ba-[illegible] Fabien Sevitzky, who has been signed exclusively for the official state radio outlet's symphony unit. Maurice Rosenthal, who already made a big hit in 1951, is another conductor signed plus a new maestro from Europe by the name of Paul Kleckai.

In order not to make their visits too frequent, pianists Artur Rubinstein, Alexander Brailowsky and Jose Iturbi, are eliminating a South American tour in 1952.

Vienna, Jan. 8.

The feud between Helene Thimig Reinhardt and Ernst Lothar, which broke out when the Salzburg Festival Committee announced that Lothar would restage the traditional Reinhardt-Hoffmannsthal production of "Everyman" for the 1952 season, is growing in intensity. Reports here are that Lothar is experiencing difficulty in getting major stage and screen names to accept "Everyman" roles with Mrs. Thimig apparently swinging her artistic and political influence to get friends to turn down parts. The Reinhardt widow, who has directed and played a lead in "Everyman" since the war, herself rejected Lothar's offer to continue her role as last year.

Paula Wessely, top player whose postwar career has been hampered by previous pro-Nazi film activities, and a close friend of Mrs. Thimig, is also reported to have nixed a major part. Albin Skoda, Burgtheater member who was offered the role of "death," played last summer by Ernst Deutsch also said "no," as did Franz Boheim and the German actor Gustav Grundgens. Lothar has no comment on all this. Mrs. Thimig stands pat on her published blast against the committee and Lothar for allegedly planning to "violate the Reinhardt tradition." Show world here is happily awaiting the fight of the century between now and the July production deadline.

Final plans for the 1952 Salzburg program include, in addition to raised prices for all events, concerts led by Wilhelm Furtwangler, Clemens Krauss, Raphael Kubelik, Igor Markewitch and Victor de Sabata. The opera slate will include "Magic Flute," "Othello," "Don Pasquale" and world preem of the late Richard Strauss' last work 'The Loves of Danae." On the dramatic side there are to be, in addition to "Everyman," a production of Moliere's "Misanthrope," directed and starred in by Gustave Grundgens and a Nestroy work directed by German Axel von Ambesser.

London, Jan. 8.

The Russians are prepared to buy a number of British films for showing in the Soviet Union, but on their terms. Terms asked include a reciprocal agreement, giving at least 300 major play-dates for Russo pix. Negotiations were opened some months back by Concorde Distributors with J. Arthur Rank. Intimated that the Russkis would be interested in films like "Hamlet," "Henry V," "Passport to Pimlico" and "Seven Days to Noon."

charging exhibs a per footage fee for every film screened.

Admitting its factual error, the Sun said that the point was not whether or not censorship gained or lost money for the state. "The point is," the newspaper stressed, "that Maryland officially censors all newsreels, animated cartoons and feature pictures, and censorship of this type is as unnecessary as it is abhorrent."

Sun's editorial was prompted by a recent controversy revolving around the showing of "Dante's Inferno" at the Fine Arts Theatre, operated by Walter Gettinger. Gettinger had neglected to obtain the state seal and showed the film over an entire weekend. He got the seal on Monday for the version he showed. Traub, as chief censor, wrote Gettinger asking for an explanation for the earlier showing without the seal. He received no reply and therefore got a show-cause summons for Gettinger, who claimed that he believed that the matter would be taken care of by the Motion Pictures Owners of Maryland.

After a session in Central Police Court, Magistrate Marshall A. Levin dismissed the show-cause summons. Traub protested to the end, charging "Don't make him (Gettinger) innocent and the board guilty. Since I've been before you I feel as if I've been the one on trial—me, a state official." During the hearing Magistrate Levin indicated that he thought the law establishing a censorship board was unconstitutional.

Charges 'Protection' Money

Ottawa, Jan. 15.

Film censorship fees, which add $500,000 a year to Canadian distribution costs, "amount to a form of 'protection' money," George Hillyard Robertson charges in the Jan. 15 issue of Maclean's, Canada's leading general magazine.

"By paying censorship fees," says Robertson, "he (the distributor) is assured that his product will never get him personally into any kind of legal trouble and, considering that he passes on the cost to the movie patrons, anyway, it's a fairly satisfactory arrangement. The only person who should be unhappy is the customer . "

The writer contrasts the distributors' attitude in Canada with "their fierce and militant position in the United States. There the same companies spend millions annually fighting every attempt to increase existing censorship. They point with pride to their Hollywood production code (which Robertson later cites as ample protection against moral harm, with further censorship unnecessary). "They demand the same freedom which is accorded the press, stage, radio, television and other entertainment media."

Robertson quotes "one prominent Canadian movie man" as describing Canadian moviegoers as "victims" of one of the most arbitrary, unnecessary and expensive systems of motion-picture censorship ever devised," and says that the censor, "although his salary may run anywhere up to $6,000 a year, requires no specific qualifications to perform his duties. He gets his job either through the provincial civil service or as an unabashed political handout."

Robertson, however, sees impending TV in Canada crashing through and toppling this censorship wall. "Censors," he says, "are already worried that if the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. can 'play' films without first submitting them to censorship, the commercial theatre operators would then be entitled to do the same. Further, they can be sure that CBC will not look kindly on the cost and inconvenience of having each of its television films passed by eight separate censor boards before telecasting it coast to coast."

Loew Decree

the so-called "spin-off" section of the Revenue Act of 1951 permits continuance of the parent organization without tax burdens.

WB's reorganization plan, which already has been approved by stockholders, had called for setting up two separate companies. However, the board of directors now favors establishing only the one new company for exhibition, and a new plan may be mapped and sent to stockholders for another approval.

New Temporary Snags On Loew's Judgment

Washington, Jan. 15.

The Loew's antitrust judgment, disclosed last week as wrapped up and ready for submission to the New York trial court on Jan. 23, has apparently run into one or more slight snags and might not be offered to the court for several days after that date. This was disclosed indirectly here yesterday (Mon.) when advance copies of the proposed judgment were not made available to the press.

The original plan was to release copies so that the facts could get to parties that might want to intervene when the decree is offered to the court. This is a fairly customary procedure in the Justice Department. However, it was explained that the documents would not be given out until today because the Government was giving the details a final checking. Then, later, it was learned that the proposed judgment might not be ready for advance press airing until some time next week—"at the earliest."

Thus, it would be necessary to ask the New York court for a later date to receive the decree proposals. There was no comment about what might be wrong but it is believed to be only minor technical details in drafting the document.

Rome, Jan. 8.

Over $1,300,000 has been turned over by the Italian government film heads to American majors for the last quarter. Under the terms of the existing Italo-American film trade agreement, 50% of the American companies' blocked earnings must be melted at the end of each quarter; 37% is transferred to N. Y. banks in favor of the various companies while 12½% reverts to the Italian Film Export Assn., an organization set up when the accord was signed. Actually, the money is not in hand yet.

Formal procedure consists of the Motion Picture Assn. of America making application, followed by normal routine. Having been signed by the various agencies, it goes to the Ufficcio di Cambi (Exchange) where the lire amounts are transferred into dollars, and credited to the individual company accounts. The routine measures should take about two weeks.

Towards the end of each quarter, it is necessary to repeat the procedure of computing the return of the preceding three months. However, now that the Italians see how the system is operated, it is becoming a matter of formality only.

Roughly computing the amounts for the individual companies, the list is: Columbia, $120,000; Metro, $470,000; Paramount, $110,000; RKO, $26,000; 20th-Fox, $420,000; Universal, $20,000; Warner Bros., $140,000, and Republic, $3,500. This makes a total of over $1,309,000 for N. Y. accounts.

Denver, Jan. 15.

The $1,000,000 suit for treble damages of Cinema Amus., Inc., owners of the Broadway, against RKO, Loew's and 20th-Fox, is entering its second week, with most of the time having been taken up with the direct and cross-examination of Harris Wolfberg, president of Cinema Amus. and formerly a district manager with Metro.

Cinema Amus., composed of Harris Wolfberg, his son John and Trueman Rembusch, Indiana theatre owner, made a lease for the Broadway in 1944, while the house was being operated by Fox Intermountain Theatres, and took over the house soon after. Prior to that, Fox Intermountain had been operating mainly as a moveover, getting films that had shown at the Orpheum just previously, with the Orpheum participating in the Broadway profits on such films. Cinema claims that inability to get similar terms and runs damaged the house to the extent of $1,000,000. Defendants claim that after some negotiation the same terms were offered, but Cinema claimed the terms were not the same.

Former Assistant U. S. Attorney General Thurman Arnold, who was head of the Justice Department's antitrust division when the consent decree was obtained, heads counsel for Cinema. Defendants are represented by Frederick W. Pride, N. Y., representing 20th-Fox; James V. Hayes, N. Y., a member of the anti-trust division under Arnold, representing RKO, and Stanley Thompson, also of New York, representing 20th.

The first major difference between counsel was whether to admit evidence outside the 69 weeks covered by the complaint. Federal Judge Lee Knous refused to take a definite stand on the issue, but said he would rule on the admissibility of such evidence as the case progressed, taking into consideration as to whether it concerned the issues. Since then, for the matter of comparison, he has admitted grosses at the Broadway, Denver and Paramount, the latter two being operated by Fox Intermountain. It was shown by such figures that while the Broadway could profitably run films longer, and thus aggregate a larger gross, the Denver could, for the most part, gross about twice as much in an opening week than could the Broadway.

Chiefs of the international departments are frankly downbeat about the signs from principal markets abroad that they will not be able to permit as much money to leave the country as during the past few years. The indications are unmistakable in England and the entire sterling area, France, Italy, Scandinavia and some of the Far and Middle East.

Principal problem is the pressure by the U. S. on the entire non-Communist world to build up its defenses. In England and on the Continent, particularly, armament production and maintenance of armies have already outstripped the ability of the economies to stand the strain.

Losing ground rapidly, dollarwise, these countries are being forced to choose among guns, butter and pictures. There's no doubt which of the three is bound to suffer most in a crisis.

Hope for U. S. Help

Saving factor on which foreign chiefs are counting are anticipated large appropriations by the U. S. Government to help the anti-Commie nations weath the storm. With lots of help in producing arms, the economies of these nations will have greater leeway for butter and pix.

A more remote chance for help is one that prexy Eric Johnston and the member companies of the Motion Picture Assn. of America have not lost sight of. That is the State Dept.'s belated but increasing enthusiasm for showing of U. S. films abroad.

Plea will probably be made by Johnston for direct Government payments to the industry to continue pix into areas where they are badly needed and where they might be cut off by lack of exchange. In the past the industry has sent in films and let blocked money accumulate and, in some cases, has sent them even gratuitously at the request of the Government.

As has been pointed out numerous times, American steel or food processing companies don't give their products away abroad. The Government here pays for them, if need be. Same plea will be made in regard to pix if the State Dept. really feels films should be in a particular country.

Precedence for Aid

There's precedent in the currency convertibility made available to Yank pic companies for shooting their product into occupied Germany, Japan, Austria and Korea. Similar deals could be made for other countries.

Since Britain is by far the U. S. industry's major foreign market, principal concern centres around its financial position. This, as has been noted in the press during the past few months, has been deteriorating rapidly. Latest report indicates that Britain's adverse balance of trade with the rest of the world tripled during 1951. It reached a record £1,120,000,000 (about $3,135,000,000 against £352,000,000 (about $985,600,000) for 1950.

Fortunately for the American industry, its payments are covered by an agreement that runs until next Oct. 1. It is not expected that the British would jeopardize their reputation by defaulting. However, they'll certainly put up a tough battle against renewal at the same terms.

Disney's '51 Net Dips to $429,840

Hollywood, Jan. 15.

Walt Disney Productions showed a consolidated net profit of $429,840 for the fiscal year ended Sept. 29, 1951, prexy Roy O. Disney has announced in his annual report to stockholders. This was equivalent to 65c per share, after payment on preferred dividends, on the 652,840 shares of common stock outstanding.

New figure compares with a profit of $717,542 during the preceding year, equal to $1.06 per common share. Profit for 1951 before Federal taxes amounted to $636,840.

Disney reported that the company's gross income for the 1951 fiscal year was $6,287,539, as against $7,293,849 for 1950 fiscal year. In explaining the gross droppage during the year just closed, exec stated that the 1951 gross figure reflected only slightly the returns from company's highest-cost feature, "Alice in Wonderland," released in July. First cash returns from this were received only one week before end of the fiscal year, he said.

During the preceding year, he pointed out, gross income benefitted heavily from returns chalked up by "Cinderella," which was released in February, 1950.

Statement disclosed that outstanding debentures were reduced by $40,110, totaling $660,210 on Sept. 29 last. This repped a reduction of $703,990 from the original $1,364,200 obligation in 1945.

It was also stated that a long-term serial loan, originally amounting to $1,000,000 in 1948, was reduced by $279,224 during the year and amounted to $57,085 at the year-end. This balance was paid off in December, 1951, when revenues from publications, which constituted the sole security for th loan, had exceeded expectations.

RKO Dissidents

sulted in 1,341,058 shares voting for the opposition group against 1,085,124 for the management.

Balance was swung in favor of Schwartz by the block of 929,020 shares held by Irving Trust, N. Y., in trust for Howard Hughes. There are 3,914,913 shares in all outstanding.

Kresel's Claim

Kresel claimed that the inspectors of election had overruled challenges by the dissidents on about 150,000 shares. He said the counters were biased in favor of the management, which was a reverberation of squawks originally heard at the first of a series of recessed stockholders' conclaves, Dec. 6. At that time, Kresel objected to the election inspectors both being employees of Irving Trust because of the latter's association with Hughes.

Greene associates finally accepted the Irving Trust men, but were allowed "watchers" of their own to oversee the count. As the proxies were tabulated, the watchers made their challenges and were either overruled or not in each case.

Greene watchers then asked at the final stockholders' meeting that the inspectors be directed to make a written report on each challenged proxy. This was refused, which caused Kresel to remark yesterday: "We are in the dark." But the "darkness" is only an official one. Actually, the Greene watchers made their own notes on each disputed ballot.

A major point in the challenges, it is understood, is whether a postmark on the envelope in which a proxy was received should be taken as the date in the event the proxy itself is undated. Under the rules, if a stockholder votes more than once, his last-dated proxy is th one that counts.

Inspectors refused to accept such a date, going back to the last proxy with a date actually on it. Kresel claimed that was contrary to legal rulings on the matter. He said that counting such ballots would have given the Greene contingent a considerable advantage.

Directors elected by the management were Schwartz and RKO Theatres' counsel, Edward C. Raftery. Irving Trust elected Ben-Fleming Sessel and William J. Wardall.

Inside Stuff—Pictures

Council of Motion Picture Organizations is making available to exhibs a reprint of a Sunday feature by Bill Diehl, motion pic editor of the St. Paul Pioneer Press. Diehl's article is headlined "Now It's Television That Has The Headaches. TV Grabs Aspirin as Movies Bounce Back." It points out that the competition of video proved to be the film industry's "best friend."

"I toured Hollywood in 1950, combed it again in 1951, just a fortnight ago," Diehl says, "a difference of night and day. Gone are the jitters, jaunty is the spirit—and with good cause." The 50-year old industry, he notes, has dispelled any shadows of gloom and has come up with pictures "which are continuing to set all-time boxoffice records in theatres the length and breadth of the land."

Diehl points out that the upbeat in film interest is also due to the decline in TV programming as compared to the quality of current picts. Noting the withdrawal of some sponsors because of a steadily gaining skepticism as to TV's effectiveness as a selling agent, Diehl notes: "With a medium such as television, it is axiomatic that when revenue dwindles, quality hurriedly tags along. Video currently continues to sail right along, but the seas are noticeably choppier as some of its biggest accounts appear to be eyeing the exit."

In discussing the mounting concern over TV program content, Diehl says, "As competition for viewers both within and without its field grows hotter, TV has resorted to near drastic ends to keep itself in public focus. Interspersed among the seemingly harmless parade of dancers and acrobats have come the bosom and crime." He quotes Archbishop Murray of St. Paul, who declared that television is having "disastrous result, especially on children," while motion pictures are produced under a self-imposed production code of decency, a condition that causes television circles to shudder.

There's a hot race on to film the George Du Maurier classic, "Trilby," according to claims staked with the Motion Picture Assn. of America's Title Registration Bureau. Film producer-agent Charles K. Feldman, who produced "Streetcar Named Desire" for Warner release, has submitted titles of "Trilby" and "Svengali."

Feldman is unopposed in his claim to the tag "Trilby," but Film Group, Inc., and Warners have priority over him on "Svengali." FGI is headed by Forrest E. Judd. However, Renown Pictures of Britain is likely to roll "Trilby" first this year. Company recently disclosed plans to shoot the venture sometime in March.

Du Maurier novel has been filmed five times. Initial version was lensed by producer Harold Shaw for the London Film Co. in 1914. Equitable Motion Pictures Corp. followed a year later and Maurice Tourneur's World Film Corp. shot it in 1917. First National filmed the yarn in 1923. Story was shot as "Svengali" by Warners in 1931.

Hassle between Howard Hughes and Jean Simmons over a new contract comes down to this: Hughes, who took over the old J. Arthur Rank pact which expires in June, declares he has a verbal agreement with the star for a new deal running to 1956. Miss Simmons' representative, the William Morris agency, says all negotiations for a new contract were called off definitely and decisively last Dec. 2. Meanwhile, the actress owes Hughes three pictures, to be made before June 30, if possible.

Upbeat in television activity is underlined by the Screen Writers Guild bulletin, listing 110 members employed in video writing as of Dec. 15, against 61 a year ago. Eight major studios had 191 writers working, a drop of 15 in a year. Indie activity dropped from an estimated 1950 total of 145 to 90. Metro had 45 on the payroll, 20th, 43; UI, 27; WB, 22; Paramount, 21; Columbia, 20; Republic, 10; RKO, three. Fifty-six members had writer-producer or writer-director pacts.

Perc Lewis, former music arranger at the old Vitagraph Studios, last week won $5,770 on ABC "Break the Bank," a daytime cash-quiz show. Participating on the airer with Mrs. Lewis, he hit the jackpot by correctly naming Sinclair Lewis as the first American to win the Nobel Prize for literature. Lewis, 62, is now in the restaurant business in Paramus, N. J.

February issue of Argosy mag, out tomorrow (Thurs.), gives 20th-Fox's "Viva Zapata!" a 32-page layout including a full-color cover of Marlon Brando, the film's star. Major's publicists call the spread as a "journalistic first of its kind in a nationally circulated publication."

Kramer's Unexpected B'way Hits

which is all to the good so far as Kramer is concerned.

In the case of Boyer, producer signed him months ago for the lead in "The Happy Time." In the interim, the actor went on the road with "Don Juan in Hell," reading of the George Bernard Shaw work, which proved sock. It has already made two forays to Broadway and is due to return when Boyer finishes the pic version of "Happy Time," for which he took a hiatus. Of the four "Don Juan" readers — Cedric Hardwicke, Charles Laughton, Agnes Moorhead and Boyer—Boyer made the greatest individual impression on the critics. Notices he got were smash.

Negotiations with Miss Harris started during the fall, prior to her opening in John van Druten's legiter, "I Am a Camera." She outshone the play in the critics' estimation and has proved such a draw that she has just been elevated to stardom by the producers.

Kramer will use Miss Harris in the role she created on Broadway last year, the part of the 12-year-old, in "Member of the Wedding." Producer will have his script, being prepared by Ben Maddow, ready for shooting in about 60 days.

However, Miss Harris has a run-of-the-play contract in "Camera," which will carry her to May 31. She has not renewed. It is expected that she may make the pic during the summer and return to the show in August.

Release date of the pic version of "Fourposter" is still in negotiation between Kramer and Leah Salisbury, agent for the author. Kramer can send the pic out at any time, under his contract, but since it would undoubtedly kill the b.o. on the legiter, he has agreed to hold off.

Miss Salisbury is pushing for a delay until next year, which would provide an opportunity to wind up the Broadway run and get out one or more road companies. Kramer, in appreciation of the fact that the legit run is good plugging for the pic, has agreed to compromise and wants to release the pic in September.

Mayer-Edward Kingsley, Inc.

"Cry" goes into the Bijou next Wednesday (23). "Garden" follows the present tenant, "Bonnie Prince Charlie" into the Trans-Lux 60th St., probably early in February.

"Cry," which stars Canada Lee, is a serious yarn based on the race problem in South Africa. "Garden," using an all-African cast, is described as "a modern folk comedy with music." It treats the lighter and gayer side of the life of the same people whose problems Paton presents.

"Garden" won top prize at the Edinburgh Film Festival last year. Since it runs only a little over an hour, it is being coupled with another 40-minute pic, "David," which likewise won acclaim at Edinburgh. It was made by Paul Dixon for the Festival of Britain.

Mayer-Kingsley is also handling "David." Mayer is exec v.p. of the Council of Motion Picture Organizations.

obviously no place under circumstances of their contracts for a wild TV camera.

Acad also has the problem of music. American Federation of Musicians would have to waive clearance for such a show. Both this and the player contract clauses are scoffed at by exhibs as meaningless if the industry really were putting effort forth to make the Acad awards the promotional event it could be.

"Obviously," declared a top New York circuit operator, "there's no problem for the major companies in waiving for this occasion the contract clauses that prohibit their players appearing on the air. And as for the AFM block, either Petrillo (AFM prez James C. Petrillo) should be convinced that he should waive his rights for the overall benefit of the entertainment industry or a method should be worked out for paying for the performance.

"Certainly, if the 50 or more houses now equipped with large-screen tele were fed the event they could pay plenty for the show. It would not only fill their theatres and make it commercially profitable, but it would prove a real hypo. The dozen or more pictures that get plugged during the awards would specifically be helped.

"But it is the same old routine," he concluded resignedly. "No one in Hollywood is thinking big enough or far enough when it comes to promotion and public relations. They're taking a two-bit attitude and they shouldn't be surprised when they get a two-bit response to some of their product."

Another angle that might be even harder than the legal ones to overcome is what the TV camera does to a glamor gal when she's not made up to face it. Reportedly, lots of Hollywoodites would duck the awards shindig if they thought they had to face up to a tele lens ungarnished.

Their cry is that rather than selling Hollywood, the TV-ing would create so much disillusionment about favorite personalities it would do permanent harm.

made with French and Italian financing qualify for certain benefits available in both countries.

French industry also got a shot in the arm when the Bank of France stepped in to guarantee a 150,000,000 franc ($335,000) loan to revive the tottering Robert Dorfmann film enterprises. Dorfmann's production outfit, Silver Films, and his distribution organizations— Corona Paris and Corona in the provinces — reportedly overextended themselves and were said to have liabilities of about $1,500,000.

Dorfmann's Illness

Chief reason why Silver and Corona fell into difficulties, it's understood, is due to illness of Dorfmann. Producer-distrib is now recovering at a mountain resort where he's expected to remain for at least two or three more months. Ventura headed a committee of five to help get the firms' production activities back on a solvent basis while Henri Berard headed another committee to smooth out the distribution situation.

Dorfmann, who turned out "Justice Est Fait" (Justice Is Done), a prizewinner last year, owns Silver outright and has a 50% interest in Corona. Latter is the largest domestic distributor in France. In the past three years it's distributed some 85 pictures and currently has about 30 available for release. Pathe reportedly was to absorb Corona, but fresh financing from the Bank of France ended the deal.

Meantime, Ventura has taken over Dorfmann's interest in "Carrosse d'Or" (The Coach of Gold), a Franco-Italian co-production, which will star Anna Magnani. Original deal gave Prince Alliata's Panaria Films of Italy a 70% in[illegible] while Dorfmann had the balance. An adjustment now increases Panaria's investment. Ventura will have distribution rights in French-speaking countries plus Holland and Scandinavia. Picture, incidentally, was to have rolled about six months ago but now is slated to start sometime next month.

Prez of Hoche Productions, Ventura expects to be in the U. S. about two or three weeks to complete final editing and scoring on his recently made "Monte Carlo Baby." He'll also work out a distribution deal for the Western Hemisphere. Musical stars Audrey Hepburn, and features Jules Munshin and Michelle Farmer in its English version.

Upon his return to France, Ventura will place two more ventures before the cameras. First to roll is a Danielle Delorme starrer, "La Jeune Folle" (The Mad Girl of Dublin). It will be followed Feb. 11 with a Fernandel film, "Coiffeur Pour Dames" (Hairdresser for Women).

Skiatron Tests

Zenith paid $50,000, reportedly for aid in getting the D. of J. help.

Skiatron prez also took exception to statements from Par execs, which were repeated in Par prexy Barney Balaban's reply to his letter, to the effect that Skiatron's request for pictures is premature. "It is apparent," Balaban said, "that you do not have as yet any authorization from the Federal Communications Commission to utilize the facilities of Station WOR-TV (indie N. Y. outlet with which Levey has been experimenting on Subscriber-Vision transmissions) to conduct such tests."

FCC Application Pending

According to Levey, however, his application to the FCC is ready for filing but the Commission, before it can act on the application, must know the program content of the tests, the number of pictures to be used, etc. Thus, he said, it will be impossible for him to file with the FCC until he receives full cooperation from the film companies. He claimed, though, that FCC toppers have indicated they'll okay the experiment once he files the necessary information.

In complying with Levey's request for product, RKO prexy Ned E. Depinet said he would cooperate so long as Skiatron gets the necessary license from the FCC and legal clearances from the American Federation of Musicians and other unions. He pointed out, that, while RKO did not charge Phonevision for product, "I desire to defer determining that aspect with you until all the details of your proposal have been formulated."

Balaban, in okaying Par films for the test, asked Levey to furnish a "detailed statement" of the techniques and methods to be followed in the experiment. He also asked for assurances that the public will "in no way be misled" into believing that Par is endorsing or sponsoring the experiment. He also advised that any arrangement to be worked out should include WOR-TV as a third party, on the assumption that the FCC experimental license will be issued to the station and not to Skiatron.

From Metro, Levey received a terse reply from sales veepee Charles M. Reagan to the effect that, "we cannot now comply with your request." Twentieth prexy Spyros P. Skouras, noting that his company did not furnish product for the Phonevision tests, said 20th is putting all its emphasis on theatre TV at this time and so finds it impossible to cooperate with Skiatron. Warner Theatre and Music Hall, while 20th-Fox does about the same with the Roxy and Hall.

M-G dates the Capitol, State and Hall, and currently has the long-running "Quo Vadis" at the Astor.

United Artists in a recent period has gone to Loew's operations. Harry Popkin's indie production of "The Well" played the State, Douglas Fairbanks' "Another Man's Poison" opened at the Loew's nabe circuit and "African Queen," Horizon-Romulus production, is set to bow at the Cap.

While the scrambled nature of bookings has settled to some extent, the competition among the first-run houses for top product and among the film companies for showcases is expected to wax plenty hot when the Loew's, WB and 20th divorcements go through. This will put the Cap, State, Roxy, Rivoli and Warner in the "independent" class with the Par. More spirited bidding for important product is expected to result.

"Friends of Eisenhower" rally would involve the first major TV coin outlay on behalf of a Presidential candidate under NBC's newly-promulgated pattern eliminating henceforth any cuffoing of TV political time, and granting equal video privileges to all comers on a lay-it-on-the-line basis.

Johnston-MPAA

plethora of anti-trust suits pending and still being thrown at them by exhibs their No. 1 problem so far as Johnston is concerned.

If the MPAA chieftain takes the cue, the Association will undoubtedly embark on a large-scale campaign to settle or head off further legal actions by theatremen. Some company execs are understood to have suggested specific steps by Johnston, including use of his personal influence and persuasive character.

Various company officials had all sorts of suggestions for useful activities by the MPAA. While action on the antitrust suits seemed to take the lead, other problems of public relations, assemblage of data, television competition, large-screen TV channels and many others were discussed.

Intensive Sessions

MPAA group generally held sessions with two different companies each day in their efforts to make the rounds within a single week. Meetings generally ran about two hours each.

It was the first time that Johnston and his staffers had ever been in some of the homeoffices. Those that they covered were Warner Bros., Paramount, Metro, RKO, Republic, Columbia and 20th-Fox. Johnston also called personally on Nate J. Blumberg, prez of Universal, who has been confined by illness to his Sherry-Netherland Hotel suite.

Companies generally had on hand their prexy, or, if he were out of town, his top-ranking deputy, plus chiefs of sales, publicity-advertising, legal and fiscal departments. In addition to Johnston and O'Hara, the MPAA contingent consisted of Sidney Schreiber, counsel; Ralph D. Hetzel, N. Y. office manager; John G. McCarthy, director of the International Division; Fred DuVall, treasurer, and Kenneth Clark, public relations chief.

It is understood that the suggestion for the huddles came from the company execs themselves. They are believed indicative of a switch Johnston is in the process of making in personal policy. He'll be paying much more close attention to the Association's day-to-day operations, particularly domestic. It is understood that almost all the comment in the sessions last week was favorable to the international operation, so that Johnston's attentions apparently aren't required there.

New deal apparently grew out of the MPAA boss' announcement early in December that he intended starting on a lengthy series of overseas jaunts Jan. 15. He returned to active MPAA duty only Dec. 1 from 10 months' absence in Government service.

Last word from Johnston on the planned Jan. 15 junket to Latin-America was that if it takes place at all it will be at the end of the month, and for only one week.

The homeoffice sessions were all completely amiable. "There was no direct criticism of Johnston whatsoever. Criticism was only in the implication of what the various execs thought the MPAA should be doing domestically."

Captive of Billy the Kid

producers to use a little ingenuity with their oat operas. This one has much action, aided by Allan "Rocky" Lane's hero performance.

The excuse for all of the hard riding, gun battles and rough-and-tumble fist fights is a race to uncover the secret hiding place of Billy the Kid's long-accumulated bandit gold. Plot would have one believe that the bandit, tore up a map, giving the location of this buried treasure, into five pieces before he died. He gave one piece each to five friends with the understanding that they were to meet on a certain date and then reclaim the hidden riches. Fly in the ointment is that, per usual, one of the cowboy friends, Grant Withers, wants all the coin for himself.

Plot concerns itself with his efforts to steal or bump off various holders of the map pieces so he can snare the works. One of the lucky five, Clem Bevans, suspects as much and calls in the sheriff (Lane), who operates undercover as a cattle detective. The maneuvers to thwart Withers build to the customary climax but with more suspense than usual. While the complications have been piled on rather heavily, director Fred C. Brannon has employed marked skill in maintaining interest. Even the climax provides a surprise twist.

Lane has one of his best cowboy roles despite a minimum of heroics. Only thing to make this completely different from most westerns would be to give it a real love story.

Penny Edwards is comely enough to have made a real heart interest. Besides Withers, Clem Bevans stands out as an elderly ex-carnival man now retired to his ranch. Roy Barcroft is the real heavy as operating cutthroat for the leader of the crew seeking the buried money. Clayton Moore, Mauritz Hugo and Garry Goodwin provide strong support.

In addition to Brannon's fine direction, the film boasts a tight script by M. Coates Webster and Richard Wormser as well as neat photography by John MacBurnie.

Standard Roy Rogers oatuner, his final western for Republic.

Hollywood, Jan. 15.

Roy Rogers Riders

This is the final Roy Rogers western from Republic and stacks up as about average for his entries over the past season. It blends a standard amount of oatuner action, four songs and some trite comedy into 67 minutes of footage. The usual market reaction to Rogers westerns can be expected.

Rogers, U. S. Border Patrol trouble-shooter, is assigned the duty of preventing hoof-and-mouth disease from getting into the States from Mexico. Chore is complicated because Anthony Caruso, fugitive gangster hiding in Mexico, is shipping doubtful beef on the hoof across the line for resale by Roy Barcroft.

Smuggling takes place in sand storms, with heavies letting the sand pile up high enough against the border fence to walk the cattle over. One patrolman is gunned down when he comes upon such a scene. His body is recovered by Rogers but the hero is still getting nowhere until the dead patrolman's son is kidnapped, inadvertently tipping Rogers to the scheme. He rides i with guns blazing and the heavies are handed their just deserts.

Rogers is his usual, likeable self in the heroics, aided by Trigger and Bullets, his educated equine and canine. Presence of Dale Evans in the cast as a rambunctious newspaper gal should help in the market. Pinky Lee's comedy style and the antics handed him as aide to another news gal, Estelita Rodriguez, do not fit this sagebrusher, serving only to slow it down. Miss Rodriguez, Caruso, Barcroft, young Edwardo Jiminez and the others are standard.

The Roy Rogers Riders join the star on the title tune and "Beyond the Great Divide," as well as "Slumber Trail," with Miss Evans assisting on the latter. Miss Rodriguez does "You Never Know When Love May Come Along."

The stock script by Albert DeMond and Eric Taylor, from a story by Sloan Nibley, is filled with dialog cliches and has been given formula direction by William Witney. A standard round of production values are furnished by Edward J. White, and rate okay presentation from the technical staff.

Lawless Cowboys

Standard oater built around gambling fix yarn; for western fans.

Monogram release of Frontier Pictures (Vincent M. Fennelly) production. Stars Whip Wilson; features Jim Bannon and Fuzzy Knight. Directed by Lewis Collins. Screenplay, Maurice Tombragel; camera, Ernest Miller; editor, Samuel Fields. At New York Theatre, N. Y., week of Jan. 7, '52. Running time, 58 MINS.

Jim Bannon	Jim Bannon
Smithers	Fuzzy Knight
Hanson	Lee Roberts
Nora Clayton	Pamela Duncan
Ace Malloy	Lane Bradford
Sheriff	Stan Jolley
Bob Rank	Bruce Edwards
Jeff	Richard Emory
Paul Maxwell	Marshall Reed

"Lawless Cowboys" is right off current front pages though set in stagecoach days. Yarn revolves about a gambling syndicate's attempt to fix rodeo events.

Except for the modern-day twist, the film is a standard oater with sufficient gunplay, brawls and chases on horseback to satisfy the tastes of western film aficianados. Former Texas Ranger Whip Wilson is hired by the Central City Rodeo Committee to investigate a betting ring believed to be bribing top performers to throw certain events. With the aid of Jim Bannon, rider for the Bar Circle ranch, and the local newspaper publisher portrayed by Fuzzy Knight, Wilson succeeds in smashing the gambling ring and saving "a great American sport."

Thesping on the whole is on the plus side, with Wilson and Bannon making acceptable heroes, Fuzzy Knight rendering the comedy relief, and Lee Roberts, Lane Bradford and Marshall Reed appearing as the villains. Only femme in the cast is Pamela Duncan, who provides the slight romantic interest.

Lewis Collins' direction is first-rate, with action the keynote. Ernest Miller's camera work is on the credit side.

Latuko
(DOCUMENTARY—COLOR)

Interesting, although grim in spots, documentary of life among the Latuko tribe in Africa. Exploitable.

Hollywood, Jan. 11.

Producers Representatives, Inc., release Edgar M. Queeny production under sponsorship of American Museum of Natural History. Screenplay, Charles L. Tedford; camera ..filmed in 16m. Kodachrome, prints in Technicolor), Edgar M. Queeny and Fort B. Guerin; sound, Jack Clink; editor, William K. Chulack; narrator, Paul E. Prentiss. Previewed Jan. 9, '52. Running time 56 MINS.

The customs of the Latuko tribe in Africa have been caught by the cameras in an oddly fascinating nature study. Filmed during an expedition into province of Equatoria in the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan in 1950 by Edgar M. Queeny for the American Museum of Natural History, picture at this point is without a regular commercial distribution setup, although having played an eight-week run in St. Louis last spring and opens in Hollywood, Jan. 18, for a special showcasing.

Commercial possibilities are good, if given the right kind of exploitation and booked into theatres ideally situated to push this type of product. Picture bears the label of the Jarville Studios, which is one of the hobbies of industrialist Queeny. Filming was done in 16m. Kodachrome and the 35m prints were processed by Technicolor. Camera work by Queeny and Fort B. Guerin is outstanding, particularly in the action shots, and rarely reveals its amateur origin.

Some audiences will find a number of the filmed Latuko customs are bit too grim, being strictly nature in the raw and savagely primitive. However, the many strong exploitation factors are not sensationalized as such, being offered as interesting information concerning the tribe with which the picture deals. Disconcerting at first, but soon accepted, is the stark nakedness of the muscularly physiqued males. Femmes are only slightly less naked in their waist aprons.

The script by Charles L. Tedford has a slight plot line to carry off the documenting of the Latukos. It concerns a youth readying to become a man and a hunter and the various tribal customs he must undergo. Sequences showing the forcible gouging of two lower molars, a maiming each young male must undergo, the drinking of blood freshly drawn from a cow and similarly grisly customs are presented in matter-of-fact style.

Some 80,000 feet of film was taken on 10 16m cameras during the expedition and will be sut into three separate subjects, of which "Latuko" is the first. Editing on the latter was capably handled by William K. Chulack. Sound was tape-recorded on the scene by Jack Clink, and Paul E. Prentiss does the action-explaining narration.

but others won't have official sanction.

Fact that the Uruguayan government picked up the tab on the Hollywood stars' traveling expenses was welcomed by some of the more economy-minded studios. Meantime, there's still a possibility that MPAA prez Eric Johnston may visit the fete.

Johnston Cancels

Johnston, under original plans was to have arrived in Carrasco, near Montevideo, Saturday (12). Pressure of domestic business forced him to cancel his plans. But it's understood that the State Department looks upon the trip in the nature of of a goodwill gesture that should be made, if at all possible.

Other Hollywood execs expected to be on hand are Phil Reisman, RKO's foreign chief, and Arnold Picker, UA veepee in charge of foreign operations. Reisman is combining a stopoff at the festival with his annual swing through the Latin-American market, as is Picker.

Japan's Daiei Motion Picture Co., producers of "Rashomon," prize-winning film at the Venice Festival, will be well represented at the Uruguayan meet. Slated to attend are Hideo Matsuyama, assistant managing director in charge of production, and Takechiyo, secretary to studio head, M. Nagata, and chief of the foreign liaison department. In addition, Daiei delegation will include two of the company's stars, Sanjyo Miki and Fushimi Kazuko. Besides "Rashomon," firm is also entering "Yukiwariso" in the contest.

John Sutro, George Minter and Trevor Howard will represent the British Film Producers' Assn. Britain's entries are "Christmas Carol," Carol Reed's "Outcast of the Islands" and "Where No Vultures Fly."

Italian industry promised to send a star contingent comprising Silvana Pampani, Elena Varzi, Raf Vallone, Lucia Bose, Cosetta Grecco and Isa Miranda as well as producer Anibal Pares and director Luciana Emmer. Italy's entries are Vittorio DeSica's "Humberto D," "Bellisima," an Ann Magnani starrer; "The Girls from Place d'Espagne" and "Guarda e Ladri."

Expected from France are such stars as Daniel Gelin, Brigitte Auber, Dany Robin and Francois Christophe, plus director Jacques Becker. French entries are Becker's "Casque d'Or;" "Night Is My Kingdom," a Jean Gabin starrer;" "Barbe Bleue," "Dieu Besoin des Hommes" and "Garcon Sauvage."

Assurances have also been received by festival officials that emissaries will be sent from the Swedish, Brazilian and Mexican film industries. Mexican delegation will be headed by actress Maria Felix, who will stop off at the fest enroute to Buenos Aires, where she's due to start a film soon.

Hotels, Niteries Have High Hopes

Montevideo, Jan. 8.

Operators of hotels and niteries at Uruguay's beach resort of Punta del Este are staking high hopes on this year's second film festival. Since Argentine socialites are stymied from holidaying at the Uruguayan beaches because of - change difficulties, Uruguayans have to think up new ways of publicizing their beaches and attracting tourists.

This year affairs have been put in the hands of a National Cultural Committee, headed by Uruguayan sculptor Jose L. Zorrilla de San Martin, and it is hoped to avoid some of the organizational pitfalls that made last year's festival very much of a fun fair but hard on the delegations invited to attend it. Committee is lining up an array of open-air symphonic and ballet entertainments, for an expected flow of international tourists attracted by the big film names.

mulated yet and laughed at a reported Wall Street rumor that U was going to buy the stock of Decca until it had a controlling interest.

Merger studies grow out of Decca's purchase last November of approximately 30% (304,000) of the outstanding shares and option warrants of U. That gives it the largest single block, second being J. Arthur Rank with about 13% (134,900 shares). Aim of Decca in the purchase has been said right along to be eventual merger.

Rank has been repeatedly reported objecting to a merger. Davie said that Robert S. Benjamin, Rank's rep in the U. S. and his rep on the U board, had been sitting in with the exploratory committee. He said that all was friendly, but that in any case, if there were differences of opinion, he thought they'd be squared away without difficulty when John Davis, Rank's principal lieutenant, arrives in the U. S. at the end of this week.

A merger of U and Decca would require approval of the stockholders of both corporations.

is planning on more elaborate promotional campaigns to back them up.

It's understood UA already is on the prowl for an advertising manager to replace Winikus when he is upped to the overall spot. Company also is considering setting up a liaison officer at the h.o. who would deal with all indie producers on the Coast. Others will be added to the N. Y. staff and several exploitation field men will be taken on on a permanent employment basis.

Immediately in view for a spot at UA is Mort Nathanson, now publicity rep for Sam Spiegel's "African Queen." When he winds up this job Nathanson reportedly will be added to the UA payroll. There appears a chance he'll become the liaison between the h.o. and the indie film-makers but this apparently hasn't been decided upon.

Mort Freedgood, who resigned his Paramount post this week, reportedly is another in line for a spot at UA. He had been the top publicity writer at the Par h.o.

stantly in search of the fresh and the new approach." He notes that Universal for the coming year will up its production budget.

Further explanation of U's success is offered by Charles Feldman, U's domestic sales topper, who sat in at VARIETY's interview with Daff. "It's a result of perfect coordination between the studio and the sales staff," he points out. "The people on the Coast pay attention to the views of the sales staff, which usually knows what the public wants. Our sales force is the toughest critic."

Daff indicates that U's product is aimed at providing the greatest mass appeal for every market in the world. "A picture that does well in the United States," he says, "almost invariably does well abroad."

Contrary to general belief, public tastes do not change as rapidly as most people believe, Daff notes. He says there's always a market for good musicals, comedies, action films and gangster dramas. Trends may change perhaps in a decade, he observes, but the history of the industry shows that these types of films invariably make a comeback and become as popular as ever.

WB, U Reports

returns. It's estimated that "Ma and Pa Kettle on the Farm" will wind up its domestic playoff with $2,350,000. "Francis Goes to the Races" is figured at $2,300,000. As reported by VARIETY on Jan. 2, U had 16 releases during calendar 1951 with rentals estimated to exceed $1,000,000 each. So far as big-money pix are concerned, U was fifth on the list, following 20th-Fox, Metro, WB and Paramount, and ahead of RKO, Columbia and United Artists.

U's $2,092,783 for the year ended last Nov. 3 (53 weeks) compared with $1,355,886 for 1950. Provision of $3,300,000 was listed for Federal income and excess profits taxes and $500,000 was put aside for contingent liabilities in the new year. Common stock per-share earnings jumped from $1.14 in '50 to $1.92 in '51.

Taxes in 1950 amounted to only $950,000, partially because U had a tax credit against over-payments in previous years.

Company in '51 cut its bank indebtedness to $3,312,000, representing a drop of $1,741,000. U also bought up $1,190,000 principal amount of its 3¾% debentures, reducing to $3,205,000 the amount in the hands of the public. Aggregate domestic bank debt and 3¾% debentures during the past three fiscal years has been reduced from $15,815,000 to $6,517,000.

U had a cash balance of about $6,750,000 at the end of the '51 fiscal year, an increase of more than $1,000,000 over the previous year.

and no theatreowner can keep his patronage by repeated strong selling that is not backed up with worthwhile merchandise.

"This kind of exhibitor can't stay in business by keeping his house dark part of the time. He must depend on moviegoers who regularly attend the theatre because it is a clean, comfortable and pleasant place to relax in mind and body for an hour or so. Because the movies are wholesome; economical entertainment providing a chance to laugh or to worry over somebody else's trouble for a change.

"When people outside of those who only want to 'sit' down, kill time, or eat popcorn' start buying only the big attractions, then there won't be nearly so many film theatres to exhibit the 'Greatest Shows on Earth,' and the condition won't be nearly as healthy for producers like Mr. DeMille."

distribs. The medium graders simply are uneconomic, it's said. There's a market payoff only for the top "A's" and the true, costly "B's."

Film companies in recent months have found virtually an absence of in-between money-makers. Films, largely, have brought in either smash revenue or unusually low income. Thus, there has been created only the two market grooves.

Exhibs, meanwhile, are expressing little fear so far as their programming needs are concerned. They feel there always will be a sufficient quantity of both top and lower-bracket product. Concerning the second half of their programs, theatremen reason that many films which start out as "A's" on production skeds wind up as "B's" on the market, regardless of the lensing budgets.

Comment from Mitchell Wolfson, president of Theatre Owners of America, is that "not even the best brains in production can turn out a world-beater every time. He hopes the majors will shoot only for top product but takes the view that "their bullets in many cases will fall short of the range. So we will never lack for 'B' pictures."

Example cited by the theatre org chief, who is also president of Wometco Theatres, Miami, was "Arch of Triumph," made by the now-defunct Enterprise Productions. Despite the impressive credits and cast names, including Charles Boyer and Ingrid Bergman, the film turned out to be a "definit minus," recalls Wolfson. He said it "was a secondary feature regardless of the terms asked for it."

that?) Zappy covers more territory in a week than the sole male mink on a mink ranch. He wanders, and the word is used advisedly, all over France, running local amateur hours at local broadcasting stations, then brings each set of local winners to Paris for the big broadcast Thursday. These winners have reached Paris by sheer dogged determination.

What happens to them when they get there should not happen to the dogged. The bad ones, that is to say all of them, get the gong. From the delighted howls and screams of the studio audience, they get the gong broken over their heads. After that, to judge by the increased delighted howls and screams, they are apparently broiled alive over a slow fire. And if Maxie gets his lunchooks on a sweet-old-lady type, there's none of this, "How old are you, dear," and "Here's a lovely orchid for a lovely granny." Granny gets to open her yap, and if the emcee doesn't like her yodeling, he tells her that at her age she ought to have learned to sing on key, and Granny goes to the guillotine, too. Torturing amateurs like this just couldn't happen on a U. S. radio show. Darn it.

Gory Gallic Soap Operas

Again, there is the "roman quotidien," or daily romance. This is not the French version of "John's Other Wife," although that is something he would love to hear. The French daily romance is called "Le Pouce Qui Tue" ("The Thumb That Kills," which has nothing to do with what Lou Holtz used to do).

In the States, a housewife gets to listen to all sorts of uplifting things in daytime radio: wives who go blind as regularly as we go to the dentist; husbands who have strange brain diseases, like no brains. That sort of thing. In France, while she's cooking the dinner, madame gets a double-portion of nice gory murder, with none of these psychological trimmings about what made the killer kill. French murderers kill because they darn well want to. Because they like the sight of blood, maybe. And the housewives apparently like it, too. Or maybe there's another reason why French meat is always rare.

There are also comedy radio programs. Ones that are deliberately written to be funny, that is. You can always tell French humor. It's much louder than unhumor. French comics are great for funny voices. And funny hats. There are several comics who use both funny voices and funny hats. And, sooner or later, they are liable to end up in drag. That is all there is about French comics.

La Hit Parade

But the bulk of the radio shows here are musical shows. French music (pop.) comes in two tempos: rhumba and not-rhumba. The songs divide up about like this: First, American songs with French lyrics. Such as "Le Coffret" (The Thing), "Mon Faible Coeur" (My Foolish Heart), "La Colline Aux Oiseaux" (Mocking Bird Hill), "La Petite Valse" (The Cafe Mozart Waltz from "The Third Man"). About "The Thing," the author of it should have some sort of honorary medal, followed by a quiet funeral. To our knowledge no other songwriter has driven people insane in five languages. We have heard the thing in French, German, Italian, Swedish, and something that sounded like vocal Cuneiform, but probably wasn't.

Then, just to prove their versatility, there are the original French songs. These include things like "Aimer Comme Je T'Aime" (To Love as I Love You), "Domino" (this is about a girl named Domino who was called that, presumably, because she was pretty well spotted), "De Temps En Temps" (From Time to Time), etc. Of these, "Aimer Comme Je T'Aime" is finally crowding "Domino" out of the No. 1 spot. At least we think it is. Here there's no Hit Parade, such as we know it, and, except in some bars in Paris and the larger towns, no jukes. How then is a song hit born? Very simple. First, you write your song. Then you take it to a publisher who welcomes you with open hands. When you put the money into his hands, he publishes your song. Then you start plugging the song yourself. Plenty of Paris cafes have "Nuits de Chanson" (Song Night) when aspiring Berlins get up and sing a medley of their song hits, which is the neatest trick for free entertainment since radio invented giveaways. Then you take your song to the biggest name singer you know, and tell her how good the song will sound if she sings it, how good her pic will look on the cover, and what her percentage of the song's sales will be. If the cut is nice enough, and the song's potentialities potential enough, one singer will be enough per one song. If not, you may have to work out deals with seven or eight, your song cover will look like the Monday morning lineup at the 12th Precinct, and your net profits will be some copies of your own song.

You can do all that, or maybe you get commissioned the way we almost were. There was a w.k. chanteuse down here a while back who thought she'd like some English lyrics. She asked us about writing them. We asked her about the payment for them. She said she wanted to be fair to us. Because we were strangers here, and all, she wouldn't make us pay her any more than half what we usually paid singers to be allowed to write for them, and what did we think of that? We told her; but she did not seem to feel she could do as we suggested as an alternative.

There are, of course, some good things about French radio. So far as we know, Sadie Hertz hasn't been on any show here. And it goes off the air early enough so you can tune in the U. S. Armed Forces station in Frankfurt, Germany, and hear the latest U. S. disks. Or you can wander around the (five) dials and the (one) globe, going from London to Stockholm to Vienna to Budapest. And from Budapest one night we heard a Russian voice announcing in Hungarian that they would now play the English recordings of an American musical: "South Pacific."

We love Europe. It's so European.

Reject Lighter Pic Cans As 'Savings' Since Wt. No Factor in Trucking

Distribution execs this week rejected a suggestion made by a Texas exhibitor that steel cans for film be replaced with a lighter container to effect what he called "transportation savings from 33 to 40%." Proposal was outlined to the Theatre Owners of America last week by Henry Reeve of Menard, Texas, who heads the Texas Theatre Owners, Inc.

Reeve feels that in light of the fact that much of the industry's prints are now on non-inflammable acetate stock there's no reason why "unnecessary heavy cans should be continued to be used in view of the miracles of modern scientific development of plastics, veneers and many lightweight metals."

General attitude of the distribs is that about 90% of all shipments from exchanges to theatres is made by direct truck delivery in which the exhib is charged by the number of packages or cases. Hence weight cannot be considered a factor as when sent by express or parcel post. Moreover, it's argued, a lighter container would not be as durable as the conventional steel cans.

Grist for a Film

Bribery and frauds in the Government which have been exposed during the past three months may provide the grist for a film. Indie producer Edward J. Leven has registered with the Motion Picture Assn. of America a whole series of titles indicating he may take a whack at a pic based on the exposures.

They are "The Political Fraud," "The Government Bribe," "The Government Expose," "The Government Fraud," "The Tax Fraud," "The Tax Scandal," "The Tax Swindle," "The Political Scandal," "The Political Swindle," "The Tax Bribe," "The Tax Expose," "The Government Scandal," "The Government Swindle," "The Political Bribe" and "The Political Expose."

'Poison' No Poison In Playing Off N.Y. Sans B'way 1st-Run

Unusual step of playing off "Another Man's Poison," Bette Davis-Gary Merrill starrer, in New York without a Broadway first-run has proved profitable, according to United Artists, its distrib, and Seymour Poe, of Producers Representatives, which reps producers Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., and Daniel M. Angel.

Pic copped about $17,000 in a week at Loew's Metropolitan, Brooklyn, where it played its first engagement, and another $150,000 in four days on the Loew's circuit and day-and-date houses in the metropolitan area.

According to UA, all that was lost by skipping the highly-competitive battle to get a Broadway house around Christmas was an almost-sure b.r. nick. Like many pix, it is figured "Poison" might well have cost more for Broadway first-run advertising than would be obtained in film rental. Producers ordinarily charge such a loss off to the national advertising-publicity value of a Stem preem.

"Poison" is getting a bad break, however, in subsequent circuit playoffs. End of its Loew's run, coming at the same time as that of Warner Bros.' "Streetcar Named Desire" on the RKO chain, gives subsequent exhibs a choice between the two pix. Virtually all have chosen the latter for long-end of the week bookings.

"Poison" is slated to open its out-of-town engagements today (Wed.) with a flock of dates throughout the country. Circuits playing it include Warner Bros., United Paramount, Fox West Coast, Fox Midwest, Loew's, RKO, Famous Players, Kerasote's, Westland, Fabian, Comerford and Wometco.

Betty Hutton Wows Toronto Tent Benefit

Toronto, Jan. 15.

With Betty Hutton heading stageshow, plus one-night preview of "Greatest Show on Earth," annual benefit show of Toronto Tent 28, International Variety Club, saw close to $30,000 contributed to "Variety Village," vocational training school here for crippled kids. Gala sellout was staged at the Imperial, largest theatre in Canada and flagship of Famous Players (Canadian).

Miss Hutton, backgrounded by The Skylarks, held the stage for about 50 minutes, thereby upsetting the previously-set stageshow but Miss Hutton obviously was the draw and the patrons were not disappointed. With "Greatest Show" running two hours and 32 mins., remainder of scheduled and long-rehearsed stageshow was cancelled, with eight guest acts taking a spotlighted bow in the boxes for their donated troubles.

N.Y. Bd. of Ed. Displays Paintings in Show Tie

Reproductions of famous circus paintings has been lent by Paramount to the N.Y., Board of Education for display in the high schools during the engagement of "The Greatest Show on Earth" at the Radio City Music Hall.

Ten sets of reproductions have been made, and they will travel through the schools starting this week.

H'wood High Prices

production arrangement, a studio insures itself of first crack at a new play by putting up coin in advance of production and making payments each week it runs until a prescribed maximum is hit.

Biggest item recently plucked by Hollywood from the Stem is "Remains to Be Seen," for which Metro paid $125,000. It's a Leland Hayward production of a Lindsay & Crouse comedy. It opened in October.

Two weeks ago, 20th-Fox acquired "The Number." Price was $37,500. Comedy by Arthur Carter opened in October and closed last weekend, flop by Broadway standards.

Also acquired by Hollywood since the beginning of the film season last September were "Stalag 17," for which Paramount paid $110,000; "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes," for which 20th gave $150,000, and "Sobbin' Women," an unproduced play, for which Metro paid $40,000.

While renewal of interest in Broadway indicates principally a desire to obtain properties that have the makings of "big" pictures, it also results from another circumstance. The majors so completely laid off buying during the severe economy wave that followed the b.o. and foreign decline of 1947-48 that they pretty well used up the acceptable story material on their shelves. Thus, fresh out of material, they're forced to go into the legit market.

December's Buys

Hollywood, Jan. 15.

Half of the 14 December story purchases for films were novels or published material, Screen Writers Guild bulletin reveals, with originals second with a total of four. Two plays and one tele story are on the completed list.

Metro leads with five buys, Warners and Paramount had three each, Republic two and 20th one. Neither Columbia nor Monogram bought any. Metro bought "Lucy and the Stranger," tele story by Early Phillips, "Night Is Ours," Laszlo Vadnay-Boris Inster original; "Remains to Be Seen," Lindsay-Crouse play current on Broadway; "Sobbin Women," Stephen Vincent Benet novelet and a story idea by Dan Templin.

Paramount bought the Edwin Balmer-Philip Wylie novel, "After Worlds Collide;" Henry Handel Richardson's novel, "Maurice Gest;" musicomedy idea, "New Haven Story," by Robert Emmett Dolan. Warners snared "Investigation," original by Samuel and Edith Grafton; Paul I. Wellman's novel, "Iron Mistress," and Grace Moore's autobiog, "You're Only Human Once." Republic bought "Great A-Bomb Robbery," from Bob Considine's newspaper articles, and Gwen Bristow's novel, "Jubilee Trail." 20th bought "No Number," play by Arthur P. Carter.

'Pacific'-Rico

composer and co-producer of the show, the management sought for several months to reach an amicable agreement whereby Rico would withdraw from the cast. The producers wanted to make a financial settlement, and offered to let the singer draft any announcement he wished to explain his departure from the cast. Rico's contract, calling for $2,500 a week without a percentage extends until next Sept. 1.

"There was nothing personal in the situation whatever," Rodgers said yesterday (Tues.). "When we signed Rico for the part we hoped his accent would improve, but it has grown steadily worse, and the show can no longer support such a situation. We wanted to make any arrangement we could to protect Rico, but he absolutely refused, so we simply had to take him out of the cast. You should have heard the performance Monday night with Britton in the part—the whole company got a lift.

Badly Advised?

"I'm sorry this had to come out this way," Rodgers continued. "We would have preferred to arrange it quietly for Rico's sake. This way, it all comes out. I think Rico has make a mistake. He's been badly advised." The composer-producer added that the management will now wait to hear from Equity on the matter, and expects to settle on whatever terms are negotiated with the union.

Rico, who took over the role of Emile de Becque last June, succeeding Ray Middleton, had never before appeared in the U. S., having been an opera star in Paris. He could not speak English, so his entry into the cast was delayed several weeks while he learned it phonetically. In recent months, the singer has missed numerous performances, but there has been little audience comment and the matter was never reported in the dailies.

Britton, who has subbed in the part since Webb Tilton left the company to replace Richard Eastham as co-star of the touring edition, joined the cast about a month ago as one of the Seabees, doubling as understudy. Ezio Pinza, the original de Becque, left the show at the end of the 1949-50 season, after 15 months in the part. Meanwhile, Mary Martin, the original co-star as Ensign Nellie Forbush, withdrew last June, and is now playing the same role in the London edition.

Effective Monday night (14), Odette Myrtil took over the part of "Bloody Mary" in the Broadway troupe, succeeding Musa Williams, who had been subbing the part since Diosa Costello left some weeks ago because of illness.

'H'wood 9' Suits

were his aide, Joyce O'Hara, and MPAA's counsel, Sidney Schreiber. Schreiber is industry coordinator and an expert on both the "Hollywood Nine" suits and the antitrust actions by theatremen. Johnston and his aides will not participate in the Petrillo discussions.

Policy on the "Nine" suits has become of major industry importance since settlement two weeks ago of some of the actions by four companies. "Nine" are alleged pro-Communists who refused to answer House Un-American Activities Committee questions in 1947, and have been refused industry jobs since then.

Settlements by the four companies have caused some public relations backfire on the theory that they gave the impression the industry recognized it was wrong in blacklisting the "Nine." Four companies have refused to settle.

Petrillo has not indicated his demands as yet, but it is being taken virtually for granted that he'll ask tilts for the tooters. Almost equally likely, the opening gambit of the industry reps will be to object to the increases.

Prexies today will be briefed in preparation for the Petrillo talks. Charles Boren, labor contact for the Motion Picture Producers Assn., will be on hand from the Coast for the purpose.

MPPA prexy, Y. Frank Freeman, Paramount studio chief, who has been visiting in New York, also has gone to Miami for the conclave. Most of the other studios are believed sending their execs in charge of labor relations.

Prexies on hand include Barney Balaban, Paramount; Ned E. Depinet, RKO; Nicholas M. Schenck, Loew's, and Spyros Skouras, 20th-Fox. Major Albert Warner will represent Harry Warner, of Warner Bros.; Jack Cohn will rep Harry Cohn, of Columbia; John O'Connor will stand-in for Nate J. Blumberg, of Universal, and Ted Black will be on hand for Herbert J. Yates, Republic.

Present AFM studio contract represents a two-year renewal of an original two-year pact. When it was renewed, which occurred without even a top-brass meeting, Petrillo accepted the same terms as before. Thus, it is not anticipated that he'll repeat, since he has called for the negotiations.

AFM Mulls Fischer

Hollywood, Jan. 15.

American Federation of Musicians' exec board is reported considering Phil Fischer, veepee of Musicians Local 47, as successor to AFM studio rep J. W. Gillette, who has requested retirement.

Fischer, in charge of AM and TV, is understood to be leading candidate for the job, and it's believed decision will be made when AFM exec board goes into huddle in Miami Beach.

Fox Midwest again revised its first-run day-date setup here as Tower Theatre reopened after a short closing. Tower joined the Uptown, Fairway and Granada in first-run combo, replacing the Esquire.

The Esquire now goes on solo operation with policy of dual subsequent-runs, films being mostly those which have played out all city time or having special bally angles.

Golden Theatre Service added two Kansas towns to its list of booking clients, the Meade, Meade, Kans., and Twilight Theatre, Greensburg, Kans.

Universal followed a previously proven pattern of ad-exploitation in playing "The Cimarron Kid" here and in surrounding area. It was advertised with large space in the K. C. Star, ad including places and dates for area bookings numbering over 150 in Kansas, Missouri, Arkansas, Iowa, Nebraska and Colorado. Also took large space in Weekly K. C. Audie Murphy carried out schedule of press and radio interviews and speaking dates at luncheon clubs. Yvette Dugay, Beverly Tyler, John Hudson and James Best joined him for theatre appearances.

Open Letter
To Mr Hal Wallis

Dear Mr. Wallis:

During the holidays I got to thinking that all my life I never sued anybody. Why start now?

So I wrote my New York lawyers, Wilzin and Halperin, to drop the suit I started against you for the title, "That's My Boy"

Believe me, I'm sorry.

I didn't claim I owned the three words — but I figured that after plugging the title for seven years on radio, in theatres and cafes, and also having Jackie Barnett and Sammy Fain write the song, "That's My Boy" which Donald O'Connor and I sang in the picture, "The Milkman" I was entitled to some consideration.

After making "The Milkman", Universal was going to make a picture with Donald O'Connor and myself entitled, "That's My Boy". But as you registered the title ahead of Universal we couldn't make the picture.

Anyway, instead of suing I should have taken it like a good sport and said nothing. I feel better now that I dropped the suit and again I say—I'm sorry.

Wishing you and yours the best of everything - -

Sincerely,

Jimmy Durante

Illinois Allied Prexy Blasts Indie Filmites' Sale of Pix Oldies to TV

Chicago, Jan. 15.

In an open letter to indie producer Edward Small, Allied Theatres of Illinois prexy Jack Kirsch blasted the growing number of indie filmites who are turning their feature oldies over to television. He declared the nation's exhibitors will not "take this kind of treatment lying down," adding that the "indignation welling up in every individual exhibitor" will make unnecessary any threat of organized boycott against such producers.

Addressing the letter personally to Small, who recently established Peerless TV to handle sales of his old features to TV, Kirsch declared:

"I sincerely believe that you are doing the exhibitors of the country a grave injustice by attempting to carry water on both shoulders—to sell to both theatres and TV. If you think that TV offers you a better source of revenue, you should concentrate on that field. We will miss you but not so much as we would have a short while ago when we regarded you as a loyal friend. If you are going to continue to sell to TV, you should, in all fairness, leave the production of pictures for theatre consumption to those producers who still believe that their future rests with the motion picture industry."

Kirsch said his letter was prompted by announcement of Small's most recent feature, "Indian Uprising," which brought to his mind announcement of the sale of the first package of 26 Peerless films to a Chicago TV station. "Have you any idea as to the extent of the harm you have inflicted on theatres in the Chicago area by making these 26 pictures available for telecasting," he asked, "many of which, I am sorry to admit, were outstanding pictures of their time? Plenty!

"And did you ever stop to think that perhaps those theatres who might use 'Indian Uprising,' when it is released, will have to compete with the showing over TV of a picture made by the same producer? Does that make sense? Certainly not, because you know as well as I do that people are not going to pay to see motion picture entertainment that they can get free in their homes."

Small's Reply

If exhibs would pay more attention to selling new pix instead of worrying about teevee, they'd do better, producer Edward Small opined after hearing of the Kirsch blast. He says he's unable to understand why he was singled out for the attack and pointed out that a large number of companies have already sold pictures to video, and many majors have also applied for licenses.

Demand Stations Buy 3-Year Rights May Nix Selznick's 12-Pix-to-TV Deal

Deal for David O. Selznick to release 12-15 of his pix to television for an estimated $2,000,000 is reported still far from the jelling stage. Reason is that Selznick won't turn over the product until he gets commitments for the bulk of the country's 63 tele markets.

Thomas F. O'Neil, of the General Tire & Rubber radio and tele interests (Yankee & Don Lee Networks, plus the upcoming merger with WOR, N. Y., which is still before the FCC), had lined up a national sponsor who is willing to back the Selznick pix in 26 markets. Stations taking this biz would have to buy residual rights for the second and third runs of the pix.

It's reported that in some stances the stations are reluctant to commit themselves for the second and third years, although they would have made a profit on time sale for the first year. In the other 37 markets, stations would have had to sign for three years, without a definite sponsorship commitment. Some feel the product was strong enough to warrant the investment, while others are hesitant.

O'Neil, it's understood, may now exit the deal, feeling that it won't go through on the present basis. Option on the Selznick product is held by Bruce Eells & Associates, headed by Eells, former Coast exec for Young & Rubicam.

Plan has been to televise the pix in two half-hours a week, with the features continued for two to five broadcasts, depending their length.

Snader Expansion

In an expansion of its scales organization to handle sale of its television film packages on the local level, Snader Telescriptions this week named George Fisher to head its midwest sales, with Alfred LeVine also joining the Chicago office and Robert F. Blair heading the Cleveland branch.

Fisher is a vet radioite, who broke in at WIBO, Boston. LeVine was formerly with the Rex agency, Detroit, while Blair was with the Fuller, Smith & Ross agency in Cleveland.

Cliff Norton East For Briefie Vidpix Series

Comedian Cliff Norton, formerly of NBC-TV's "Garroway at Large" cast, is slated to arrive in New York from Chicago this week for filming of his new five-minute television film series, which is being produced by Benton & Bowles. Plans call for Norton, on a souped-up production schedule, to rehearse for the shows on a Thursday and shoot five of them completely on Friday.

Series is now being spotted by B&B via local sales in TV markets throughout the country, with 13 having accepted them to date. In N. Y., the pix are aired from 11:10 to 11:15 p.m. cross-the-board on WNBT, the NBC web's flagship, where they are bankrolled by the Nucoa branch of Best Foods.

SCHULBERG TO RESUME TV PIX IN EAST IN MONTH

B. P. Schulberg will resume the production of vidpix in the east in about a month, Budd Schulberg, novelist-son of the producer, disclosed Friday (11). Reached at his Bucks Country, Pa., home, the author of "What Makes Sammy Run" and "The Disenchanted" said that his father has been ailing and when he fully recuperates will once again begin work on a tele series.

Telepix series is based on short yarns by Budd Schulberg, of which one was completed about a year ago. Finished pic, "The Gnat," was sold to Bing Crosby Enterprises, which is arranging for tele distribution. Young Schulberg said that he had completed four more screenplays and that there were about 20 more short stories suitable for tele adaptation. He said he was seeking writers to tackle the job of converting the yarns for vidpixing, since he wanted to devote his full time to a novel on which he is currently working. Author said he had no knowledge of whether or not his father would reenter theatrical film production, but disclosed that the elder Schulberg would be available next month to reveal his future plans.

Gargan to Coast For 'Barrie' Vidpix Version

William Gargan, who stars on NBC's "Barrie Craig," has gone to the Coast to plan filming a series of pix based on the radio show. Gargan expects to shoot the whodunits as 30-minute features for distribution to theatres. However, script would be tailored to allow for deletion of three minutes' worth of footage, permitting later insertion of commercials when the pic is used on tele.

Gargan taped several broadcasts of "Craig" in advance enabling him to spend a month on the Coast.

'TONIGHT' TO FOLLOW 'TODAY'

Did He or Didn't He?

Tex McCrary says he didn't mean to infer on his "Tex and Jinx" radio show Monday (14) that the NBC-TV brass had swiped an original idea of his for the net's new "Today" show, which preemed that day. Rather, McCrary said, he had meant to compliment the web on its initiative in finally giving news coverage its rightful place on TV. According to McCrary, news is the "only solid foundation that can keep TV from becoming a vidiot's delight."

McCrary's remarks, made with his wife, Jinx Falkenburg, on their Mr. and Mrs. Show, occasioned considerable comment in the trade, especially since their show is aired on WNBC, N.Y., flagship of the NBC radio web. Listeners were convinced that he had literally accused NBC-TV exec veepee, Sylvester L. (Pat) Weaver, Jr., of stealing his idea. On his program, McCrary said:

"Just four years ago, we really tried hard to sell NBC on the same kind of show that finally made the grade with Dave Garroway this morning—a show called 'Today'." After outlining the idea he had at that time for a similar program, to be titled "Daily World Mirror," McCrary said Frank E. Mullen, then NBC video chief, had turned down the idea as being "too expensive." He said he then pitched the idea to agencies and advertisers.

At Young & Rubicam, he said, prexy Sig Larmon told his staff to "take a good look at this idea." But, McCrary added, "the guy over at Y&R who really helped us most to get a thorough hearing was a young vice president who had just been put in charge of television. I spent a couple of hours one day outlining our ideas to him and he asked every account executive at Y&R to come to a big meeting for a look at our 'television newspaper'." But McCrary said, again the idea was found to be too expensive.

He then traced the various attempts to utilize his idea on TV, first in the abortive Philip Morris-sponsored series on CBS and then the Swift-sponsored series on NBC. "All of this account of our flops," McCrary told his radio listeners Monday, "explains the reason we'd like to tip our hats this morning to the super-salesman who listened to our ideas so courteously four years ago at Y&R and gave us a hearing and as much help as he could. His name is Pat Weaver and he's the head of NBC-TV now—and somehow he sold NBC in 1952 on taking the gamble on a basic idea which NBC turned down in 1948."

Sponsors Draw a 'Straight' in AM Deals as Webs Pull for 'Full House'

Indicating that sponsors are finally turning their sights back to radio, both CBS and NBC this week inked straight, non-gimmicked deals with major advertisers for weekly shows. On CBS, General Foods bought the web's "Mr. Chameleon" for slotting in the Thursday night at 9 period, starting Jan. 24, while American Bakers pacted with NBC for the Sunday 5 to 5:30 p.m. slot for "Hollywood Star Playhouse."

CBS is also near the inking stage for American Safety Razor to buy the Red Skelton show on the web's special one-shot availability deal for a 12-week spread, as part of a special promotion push this spring. In addition, CBS sold its "Garden Gate" show, aired Saturday mornings from 9:45 to 10, to the Ferry-Morse Seed Co. of Detroit on a 14-week cycle starting Feb. 16. For CBS, the GF purchase marked the second such straight deal in as many weeks, following Admiral's decision last week to buy the 5:30 to 5:55 Sunday afternoon slot for a worldwide news roundup, featuring Bob Trout as chief newscaster.

Dead Air

Chicago, Jan. 15.

Gabber Al Parker is working the graveyard shift on WJJD, only this time it's mid-morning rather than midnight. He's spieling the station's new "Obituary Column of the Air," which goes six days weekly at 10 a. m.

The show includes the reading of death notices. It's bankrolled by a local undertaker.

Dailies' 'Beware' Of NBC's 'Today'

NBC has found that its high-pressure publicizing of its ambitious early morning "Today" TV series is paying off—in reverse. Network press department over the past several weeks is credited with doing a particularly effective job in exploiting the manner in which the Dave Garroway-emceed show will project itself as a newspaper-magazine of the air, bringing to the early morning viewer a visual presentation of practically everything—and more—that he'd get in his favorite morning newspaper.

It now appears that NBC did its job too well—for the newspapers are looking askance at the show and are inclined to treat it as a competitive encroachment on their own domain of news communication. Apparently the word's gone out from the high command of the dailies to lay off publicizing the shows and some dailies are even giving it the brusheroo in the program listings.

NBC-TV PLANNING POST-MIDNIGHTER

On the heels of the critical kudoes and agency reaction to Monday's (14) initial installment of NBC-TV's two-hour, early-morning "Today" show, the network's television administrators began setting their sights on a late-night companion show. Latter would be tabbed "Tonight" and, when and if the plans are crystallized, will go into the midnight to 2 a.m. period, virtually giving NBC-TV a round-the-clock, 24-hour operation.

(Although the network had to return 11 to midnight back to the stations because of the clamor of local clients seeking late night periods, NBC, on the basis of studies, is convinced the affiliates will hop abroad the midnight to 2 a.m. showcase, just as they did with the 7 to 9 a.m. display. On the basis of preliminary discussion, the late show would follow approximately the same pattern as the early morning newspaper-feature page attraction.)

With only two clients sold for once-a-week, five-minute participations as of the time "Today" preemed, within 24 hours the network reported a veritable onrush of agencies and prospective sponsors making inquiries. Kiplinger's magazine, "Changing Times," began its sponsor participation on Monday. Kenwill Corp., makers of "Magikoter Paintroller," starts sponsorship in February. Deals are imminent with Lucky Strike and American Chicle Co.

"Give us 10 more days and we'll be sold out," said one top NBC video exec.

'Today's' Local Bonanza

Chicago, Jan. 15.

Now that NBC-TV's "Today," hosted by Dave Garroway, is off and running, it shapes up as a potential bonanza for the local outlets carrying it. To secure the best possible lineup of stations, the web obviously has patterned the ambitious two-hour morning spread so it can be used by the local plants as a lure for hometown revenue.

For instance, WNBQ, the Chi

Time-Life Eyes ABC-TV for Politico Spread—If It Can Deliver Network

Now It Can Be Told

It took a trip to Mexico to find a title for the two-hour early morning NBC-TV "Today" series, which preemed Monday (14).

It was while visiting in Mexico City some weeks back, and looking over Emilio Azcarraga's TV operation there, that Sylvester L. (Pat) Weaver, Jr., NBC's video chieftain, came across the word Hoy (meaning "Today") on practically every street corner, in front of film houses, etc.

That, Weaver decided, is it.

Henry R. Luce's Time and Life mags may wind up with an ABC-TV sponsorship deal on the political conventions and election coverage, similar to the pacts negotiated between CBS and Westinghouse and NBC and Philco. It's understood talks have been progressing over the past couple of weeks, contingent on just what kind of network ABC will be able to deliver.

With NBC now practically assured 50 video outlets and CBS settling for 30 on behalf of its Westinghouse client, the big poser for ABC lies in grabbing off sufficient outlets, over and above its five owned-and-operated setups, to make a Time-Life deal attractive. Meanwhile, it's reported there has been pressure from some ABC outlets to set up a co-op sponsorship deal.

What DuMont intends to do appears a moot point. NBC has offered to feed the network its Philco-sponsored coverage of the conventions and election (sans commercials), which would enable NBC-Philco to move in on the DuMont WDTV in Pittsburgh, home base of the Westinghouse Corp.

Meanwhile, CBS-Westinghouse appears to be facing up to the realization that NBC and Philco grabbed off practically all the cream single station market availabilities, as detailed in last week's VARIETY, necessitating bids for auxiliary deals with stations for sale of Westinghouse spots and other methods of video penetration.

NBC Seeks Metop Deal to Showcase Opera Stars on TV

In a further bid to glamorize its TV programming rosters, NBC is reported dickering with Rudolf Bing, general manager of the Metropolitan Opera, for a deal whereby some of the Met's top stars would be available for a series of guest shots on the network's top musical extravaganzas.

Deal would be completely independent of the overtures initiated last year by Bing via the William Morris agency to showcase a series of Met TV packages, but which fell through some months back.

Currently Marguerite Piazza, a Met singer, is integrated into the NBC-TV Saturday night "Show of Shows," but on a regular feature basis. NBC's plan is to rotate different opera stars on various major shows as inserts in perhaps 10 or 15-minute scenes highlighting their favorite arias.

WB Nixes Sullivan On 'Streetcar' Clips

Pointing up again the continued adamance of the major film companies' stand against television, Warners this week refused to permit clips from its "Streetcar Named Desire" to be used on Ed Sullivan's "Toast of the Town" Sunday night (20), despite the fact that it's to receive the N. Y. Film Critics' award on the program as the best feature of 1951. Producer Charles K. Feldman and director Elia Kazan, however, are to appear on the show to receive their citations.

Awards are to be handed out by N. Y. Times' film critic Bosley Crowther, representing the crix group. This marks the first time that the awards are to be presented on a video show; in former years they were handed out at the Rainbow Room in Radio City, N. Y. While WB nixed the showing of "Streetcar" clips, Sullivan will be able to present scenes from Universal's "Bright Victory," featuring "best actor" Arthur Kennedy, who's slated to appear on the program in person, and from the Italian-made "Miracle in Milan," selected by the crix as the best foreign film of the year.

CBS-TV SELLS SINATRA ON ONE-SHOT BASIS

CBS-TV will gain a small, temporary respite from the cost of sustaining its expensive Frank Sinatra show when Elgin-American comes in for a one-shot, quarter-hour segment Feb. 12. Jewelry outfit is buying the time as part of a special pre-Valentine's Day promotion push.

Web's sales execs declared this week that there are no prospects in sight for a long-term deal on Sinatra, which buck's NBC-TV's Milton Berle show Tuesday nights at 8. They said, however, that they're presently working on a number of prospects interested in buying into the show on a one-shot basis similar to E-A. Show has been sustaining since the end of the year, following Ekco Products' decision to give up the 8 to 8:15 segment

'Pat' Weaver's 'Opportunities' For TV, 'But Let's Keep It in the Family, Boys'

In a throwback to an earlier era in broadcasting when his ex-boss, the late George Washington Hill, who masterminded the Lucky Strike programming, published in booklet form his own treatise on the GWH concepts of radio, Sylvestor L. (Pat) Weaver, Jr., NBC's veepee in charge of television, has issued to his production staffers an exhaustive, searching memorandum called "Opportunity." Weaver's analytical looking-into-the-future-of-TV broadside went out to the program department, executives, producers and directors in TV as "interdepartment correspondence."

A couple weeks back VARIETY made a stab at unearthing a copy. Weaver said he'd rather not give it out. Subsequently the word apparently went out to "Keep it in the family, boys," for several efforts to latch on to one of the mimeoed copies sent to directors and producers failed.

Following is the text of Weaver's "Opportunities":

This, continues my discursive memorandum on the dramatic form for television, and the limitations of our work therein. Perhaps I am not articulate enough to spell it out for the higher primates in our employ, but my themes are simple.

First, television is primarily a communications medium, taking the viewer out of his home to arenas, theatres, movie houses, Broadway extravaganzas, etc. It is also an art form on its own, and television originals will gradually develop to gain major audiences. So far, no television original has been a smash, if you take the top five or 10 to be a smash. Berle works from a vaudeville house, and you have a front seat, and closeups too. Godfrey works a radio show with the camera on. Liebman presents a Broadway show. Skelton does almost a personal appearance. Durante appears in an extravaganza, Philco is a legit house. Montgomery does a movie. And so on.

Second, dialog in a set is a very limited form of entertainment or theatre, yet it comprises most of our shows, and virtually all of our drama. This is wrong, because it fails to try new avenues open to all writers and producers.

Medium of Reality

Third, television is a medium of reality, which is why great special events and sports are so compelling, why Point 1 is so important in program planning, whereas in the theatre and more importantly in the movies, most thinking is done in the fictional, make-believe, amusement field. It is also why television will be used to upgrade humanity across a broad base, whereas movies have largely diverted a selective mob, and the theatre has been potent only to a small group. When you use television remembering that it is a medium of realty, it enables you to be true to the form you are working on. This can be, and largely is, the communications use of the medium in taking you to places where shows are being put on, or as in our "Today" show, taking you to the communications centre of the planet. But it also should be applied by the many over-produced and over-experted shows which are neither fish nor flesh, to go no further with the proverb, and which have mixed up radio, theatre, television original, and movies into a mishmash.

Fourth, to the student of entertainment through the aeons, the limitation of drama generally to developments of story is most unnecessary. The ancient theatre was basically without suspense, in that the audience knew the plot, and came to watch performance, or what the author had to say in terms of message, and in terms of technique. Moving the accent from writer to a performer, modern theatre replays the same basic material giving individuals a performance opportunity, in opera or in far eastern drama and dance, and as in our own Shakespearean and Shaw revivals.

'Job Runs You'

Let me repeat that I know a great many of you are working very hard, and that one of the difficulties in running a dynamic operation without sufficient men, money, or material is that the job runs you. Consequently you labor in the vineyards without a thought about getting your shoes off to press the grapes. But some chaps will kill themselves on the work and still think and plan and try and create. To those, I address these several thousand symbols.

I may be unfair to our creative group, but I do not sense in the work the restlessness with our

Cincinnati, Jan. 15.

While it's expected that the National Collegiate Athletic Assn. will duplicate for the 1952 season the same limited television plan it had in effect last year for college football games, decision on which network or sponsor will have the games is still undetermined. According to delegates attending the NCAA annual conclave here last week, neither NBC, which carried all games during 1951, nor Westinghouse, which bankrolled them, has any carryover rights. As a result, it will be up to the new NCAA video committee, to be named in March, to make a deal with the web or bankroller for next season's schedule.

All networks, consequently, are expected to be pitching for next season's games, since the '51 schedule meant almost $1,000,000 to NBC in gross billings. While it's thought that the questioned legality of the limited TV plan might have scared off one or two of the nets last year, the fact that the NCAA has voted the same system into effect for '52 indicates the legality is no longer a question. In addition, CBS bowed out of the running last year in order to concentrate on its color TV pickups of college football. That web will have no color by next football season so is also expected to put in a bid for the games.

See CBS in Favored Spot

If Westinghouse buys the '52 schedule, in fact, CBS may be in a more favorable position to snare the business because of its present close association with the appliance manufacturer. Besides having sponsored "Studio One" for several years via CBS-TV, Westing house will also bankroll the political conventions next summer on the same web, along with the Presidential election returns and a 13-week series in between. Ketchum, McLeod & Grove, the agency which repped Westinghouse on the football deal last year, also set the deal with CBS for the political events.

In setting plans for what it termed a "middle course of moderation" for TV football in '52, the NCAA emphasized its belief that "college football and live TV can and will live side by side." Committee, in rejecting the "urgings of those who seek a complete ban on live telecasting," declared that "equally firmly we reject urgings of those who would return college football to unrestricted live TV and seek thereby to profit from the loss of others, and particularly from the loss of small colleges and high schools."

McConnell Hoopla On Salvation Army

Designation of NBC prexy Joseph H. McConnell as chairman of the Salvation Army Drive for Greater New York has sparked an unprecedented round of activity embracing show biz and the various arts.

As one of the major entertainment facets in connection with the drive, James Starbuck, choreographer on the NBC-TV Saturday night "Show of Shows" has been commissioned to do a special "Salvation Army Ballet," which will be performed on WNBT, the Gotham key station of the TV network.

Noted composers, including Meredith Willson, Don Gillis and others, will vie in competitive composition for a theme song set for juke-box airing. Fannie Hurst, Bob Considine, Ed Murrow, Mary Margaret McBride and Norman Cousins will write special pieces for distribution in pamphlet form. There will be a photography contest, embracing top amateurs and professionals, for a special exhibit. Top cartoonists, including Milt Canniff, Al Capp and others will do special drawings themed to the drive, for display and auctioning, with proceeds going to the Salvation Army.

Televicious

Detroit, Jan. 15.

WWJ-TV and its parent—The Detroit News—are apologizing all over the place because one of the actors in the telecast "Traffic Court" program gave a too realistic performance of a drunk driver.

The actor was John Holland, who served as commentator during the Christmas religious telecasts. He enacted the part of a drunk driver in a reenactment of the court scene. Sometimes the actual defendants do appear on the program, and that's what led to all the trouble.

WWJ-TV began to get indignant calls asking what was the idea of humiliating Holland, etc. So the News ran a long story clearing his reputation and assuring his friends that he was just acting.

WWJ-TV issued a statement which said: "The only connection John Holland has had with drunk driving has been strictly fictitious and televicious."

Sears Auto Spot Rates Rile Station Reps; See Nat'l Auto Adv. Threat

Spot radio campaign prepped by Sears Roebuck for its new automobile, the All-States, has brought recommendations from several station representatives that their clients turn down the biz. The reps say that the SR deal, which would be placed at the local rather than national time rate, "threatens the generally established policy in broadcasting, whereby automotive accounts pay at the national rate."

The All-States is a new car which is being built for Sears by Kaiser-Frazer. Sears has outlined a spot campaign which would plug the new model in 18 markets. According to the reps, the biz would be placed by the local Sears store, without agency or station reps getting commissions.

Motor accounts usually pay a higher rate than other national advertisers in newspapers, for which the papers generally give them extra editorial support, such as photos and stories on new models. It's reported that the dailies are holding the line on their automotive rates, which has prompted the station reps' recommendation that the AM outlets stand by the national rate for the All-States campaign.

The station reps view the Sears deal as a test case. Should Sears get the lower local rate for its campaign, they argue, Plymouth, Chevrolet and other automotive spenders would similarly want to place their billings through their many local dealers and get the lower rate.

JANIS PAIGE SERIES SET FOR ABC PREEM

Janis Paige, co-star of Leland Hayward's "Remains to Be Seen" on Broadway, will star in a new radio series, tentatively titled "The Affairs of Janis," on ABC. Situation comedy is being booked into the Thursday 8 p.m. spot, starting Jan. 25, following the dropping of "Hollywood Star Playhouse" (which moves to NBC).

ABC program veepee Leonard Reeg is skedding a quarter-hour of "Dean Cameron" at 4:30 p.m. and George Ansbro's "Manhattan Maharajah" at 4:45 p.m. cross-the-board. Both Ansbro and "Cameron" (Arthur Van Horn) are currently beamed on WJZ, ABC's Gotham outlet. They are taking over the half-hour of George Fennamen's "Perfect Husband," audience participationer which exits after Jan. 25.

Tootsie Roll TV Coin

Tootsie Roll will sweeten ABC-TV's coffers with a new stanza, "Kids Karnival Kwiz," Sundays at 12:15 to 12:30 p.m. Show will start on Feb. 3, with John Reed King as emcee.

Stang's TV Lampoon Of Private Eye Shows

Comedian Arnold Stang has been set as star of a projected new television series designed to lampoon the rash of private eye shows now on the air. Titled "Malcolm Murdock, Boy Detective," the show is being packaged by Al Levy, who is working out plans for an audition kinescope to pitch the property to agencies and cilents.

Show will be scripted by Joe Stein, who wrote the "Gerard" spots for Stang when the latter played that role on Henry Morgan's old radio series. It's to be a half-hour, once-weekly deal.

FCC Hearing Revamp Sought By Legalites

Washington, Jan. 15.

Federal Communications Bar Assn., whose membership includes the nation's radio lawyers, started the ball rolling here last week to revamp hearing procedures of the FCC. Such a move, it was pointed out, will speed up handling of TV station applications following the lifting of the freeze.

Association adopted a recommendation by Leonard Marks, chairman of its Practices and Procedures Committee, to form a Government-industry group to prepare revised rules for conduct of hearing cases. Marks submitted a report declaring that radio lawyers are trying cases today under antiquated rules. He recommended that procedures be streamlined, unnecessary testimony eliminated, and the number of witnesses be kept to the minimum.

The proposed Government-industry committee would consist of one member of the FCC, one FCC examiner, one Commission top staffer, one representative of FCBA, one from the National Assn. of Radio and TV Broadcasters, and one from the Assn. of Federal Communications Consulting Engineers.

To implement the FCBA action, efforts are being made to enlist the aid of Judge Justin Miller, general counsel and board chairman of NARTB, who has had extensive experience as a judge of the U. S. Court of Appeals, in effecting improvements in hearing procedures.

At its annual election last week, FCBA elected Arthur W. Scharfeld as president, Fred Albertson and Vincent B. Welch as first and second vice-presidents, John Spearman as secretary and Charles F. Duvall as treasurer.

Named as new members of the executive committee were Clyde Bailey, George O. Sutton and Marks.

FCC Still Hands Out Radio Station Permits

Washington, Jan. 15.

Just as though there were no such thing as television, radio station permits were being handed out as usual last week by the FCC. Authorizations were issued for two new AM stations and one FM station. In addition, several grants were made for expansion of existing facilities.

A daytime AM permit was issued to a firm in Pratt, Kans., and a fulltime authorization was granted for Reedsburg, Wis. The FM permit, for a community type station, went to Paris Broadcasting Co., of Paris, Ill.

Change of facilities from daytime to fulltime was approved for WQXI in Atlanta, and power increases were granted WPAW in Pawtucket, R. I.; KBMY in Billings, Mont., and KCNI in Broken Bow, Neb.

WCAU's Round-the-Clock

Philadelphia, Jan. 15.

WCAU began around-the-clock operation yesterday (14), the first invasion of late night programming since the war years, and the first permanent 24-hour schedule in the station's 30-year history.

Occupying the new air time is the "Barry Kaye Show," which has been extended from its midnight to 1 a.m. segment to 5 a.m.

School-by-School Breakdown

Cincinnati, Jan. 15.

National Collegiate Athletic Assn., in a move to convince its member schools of the adverse effect television has had on football gate receipts, last week included several school-by-school breakdowns in the 30-page report submitted at its annual conclave. NCAA will base its final TV report on a study now being made by the National Opinion Research Centre but, in the meantime, the TV committee declared these "individual instances" are "no doubt typical of dozens of similar instances throughout the country." Following are the instances cited in the report:

When it was announced that the blackout of Washington, D. C., scheduled for Nov. 10, was to be shifted to Nov. 17, sales of tickets for the Maryland-North Carolina State game on the latter date accelerated to a point three times the normal rate of sales for the season. The Nov. 17 blackout in Washington received widespread publicity because of the controversy which resulted in the blackout of Nov. (the day of the Notre Dame-Michigan State telecast) being shifted to Nov. This instance is significant because it illustrates that when the existence of a blackout is known to the public early enough, there is a definite favorable effect on sales.

In like vein, when it became generally known that the Michigan-Ohio State game was to be telecast, there was a deluge of requests for refunds or cancellations. So, too, when it became known that the Colorado-Nebraska game of Nov. 17 was to be telecast, requests for refunds mounted and even entire train parties were cancelled to watch the game by television instead of actual attendance.

The Mid-American Conference provided a startling example of the adverse effect of television on attendance. The Miami-Cincinnati game was played this year on the same day that the Michigan-Ohio State game was telecast in Cincinnati and the surrounding territory. This game decided the football championship of the Mid-American Conference. Weather conditions were very good; the rivalry is over 50 years old; but schools had fine records. Usually the Cincinnati-Miami game is a sellout of 30,000. This years attendance was 16,000.

Freeze-Lift Report Seen Due Feb. 15; FCC Setting Daily Exec Sessions

Washington, Jan. 15.

Members of the Federal Communications Commission are expected to begin daily executive sessions next week to work out the final allocation plan for the lifting of the TV freeze. Chances look good, VARIETY learned, for an announcement of the thaw by Feb. 15.

It's understood that the Commission's Broadcast Bureau will have ready for next Wednesday's (23) regular meeting of the members a draft of the report, which will incorporate the final allocation table, the standards on which VHF and UHF stations shall operate, and the reservation of channels for non-commercial educational stations.

The report will also include procedure for handling VHF and UHF applications in intermixed areas. The determination of this question is eagerly awaited by Washington radio lawyers, who are believed to be holding back some 500 station applications pending the report. If the agency decides on separate handling of UHF applications, it is likely that many applicants will specify UHF rather than VHF channels in the hope of avoiding hearings.

Another determination which may be included in the report is the limitation on multiple ownership of TV stations. The agency has been weighing suggestions that the present limit of five licenses under the same interests be raised to seven, provided at least two are UHF. A formal proposal along this line was recently filed with the Commission by NBC, which now has five owned and operated stations. The web is ready to go into

PACKARD MAY RETURN TO TV VIA 'REBOUND'

With ABC-TV dropping "Crime With Father" after Feb. 1, the web may pick up a bankroller for the Friday night at 9 period. Packard is reported considering the slot for "Rebound," a vidpic series via Maxon agency.

If Packard buys the time, it will be a return for the automotive sponsor which bankrolled the Don Ameche "Holiday Hotel" stanza on the web Thursdays at 9 p.m. That program was set while Young & Rubicam had the account.

Cincy AFRA Slaps 1G Fine on Mel Martin; Signs WLW-T Pact

Cincinnati, Jan. 15.

Cincy local of the American Federation of Radio Artists inked its first contract covering TV network fees last week and also slapped a $1,000 fine on one of its members over an undisclosed "intra-union affair."

New agreement was reached with Crosley's WLW-T. It raised minimum fee of $5.50 for a local half-hour program to $72.50 if the program goes to the affiliated NBC video web. Rates for 15-minute programs are $4.25 local and $40.60 network. Fees for performers are in addition to their staff salaries and include rehearsal time, fixed at up to an hour for a local 30-minute show and up to 12 hours for a network feed.

Signing was by Dwight W. Martin, Crosley Broadcasting Corp. veepee, and Benjamin Gettler, attorney for the union.

Bargaining of AFRA contracts with WKRC-TV, CBS affiliate, and WCPO-TV, linked with ABC and Dumont, on network fees for performers will start soon.

Mel Martin, WLW-T staffer and star of its "Breakfast Party" show, which is carried by NBC's video outlets, was the subject of the $1,000 fine. "There are a lot of things involved in the situation and in my own heart I feel that I am not guilty," Martin said, "but in order not to make the situation more unpleasant I am paying the fine, in installments."

Thelma Ritter Show

Based on her clicks in the pix "All About Eve" and "Model and the Marriage Broker," Thelma Ritter is being auditioned for a radio series of her own on ABC.

Actress, who resides in N. Y. between films, will cut an audition next month in a situation comedy in which she'll play a character similar to the roles she's done recently on the screen.

Mutual-Metro's Co-op Bonanza

The five new MGM Radio Attractions which are available for co-op sponsors are doing well and racked up 117 program sales by Dec. 31, date that the Metro series kicked off on Mutual, according to MBS co-op manager Burt Hauser. In addition, another 251 sales came in between Jan. 1-15 for the five MGMRA shows—"Crime Does Not Pay," "Hardy Family," "Story of Dr. Kildare," "Gracie Fields Show" and "MGM Theatre of the Air." Hauser said that the flurry of MGMRA biz hasn't cut into sales of the web's other co-ops.

Local and regional sales of MBS co-ops set a record in 1951, Hauser said. Mutual, which has more co-op sales than any other web, tallied 1,345 in '51, against 987 in '50, an increase of 37%.

Fulton Lewis, Jr., led the MBS co-op list in airing on 379 stations, followed by Cedric Foster, who is beamed on 197 outlets.

'BLACKLIST' ACTION IN LOEB CASE

But Where Was Radio?

Somewhere along the line, it's reasoned within the trade, radio muffed the ball completely in getting on top of one of the most thrilling sagas in modern maritime annals—the 16-day struggle of the ill-fated Flying Enterprise and its gallant captain, Henrik Kurt Carlsen.

Unlike the competitive special events era of a bygone day radio, which would have found the networks sending their ace men to the scene for detailed on-the-spot coverage, no matter how intrepid the expedition, radio contented itself with cursory pickups of the wire services in bringing to the public the blow-by-blow of the ill-fated vessel.

It's argued that here was one of outstanding opportunities for radio to solidify its new sphere of importance (as the top medium in news and special events); in an era when television was taking the play away in all other programming facets. For this reason alone, it's maintained, radio should have alerted itself to pooling its resources for an on-the-spot job.

Radio, TV Charge 'Discrimination' As Senate Group Ousts Them in D.C.

Washington, Jan. 15.

Charges of discrimination against radio and TV were hurled against Senate committee yesterday (Mon.) after it stopped broadcast coverage of testimony on crime in the District of Columbia, when a witness objected. The hearing, before the Senate D. C. Crime Committee, had been on the air 26 minutes when TV cameras, microphones and recording equipment were ordered removed by Chairman Matthew Neely (D.-W. Va.).

A protest against the committee's action was immediately filed by Hollis M. Seavey, president of the Radio Correspondents Assn., who said the ban was unfair since it permitted coverage by the press. Seavey's action was backed up by NBC and stations WWDC and WOL in the capital, which were carrying the hearing by radio.

Plans for pooled TV coverage by the four stations here were cancelled as a result of the committee ban, even though it applied only to the initial witness, former D. C. police chief Robert J. Barrett, who resigned recently. Their attitude was summed up by WTOP-TV, which issued a statement saying the restrictions imposed by the committee "make the broadcasting of what have been designated 'open

Look Mag's TV Dramatic Series

Look magazine, whose promotional activities over the past year have embraced a wide use of television and radio, is going into the TV packaging business on its own. The Cowles-owned mag, in association with the William Morris agency, is currently in the process of whipping together a "Look Preview Theatre" dramatic series, which will be peddled for sponsorship.

Series will be inspired by articles appearing in the semi-monthly, tyeing in with stars and other top personalities getting pictorial-editorial spread. News, discussion formats, etc., will also be encompassed in the series.

Wally Jordan, radio-TV boss of the Morris office, is supervising the project.

BOB HEALY'S COLGATE EXIT AFTER 18 YEARS

In a sudden decision that took the trade by surprise, Robert E. Healy, vice-president in charge of advertising for Colgate, one of radio-TV's major spenders, announced he is resigning from the company effective Feb. 1. He did not announce his future plans.

In his 18 years with Colgate, during which he became involved with many of the top radio-video attractions, it's estimated that Healy was responsible for negotiating $1,000,000,000 in billings in all media.

Healy ascended to his veepeeship in 1946. There's been no decision as yet on a successor.

NBC Ups Cleary

John P. Cleary has been upped to eastern program director and production manager of NBC radio, under program v.p. Charles (Bud) Barry.

Cleary has been an NBC producer since 1950, but started at the web in 1938 as a page boy. He was with ABC from '42 to '49, when he left to produce "Duffy's Tavern" in Puerto Rico. Last November he wrapped up the show for NBC's get-together at Boca Raton.

NBC in $90,000 Nielsen TV Pact For Overall Data

NBC-TV has signed up for the full Nielsen TV service, at a cost of $80,000-$90,000 a year. Web is the second chain to subscribe to the complete video rating service, ABC-TV having been inked in November at a cost of around $50,000 a year. Difference in price is due to fact that subscribers are charged according to their proportionate share of total network tele billings.

Move by NBC-TV tends to strengthen Nielsen's position as the "big ump" in the tele rating field, where there is a multiplicity of nose-counters with varying techniques. According to some web researchers, while the Nielsen sample is small, his use of probability methods in determining in which homes his Audimeters will be installed gives his ratings validity. NBC decided to subscribe after considerable study of the question.

The "complete" Nielsen data makes available to NBC-TV, as it does to ABC-TV, minute-by-minute ratings, cumulative audience figures, flow of audience charts and data from the Nielsen food and drug indexes (which be used to indicate the sales effectiveness of a program). In addition to the nationally projectable circulation figures, the new Nielsens include a "popularity" rating based on 10 cities with at least three tele stations.

WBBM SELLS ITS GRID GAMES FOR NEXT FALL

Chicago, Jan. 15.

In one of the earliest football wrapups on local record, WBBM last week signed the Chicago Ford Dealers to bankroll its 12-game grid package next fall. The Ford dealers sponsored the games last season and decided to again stick with the Chi CBS outlet.

Tilts are called by John Harrington, who also airs a 15-minute nightly newscast for the Ford retailers.

EQUITY MEMBERS TAKE 1ST MOVE

The case of Philip Loeb, vet character actor dropped from the cast of "The Goldbergs" following his listing in "Red Channels," is stirring union action against "blacklisting."

Board of Television Authority met Monday (14) night on the matter and endorsed a recommendation by a special committee that Loeb be given a fair and impartial hearing. It was recommended that the hearing be conducted by three persons connected neither with the industry nor the union.

Loeb told VARIETY, "Either of two things will happen. Those who have made allegations against me may be afraid to make their charges in the light of an open court, or they will make them and I'll blast them to pieces."

On Friday (11) a membership meeting of Actors Equity voted to recommend, by an 180-3 vote, that the Equity council list "Goldbergs" as "unfair" as long as Loeb is barred from the program. Meeting was attended by 283 qualified voters, of whom 183 were around when the balloting was taken. Loeb was given an ovation at the conclusion of his speech.

Ask 'Unfair' Rap

Equity meeting also recommended that its council urge Equity reps on the TVA board to call a special membership meeting on or before Jan. 23 to tag "Goldbergs" with an "unfair" rap, and asked the legit union to seek cooperation from other TVA branches in taking similar action. Committee of five, consisting of Michael Lewin, Sam Jaffe, John Randolph, Jay Barney and John Garth, was named to implement the resolution.

Meanwhile, Loeb has brought suit against "Red Channels," which is a listing of 153 persons in radio and tele with alleged "subversive" affiliations. Case is being handled by Arthur Garfield Hays, whose firm is also serving as counsel to Ralph and Pert (Kelton) Bell and Allan E. Sloane in their suits against the publishers of "Channels," who also put out Counterattack, a newsletter. First suit to reach the trial stage is expected to be Sloane's.

NBC's Cassidy Goes Out On '52 Prediction Limb In Alerting News Staff

Mao Tse-Tung may break with Stalin in 1952, and Soviet Russia may put the heat on Marshal Tito for his defections in Yugoslavia—at least in the opinion of Henry Cassidy, NBC news and special events chief. In a memo to his staff in all parts of the world on some of the top news stories to look for during the coming year, Cassidy listed both of those, not, as he said, as predictions, but as "indications" of stories that may break.

One of Cassidy's "indications," in fact, has already occurred. That was his idea that Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower would announce his decision to stand as a Presidential candidate this year. Cassidy issued his memo during a year-end vacation, thereby calling the turn on the Eisenhower decision at least a week before it happened. Cassidy noted that the upcoming political conventions and election will monopolize much of the public's attention this year, but emphasized that there will be "much more" for his staff to look for at home and abroad. Among other top news stories he thinks may break during the year are:

The release of Associated Press correspondent William Otis from his imprisonment in Czechoslovakia and the "death of a head of state, and great natural disaster, the precise nature of the last two not to be predicted."

Fellows Sees $700,000,000 Invested In 1,800 New TV Stations in Post-Freeze

Keep Thinking

Washington, Jan. 15.

Addressing the Federal Communications Bar Assn. here last week, Harold E. Fellows, prexy of the National Assn. of Radio and TV Broadcasters, expressed as his hopes for closer understanding in 1952:

"That broadcasters will think like educators, part of the time.

"That educators will think like advertisers, part of the time.

"That lawyers will think like judges, part of the time.

"That judges will think like lawyers, part of the time.

"That Commissioners will think like examiners, and

"That examiners will think like Commission lawyers, and that Commission lawyers, and all lawyers for that matter, will think like broadcasters, part of the time."

Washington, Jan. 15.

Forecasting a "flood of dollars" which will "inundate" industry when the TV freeze is lifted, Harold E. Fellows, prexy of National Assn. of Radio and TV Broadcasters, last week estimated that $700,000,000 will be invested in construction alone of the 1,800 new stations expected to be built in the next few years.

Fellows' estimate, given in an address here before the Federal Communications Bar Assn., was based on a new study by the NARTB engineering department, of construction and equipment costs of VHF and UHF stations. It did not include professional fees charged by lawyers and engineers, in connection with filing applications with the Federal Communications Commission.

The study shows a range in TV station costs from $219,000 for VHF outlet in a community of less than 50,000 population, to $541,250 for a UHF station in a city of over 1,000,000 population.

"If the break in the freeze," said Fellows, "portends the construction of some 1,800 additional television stations over a period of the next few years, and if present costs remain static (which of course they are not likely to do), there will be in excess of $700,000,000 invested in construction of station facilities alone."

Don't Overlook Radio

But while "we are girding for the inevitable battles that must come in television," Fellows asserted, "let us not forget the 30-year

CBS-TV Tops Web Sponsored Hours In Affiliate Ties

CBS-TV research department, lining up selling aid material for the web's sales department, came up with the unexpected fact this week that CBS is now clearing more time on affiliate stations for sponsored shows than any of its competitors, including NBC. According to the CBS-TV statistics, the web now has an average of 23.52 station hours per show, as compared to the 21.64 averaged by NBC.

CBS statistics are based not on the average number of stations cleared for each sponsored program, which has been the peg used by NBC for its exploitation, but on the actual amount of time each sponsor has bought on the stations. CBS figures are based on a formula which designates an hour show as 1.0 which, multiplied by the number of stations carrying that show, would give the number of station hours. For each half-hour show, consequently, the figure would be trimmed in half.

Number of stations carrying each commercial program is based on the November rating reports, which were the last available when the research job was undertaken. As figured by CBS, if a half-hour show is sponsored once a week on 40 stations, the total of sponsored station hours would be 20. By averaging the station hours in that way for all its commercial shows, the web comes up with its average of 23.52 per show. On the basis only of the number of stations carrying a particular show, CBS has

NAVY'S KIMMELL TO QUIT CHICAGO FOR L.A. LOCALE

Chicago, Jan. 15.

Commander Walter H. Kimmell, for the past five years radio-TV director of the Naval Air Reserve Training Command, has requested and received inactive duty status, effective Jan. 31.

Kimmell for three years produced and placed the "Naval Air Reserve Show" series, two years with local Chi talent, and the third year with Coast talent. Annual series of 26 quarter-hours was placed on 543 stations in 1947, and in 1949, the program was aired on over 1,700 radio outlets. After the 1949 season, the NAR centered its production activities in Washington, and bypassed the midwestern Glenview operation.

Kimmell leaves for radio and television work in L. A. early in February.

Top 10: Or Proof Is in the Berle

Underscoring how much a top star can mean to the audience pull of a television show, NBC-TV's "Texaco Star Theatre," with Milton Berle vacationing, wound up in sixth place on Trendex' Top 10 network ratings for the week of Jan. 2-8. (Georgie Price subbed for Berle that week. Frank Sinatra show, aired directly opposite on the CBS-TV web, climbed to a 12.8 rating, indicating that it probably inherited some of Berle's regular audience.)

Dip in the Texaco rating permitted CBS-TV's "Talent Scouts" to move into top place for the second time, with the latter web's "I Love Lucy" also zooming up in the standings. Following is the Trendex Top 10, representing the "most popular" shows in 10 cities, each of which has three or more stations:

Talent Scouts (CBS)	47.3
I Love Lucy (CBS)	43.9
Red Skelton (NBC)	40.4
Show of Shows (NBC)	37.4
Godfrey & Friends (CBS)	37.2
Texaco Star Theatre (NBC)	35.6
Fireside Theatre (NBC)	32.7
Mama (CBS)	32.3
Big Town (CBS)	30.7
Goodyear Playhouse (NBC)	30.3
Man Against Crime (CBS)	30.3

In his statement Wailes said: "The Fort Industry Co. makes this announcement with deepest regret, but certain disagreements concerning basic operation policies have resulted in Mr. Jones' resignation. At the present time there are no plans as to his successor."

Jones joined the Fort Industry Co. in September, 1948, as general manager of WJBK.

RALPH EDWARDS SHOW

Writers: Paul Edwards, Tom Adair, Mott Lachman

Sustaining
NBC-TV, from Hollywood

Ralph Edwards, who conducted "Truth and Consequences" for many years, is essaying a daytime tele stand emanating from Hollywood. It promises to have some of the elements of his former shows, but apparently, Edwards is, at this point, keeping his zaniness well in check.

Apparently, viewers will be disappointed because of the restraint exercised by this program's conductor. Actually, if he can get started along the more conservative lines, he could develop a good show for the daytime trade. He seems to be handicapped because during the daylight hours, he apparently must keep his stunts and gimmicks confined to those that can be gotten across aurally. It's a tough handicap at this point.

The preem show (14) had Edwards setting the stage for subsequent sessions. He introduced a "come as you are when you got this call" gimmick for a subsequent stanza and had a woman call relatives at a distant point for the express purpose of finding how they are and then hang up. He interviewed a spry nonagenerian for some okay moments.

Assistants are Sara Berner, who does a character bit in and out of the show, and singer Carole Richards, who scores with a tune.

While this makes for passable video, Edwards will have to bring in the heavier artillery if he's to create fuller impact. Jose.

THE BIG PICTURE

"Big Picture" is a 13-week series of film on the Korean war, produced jointly by the Radio-TV branch of the Army's public information department and the Signal Corps Photographic Centre at Astoria, L. I., with each stanza to cover a month of the conflict. Judging from the edition viewed (13), the pix lack the showmanly touch of such similar ventures as the March of Time's "Crusade in Europe" and "Crusade in the Pacific," but certainly rate attention as an incisive and pertinent reporting job on what the Korean war looks like.

Last Sunday's stanza dealt with the war from mid-September, 1950, to mid-October. It included scenes of the landing at Inchon, the first assault of the Yank paratroopers behind enemy lines and some brutal pictures of victims of the Communist atrocities. Bodies, stretched out side-by-side in mass graves, resembled nothing so much as the horrors of the Nazi Buchenwald. Of special interest to tradesters, moreover, were clips of the late Al Jolson entertaining the Korean GIs. These films were lensed five days before the singer's death and are believed to be the last taken of him.

While the films were technically good and certainly served to point up the way modern war is fought, they lacked sufficient continuity for maximum impact. Scenes of the United Nations' recapture of Seoul, for example, comprised varied clips of the troops rolling into the city and cleaning out snipers. But, if it could have been possible, it would have been much better to follow the actions of a single soldier or company in the action. Army Capt. Carl Zimmerman, who scripts the series, furnished a good commentary and also did well in a live interview with a GI who had participated in the war.

Series is being syndicated by the Army to stations throughout the country. It is sponsored on WCBS-TV, the CBS flagship in N. Y., by the Federation Bank & Trust Co. Plugs were confined to an opening and closing announcement, and were strictly institutional in charact Stal.

Tele Followup Comment

Ed Sullivan's biog series on CBS Sundays, 8 p.m., took in this week (13) one of the more important showmen of the '20s and '30s. George White, whose series of "Scandals" was a top entertainment highlight of the era, was the centrepiece of a colorful and well-paced show. The entertainment, per se, failed to capture the colorful era in which White was at his height, but it didn't seem to matter too much inasmuch as the entertainment Sullivan gathered was tastefully presented with an extremely competent lineup.

Topping the listing was Peggy Lee, one of the more expressive songchicks around. Miss Lee negotiated one of the top White tunes, "Are You Having Any Fun," and participated in a well-presented finale.

One of the more interesting items was the appearance of Harry Richman, probably the top star developed in the "Scandals." Richman reprised "Birth of the Blues" which he did in 1926. He can still belt out a tune.

The singing lineup also had Rudy Vallee, who was also a prominent working under White's aegis. Vallee gave out with "Life is Just a Chell of Bowlies" according to the crooner's vocal switch. Richard Hayes also hit it off well with his rendition of "The Thrill is Gone."

The comedy contingent was ushered in by Smith & Dale, one of the best low comedy teams in the business. This tandem did the familiar "I Can Get it for You Wholesale." It's still a yockful piece. Rudy Vallee with assist by Horace McMahon reprised "The Man of the Hour" and clocked a laugh quota with it.

Dancers comprised Betty Bruce, a skillful tapster who made the "Charleston" an entertaining item, Helen Wood and Hal LeRoy, who participated in a "Black Bottom." White came on for the finale and this former hoofer-producer proved that he still knows how to handle his pedals when there's music to be danced to.

Although it's conceded that White presented some superior comics in his day, there are many that would quarrel with Sullivan's statement that Ziegfeld and Earl Carroll didn't know what to do with funny men.

CBS-TV's "Schlitz Playhouse of Stars" achieved what was probably its peak performance of the season with its presentation of Herman Melville's "Billy Budd" last Friday night (11). Show, presented on Broadway last season, was the occasion of considerable controversy among the N. Y. legit critics and managed to rack up a fairly long run under the almost fanatic backing of a few of the reviewers. Judging from the interest and emotions engendered by its TV presentation, those who backed the show were correct.

Video version was excellently adapted by Don Ettlinger from the play by Louis O. Coxe and Robert Chapman, which in turn was based on Melville's original novel. With a cast headed by Walter Hampden as the ship's captain (the role essayed on Broadway by Dennis King) and Charles Nolte, repeating his Broadway role as the ingenuous seaman, the "Playhouse" presentation captured the full intent of Melville's allegory about the inevitable conflict between good and evil, with its tragic results for both, and the contrapuntal theme of the stern and unbending discipline of man-made laws. Apparently with an eye to the mass TV audience, Ettlinger fashioned his script in more obvious tones than the Broadway original but in no way played down to viewers. This gave the show even more impact.

Hampden, one of the regular "stars" of the Schlitz series, gave a masterful impersonation of the captain, torn between his duty and his love and pity for the innocent sailor. Nolte matched him step for step, making entirely believable his personification of perfection and his ultimate doom. Peter Hobbs scored solidly as Claggert, the evil master-at-arms, etching his role as the complete villain with telling effect. Guy Spaull as the ship's second officer, and Wolfe Barzell, as the wise and understanding old sailor, topped a unanimously fine supporting cast. Producer director William H. Brown, Jr., also rates top kudos for his work in both departments. Sets by Al Ostrander almost duplicated those of the original Broadway production and so were just as successful in depicting the American battleship of the War of 1812. Glen Osser's score backed the show excellently. Withal, this was another fine example of TV's maturity when it comes to dramatic presentation.

"Colgate Comedy Hour" via NBC-TV Sunday (13) added up to a great waste of talent. For guestars Errol Flynn, Bruce Cabot, Rhonda Fleming and George Raft were chiefly used as foils for their hosts, Bud Abbott and Lou Costello.

Flynn was unimpressive in monologing a tale of how his search for his lady love ended at Niagara Falls where he found her with a stranger. Punch line of "Niagara Falls" was his cue to push Costello over a prop log.

A frontier saloon scene later in the session brought Flynn in as the heavy. But this bit also proved another springboard on which to get off some of A & C's typical slapstick humor. Viz.: Flynn forces Costello to swallow bullets which later appear to explode when he's shaken.

When not straighting for A & C, Miss Fleming pleased with sock vocals of "I'm in Love with a Wonderful Guy" and "Don't Blame Me." No one could blame her either for being unable to hold a straight face in a romantic scene with Costello.

Cabot had little to do as counterman at a one-arm restaurant patronized by A & C. Raft appeared briefly at the finale and presented the comics with a "trophy from the Motion Picture Academy in recognition of their help in spurring sales of popcorn." Obviously a gag, but a meaningless one.

As far as they themselves were concerned, A & C were guilty of bad taste by using a nine-year-old schoolboy as a stooge in one sequence. Calling him a "brat" wasn't very happy choice of words on the part of the comics.

Another piece of low-grade humor was a bit in which A & C along with sundry members of the company squirted milk out of their mouths into each others' faces. A cow milking scene was good for laughs despite its silliness.

No one expects the Abbott & Costello brand of levity to turn subtle or acquire some decorum. But in the future when film stars of the calibre of Flynn, Cabot, Raft and Miss Fleming are on hand as guests why not give them some material that viewers didn't see on the Hirst burlesque circuit 20 years ago?

George Price, substituting for Milton Berle while the latter vacations, became involved in a typically Berle type of show without the character of the same name.

Price had a chance to show that he's an excellent performer. He ingratiated himself early in the show and nearly maintained the same pace, but formatwise, the show fell flat.

The major entertainment came in the finale, with Joe Frisco. Frisco sounded as if he were ad libbing all over the lot and his lines came off with flavor. He did imitations of Joe Frisco, but his stuff had a greater ring of authenticity than the others doing the same act.

The talent lineup contained a batch of fine entertainers. Included were the Clark Bros., with a punchy dance routine, the De Marco Sisters (5) doubling from the Paramount, who delivered a sock rendition of "Jamboree Jones," and Vera Lynn, the English import. Miss Lynn has a voice and style that reflect great sensitivity. However, her single tune didn't seem to fit the general proceedings. Price and his son, Peter, did some sentimentalizing, which came off comparatively well.

The major letdown was the sketch by Jack Carter, Horace McMahon and Art Carney. The writing in this scene was of such calibre that it wouldn't matter who performed it. Ventriloquist Jimmy Nelson, now doing the commercials in place of Sid Stone, did an excellent job of selling in an ingratiating manner. He's an excellent technician, has a good sense of humor and makes the salesspiel entertainingly.

ABC-TV's "Celanese Theatre" came somewhat of a cropper with its presentation last Wednesday night (9) of Robert E. Sherwood's "Reunion in Vienna." Show had a certain sparkle and tempo, but it was more akin to comic opera than to the subtle, charmful quality of Sherwood's original. This might be attributed to the fact that World War II has completely negated any charm to be found in Sherwood's cast of the Austro-Hungarian court derelicts foundering after World War I (story took place in Vienna in 1929). But figuring even more importantly in the video show was the over-emphasis on farce and raciness imparted to the play by adapter Don Ettlinger, producer-director Alex Segal and the cast, headed by Melvyn Douglas, Signe Hasso, Ernest Truex and Paul McGrath.

Where Sherwood's original left the audience to imagine whether the psychiatrist's wife had spent the night with the madcap Rudolph Maximilian, Ettlinger and Segal permitted no question or supposition. They merely had Miss Hasso follow Douglas into the bedroom and coyly close the door, then come out happily singing the next morning. (That scene, incidentally, along with a couple of other smooching scenes between the two, was probably as "adult" as any video yet attempted and is almost certain to create comment, adverse or otherwise.) And the entire show had that obvious quality, which militated against it.

On the basis that Segal wanted the show played that way, the cast made out okay. Douglas was bombastic and sex-crazy as the exiled archduke, and Miss Hasso gave a good reading to her lines as his former lover. Truex caricatured his role as her father-in-law and McGrath, as the soft-spoken psychiatrist, turned in perhaps the best performance. Evelyn Varden, as the cigar-smoking dame who tossed the party for the one-time nobility, topped a competent supporting cast. Show had the usual top-drawer Celanese production mountings.

NBC-TV's "Kate Smith Evening Hour" was chosen this year by Look magazine for the handing out of Look's second annual TV awards and, despite the usual monotony associated with such affairs, the program came off rather well last Wednesday night (9). Most of the winners, of course, were present, either for a walkon or to go through a small routine, which accounted for most of the show's entertainment quality. But Miss Smith and her producer, Ted Collins, also rate nods for confining their usual accolading platitudes to a minimum in their intros, letting the awards speak for themselves.

Miss Smith was guilty of a slight oversight in the initial presentation, when she acclaimed ABC-TV's Alex Segal as the top director of the year but failed to mention that he does "Celanese Theatre." That it was no more than an oversight was proved later in the show, when she gave CBS-TV's "Studio One" a hefty plug in her intro of producer Worthington Miner, who was cited as the top dramatic producer. Other winners included Max Liebman, producer-director of NBC's "Show of Shows;" Sid Caesar and Imogene Coca, as stars of that show; Rudolph Halley and Sen. Estes Kefauver, for their roles in the crime investigation hearings; Burr Tillstrom and his Kuklapolitan Players; sportscasters Jim Britt, Jack Brickhouse and Jimmy Powers, of NBC's "Cavalcade of Sports;" Marlo Perkins, of the same web's "Zoo Parade;" John Cameron Swayze, of "Camel News Caravan," and Milton Berle, for "Texaco Star Theatre."

Since Berle is presently vacationing on the Coast, the show cut to Hollywood for a live pickup from NBC's studios there, with Bob Hope presenting the plaque to Berle, along with the usual badinage between the two. Caesar and Miss Coca socked across one of their pantomime skits, with "Show of Shows" also represented via a socko dance by the Hamilton Trio and a well-executed tune by the Billy Williams Quartet. "Kukla, Fran & Ollie" presented their "Cherchez la Femme" number with topdrawer results. Miss Smith introed the show with a song and also took over a few minutes after the midway station break for another few tunes at her piano. Look publisher Gardner Cowles appeared at the finale, to present a "special award" to Miss Smith, on the plea that her evening show took the air too late this season to be included in Look's selections.

Audrey Meadows, who subbed four weeks for the ailing Rose Marie in the current Broadway legiter, "Top Banana," displayed her versatility Monday night (14) on CBS-TV's "Lux Video Theatre" by singing in Chinese. Producers of the show reportedly auditioned a number of Chinese girls for the small role but found none of them capable of singing a Chinese tune. Miss Meadows, who's also featured in NBC-TV's "Bob and Ray" show,

M&M CANDY CARNIVAL
With Gene Crane, Barry Cassell, Don Lenox, Bill Bailey, others Producer: Charles Vanda
Director: Alan Bergman
30 Mins.; Sun., 12:30 p.m.
M&M, LTD.
CBS-TV, from Philadelphia
(Esty)

Charles Vanda, veepee of WCAU-TV, Philadelphia, has come up with a bright new kid show in "Candy Carnival" merely by staging a moppet amateur contest against a carnival background. Show, played for the kids at home before a kid studio audience, has much of a carny flavor, complete with the sideshow attractions, centre ring action, etc. As such, it should attract and hold a sizeable small-fry audience.

Basic format has a group of amateurs, who must be 18 or under, competing on each program for a $25 savings bond. Winners each week are then to be brought back during the 11th, 12th and 13th weeks of each cycle to compete for the grand prize—a week's pro booking at Hamid's Steel Pier, Atlantic City. George Hamid serves as an in-person judge (but was absent on the show caught) (13), together with two TV editors of various newspapers around the country, whose comments are phoned in.

Interspersed with the tyro acts are the standard carny stunts, such as dunking a clown via baseball pitching, the high striker (hitting a gong with a sledge hammer), etc. Kids also get bonds or some of the sponsor's candy for these. Carny flavor is also projected by the fine work of Gene Crane, as the barker, and Barry Cassell, as the ring-master-owner of the show. Don Lenox and Bill Bailey are okay as a couple of clowns.

On the stanza caught, the acts were surprisingly good. Winner was a baton-twirler from Harrisburg, Pa., who'll now compete in the finals. Plugs for M&M Candies were neatly integrated into the action, and shots of the studio audience contentedly munching the sponsor's product didn't hurt the cause any. Stal.

RICHARD HARKNESS NEWS REVIEW
Producer: James Day
15 Mins., Mon.-thru-Fri., 11:45 a.m.
Sustaining
NBC-TV, from Washington

Richard Harkness, ace NBC radio news analyst, is getting his first try at the TV web on a regularly skedded basis via his own pre-noon show. Despite the fact that he debuted on the co-ax only last Monday (7), Harkness is no novice to the medium, having put i several years of apprenticeship on the local NBC station (WNBW), plus numerous one-shot appearances on the network.

Mainstay of the Harkness approach is a quiet air of authority, despite a rather nervous first show. Blessed with the looks and air of a statesman, rather than reporter, Harkness speaks deliberately and surely, convincing his viewers that he knows whereof he speaks. He avoids the breathless, stop-the-presses approach, a quality which makes him easy to listen to and comprehend. He has a colloquial appeal, even though he keeps his "script" strictly literate. His personality, backed by a reputation of years in the newspaper and radio field, should make him a safe bet for sponsorship and success with the housewives who must, at this hour, make up a large share of his audience.

Slant of the show is in no way, however, predicated to the so-called "woman's viewpoint." Harkness either credits the house frau with an intelligent adult interest in the news of the day, or is prepping his show along lines that would fit into any time segment—or both. At any rate, his assumption that he needn't scale the show for the feminine listener is flattery in itself.

Format, though it undoubtedly has yet to shake itself down, shows promise and interest. In the two shows caught, there was a constructive use of the TV newsreel camera, both in the spot news and the feature departments. Latter, a three times a week feature of show, has a behind-the-scenes approach. For example, on initial show, local NBC lensers, with Harkness commenting, did a pickup at the Taft campaign h.q. Newsreel portions capitalize on the news of the day. For example, one show carried the Churchill arrival, another the sinking of the "Flying Enterprise," a particularly lucky coup of timing.

Camera work is sharp and well handled, with photographed background of the Harkness home library showing up as the McCoy and adding an intimate touch. Lowe.

QUIZ KIDS

Director: Bill Taylor

CBS-TV, from Chicago

"Quiz Kids," panel show pegged on the gray matter semantics of five youngsters, returned to TV Sunday (13) on CBS-TV after a long AM and TV ride on NBC. CBS debut via WBKB, web's Chi affiliate, really demonstrated that NBC's loss is Columbia's gain. It's the type of format that blends especially well with TV and with its slightly re-tooled approach the kiddies' intellect displays should rapidly climb to the head of the Sunday afternoon class.

Wisely, package owner Louis G. Cowan and producer John Lewellen have discarded visual gadgets that slowed down the kids during their NBC tenure and, as shown on the opener, are relying on the personality of the youngsters and quizmaster Joe Kelly to put over the half-hour.

Wisdom of the change was obvious on this first CBS show with Kelly jovially fixing the questions and deftly pacing the affair. Kids projected excellently for the session that had moments of seriousness as well as comedy. Apparently on the theory that the younger panelists the more video animated their faces, the top age is eight years. The theory was substantiated.

That this group is an unusual collection of grade schoolers was evident during Gov. Adlai Stephenson's guest spot. Chief executive asked the kids if they'd like to be president. Their replies belied their youth. Frankie Vander Ploeg, age six, said he'd like to be president "to stop wars and to help poor people and to make his parents proud." Harvey Dytch, age eight, wasn't so sure he wanted the job "because the president has to have help from others for ideas and if the ideas fail he gets the blame alone."

Master Dytch was named the quiz kid of the week at the end of the show, having the best record for questions answered. His exposition on the king of prehistoric beasts, complete with a listing of geological eras, would have shamed a college grad. Young man also drew biggest laugh while explaining he wasn't planning on matrimony. Said he was going to be an explorer and "a safari was no place to get a baby."

Chief quizzer Kelly was in fine form and handled the kids expertly. Production from the stage of WBKB's Garrick Theatre was up to top standard. There might be just a bit more camera attention on the youngsters for better impact. All in all, "Quiz Kids" looks like a sure investment for some bankroller. Dave.

"It's in the Bag," new audience participation show on NBC-TV, is a routine quizzer that viewers can ither take or leave. Half-hour cross-the-board stanza may satisfy those who have accidentally tuned in. But on the other hand there's little in the program that would encourage channel-switchers to make a point of catching it a second time.

On Monday's (14) edition emcee Bob Russell plied three women contestants with innocuous questions and charades. Correct answers were rewarded with cans of soup, peaches, food mixers, etc. Those at home possibly may take a vicarious interest in the success of the studio contestants.

However, if some means were incorporated in the format whereby viewers could be cut in on the spoils the show's rating should rise appreciably. At present, the camera fails to pick up the studio audience. That's point in the airer's favor for most TV producers have yet to learn that the bulk of the audience is an unseen one and not the handful of people in the studio.

Russell is an affable emcee who has a glib way with words as well as contestants. He's aided by songstress Arlene James, a pert brunette, and "The Jesters," a musical combo headed by Red Latham. Physical production values are meagre. Background consists of some grocery-lined shelves. Stanz owned by Package Gilb.

Cy Howard's "My Friend Irma" creation, which has gotten some enviable boxoffice mileage out of radio and films over the past half-dozen years, appears headed for an even more sprightly career in television on the basis of last week's premiere installment on CBS-TV, as situation comedies go on video, "Irma's" a natural; so much so that Marie Wilson - Cathy Lewis & Co. grooved themselves into the Tuesday night 10:30 to 11 slot last week with an ease and finesse which left the impression they'd been doing TV duty these many months.

For a preem performance it was sock—a faithful video reincarnation of likeable, familiar characterizations, aided and abetted by some slick direction and production, with particularly sparkling performances by Miss Wilson and the long-suffering Miss Lewis as her roommate, and the sort of glib, light scripting that's been one of the basic assets of "Irma" in its radio career. There's little doubt that Cavalier Cigarets (R. J. Reynolds) grabbed itself a winner in this one.

Over and above the show's inherent comedy values (with always an added genuflection in the direction of both Miss Wilson and Miss Lewis, who are its two most valuable elements), the emergence of "Irma" on the CBS-TV roster accents anew the Columbia network's gradual strengthening in the widening and conflicting ideologies attending the NBC vs. CBS program masterminding for TV. As opposed to the NBC credo of "spectaculars" and hit-'em-with-the-bestest-and-the-mostest, with coin no object, CBS has—as in its earlier radio career—been nurturing a TV formula designed within a more intimate framework, with its roots planted in the situation comedy formula.

Thus, "Irma" makes a fitting companion piece for such other strong CBS entries as the Lucille Ball-Dezi Arnez "I Love Lucy," the Burns & Allen Show, the Alan Young Show, "Amos 'n' Andy" and "Mama," among others. Both in the realm of economics and from a standpoint of evolving an entertainment pattern, the CBS long-range bid for a top stake in the TV program sweepstakes rates encouragement.

In addition to Misses Wilson and Lewis, the "Irma" casting is top-flight, with Hal March as Irma's boyfriend, Al; Gloria Gordon as the landlady; Sig Arno as Professor Kropotkin; Don McBride as Irma's exasperated boss; vet film actress Margaret Dumont as the blue-blooded Mrs. Rhinelander, and Brooks West as Jane's (Cathy Lewis) boyfriend. Richard Whorf as director-producer vested the program with qualitative values. Rose.

CBS-TV's "Morning News," a new quarter-hour cross-the-board show (half-hour on Fridays), got away to a relatively good start last week. Format wisely accents things feminine in light of the predominant hausfrau audience on hand at 10 a.m.

Such features as regional reports on food prices, fashion news and home furnishing trends are stressed as is a comprehensive weather roundup from Washington. On Friday's (11) session, newscaster Harry Marble briefed viewers on domestic and world happenings while Dorothy Doan served up some tasty sidelights on the day's events.

Film coverage of out-of-town fashion editors' opinions on new styles was especially well done. Piped in from Washington, Jim Fidler nicely sums up the weather situation for the eastern half of the U. S. But from a straight news aspect, this new series doesn't provide viewers with anything they hadn't read already in the morning paper. An effort should be made to get some "hot-off-the-ticker" bulletins into the layout. Gilb.

CBS TELEVISION WORKSHOP

CBS-TV, from N. Y.

"CBS-TV Workshop," designed as a projection into video of the once-famous "Columbia Radio Workshop," got off entirely on the wrong foot in its preem Sunday (13). Show's producers ambitiously attempted to capsule the lengthy "Don Quixote" into a half-hour format but, as the results proved, this was an impossibility. Aside from the scripting problems, however, the production itself emerged as almost amateurish.

Avowed (and stated) purpose of this series is to showcase new production techniques for TV. It would be presumed from that that the producers would have been solidly grounded first in the techniques developed to date but if they were, it certainly wasn't apparent on the preem. Pace was static till it hurt, and the few possibilities on which they could have capitalized to project at least partially the flavor of the Cervantes classic were snafued or lost. End result, instead of carrying TV's drama techniques forward, pushed them back a couple of years.

As was anticipated, the program picked up the most famous Quixote incident, his jousting with the windmills. Cameras had the forlorn knight, played by Boris Karloff, charge a group of prop windmills on his horse. Karloff was then seen perched on a windmill spoke, with the wind blowing through his hair to give the illusion of motion. Second camera, rotating on its axis, showed the horizon revolving. But, where a simple super-imposition shot might have obtained the desired effect of Karloff actually riding the spoke, the two lenses for some reason were never brought together. And that was only one example of the faulty camera and production technique.

Script by Alvin Sapinsley, based on an adaptation by Joseph Liss of the Cervantes original, depicted Karloff as a sympathetic madman but conveyed little of Cervantes' satire. Karloff's thesping was adequate for the job but he could have sparked much more with a better script and better production. Jimmy Savo, as Sancho Panza, the lackey, managed to convey his unique impish quality despite the show, not because of it. Grace Kelly was wasted as the scullery maid at the inn where the knight found his commission, and Robert H. Harris fared little better as the innkeeper.

Producer Norris Houghton, along with Donald Davis, CBS-TV exec producer of dramatic programs, and Dorothy Mathews reportedly have a string of experimental shows coming up to test the efficacy of their plans. Final judging, consequently, will have to await further results. It's to be hoped, though, that they don't try to bite off too much in the programs to come. Stal.

One of the potentially most interesting formats to come out of a local shop in a long spell, "Impact" provides a needed hypo on the hometown tele front. Sort of a lower case "See It Now," it's produced by the Chi ABC station in cooperation with the Chicago Daily News whose staffers come on to interview local personalities in the news and to discuss current events.

If the premier was a bit disappointing, that was partly due to the advance buildup by the News, which frontpaged the show as one that "will make television history." There were some lagging spots on the opener, and some of the interview segments weren't too productive. But, in the main, it came off as an interesting session that evidenced considerable enterprise that bodes well for its future.

Best portion was a remote visit to O'Hara Field, where Tom Casey chinned with the jet interceptor pilots stationed there. This segment was preceded by Austin Kiplinger's studio interview with the unit's commanding officer, who outlined the functions of the air defense setup. It wound up with a shot of the jets taking off on a mission. It was a well-rounded backgrounding of a little known but

Garroway 'Today' Off to Boff Start As Revolutionary News Concept

By GEORGE ROSEN

NBC on Monday (14) preemed its widely-ballyhooed 7 to 9 a.m. "Today" television show—trailerized as a revolutionary concept in TV programming designed to bring to the waker-upper a camera display of his morning newspaper, plus all the supplementary magazine-feature attractions. That it's novel, ambitious and charts a new step in NBC's continuing quest for fresh patterns, there's no denying. In fact radio in its most bullish days never dared venture into such gargantuan coin-splurging avenues of unorthodox programming.

That it managed to create an unmatched pre-premiere excitement within the trade is evidenced from the unusual response from affiliates on the the interconnected network willing to warm up their transmitters at such an early hour. Too, it marks the return of Dave Garroway (this time in the role of emcee - "communicator") to the NBC channels after a longtime absence.

Almost from the moment that the cameras picked up Garroway and the Communications Center in RCA Exhibition Hall, N. Y., "nerve center" and originating point, the program captured an electric excitement and tempo perhaps never before realized on such a broad canvas. The idea is big and the NBC cameras, tackling a tough marathon assignment, managed to project its bigness. Obviously the 120-minute program is patterned to achieve both a running continuity and an overlap of its basic features at frequent intervals, with an awareness that there will be an equal overlap in viewers. Thus Chicago, for example, is picked up at 8 o'clock (EST) so that the midwest is viewing its second hour of the show after the eastern channels have signed off.

For the preem performance, the bugs were reduced to a minimum and the camera boys turned in a sock job on pacing the "TV newspaper." The beehive of Communications Center activity provided an ideal background flavor as Garroway and his two principal aides, James Fleming and Jack Lescoulie, succeeded in vesting the variegated elements with a maximum of showmanship. There were few static spots as "Today" molded a conglomerate of attractions into cohesive whole.

In quick succession, there were capsule news presentations off the on-camera AP, UP and INS machines. Monitors picked up mobile units around the country, with pictorial spreads of the Pentagon in Washington and Grand Central Station in N. Y. coming alive in the morning.

There was the Chi police cruiser at Randolph and Michigan alerted to an approaching day of traffic hazards. There was the occasional charting of weather bureau reports from Jim Fidler in Washington, the telephoto machines grinding out pictures and front page facsimilies of the San Francisco Chronicle for a cross-country camera projection even as the S. F. daily presses were turning 'em out; again a rack of the same morning's dailies flown in from all parts of the country heralding individual headlines to "localize" the show's formula. There was overseas news with on-the-spot pickups from London and Frankfurt. There were drama and human interest values, too, as families were brought into the Communications Center to talk with their sons and brothers in Korea as the monitors picked up (pre-filmed) the GI's visually.

There's a continuing running ribbon of news framing the lower screen and the time in the lower right hand corner as Garroway & Co. move on to the other program facets for recitals of sports, art events, theatre premieres, the new books (Fleur Cowles brought on to background release of her "Bloody Precedent" tome); an occasional break-in with recordings, and the regular quarter-hour "recesses" to permit for local station cut-ins—tied in to a sales pattern formulated by NBC to allow for local sponsorship well as national participation.

Thus the whole show has a flexibility that could anticipate unscheduled innovations, changes and additions. And while it all suggests careful through-the-night planning and preparedness, there is an ad lib quality and an air of spontaneity about it, too, thanks primarily to Garroway, who appears an ideal choice for top man of the display. An old hand at newscasts stemming from his early Chi days in radio, Garroway also manages to personalize the presentation and bring to it a human equation.

This is lofty programming in the overall TV scheme, even anticipating a day when early morning commuters will have access to the receivers on trains. It merits that kind of viewer and sponsor acceptance.

ROYAL SHOWCASE

U. S. RUBBER
NBC-TV, from New York
(Fletcher D. Richards)

U. S. Rubber has an entertaining entry in its "Royal Showcase," which preemed Sunday (13) at 7 p.m. It's slotted directly opposite "Paul Whiteman Revue," which a competing tire manufacturer, Goodyear, backs on ABC-TV. While the Goodyear series has a more lavish production, with impressive sets, a vocal group and a corps of terpers, "Royal" hues closer to the more intimate vaudeo format and includes sketches.

Emcee-director is Broadway producer George Abbott, who handles himself well. His intros are straightforward and delivered with a sense of humor and proportion that avoids the cliche superlatives. Additionally, he can project himself briefly into the sketches in a natural manner. All in all, he conveys the impression of being more than the usual "talent-pointer."

Format is not contrived. On each show there will be an established comic, an "up-and-comer" and a name recording artist. On the kick-off telecast, 19-year-old Joel Grey was the neophyte and demonstrated real promise. Performing in a backstage setting as a kid who couldn't get an audition with Abbott, Grey did a sock satiric tune spoofing nostalgia songs ("do you remember Rita and Aly, Ava and Frankie. . . . Dagmar?"). He wove in some carbons—a deft bit of Jerry Lewis and a so-so Margaret O'Brien. In the dance department he was clicko, with good comic effect.

In the middle spot Rosemary Clooney did a nice job on "Be My Life's Companion" and followed with "Come-on-A My House." Latter utilized a harpsichord in the orchestration, to duplicate the arrangement of her original platter hit.

As the established comic, Bert Lahr slammed home a sketch, written by Nat Hiken, on his struggle with red tape in getting a library card. Funny in itself, it also took a healthy cut at bureaucracy in general.

Production was topflight throughout, with good camerawork on Miss Clooney's vocals and an effective opening shot of orchleader Gordon Jenkins giving the downbeat. Commercials for the tires were nicely put over by Ben Grauer. Bril.

CARTOON PARTY

WPTZ, Philadelphia

"Cartoon Party" begins another season with a new sponsor, but pretty much of the same format. Pauline Comonar is the artist and she does the illustrations for children's stories to a musical accompaniment. With rhythmic timing, Miss Comonar pictures the story of the "Three Little Fishes." As a clincher for a steady juve following, the artist features a serial on the show. This one, from the "Magic Story Book," concerns the adventures of "Billy Bear," who gets into difficulties from which he is not extricated until next week's program.

There is a studio audience of sprouts, and the young home viewers are asked to send in cartoons for prizes. Commercials are geared to the moppet audience, with a puppet Cookie Clown, a circus train, and only a few seconds devoted to such adult considerations as wrapped in double foil, freshness, etc. Gagh.

After a long hitch on the CBS network, Vaughn Monroe has been shifted to the NBC web to do his plugging for Camel cigs. Otherwise, it's the same Saturday night show featuring the Monroe organization in a rundown of the current hit tunes as registered by VARIETY's compilation of disk jockey listenings in the Music Section.

It's a pleasing musical layout with Monroe originating each weekly program from the various key cities which his band is touring. The maestro handles the bulk of the vocals in his trademarked baritone with a guest femme vocalist also spotlighted on a couple of tunes in each frame. Monroe's crew and choral groups supply excellent backgrounds.

On last Saturday's stanza (12), Monroe delivered a brace of tunes, including "Charmaine," "Shrimpboats," "Ooh What You Did" and "How High The Moon," while guest vocalist Betty Clooney (Rosemary Clooney's sister) neatly handled her assignments on "Slow Poke" and "Anytime." Monroe also continues to salute various colleges on each show via a medley of campus numbers. Introes to each number and some of the plugs are dished up in jingle form, but not too obtrusively.

The straight plugs hammer away at the well-worn theme of "leading medical specialists find no throat irritation after 30 days," etc.

WMAQ, Chicago

WMAQ, the Chi NBC anchor, has set aside this Saturday evening period for a continuing series of pub-service airers dealing primarily with hometown problems. This latest cycle, produced with the aid of the Better Business Bureau, focuses the spotlight on various shady business practices. If the rest of the series continues in the same hardhitting vein as the opener which dealt with the parasties who've attached themselves to TV set retailing, the venture should find itself in the award-winning category.

Unfolded in believable dramatic form, the "TV Racket" segment did a neat gloves-off job on the shysters hovering around the ledge of the video boom. Such tactics were outlined as the 10-day home trial with the fine-printed stipulation the sets are not returnable; the phoney TV service club deals with their hyped charges, and the old contract switcheroo in which the gullible thinks he's making a token down payment on a receiver for which he gets a watch as a bonus only to find a collection outfit moving in to collect for the balance due on the timepiece.

Interestingly, the one sales twist that was given the most detailing was one that's similar to the come-on pitch beamed on several local stations. That's the "Mystery Tune" sales crutch where everyone who sends in a guess automatically cops a $100 "gift certificate." The paper is good only as down payment on a tele set with an inflated price tag.

Show was narrated patly by Arthur Peterson with the generous-sized cast expertly depicting the conners and the conned.

RUPPERT BREWING CO.
WROW, Albany

WROW program manager Keyes Perrin recently took over sports, with which he is familiar through a longtime WOR partnership with Al Schacht, and other experiences. Perrin handles the show for his beer sponsor in a briskly authoritative manner, although on two blocks caught he read principally wire service material. He closed the second segment with a local angle: an experiment with the use of a handkerchief in basketball refereeing, which an Albany official predicts will be widely adopted. An interview would have clinched this point.

Perri possesses a clear voice, sizable volume and sure technique. At times, his grouping of words and sentence endings take on a slightly monotonous pattern. Greater flexibility would be desirable. There could be more variation in the copy.

CBS, from N. Y.

Vet dramatic show, which made its bow on CBS in 1941, is back on its home grounds, and as interesting as ever despite its stock, glib character. Gimmick of using a budding collegiate actor or actress to play opposite a name star is still a good one, and production values make this a sturdy contender. One could have wished for a less Hollywoodish script, with fewer stock gags and wisecracks, than on Sunday's (13) opener, however.

Plot concerned a law prof renting a house in which a fugitive from justice had taken shelter. Guy had been framed by a greedy factory-owner, who burned down his plant and accused the guy of the deed. An ugly mob was seeking to lynch the boy. His gal friend found him in the house; at some difficulty enlisted the prof's aid in helping to clear his name, and all ended well.

Ronald Colman was his suave, smooth self portraying the law prof. Minrose Lucas, a U. of St. Louis co-ed, playing opposite, handled her role satisfactorily, fitting into the contrived story adequately. Supporting roles were better than the script deserved.

An ANTA board will judge the collegian participants, with a system of quarter-finals, semis and finals. Winners get $250, with grand finalists copping $1,000, plus at least $1,000 in guest star fees on future web radio shows.

Radio Follow-Up

WNEW, N. Y. program topper Dick Pack has come up with an entertaining public service feature in its "Singing Weathermen" transcriptions, 10 quickie songs that serve as weather bulletins. The tunes are in standard pop forms—hillbilly, jazz riff, ballad, march, etc.—which are cued to the weather; the rain report is in blues idiom, natch. Eight of the items cover specific situations and two are general intros to spoken announcements.

Lyrics, scripted by Bill Kaland, and music by Roy Ross, come over appealingly as chirped by Bob Haymes and the Jesters with Darlene Zito, backed by Ross' WNEW orch. It's a feature that should attract dialers and get a hearing for the integrated Taystee Bread commercials.

Second broadcast of CBS' "The People Act," documentary series presented in association with the Ford Foundation, offered a provocative story on the recent fight over the school system in Arlington, Va. The program, which uses no actors, reported on the way in which suburban commuters in the area near the nation's capital were able to win new schools for their children against the opposition of older residents who feared higher taxes.

Broadcast described the overcrowded conditions in the Arlington schools, with insufficient classrooms, kids forced to attend classes only half a day, the steady loss of teachers, lack of equipment, and other conditions which robbed the youngsters of decent education. Using taped comments from ordinary citizens and those who actually participated in the movement, it outlined the formation of the Citizens Committee for School Improvement. CCSI, finding it got no satisfaction from the existing school board, which was appointed in Richmond and not responsible to the people, campaigned to change the method of selecting the board and then got a group which was able to end the deplorable conditions. It was able to push through a bond issue which made possible construction of new buildings.

All in all, this airer underlined the series' theme, that the public has it in its power to solve crucial everyday living problems by getting together with hard work, and despite threats, according to democratic principles.

Producer Irving Gitlin wrapped up a listenable show. It didn't answer many of the questions raised by the Arlington experience, but it did hit the highspots of a problem which affects not only Arlington but the great majority of all U. S. cities.

MAKING DEMOCRACY WORK FOR YOU AND ME

(Our Role in the World Today)
With Sen. Estes Kefauver
15 Mins.; Fri., 9:30 p.m.
Sustaining
WMCA, New Work

Sen. Estes Kefauver is off on a four-broadcast statement of his principles —foreign and domestic —with Nathan Straus' N. Y. indie, WMCA, providing the platform. Regardless of whatever political aspirations reside in the conscience of the "TV-made" Tennesseean, the man whose name has become virtually a generic term for clamping down on vice and crime has something significant to say. With all his great attributes, however, the legislator-investigator can stand some coaching in script-reading. He would appear to be better in extempore style. With this one under his belt, improvement should set in.

The senator's initialer was in the form of a formal speech delivered at a dinner of the Manhattan Club, N. Y., where he was introed by Straus as a "statesman and respected leader in American public life." The soft voiced southerner plumped for a calm assessment of our position in the world with special emphasis to our main adversary—Soviet Russia. Citing the historic roles of old Britain and ancient Rome as having achieved peace through force (e.g., Pax Romano), he embraced the U. S. counterpart as peace through leadership.

In preamble to the crux of his address, he asserted that both political parties must set up permanent machinery for mutual consultation on matters of foreign policy, these functions having been considerably watered down since the death of bipartisan-"un-partisan" Michigan Sen. Arthur Vandenburg.

Sen. Kefauver then launched into an elaboration of a four-point outline for the U. S. covering (1), the creation of a better atmosphere here and abroad; (2), leadership in elminating the trouble spots of the world; (3), helping the peoples in the world vs. hunger, poverty and disease and, (4), relations with the Soviet. Within that ambitious framework, the senator indicated he has a program of his own for future discussion. Next up (18) is the subject, "Cracks in the Iron Curtain." Score one up for Kefauver-WMCA-U. YOUR HOME TOWN

With George Grim, Ramona Gerhard
Producer-Director: Bob Sutton
Writer: Grim
30 Mins., Sun. 1:30 p.m.
NORTHERN STATES POWER
WCCO, Minneapolis

This transcribed show has Cedric Adams, local top radio personality, visiting the state's various small towns and interviewing some of their residents and calling attention to their points of interest, industries and commercial establishments. With Adams confined to his home by injuries, George Grim, who also rates high in radio and as a newspaper columnist here, is pinchhitting and he comes through admirably, the same as always.

Show is, perhaps, primarily a goodwill builder for station and sponsor. But skillful and clever scripting and handling give it entertainment value, too. It possesses interest not only for the homefolks directly concerned, but also for the public generally. After all, most people like to know about some of the more interesting people and features of nearby communities which they might or might not have ever visited and in which friends or relatives might or might not reside.

In this particular instance, it being the next to the last day of 1951, Grim, deviating from the usual format resumed the past year's more important Minnesota and adjacent North Dakota happenings, sprinkling his recital with clips from other taped 1951 WCCO broadcasts at opportune moments. The manner in which the narrative was given and the recorded interpolations made, as well as Grim's top-drawer delivery, produced a smooth unfolding, accentuated by staffer Ramona Gerhard's pleasant background organ music.

Grim has the faculty of selecting the best material and tying it together in shipshape fashion.

PERRY MARTIN SINGS

With Martin, Bill Metchnek orch (5), Lawrence Malmberg
Producer-director: Judy Bryson
30 Mins., Sun., 2:30 p.m.
GOPHER CAFE
WTCN, Minneapolis

Long one of the most popular local warblers, Perry Martin not only possesses a high-grade singing voice, but also a personality that carries neatly over the ether waves. Well poised, Martin proves equally adept at both chirping and talking. In emerging his own show, a pleasant mixture of song and music, and in handling commercials, too, he's always at home.

Martin makes his own poll of local music and phonograph shops to learn the week's three top tunes, judged by sheet music and record sales, and includes these in his routine. Interspersing his sallies into song, the Bill Metchnek orch contributions stand out as agreeable music making. In particular, the Lawrence Malmberg accordion solo is of a high order.

Guest Stars Like 'Em Fast & Easy

TV dramatic shows with guest star policies are finding the going much rougher these days in pacting names. And all because of the fact that the glamor boys and gals find they can pick up just as many bucks doing a quick on-and-off routine on the multiplicity of high-budgeted variety shows ("Toast of the Town," "Texaco Star Theatre," et al.).

Producers of dramatic shows complain that they're getting the same brushoff answer from top stars, and with recurring frequency: "Why should we involve ourselves with 15 to 20 hours of rehearsal a week, for the same fee we could knock off by doing a five or 10-minute unrehearsed bit on a variety show?"

Chi Still in No. 2 Spot, Turning Out More Video Shows Than Ever Before

Chicago, Jan. 15.

Lost in the hullabaloo that attended the demise of the "Garroway At Large" showpiece and the halving of "Kukla, Fran and Ollie," both hallmarks of the so-called Chicago school of video technique, is the fact that this midwest point is actually turning out more network originations than ever before in its four-year TV career.

With the recent addition of three Chi-anchored shows, the Loop tele plants are presently feeding 20 different shows to the four webs weekly for a total of 17 hours. That's considerably above the previous year, despite the loss of the Garroway show and "Magic Slate" on NBC-TV and the Don McNeill stint on ABC-TV.

Admittedly some of the current Chi offerings fall in the sustaining "filler" class, with their existence pretty much dependent upon the whims of the New York home offices. But the bulk of the roster is backed by sponsorship and significant ratings.

Although Hollywood is moving rapidly into the picture since the advent of the cross-country hookup, the Windy City still holds down the No. 2 production spot, second only to Manhattan in terms of number of live shows and total web time filled. This fact has frequently been overlooked, Chi TV tubthumpers complain, because of the absence of the high-budgeted hooplas on the local front.

NBC Increases Pickups

Surprisingly, it's been NBC, which has come in for a lot of hometime beefing as a result of the Garroway and "Kukla" situation,

Gen. Mills CBS-TV Buy Of 'Bride & Groom' Cuing Wholesale Show Shifts

General - Mills, which pacted some time ago for the 10:30 to 10:45 a.m. strip on CBS-TV to take advantage of the adjacency to the new Arthur Godfrey simulcast, this week chose the web's "Bride and Groom" to fill that spot. Show, currently airing cross-the-board from 2:45 to 3 p.m., will move into its new time slot as soon as CBS wraps up the necessary arrangements, which will occasion considerable shifting of both the morning and afternoon programming schedules.

Major item still to be settled before the new lineup can take effect is Hudson Paper's current sponsorship of "Bride" on Thursday afternoons. CBS must obtain Hudson's consent to the move, but is confident that consent will be forthcoming. It's expected that the paper napkin firm will pick up the show in its new morning slot on either Thursdays or Fridays, with GM bankrolling the other

Collingwood's Leave For Harriman Post

Washington, Jan. 15.

Charles B. Collingwood, White House Correspondent for CBS, has taken a leave of absence to become top information officer for W. Averell Harriman, the new Mutual Security Administrator. Collingwood takes up his new post tomorrow (Wed.).

Job involves coordinating information activities of the Mutual Security Program carried out by the State and Defense Departments and Mutual Security Administration. Collingwood has been with CBS since 1941. Prior to that he was with United Press.

Mulvahill Exits GAC

John Mulvahill has resigned as General Artists Corp television dept. head, effective Jan. 25. He goes out to the Coast shortly afterwards to finalize TV deal now under discussion. Mulvahill has been with GAC for six years, three of which were spent on the Coast.

It's likely that GAC veepee Milton Krasny will take over as head of the GAC tele division.

Slap 500G Suit On Roosevelt, Others

Breach of contract action seeking damages of $500,000 has been instituted against Roosevelt & Jones, indie packagers, NBC and Eleanor Roosevelt by Syndicated Broadcast Productions, Inc. Case is now in the examination stage in New York Supreme Court, with Elliott Roosevelt and WNBC, N. Y., general manager Ted Cott having been examined. Further action awaits return of Mrs. Roosevelt from the United Nations meetings now taking place in Paris.

SBP claims that in August of 1950 it made a deal with Roosevelt & Jones to produce and sell a commercial stanza, with Mrs. Roosevelt getting 30% of the gross for their services. Plaintiff alleges that in September, 1950, R&J made a separate deal with several outlets, including WNBC, N. Y., thereby breaching the contract.

Martin Jones exited R&J last year, when the outfit was reorganized, with John Roosevelt joining his brother Elliott as Roosevelt Enterprises. Mrs. Roosevelt's program went off WNBC several months ago due to Mrs. Roosevelt's extended European stay. Time has been taken over by Kate Smith.

WYATT JOINS SCHUBERT AS AM-TV SALES CHIEF

Indi packagers are starting to emphasize stronger selling techniques, as pointed up by the inking of Gene Wyatt, one of ABC-TV's top account execs, to post of radio and television sales director for Bernard L. Schubert. Wyatt, who had been with ABC for three years, brought in some of the tele web's big shows, such as Schlitz's "Pulitzer Prize Playhouse," Goodyear's "Paul Whiteman Revue," General Mills' "Lone Ranger," Seiberling's "Amazing Mr. Malone" and others.

Schubert's concept is that Wyatt will be able to go direct to potential bankrollers with a knowledge of media, agencies, rates, research and station clearance problems. Among the packages he'll be peddling are "Topper," "Two Girls Named Smith," "Blind Date," etc. Before World War II Wyatt was commercial manager of WBEN, Buffalo, N. Y.

Local Boy Moore Makes Good in Balto Video

Philadelphia, Jan. 13.

Prospects of a speedy trial in the Government's anti-trust action against the National Football League were indicated by Judge Allan K. Grim, who threw out the League's motion to dismiss the suit at a hearing in U. S. District Court here.

Although the defense has been granted 45 days in which to file its reply to the Government's complaint, Court attaches expect the case to go to trial within two months. Judge Grim is scheduled to hear the case in open court and without a jury.

Judge Grim wants to hold the trial as soon as possible, he told both sides, because of its "tremendous public importance." The ultimate decision will have wide repercussions on all regulations pertaining to the broadcasting and telecasting of sports events.

Describing himself as a football fan and TV follower of the NFL games, Judge Grim promised the defendants a "fair shake" in court. The Judge advised a pre-trial conference as soon as possible for the purpose of determining the issues.

Specifically, the Government charges that the NFL is violating the Sherman Anti-Trust Act by limiting the broadcast and telecast privileges to towns other than the one in which the game is being played. These local blackouts are part of the NFL code.

ELMO ROPER SET FOR NBC-TV OPINION SERIES

As his first major assignment under his new longterm pact with NBC, which succeeded recently in luring him away from CBS, Elmo Roper will do a series of 15-minute one-man "opinion" TV shows, which will be slotted Sunday afternoons, starting in March. Major accent will be on the political conventions and the 1952 general elections.

Roper's on-camera assignment is only one of several operational facets in which he'll engage himself. Primarily, he'll devote his time to exhaustive nationwide surveys on audience trends in the realm of public service and education as a means of patterning the web's programming operation to achieve maximum audience benefits.

Ballantine, HFC, Among Clients Pacted by WOR

WOR, N. Y., has wrapped up a bevy of sponsors for news programs. Ballantine, which has been absent from local radio for some time, has bought two quarter-hour news programs within 15 minutes of each other, with Lyle Van at 6 p. m. and Henry Gladstone at 6:30 p. m. Both shows, aired three times weekly, start this week for 52 weeks via J. Walter Thompson.

Household Finance Corp. bought the 11 p. m. Saturday news, to start Feb. 2, via Needham, Louis & Brorby. American Safety Razor, for Silver Star Blades, has picked up the 11 p. m. newscast twice weekly, via McCann-Erickson.

Gambarelli & Davitto wines has bought a package of seven time signals nightly, seven nights a week on a yearly basis, via Platt-Forbes. G&D will have all the time signals from 6 p. m. to midnight, starting this week.

ABC's Comings-&-Goings

With American Chicle dropping the twice-weekly Will Rogers show on ABC with the Jan. 17 broadcast, the web opening up the 5:55 p. m. strip for a new stanza, "World Flight Reporter." Airer will originate from Idlewild Airport, N. Y., with taped interviews of important people in the news landing at and departing from the field.

The program, which will have a special events flavor, will be emceed by Don Peterson. The news angle is cued to the fact the show will precede the net's 6 p. m. newscast. "Flight" will be beamed at 5:55 p.m. in each of the four-time zones.

Detroit—Robert F. Reynolds, former sportscaster for WJBK and WJBK-TV, has been appointed associate sports editor of WJR.

DuMont Bares Bid for St. L., Boston Channels if VHF Allocations Upped

Washington, Jan. 15.

Dr. Allen B. DuMont, prez of the DuMont Laboratories, told the Federal Communications Commission this afternoon (Tues.) that his company would apply for tele stations in Boston and St. Louis if the final allocations provide more VHF channels than the Commission has proposed.

Dr. DuMont appeared as the FCC began hearings on the proposed American Broadcasting Co.-United Paramount Theatres merger and the Paramount antitrust issue. Testimony on Par's interest in DuMont, which the FCC contends is controlling, will be heard during the next four or five days. Proceedings will then be recessed until Feb. 4 when the other phases of the inquiry will be taken up.

Presiding at the hearings is Leo Resnick, FCC examiner, with Frederick Ford and Max Paglin as Commission counsels. Repping DuMont is William A. Roberts, with Paul Porter heading the legal staff for Par Pictures, Duke Patrick for UPT and James A. McKenna for ABC. Leon Brooks appears for CBS, whose deal to purchase WBKB, Chicago, is contingent upon approval of the ABC-UPT merger.

Porter said he would put in testimony for Par showing the original investment by the company in 1938, 1939 and 1942. This will show that Par's total investment in DuMont was $164,000, for which Par has already received more than that amount in dividends. Par's interest is believed worth over $12,000,000.

DuMont, who testified today on TV's development, will continue tomorrow (Wed.).

Lightcap to WINS

Jack Lightcap, assistant sports director of NBC under Bill Stern, has been signed by Harry Folts, general manager of WINS, N. Y., as the Crosley outlet's sports director. He'll continue at NBC until early March when he'll make the move in time for the spring training activities of baseball.

Lightcap will do a Monday-through-Saturday sports roundup on WINS skedded in the late evening, probably at 10:45 p. m., due to the large number of night baseball games this season. He will also handle 15-minute pre-game and post-game stanzas adjacent to WINS' play-by-plays of the N. Y. Yankees.

Berle's '52-'53 TV Status in Doubt

With option time coming up for Milton Berle and his Texaco sponsor, both the comedian and the Kudner agency, which handles the Texaco account, are playing close to their vests the question of whether Berle will renew for next season. Berle has been intimating this may be his last season under the Texaco banner but the agency disclaims any split is in the works, claiming the comic is endeavoring to smoke out in advance whether Texaco will meet his demands for an upped budget, a more liberal vacation schedule, etc.

Berle, currently on vacation, has reportedly declared his intentions to bow out of the star role next season on NBC-TV's "Texaco Star Theatre," in order to devote his complete time and efforts to producing and staging the show. He's said to think that the show would retain its current flavor and continue to be known as the "Milton Berle Show." It's believed definite, however, that Texaco would refuse to go along with such an arrangement. Berle's option with Texaco expires at the end of April and Kudner reps are meeting now with the oil firm to line up plans for next season.

If a break occurs between the comic and his sponsor, it would constitute one of the rarities of TV, that of a client dropping the toprated show. Berle is now in his fourth year for the oil firm and has topped the rating parade practically from the start. Berle is said to have complained to his intimates that he's had a long series of differences with Kudner veepee Myron Kirk. He's quoted as saying that he's had to pay for acts he wanted on the show because Texaco would not increase his budget.

PHILCO GETS $40,000,000 CREDIT FOR GOVT. WORK

Philco Corp. has arranged a $40,000,000 three-year V-loan revolving credit to finance increasing defense production of advanced electronic equipment and missiles for the armed services.

Dr. Courtnay Pitt, vice president on finance, who announced the loan, said the credit, which is guaranteed 70% by the Navy Dept., is being extended by a nationwide group of 18 banks headed by the Pennsylvania Co., of Philadelphia.

For the last 10 years, Philco Corp. has devoted a large part of its research work to the development of electronic equipment and missiles. The company's production of this military equipment has increased so rapidly that the first quarter of 1952 should exceed the total of all of last year, Dr. Pitt declared.

Mrs. Stagg will develop a new literary department in her new post.

Legal Snarl Looming On Ziv's 'Communist' Due To Writer, Attorney Tieups

Pittsburgh, Jan. 15.

Frederick W. Ziv Co. may face a legal battle here over the rights to "I Was a Communist for the F.B.I.," based on the experiences of Matt Cvetic, local undercover man who served as a member of the Communist party in order to get evidence on them for the Government. Ziv announced last week that he had contracted with Cvetic for the series and was starting production immediately on radio transcriptions of the adventures with Dana Andrews playing Cvetic.

Harry Alan Sherman, a Pittsburgh attorney, said he and James Moore, reporter for the Sun Telegraph, and Pete Martin, Saturday Evening Post writer who ghosted the Cvetic stories in that mag, have a contract with Cvetic under which they share his income, and that they were not consulted or declared in by Cvetic when he signed with Ziv.

Sherman also stated that Warner Bros., who made the screen version of "I Was a Communist," would have to be negotiated with, inasmuch as the film contract specified that radio rights were to be withheld for three years and TV rights for nine.

The deal originally negotiated with Cvetic by Sherman called for Partin to get the first 15% of anything growing out of the sale of "I Was a Communist," and the remainder to be divided 30% to Sherman, 30 to Moore and 40 to Cvetic.

Cvetic claimed the necessary re-

WTIC Buys TV Station Gear, But Has No CP; 'Training for the Future'

Hartford, Jan. 15.

WTIC, 50,000-watt affiliate here, is the possessor of a high degree of optimism or a crystal ball insight into the future. The station last week received partial equipment for the establishment of a TV station here. This despite the fact that there are three and possibly four applicants for two channels and that hearings haven't been scheduled for the area. (It's recalled that WTIC manager Paul Morency had turned back an application for a TV station.)

Equipment consists of cameras, monitor, lighting equipment and amplifiers. Station plans on using its FM antenna for TV. Members of the staff have been receiving TV training at the RCA lab in Camden, N. J., and at NBC in New York.

The explanation by Morency is that equipment will be used for the training of personnel so that when "TV finally comes to Hartford, experienced people will be ready to handle it."

Educators Mull Nat'l Video Web

St. Louis, Jan. 15.

Educators from 18 states met in St. Louis last week to aid in creating a nationwide educational TV web, and completion of the plan was urged by Mayor Joseph M. Darst. Discussion of the "St. Louis Plan" centered on the financing and maintaining of daily TV broadcasts in the educational field.

The mayor said, "it is almost a matter of now or never," and warned that unless provision is made in the near future to make use of channels allocated by FCC, they may be "forever lost to education." He also stated that the main obstacles, finding the money to finance stations and the talent to sustain worthwhile programs, can be solved if cities pool their resources.

"Television," the mayor said, "is the most dynamic and effective means of mass communication yet devised. I believe it can revitalize and expand education to the same extent that the development of printing did in the early days of civilization as we know it. I can visualize our Washington and St. Louis universities playing a major role in the preparation of programs that will be viewed throughout the nation.

"On the lighter side of the presentation, we call well imagine our nationally-known Municipal Opera being televised for educational purposes one night a week."

Raymond H. Wittcoff, chairman of the Mayor's Committee on Educational Television, said there are more than 350,000 TV sets in the St. Louis metropolitan area, which has a population of approximately 1,500,000. "All of our local educational agencies combined do not influence as many adults as the TV station does in one evening," Wittcoff declared.

Philadelphia—Dr. Roy K. Marshall, educational director of WFIL stations, will be honored by Drexel Institute of Technology, Thursday (17), when he receives the Engineers Award, at Engineers Day ceremonies in the college auditorium.

When his film projector chain went out of synchronization with the soundtrack on the CBS-TV "See It Now" show Sunday (13), announcer Edward R. Murrow had his audio man cut to the film studio to let viewers in on what had happened. In answer to Murrow's question on how soon the projector would be fixed, the film technician answered (and on the air, too), "We're all working like hell down here."

Equipment breakdown snafued almost entirely Murrow's feature story of the week, on how atomic energy is used in cancer research. He and his co-producer, Fred W. Friendly, incidentally, tried the equipment after the show went off the air and claim that it worked for a solid six hours with nary a mishap.

At the Philadelphia Federal Court hearing on the National Football League's motion to throw out the Government's TV and radio suit, Jerome Fink, a young attorney with the Department of Justice, was the fourth Government lawyer to get up. Fink, who was detailed certain side issues of the case, felt it necessary to explain his presence: "If your honor is wondering why the Government is using the two-platoon system today, it's not because we place so much importance on the arguments of Senator Myers." (Former U. S. Sen. Francis J. Myers, of Pennsylvania, headed the League's defensive squad of eight counsel). "The real reason I'm here, your Honor, is to earn my letter," Fink declared. A short time later when Judge Allan K. Grim surprised everyone by knocking out the NFL case, Sen. Myers flipped back: "It seems that Mr. Fink has made the varsity."

New series of educational television shows, grooved for an audience from the teenage to adult levels, is slated to preem Feb. 2 on WCBS-TV, the CBS web's N.Y. flagship, in the 5:30 to 6 p.m. period. Programs, to be aired each Saturday afternoon, will be produced by WCBS-TV in cooperation with the metropolitan division of the Dept. of Audio-Visual Instruction of the National Educational Assn., and will be titled "It's Worth Knowing."

Present plans call for the series to be a combination of live and film, with NEA currently shopping among all sources for the best educational film available. Program is to have the widest possible scope, ranging through all branches of culture and education. First group of shows, for example, will be based on the overall category of "Understanding Yourself and Others." Series is to have a moderator, who will be selected by NEA, plus weekly guests.

WCBS-TV will make the series available to institutional-type sponsors. Staffer Ned Cramer will direct.

WOR-TV, N.Y., is going 3,000 miles afield to advertise two local programs via the Paris edition of the N.Y. Herald Tribune.

Indie station placed the ads in the English language Paris daily to tout its "Teatro Televisione" and "Italian Movie Matinee," both of which feature Italian pix. Theme of the copy pointed out that travelers in Italy would be able to see the scenes and sights of the country, when they get back to the States, on the Italo stanzas. Both shows are sponsored by La Rosa products.

Mystery Writers of America, Inc., for the first time will award an "Edgar" (a statuette of Edgar Allan Poe) for the "best television mystery program" this year. Prizes will be distributed at the organization's annual dinner on April 21.

With some 23 mystery, suspense and crime shows reportedly on the TV nets, a special awards committee will study them to select what it considers the six outstanding sessions. Winner, however, will be determined by a poll of some 350 MWA members.

Special television show to salute New York's first Mardi Gras Ball, scheduled for the Hotel Plaza Feb. 26 for the N.Y. Junior League's Welfare Fund, will be produced by Fred Coe for WNBT, key station of the NBC-TV web in N.Y. Both WNBT and its AM sister station, WNBC, are acting as sponsors of the ball and will have designed for them a costume representing the radio and TV industry. N.Y. Mayor Vincent R. Impellitteri will appear on the TV show, to be aired from 11 p.m. to midnight, Feb. 26, along with Vaughn Monroe, Paul Whiteman, Tex McCrary and Jinx Falkenburg, Jane Pickens and others.

WDAF-TV's 113 Hours In Stepped-Up Roster

Kansas City, Jan. 15.

WDAF-TV, the Kansas City Star station, stepped up its programming this week, adding the early morning hours to its broadcast schedule. Station has taken the NBC show, "Today" for the first two morning hours beginning at 7 a.m., and continues through the day until midnight. It previously had been beginning the broadcast day at 10:30 a. m.

The new schedule adds nearly 30 hours to the weekly operation, the new total being 113 hours against the former weekly average of 85 hours. New schedule applies to weekdays, with Saturday and Sunday remaining virtually the same as in recent weeks.

Local Chi Stations, Stressing 'On-Spot' News Coverage, Scoop Other M[illegible]

Chicago, Jan. 15.

Chi radio stations, particularly WMAQ and WBBM, are putting increasing accent on local news coverage. Emphasis is on on-the-spot reporting by wire-recorders. Bulk of the news copy still comes from the wire services but the "exclu[illegible]" angles garnered from the scene are being used to spice the newscasts.

The use of recorded or direct coverage has proved so successful at WMAQ that the Chi NBC station is currently airing two daily shows using the roving reporter format. They are Len O'Connors' early evening "News On the Spot" strip, sponsored by Gordan Baking Co., and Jim Hurlbut's "Reporter At Large," bankrolled by Hotpoint Dealers at 11 p.m.

Although Chuck Wiley, WBBM special events chief, hasn't as yet a regularly scheduled show for his recorded "leg work," he's been feeding his stuff to the other news shows. One of Wiley's recent scoops was getting the hung jury decision on the hot local Michael Moretti murder case on the air several minutes before the wire services' bulletin came through. Wiley's report was put on the air via phone from the Criminal Court building.

Upbeat in radio reporting, too, was reflected in the recent okay by the city council for at least a trial run at recording council proceedings. For the first time in history, the chambers were thrown open to recording mikes for coverage of the city budget hearings last month. WMAQ, WBBM and WGN covered on radio and WNBQ and WGN-TV shot films for teevee.

Because of the union stipulations that recorder reporters be accompanied by an engineer, on-the-scene newsgathering can become a fairly costly item. That's why Chi NBC news director William Ray holds to the theory that the roving reporters should have their own [illegible] so concrete results [illegible] value can be evidenced.

It's the thinking at the CBS station, at least for the time being, that the costs of Wiley's news activities can be charged off as "plus" service for the bankrollers of the regular newscasts.

Interest in local news has resulted in the Chi NBC plant buying the Community News Service, which covers Windy City newsbeats strictly for radio and teevee. The wire also serves WBBM, WIND and WCFL with hometown news copy.

Straight Deals

in radio to their growing realization that no medium can compete with radio on a cost-per-thousand basis. Sponsors buying in now are turning down the so-called gimmick deals, which they might be able to get at less cost, for a straight time buy because they want to establish a new franchise, in many instances on a firm five-year basis. ASR, on the other hand, seeking only a seasonal deal, is taking CBS' offer of the Skelton show for $23,500 per week but, in so doing, is bypassing some Coast and Rocky Mountain area markets, where the show is bankrolled regularly by Norge.

CBS, incidentally, found itself in the strange (for these times) position of being unable to clear time for an interested client. American Bakers had originally attempted to buy a half-hour Sunday afternoons on that web but, in order to have the show heard by as many as possible of its dealers and employees, asked specifically for either the 5 or 5:30 slot. Since CBS now has sponsors for both periods, the advertiser took its business to NBC.

"Mr. Chameleon," the show GF will sponsor through Foote, Cone & Belding, is one of the Air Features packages, which has been on the CBS web sporadically as a sustainer for some time. It will replace "Inspector Hearthstone," "Star Playhouse," which the bak[illegible] group bought for NBC, is now on the ABC web as a sustainer, [illegible] Thursday nights at 8. It [illegible] replace "Whitehall 1212" on N[illegible] starting Feb. 24.

Freeze Lift

UHF as soon as the agency lets down the bars.

Comment Analysis

It is likely that the daily "grind" of meetings between the Commission and its staff will be largely concerned with the city-by-city channel assignment which comprise the allocation table, and the final decision as to which of these assignments shall be reserved for educational stations.

Approximately 1,500 comments were received on the proposed allocations issued last March, and the staff has been analyzing this material for the last five months. Most of the comments are from applicants who want more channels assigned to their areas. Many suggest ways by which channels may be shifted among various cities to accomplish this purpose. Some oppose the setting aside of channels in their cities for educational stations. Some are from TV stations which object to shifting from their present channel locations, as required under the proposed allocation plan.

The final plan will no doubt be a compromise of the proposed assignments, the objections by applicants, and alterative plans offered, include the comprehensive DuMont scheme which claims to make better use of the available channels in providing nationwide TV service.

With the issuance of the freeze-lifting report, the Commission will probably set a 30 or 60-day "last call" period for filing of applications before starting the machinery for handing out permits. At the expiration of this period, the staff will begin work on a hearing calendar which will include dates and places where hearings will be held on applications in cities where applicants exceed available channels. Because of the demand for channels, the bulk of applicants are expected to require hearings.

The only permits which can be issued soon after the deadline for filing are for stations in smaller communities, where applicants do not exceed channel supply. It's expected that between 30 and 80 permits will be handed out this year.

inked for the NBC airing of "Goldbergs," which preems Feb. 4, disclaimed any part in the dropping of Loeb. Saying he feels "terrible" because of the situation, Edell declared: "If Loeb is a Communist, I wouldn't want him within a thousand miles of the show. But if he is not, I wish there were some way to find out. The show would certainly be a lot better with him in it. But I don't want to be the judge of some other man's guilt or innocence." He added that he didn't know whether he had "the right to tell NBC how to cast the show."

Edell said the program was offered to VCA without Loeb and "at that time I'd never heard of the controversy about Mr. Loeb."

Commenting on the Edell statement, Loeb said, "I think it completely dispells the story that sponsors wouldn't buy the show with me in it. Edell hadn't been asked whether he wanted the program with me in the cast."

"Goldbergs," which after its run for Sanka on CBS-TV had been off the air, has picked up two more bankrollers for the 7:15 p.m. strip on NBC-TV and is now sold out. Ekco Products (kitchen utensils) will pick up the tab on Wednesdays and Necchi sewing machines will take the Friday edition. Incidentally, it's Necchi's first ride in video.

Columbus—Charles Cady, director at WBNS-TV, Columbus Dispatch station, has been named director of educational programs for the station while John Haldi, production staffer, has been upped to post of production director.

four days each week. Web expects to have the complete deal ironed out within the next 30 days.

Under the new setup, CBS will tee off its morning programming at 10 a.m. with the 15-minute news show featuring Harry Marble and Dorothy Doan, which preemed last week. Godfrey simulcast goes from 10:15 to 10:30 (except on Fridays, when the news show will be expanded to half-an-hour), with "Bride" following. New show starring Al Pearce, which will originate from Hollywood, will take the 10:45 to 11:30 strip, followed by the Colgate-sponsored "Strike It Rich." Web then will swing into its current afternoon programming, with "Egg and I" at 12 noon.

For the afternoon, CBS plans temporarily to expand the "Mike and Buff Show," now in from 3 to 3:30 p.m., to 2:45 to 3:30 cross-the-board. That will hold until about mid-March, when the new TV version of Art Linkletter's "House Party" is scheduled to take over the 2:45 to 3:15 strip. Pillsbury has already contracted for the first 15 minutes of "House Party." Latter show, incidentally, is packaged by John Guedel, while "Bride" is a Masterson, Reddy & Nelson package.

report that "took into account the lessons learned through experience of 1951," called an "experimental year." Many of its conclusions were based on preliminary findings of a survey conducted by the National Opinion Research Centre under a $50,000 budget. Committee urged as its future objectives the minimum effect of live TV upon attendance at college and high school games; to spread TV, within the limits of such control plan as may ultimately be adopted, among as many colleges as possible, and to provide TV to the public to the extent consistent with the first two objectives.

Committee said it desired "to stress again the dangers to the game if two or three top teams are able to monopolize TV networks. Resulting financial rewards would create greater temptations than any yet known to the game and would place irresistible premiums on successful teams. We must not only limit the amount of television, but what amount there is we must spread far and wide."

Among the eight schools that opposed controlled TV were said to be Notre Dame, Pennsylvania, Kansas, Georgia Tech, Wayne, Ohio State and Rhode Island.

Ed Krause, Notre Dame athletic director, said he bowed to "controlled" television, but had argued to "try unlimited TV for a year and then compare notes with the limited TV we tried in 1951. I don't think there is any comparison between the TV situation then and now."

'Tonight'

NBC-TV, operation, can rack up a hefty maximum of $9,500 weekly on "Today" hitchhikers. That's the potential weekly tab on the four daily five-minute news segments and the 12 daily station breaks that are being offered for station sale.

John McPartlin, WNBQ sales manager, has put together a "special" 90-day introductory offer," which pegs the price of the news quickies at $150 net each with no frequency discount. The 20-second station break spots go for $50 and the 10-second blurbs for $25. The 120-minute display is broken into 15-minute segments which, plus the insertion of the four five-minute newscasts, make available a dozen breaks into which can be crammed the 20 and 10 second plugs.

WNBQ is filling three of the daily news cut-ins with a local roundup gabbed by Len O'Connor. The fourth, in the 7:55 to 8 a. m. slot, will be taken from the network.

Although no local deals were set for the debut week, McPartlin reports a high degree of interest in the local availabilities on the show. He anticipates closing with a couple of bankrollers for purchase of some of the news segments, after the clients have a chance to scan the program.

CBS-TV 'SONGS' INTO 90-MIN. EXPANSION

CBS-TV, in a wrapup of its long-pending Saturday night plans, decided this week to expand "Songs for Sale" from its present 10 to 11 p. m. period, into an hour-and-a-half show starting at 9:30. Web execs emphasized they will hold to that plan until at least the end of this season, which eliminates the reported possibility of CBS' building a super-budgeted extravaganza to compete with the Sid Caesar-Imogene Coca-Max Liebman spread on the rival NBC video web.

Extension of "Songs" into the 90-minute version means the web has abandoned "Show Goes On," which formerly occupied the 9:30 to 10 period. Under the new line-up, the "Ken Murray Show," bankrolled by Anheuser-Busch, will continue from 8 to 9, with Faye Emerson's "Wonderful Town," sponsored by Pepsi-Cola, remaining in the 9 to 9:30 period. Any plans CBS has for building that top-budgeted Saturday night program, consequently, will be postponed until at least next fall.

forms that they merit. You must lead the writers into adventures in experiment. No writer working with us to get money to buy mush is going to go mad with his Corona unless your encourage him.

I grant that we must encourage you from management, and this has certainly been done, and done often. There is one thing we have not done yet, which will make your path clearer to the eye. We must give you a physical form within which to build a show that is different in character from customary structures, to reveal to you the scope of new forms. In that connection, I am having studios designed that will make O. B. Hanson cry like a baby, and General Munson apply for transfer to Attu as a corporal. Nonetheless, we must go forward.

As a producer or director, and I hope a writer or a near-writer, you must know that before you think of your product, you must think of the form in which your product is to appear. People once acted in, not sat in, orchestras. If you wrote the Passion play for a Spyros Skouras house instead of Oberammergau, you would write it in different form. The physical housing of a writing directs the writing form. Broadly speaking, there is a difference in the writing form for something destined to be seen in a Coney Island hand-operated movie machine, and something destined to be seen written across the sky by a plane emitting visible tracks.

Various Writing Forms

If you are using television as a communications instrument, and presenting a play, then there is great advantage in making it as play-like, as well as good, as possible. If you are going to present the play as a movie, then you need a different writing form, you have additional advantages in terms of flexibility and additional handicaps in terms of performance values. But if you pretend to a television original, then you are in trouble, because what is it? Movies have run a limited gamut in big heads. Theatre has run a genuine gamut in focusing attention away from background, and dispensing with believable sets. Entertainment generally has run through all forms of presentation, and television can let you attend the form, but that is not a TV original.

Radio is the closest form, because it too played the living room to the single person or small group audience. Radio, like television, was largely a medium of transporting people to places from their living rooms, but the development of radio forms took place. It took place earlier than most people think. I remember using sound track of an actor's voice in counterpoint against his live voice nearly 20 years ago, together with narrative techniques, true documentaries, recreation of world tragedies as though they were happening, etc.

Because of some childish concern over being thought too radio-ish, much of our stuff fights the values developed laboriously in radio. The economy and clarity of the narrative technique is the most serious lack, in my book. Movies took it from radio, and a lot more television shows could ape their older and inferior brethren in this connection. The problems of holding an audience in television who have not paid for their tickets, taken off their shoes, settled down into a near coma in waist-wedgies, such as one finds in most theatres, is quite different from the sucker-principle of our competitors. If the movies or the plays can sell you a ticket, it's too late for you to worry if you don't like the character delineation that dawdles through the opening stages of the diversion. In television, BOING, Channel 11, and Milton Sills await your slightest lapse from absorption.

The best television, except for its communications use, has been the radio with pictures formula of some shows. This follows the formula that if it was good to hear, it's even better to see while you hear it. Because NBC has been putting on Broadway shows rather than radio shows, the best examples of this technique are over with THEM. THEY have radio with pictures in Burns and Allen, Benny's appearances, and some others. These shows, however, while good entertainment, are not smashers, like the personal-appearance techniques of the breakaway comics like Martin and Lewis, or the great Broadway show appearances of Sid Caesar and Imogene Coca, or the exciting vaudeville appearance of Milton Berle. It is good entertainment, but of a lower key, of a less exciting nature.

And this brings up the failure of television to follow the radio success, and all entertainment success, of the "vehicle" pattern. This is where one takes Rex Harrison and builds around him a show which enables him to do what he does best and what the people like to see him do. This is not Martin Kane, which is B pictures with a star. It is closer to I Love Lucy, which was built as a vehicle for Lucille Ball. It is the field in which the non-entertainers, the actors that is, will find their place as stars in television; with the addition of the field in which the really good actors form stock companies, and vehicles are written for them not as series but as individual dramas.

The development in fairly rapid steps of all the potentialities of the television medium is highly desirable. This is not merely for corporate stature and profit, although that has its spokesmen. But we who are running television have a duty to humanity that comes from our stewardship of this overwhelmingly powerful molder of minds.

All-Important Communications

Dr. Norbert Weiner, brilliant M.I.T. author on Cybernetics, says in his must-reading "The Human Use of Human Beings,": "Communication is the cement of society, and those who have made the clear maintenance of channels of communication their business are those who have the most to do with the continued existence or the fall of our civilization." Dr. Weiner does not believe that mass medium like television is likely to overcome the difficulties in which it finds itself, due to pressure groups, but like most intellectuals, particularly brilliant ones busy with their own works, he does not fully understand the mechanism of the medium in today's world. We can and will present a mature presentation both withi the area of American agreement, and in handling controversial material through balanced programs.

It is peculiar that Dr. Weiner also fears for sterility from our creative people in working mass media for reasons that do not obtain in the case of television at NBC. Indeed, I myself believe that television is going to force a recreating of forms of all entertainment and information media; and that in the turbulence of change, a whole new era of creative writing is coming in all forms. My major wish at this time is to attract the restless spirits to NBC, and to inculcate a dissatisfaction with all things present among our staff so that they will rebel against present means of presentation.

Because "hits" reach virtually everybody, in spite of what critics maintain, we want hits. These can come from great personal triumphs in handling roles or characters with impact. They can come from a form of presentation that is novel and appealing. They can come from following showmanship principles in presenting material of basic concern but little interest to most people. It is our belief at NBC that we can make all shows serve a purpose beyond entertainment, although not all the time. And that the combined influence of the many shows will give an upthrust to our people that will create a new age.

Challenge to the Artist

Every writer, every director, every producer is having an influence upon upwards of 10,000,000 people when he goes on the air for NBC. It is therefore more than just his self-interest as a creative artist that is challenged in this day. It is his self-interest as a member of the human race. For he can do something personally that will increase the vitality of a medium that can increase the individual's ability to meet and decide his own future.

So much for upward and onward. When we develop a concept like that behind "Mr. Omm," wherein a writer writes to the exact length that he feels the story makes its most effective unravelling, we should get credit for an assist on the Heavenly Scoreboard, something most of my friends and acquaintances can use handily at this point.

In the ferment ahead, another little matter should be under study, and that is the future of music. The "song" is a relatively fractional part of music through the ages, and television already demands more than songs to make for effective vocal presentation. To invent visual presentation is better, but still somewhat an embarrassing type of title gagging, except where a legitimate production number is being staged around the song. The answer again lies in thinking about the medium in which you are going to present the music, and tailoring what you write to the use that will be made of it, instead of writing for old forms, and then having a television-press descend on the material.

This obviously points toward the story-song, a return to the ancient pattern of story telling with voices and action. It goes away from the 32-bar pop that we all think of as immutable (if we think) but is actually a modern development.

It also calls for a lot of other exciting, new, fresh presentation ideas that are not a use of television as a communications medium, which is still great for music if the shows are done as good concerts, or good musical extravaganzas, or even as radio-with-pictures-added, like the "Hit Parade." The attempt to make concerts into television shows is one of the things that will play the hoots and hysteria of our children's children, being the equivalent of first-war hats, and fast movement from the silents. On the other hand, a concert attended via television is great entertainment. (Everybody fights it.)

Studio For Writers

In order to be more specific about the dramatic form that can be, I will now outline a type of studio that would force writers to write one kind of presentation differing from today's.

We build a studio with a "Presentation Gallery" at one end. On three sides of the studio we build sets for story development, but the Gallery end has a series of very large monitors at floor level, with a narrator working to the camera, well in front of the monitors, then walking up to each and outlining the dramatis personnae. We will see each of the principal characters in action on the monitor as the narrator sets the characterizations, to remove the need for character establishing scenes in the drama. Above the gallery of monitors we have a locale monitor, which the narrator goes to by steps or on a ramp, but giving a feeling of spaciousness, of theatre, of movement, of clarfty and cohesion to the production. The locale sets the general themes, the basic message or placement of the drama. For instance, in the wonderful and as yet scarcely touched field of the tour-de-force through placement of people in an event known to the audience upon revelation, such as the Titanic touch of Coward in "Cavalcade," or the opportunity in the "Last Voyage of the Bismark," or in some of the Benet stories.

After meeting the actors in action, then the locale or locale cum conflict, which enables the narrator to set the great issues behind the drama to come (if it's that kind of drama), we move to the action monitor, where the story unfolds "in one" you might say.

Sets Up Visual Pattern

We now have a visual pattern easily understood, readily grasped and remembered by the people, with each part of the pattern having a purpose both in presentation of the show in the beginning and a way of coming back as it proceeds. Thus the gallery can be activated from time to time to show what different characters are doing, simultaneously. A long shot, particularly with the increase of home largescreen sets, will enable you to see monitors of two characters together with the action or the locale monitor as well. This represents a challenge to the viewer that one need not offer until one is doing very well as a dramatist, but it does indicate the forward movement possible in planning such a writing pattern.

It may be argued that I am being tricky, but I am not. I am arguing that the television medium holds opportunities for forms of presentation that have clarity, dignity, impact, importance and other values perhaps even greater than the use of television as a communications instrument to take you to drama in theatres, movie houses, radio studios, or mishmashes. I also happen to feel as a writer with no time to write, that the times need a return to great issues in our drama to serve as the background for individual human tanglements and their resolution, and that the impact of television is so great that we can force the human mind to perceive more and faster than we sometimes think, particularly if we make our presentation one of great simplicity and clarity, even though it is different.

My suggestion is not the final revelation to be chipped in granite and lit with a pink spot nightly while Old Glory gently waves above, but it shows you that you can design a means of presenting drama unlike present means, which could be repeated again and agai and become a steady form. It has great advantages as you think about it. Imagine the climax as one cut from monitor to monitor, Zoomar lensing up on each character in some sort of a chase-against-time finish, swinging past th dramatis personnae into the locale monitor, and then the action monitor, developing whichever storyline was going. We'd have them watching at the transmitter!

At a latter date, I would like to expand on subject matter in the drama, particularly the tour-de-force field I mentioned above. I mean by that term really contrived writing for effect in television where you take an idea that you know will give suspense right from the start, and hack it out, in the best sense of hacking, which is craftsmanship in one's chosen profession and writing for money in it. I would also like to give forth on the return to the great themes which can now be so timely as the currents of disintegration, the tides of nihilism, and the strong winds of great hope and aspirations all sweep the same world. This is a time for writers, and directors and producers. And television is a medium for them.

We are going into another period of ideas, in my book, like that we went through in the latter part of the 18th century. The next decade depends more on us than anyone else, barring war. The stakes for which we are engaged are breathtaking. It is a time for courage, but also for optimism if it is based on individual determination to make the optimistic pattern the future pattern.

Margaret Cuthbert To Retire From NBC

Margaret Cuthbert, one of th pioneer femmes in radio, with an NBC association extending over 20 years, is retiring this spring.

Miss Cuthbert, as a longtime associate of the late James Roland Angell, who was head of public affairs programming at NBC for many years, played a key role in formulating public affairs program patterns for the medium.

Inside Stuff—Radio

NBC has hired a Negro in its press department. He's George Norford, a New Yorker with a newspaper background, and he's been assigned to handling the newly-incepted early morning "Today" TV show. Move follows in the wake of NBC's recent hiring of two Negro engineers. Within the past year, the network has been in the process of reappraising its public relations in its dealings with Negroes, and for that purpose has retained a Negro public relations outfit.

Radio Writers Guild chided WJZ, N.Y., for announcing at end of its "Lives of Harry Lime" transcribes that the shows were "written and produced" by Orson Welles. Latter, who produces the show, scripted the first two programs, but the subsequent vehicles had been done by other members of the RWG.

When it learned of the error, WJZ promptly rectified the mistake and is now giving correct script credits.

To carry the Voice of America message to the Far East, the State Department will begin construction soon on a $7,000,000 shortwave radio station in the state of Washington. Bids for the plant were accepted last week.

The station, and a sister transmitter which will operate from the east coast, the department said, "will be among the most powerful known to exist in the world." Both were authorized under Congressional appropriations to strengthen Voice radio signals to pierce the Iron Curtain.

The West Coast station is expected to be completed in 18 months. It will be located either in the Grays Harbor or Port Angelis area.

Gordon McLendon, prez of the Liberty Broadcasting System, has been named one of the 10 outstanding young men of 1951 by the United States Junior Chamber of Commerce. McLendon was singled out for his new ideas in radio broadcasting and in the formation of the network.

Baseball commissioner Ford Frick will get the Graham McNamee memorial award at the Sports Broadcasters Assn. fifth annual dinner, Feb. 5, in Park Sheraton Hotel, N. Y. Presentation will be made by Herman Hickman, one of the previous winners, with Herbert Bayard Swope as toastmaster and radio and tele network toppers on the dais.

National Assn. of Broadcast Unions & Guilds will meet today (Wed.) to select a review committee, which will be national in scope, to review the issues between the NABUG unions and the National Assn. of Broadcast Engineers & Technicians (CIO). AFL unions in NABUG have charged NABET with "raiding" and the joint NABUG-NABET committee will analyze the situation and issue a report before the end of the month.

NABUG, of which NABET is also a member, has taken the position that it is "open minded" about the possibility of effecting a settlement of the issues but that it will be "firm in its interpretation of what constitutes raiding." Meanwhile technicians at CBS' owned-and-operated stations vote next week on whether they will continue to be repped by International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers (AFL) or switch to NABET.

"Black Silence of Fear," lead article by Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas in the N. Y. Times Sunday Magazine last weekend (13), is being plugged by the Radio Writers Guild. Ira Marion, RWG eastern region v.p., said, "It is to be hoped that the article will be read, studied and its principles applied in practice by the leaders in the radio and television industry to the end that use of blacklists, gray lists, loyalty questionnaires and all such discriminatory devices will be finally and completely eliminated."

WBAL in Baltimore turned disk jockey Al Ross into a "traffic cop" for the past few days, due to fact that the city's transportation has been snarled by quadrupling of auto traffic following the strike of Baltimore Transit Co. employees.

Station set up a direct tie-in with police department, getting up-to-the-minute reports on traffic flow. Bulletins are aired on the d.j. program, advising motorists what streets to take.

WBAL and WBAL-TV also broadcast name and addresses of nurses and patients needing emergency transportation to hospitals, with over 100 persons aided in this way.

Frederic W. Ziv's "I Was a Communist for the FBI" was sold in 105 markets five days after the peddling started. "Communist," based on the story of FBI agent Matt Cvetic, is an open-end transcriber starring Dana Andrews.

Meanwhile Ziv has added two new divisional sales managers, Stuart Halliday, who'll handle Indiana and southern Illinois, and William A. Nevin, who'll cover Wisconsin and Minnesota.

NLRB Sides With AFRA In WEEU Unfair Claim

Washington, Jan. 15.

On charges filed by the American Federation of Radio Artists, a trial examiner of the National Labor Relations Board last week recommended that WEEU in Reading, Pa., be required to stop interfering with efforts of its announcers to organize an AFRA unit.

The examiner, John H. Eadie, found that the station engaged in unfair labor practices in interrogating its employees regarding their union activities, and threatening them with reprisals if they joined AFRA.

leases had been obtained from WB and the SEP to produce the radio sale, although Martin insisted he hadn't been contacted, and as for Sherman and Moore, they claim their agreement with Cvetic has been violated because they weren't consulted.

Financial details of the Ziv deal weren't announced, although it's known that the SEP series brought $7,500 and Warners paid $12,500 for the screen rights. It's also known that Cvetic has netted several thousand dollars on speaking engagements, although Martin, Sherman and Moore, by pre-arrangement, didn't share in these proceeds.

WGN-TV Sets College Courses—With Credits

Chicago, Jan. 15.

Chicago video viewers will be able to earn college credits with their scanning when a new WGN-TV show kicks off early next month. Quincy College is offering two extension courses which will be based on the weekly half-hour tele show, "The Armchair Philosopher."

The show's format will center around educational problems, tailored to the two extension classes—"Television Programming and Production" and "The Philosophy of Education." The show will be buttressed by a weekly formal class to be held at the Art Institute. Two hours of credit will be given for the course.

The show will be produced for the college by Tom O'Brien, with William O'Brien handling the scripting.

Smithson's WKRC-TV Post

Cincinnati, Jan. 15.

New program director of WKRC-TV is Lloyd Smithson. He joined the station as an executive last Nov. 1 and was upped by U. A. (Jake) Latham, general manager.

Smithson is a former dialog director of Beecroft-Florida motion picture studios and was a freelance producer of night club acts.

Chi's No. 2 Status

that has appreciably upped its Chi pickups since the first of the year. The web called upon its Windy City plant to fill the 11:30 a. m. to noon spot on its morning lineup with "The Bunch," musical-gab show featuring Hugh Downs and Bette Chapel, which bowed Jan. 7. Also, there's been the addition of the Saturday morning co-op, "Cactus Jim" and the half-hour alternate week Sunday afternoon family situation series, "Those Enduring Young Charms."

Another entry, which made its re-appearance Sunday (13), is Louis G. Cowan's "Quiz Kids," which is being dispatched to CBS-TV via WBKB. "Kids" shift to Columbia after its long NBC identity marks CBS's first regularly scheduled Chi origination.

Cowan Vs. Levin

Cowan, incidentally, is vying with W. Biggie Levin for top ranking among the indie packagers with web programs coming from here. Besides "Kids," Cowan has "Pet Shop" and "Down You Go" riding out of WGN-TV to DuMont. Levin packages "Studs Place," "Hollywood Junior Circus" and the "Chicago TV Symphony" beamed from the local ABC outlet.

Besides the above NBC shows, the web's Windy City trademark is also carried by "Kukla, Fran and Ollie" and "Hawkins Falls," both quarter-hour strips; "Zoo Parade," "Mr. Wizard," and the Wayne King Show, all weekly half-hour ventures.

Running neck and neck behind NBC in Chi feeds are ABC-TV and DuMont. ABC has six weekly shows coming out of the Loop, totalling four hours, and DuMont has five productions, totalling four and a half hours weekly. The ABC total does not include the pickup of the Northwestern basketball games as part of its Saturday night hoop schedule.

Included in the ABC log ar "Super Circus"; "Studs Place"; "Chicago Symphony"; "Hollywood Junior Circus"; "Hail the Champ," and Wednesday night wrestling. The Hollywood Candy Co. is cutting back its sponsorship of "Junior Circus" to an alternate week after the Jan. 27 show, but the web plans to fill the slot with "Hold 'Er Knewt" from here.

In addition to the two Cowan packages, WGN-TV sends "They Stand Accused," "This Is Music" and Saturday ight wrestling to DuMont.

vital operation that was good video journalism.

The studio segments included sportswriter Neil Gazel interviewing the just-appointed Chi Cardinals football coach, Joe Kuharich. It was something of a scoop, providing viewers with their first glimpse of the pro coach. News political editor Charles Cleveland was on hand to interview the Republican and Democratic primary candidates for state's attorney. Neither of the two quickie gabfests offered much. If the public figure interviews are to come closer to the mark, the News staffers may have to forget their host roles and do a little more reportorial quizzing to liven up the proceedings.

ABC's Kiplinger worked the over-all emcee job in creditable fashion. The show finaled strongly with a switch from a shot of the jet planes blasting down the O'Hare runway, to a studio shot of a high school girl reciting a prayer for peace. Dave.

THE BUNCH

Producers: Ben Park, Don Meier
Director: Lynwood King
Writer: Marv David

Sustaining
NBC-TV, from Chicago

An unpretentious project, "The Bunch" should more than hold its own as the Windy City's contribution to NBC-TV's new morning lineup. Obviously depending more on talent and production imagination than budget, it's an informal music and chatter item likely to win friends along the a.m. co-ax.

Fortunately, the show's cast is considerably brighter than its title. "The Bunch" includes emcee Hugh Downs, singer Bette Chapel and the Art Van Damme Quintet. They've all worked together during the program's beaming on WNBQ, and they carried off their web debut (7) in fine fashion. Downs is a personable host in the low pressure idiom and displayed a pleasing ability to handle easy-geared tongue-in-cheek humor that wears well.

Downs is aided and abetted by Miss Chapel, whose warbling and pertness first attracted attention on the "Garroway-At-Large" spread. Besides her always easy-to-take chirping, as demonstrated on such standards as "Do I" and "Should I," gal evidenced a heretofore underplayed knack for ad libbing that blends nicely into such an informal format.

The versatile Van Damme Quintet, per usual, backstopped Miss Chapel neatly and pleased with their treatment of "Song of the Wanderer." Downs, incidentally, surprised with a "hidden" talent as he dueted "Getting To Know You" with Miss Chapel. It was okay, but Perry Como needn't be alarmed.

Guesting was Don Herbert, conductor of NBC-TV's "Mr. Wizard" science show, who brought on a Goldbergian cigaret lighter that earned a chuckle. Also on hand was producer Don Meier for a backpat for the Look award on his "Zoo Parade."

If idea man Marv David can keep coming up with enough gadgets and gags, this affair may well be a sleeper that'll garner more and more attention. Ben Park's and Meier's joint production on the opener showed tasteful enterprise, especially in handling Miss Chapel's numbers. Dave.

Tele Followups

was born in China. On the Lux show, which starred Edmond O'Brien and Maria Riva, she served mainly as background atmosphere for a Ceylonese bar.

Show, adapted by Irwin Lewis from a story by David Goodis and titled "Ceylon Treasure," was a rough 'n' tough adventure yarn set against the backdrop of a Ceylonese port. While the story had many of the contrived thrill facets of a "B" film, it was pacted fast enough to sustain interest. O'Brien was believable as a treasure hunter guarding with his life a fabulous sapphire he had found, against the connivings of Miss Riva and her wealthy boy-friend to steal it from him. Miss Riva was beauteous and played well her role of the gal who saved O'Brien at the denouement. Stefan Schnabel topped a small and competent supporting cast, which worked well under the hep direction of Buzz Kulick.

Regent cigs' second in its "Cameo Theatre" series Sunday night (13) brought Sylvia Sidney and Douglass Montgomery before the NBC-TV cameras in a taut script by Abby Mann called "The Gathering Twilight." Employing its identifying arenic technique—props but no sets—it matched that approach with an off beaten path teletale in which closeups particularly were sharply etched, producing the mood demanded by a story sometimes grim in the underneath strata.

Miss Sidney gave a finely restrained, quietly emotional performance of a psycho in love with husband Montgomery, a reconstructed drunk. Strangely jealous of his work as an artist, she deluded herself into visions of becoming a ballet dancer although actually a rank amateur. Her femme teacher tells her so in a highpoint scene that caused her to come home to destroy Montgomery's "comeback" portrait. She persuades him to take a drink after it has been established that such an act would revive his incessant craving for booze. Montgomery and the others in cast acquitted themselves well. Albert McCleary's staging fit the overall pattern.

veteran of the airwaves—Mr. Radio. He has demonstrated his staying power, and indeed is still champ—the greatest mass medium of our era. The great industry problems now faced by television, with more of them to come, are not unlike those that have been faced by radio through the decades."

Turning to legislation before Congress, Fellows urged the radio lawyers to back NARTB in its opposition to the Benton bill to establish a National Citizens Advisory Committee to keep an eye on video. "Do not be deluded," he cautioned, "that the Benton measures will die aborning. Senator (William) Benton is a man of strong convictions, no little ingenuity and a talent for persuasiveness that developed very close to the vineyard in which we now labor." (Sen. Benton was formerly a member of the advertising agency, Benton & Bowles).

If the Benton board becomes a reality, said Fellows, its relationship with the FCC soon "would follow the traditional pattern of the alleged relationship between Macy's and Gimbel's."

Fellows also called for constructive suggestions regarding the TV code, which takes effect March 1, "rather than trying the case in the public press." He pointed out that the Code may be amended from time to time and he urged that FCBA submit any amendments it feels are needed to the Television Code Review Board.

hearings' an impractical scheduling operation."

May Televise Other Witnesses

However, WMAL-TV (ABC affiliate) planned to have its cameras set up in the hearing room today (Tues.) to televise the witness to follow Barrett. Neely, after conferring with committee members, indicated that the special dispensation granted Barrett would not be given other witnesses.

Televiewers were watching the buildup to questioning of Barrett when the ex-police chief took the stand and registered his objection to being televised or to having the hearing televised. "I object to microphones being placed before me," he said. "I object to having flash bulbs glaring before my eyes. I object to the glare, noise and confusion that accompanies all the things that I have mentioned."

Sen. Neely then consulted with his colleagues and announced his decision. That was all viewers saw of the crime hearing. The stations shifted to film or regular network programs.

Question being asked here is whether the committee can deny other witnesses the same privileges it gave Barrett, whose testimony it did not want to risk losing. Committee rules give witnesses the right not to be televised but do not specify that other persons in the room cannot be televised.

CBS researchers also found that the number of live station hours the web clears per week jumped 30% from June 1 to Dec. 31, '51. In June, the web cleared a total of 825 live station hours and 511¼ kinescope hours per week. At the end of the year, the total had jumped to 1,078½ live hours and 526 kinescope hours per week.

Whiz Biz When 560 Hits WFIL-adelphia!

The "hard sell" boys know they have to talk loud to be heard in Philly's hotly competitive market. These wise birds are telling each other that WFIL's voice penetrates all the vast 14-County Philadelphia Retail Trading Area and reaches far beyond.

Two-thirds of the radio-equipped homes seem to have their dials stuck on WFIL, says BMB. WFIL, with 5,000 watts, yanks in more regular tuners than 50,000 watts in most of this $6 billion market area, BMB reveals.

Trouble is, say the market-wise, too many people think of Philly radio only in terms of the city. They forget that half the sales, half the profits show up in 147 towns outside city limits, but still comfortably within Philly's trade area—WFIL-adelphia.

Engineers, both sales and electronic, agree that WFIL—5,000 watts at 560—is worth 20 times the power at double the frequency in America's third market.

Over $5,000,000 at Stake as ASCAP Preps All-Out Jukebox Fee Fight

With over $5,000,000 in licensing coin at stake, the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers and other music industry groups are gearing for an all-out campaign this year in favor of the Kefauver-Bryson amendment to the Copyright Act which would require jukebox operators to pay performance fees to authorized collection agencies. Major focus of the music industry is currently on the House Judiciary committee hearings on the jukebox bill which is due to reconvene on Feb. 4.

Opponents of the amendment, which include the jukebox ops themselves and, less vocally, the disk companies, are slated to present their point of view when the hearings open. They will attempt to rebut the case made before the committee last November by reps of ASCAP, Music Publishers Protective Assn. and the Songwriters Protective Assn., all of whom pointed out that the jukebox ops were coining considerable profits on music without their having to pay the creative talent.

The bill proposes a licensing fee of 1c per side per week on every disk used by a jukebox operator owning two or more machines. Although no definitive statistics have been compiled on how much coin that would involve, estimates range from a conservative $5,000,000 to a possible $10,000,000. In either case, it would represent a windfall for ASCAP greater than the income from television and almost equalling the revenue from radio. Broadcast Music, Inc., and other licensing organizations would, of course, share proportionately in the spread if the bill goes through.

Chances for passage of the bill are held to be strong in view of widespread legislative backing of the measure and repeated Con-

Philly Court Rules Piped Music Outfit Must Pay Local Bite

Philadelphia, Jan. 15.

Philadelphia's 5% tax on piped music was upheld by Judge Raymond MacNeille, who ruled the Muse-Art Corp., which supplies music over leased wires to stores, restaurants and factories, must pay $5,700 in taxes on revenue of $114,700 unreported between 1945 and 1948.

The Muse-Art company had sought to escape payment on its total income by breaking it up into components, listing part of its charge as royalties to the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, part in payment of various licenses; part for installation costs and part for leasing telephone wires. Muse-Art contended it was merely a collection agent.

Judge MacNeille disposed of this argument with the statement that Muse-Art was a collection agent "only in the poetic sense." "Separate billing of customers for these charges in no manner alters the legal character of the receipts," the Judge declared. The decision affects several other companies which had been holding back payments pending a ruling.

Cap Realigns Echelon Setup In East Accent

Further strengthening its emphasis on New York headquarters, Capitol Records last week named Dick Jones eastern artists and repertory head. Jones, who was formerly, Cap's classical a. & r. chief, will top the pop as well as the classical divisions. Dave Cavanaugh will continue as pop a. & r. head in the east.

In a realignment of the diskery's publicity-advertising division, Hal Cook was made veepee of Capitol Records Distributing Corp. in a moveover from Capitol Records, Inc. Cook will headquarter in N. Y. with Dick Link continuing as CRDC's national publicity manager and Don Ovens remaining as record promotion man. John Coverney was moved over from the international department to handle classical promotion. It's also expected that Cap will eventually add a kiddie disk promotion man to handle company's widening activities in the children's disk field.

In the sales division, Cap enlarged its district distributing branches from five to 10 with a separate manager heading each branch. Cap is completing its moveover to new quarters in N. Y.'s Mutual Life Building this week.

AIM TO REVERSE DOWNBEAT TREND

This coming year will see a bumper crop of tunes from pix musicals hitting the wax market. Although tunes from filmusicals have had reduced impact in the music market in the past few years, the impressive number of celluloid scores due to be released is seen having an important role in reversing the downbeat trend. Each of the major pix companies' music subsids are gearing to reestablish their preeminence in the current pop market with big push of the roster of upcoming filmusical scores.

The Paramount-Famous music firms, Paramount Pictures subsids, top the list with seven musical scores already lined up. Pubs teed off with "Aaron Slick From Punkin Creek," starring Dinah Shore and Alan Young. Tunes, which have already hit the wax market, were penned by Jay Livingston and Ray Evans. Pic has 14 songs, of which "Marshmallow Moon," "Life Is A Beautiful Thing" and "I'd Like To Baby You" are currently being pushed on wax.

Also on tap are "Sailor Beware," the Dean Martin & Jerry Lewis starrer with a score by Mack David and Jerry Livingston; "Son of Paleface," starring Bob Hope with tunes by Jay Livingston and Evans; "Just For You," starring Bing Crosby with a Harry Warren-Leo Robin score; "Somebody Loves Me," the Betty Hutton starrer, featuring some old standards and new tunes penned by Jay Livingston and Evans; another Jay Livingston and

LOESSER BUYS OUT MORRIS IN SUSAN PUB

Frank Loesser obtained complete control of Susan Music last week in a buyout of the firm from Buddy Morris, E. H. Morris topper. Susan, which was formed a few years ago to publish Loesser's tunes, was jointly owned by Morris and Loesser, each controlling 50%.

Susan, an American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers firm, published the scores from the Broadway legit musicals "Where's Charley?" and "Guys and Dolls." Loesser penned the music and lyrics to both scores. Loesser, who also owns Frank Music, will handle the scores under the Susan operation. Bud Gately will be Susan's professional manager.

R&H's 'Babes in Arms' Next on Col. Roster

Having anticipated the click revival of "Pal Joey" with an advance waxing of the show score, Columbia Records has projected the release of another Rodgers & Hart show, "Babes In Arms," with Mary Martin starring in the album production. Set, which was produced by Goddard Lieberson, has been slated for March release.

Miss Martin cut two other show score albums for Columbia last year in "Bandwagon" and "Anythings Goes."

EW Get Maximum Wage Tilt as Col Strike Is Settled

Winding up one of the longest strikes in disk industry annals, Columbia Records reached an agreement over last weekend with Local 237 of the Electrical Workers Union, which put the company's key Bridgeport plant back into operation. The Bridgeport factory had been closed for about a month as a result of a wage dispute covering all of the production workers.

Settlement gave the union, an unaffiliated outfit, the maximum wage increase allowed by the Wage Stabilization Board in Washington, D. C. The union had originally asked for an across-the-board 30c an hour wage hike but the maximum tilt allowable under the WSB ceiling is substantially less. The

Back-Catalog Releases Sparking Renaissance of Old Jazz Classics

Sparked by the fullscale back-catalog releasing program of the major disk companies, the old jazz classics, from the New Orleans to the Chicago and Harlem styles, are currently experiencing their greatest renaissance since the swing era of the 1930's. Some jazzicologists have traced the upsurge of interest in traditional jazz to the vacuum created by the demise of bebop and the failure of any new musical form to come along for the hepsters.

The ragtime revival has been particularly noted among high school and college youngsters who have been the biggest market for the jazz platter reissues. Most of the great jazz men of 20 and 30 years ago have been unknown or legendary figures to this age bracket since their original platters had long since passed into the hands of a small circle of collectors. Rerelease of the old platters has resulted in the "discovery" by the youngsters of such jazz deities as Joe "King" Oliver, Jelly Roll Morton, Bessie Smith and others who were around at the birth of the blues.

One of the most important factors in the current revival of the old jazz wax works has been the quality of the reissues in the 45 rpm and 33 rpm speeds. In most cases, the current issues are far superior to the original platters in point of view of noise level and dynamic range.

RCA Victor and Columbia have taken the lead in promoting the old jazz classics via special catalog series. Victor originally issued several jazz sets last year under its

Albany, Jan. 15.

A dispute between Sydney R. Smith, retired Army officer and son of the late Harry B. Smith, writer of many hits, and Jerry Vogel Music over the right to republish 65 old numbers has reached the Appellate Division court. "Bright Eyes" and "The Sheik of Araby" are two of the selections involved in the suit.

Vogel appealed from an order of Supreme Court Justice Isadore Bookstein voiding an agreement the son signed in 1944 with the publishers assigning his rights in the renewal of the copyrights on the tunes. Justice Bookstein's order resulted from a suit brought by the Army officer to set aside the agreement.

Smith charged at the trial that Vogel had published only "Bright Eyes" and "The Sheik," although copyright renewal time had been reached for many of the other songs, too. He claimed that under the agreement Vogel either was required to republish the songs promptly or return the publication rights to him on demand. In September, 1944, Smith received $500 advance royalties from Vogel, he testified, but the publishers have allegedly given him [illegible] statement on royalties.

Vogel contended his firm had a year's leeway to decide whether each number was "worthy of publication and exploitation." The Appellate Division has reserved decision.

Jocks, Jukes and Disks

By HERM SCHOENFELD

Don Estes: "A Man and a Mountain"-"Nothing More, Nothing Less" (Victor). Don Estes, a new addition to the Victor label, gets away to a winging start with "Mountain," a dramatic item with a stirring beat. Estes' big-scaled pipes gives this item a powerful ride with the help of orch and chorus under Norman Leyden's baton. For a change of pace, flip is neat ballad handled pleasingly by Estes.

Tony Bennett: "Silly Dreamer"-"Since My Love Has Gone" (Columbia). Coming on top of Bennett's recent string of hits, these sides should make a good dent in the pop market. "Dreamer" is projected with a restrained sentimental style while the flip, based on a Verdi melody, is given one of Bennett's more tearful renditions. It's schmaltzy enough to be a good bet although Bennett may be overworking this groove. Percy Faith orch supplies suitably saccharine backing.

Dolores Gray: "I've Got a Feelin' You're Foolin'"-"Did Anyone Call" (Decca). Legit musical songstress Dolores Gray's stylistic savvy is given a full showcasing on the oldie, "I've Got a Feelin'." It's a firstrate slice that could climb fast in the jock and juke listings. Flip a fair ballad in a conventional format, delivered strongly by Miss Gray despite the wordy lyric.

Patti Page: "Retreat"-"Come What May" (Mercury). "Retreat" is one of those hayseed items which have been paying off for Miss Page since her "Tennessee Waltz" click. This is a clever tune brightly executed with Miss Page again harmonizing with herself. "Come What May" is a listenable ballad slated for plenty of juke spins.

Dinah Shore: "Until"-"Take Me Home" (Victor). A listenable coupling with Dinah Shore in good form. "Until" is a promising ballad delivered with a light Latin beat for solid commercial possibilities. Reverse is a folk-styled number which Miss Shore builds into a charming side. This side could take off.

Margaret Whiting: "Oops"-"'Round and "Round" (Capitol), "Oops," from the Metro pic, "Belle of New York," gives Miss Whiting her best material in some time. It's a bright novelty entry which Miss Whiting socks over with bounce and style. It's a juke natural. Reverse is anothering catching tune in rondo form with Miss Whiting handling all the vocal parts. Lou Busch's backing is solid.

Phil Harris Orch: "8th Street Association"-"Wine, Woman and Song" (Victor). "8th Street" is one of those tunes which could break out of left field. It's a snappy piece of material, in any case, but Harris' workover could kick it off as a pop item. Reverse is handled okay and might give the Nat "King" Cole version for Capitol a run for the money.

Louis Armstrong-Velma Middleton: "You're the Apple of My Eye"-"Big Butter and Egg Man" (Decca). A great jazz artist for the cognescenti, Louis Armstrong is an equally potent factor for the mass market. On these two sides, he and Velma Middleton belt out a couple of superb commercial performances. "Apple" has a slight edge, being handled a bit more smoothly with "Butter and Egg Man."

Savannah Churchill: "In Spite of Everything You Do"-"Don't Grieve, Don't Sorrow, Don't Cry" (Victor). Both of these sides are geared for the current pop acceptance of torchy blues and rhythm tunes and artists. Miss Churchill is particularly effective in this genre and could have a standout hit in "In Spite of Everything You Do." It's a fine number and Miss Churchill gives it a sensitive rendition. Reverse is in a similar groove and also has good potential.

Album Reviews

Phil Silvers, Rose Marie, Lindy Doherty, Judy Lynn, Bob Sheerer: "Top Banana" (Capitol). The original cast album set of the Broadway legit musical, "Top Banana," is handicapped by score which registers as mediocre on wax. It's a well packaged album, however, with a couple of fair comedy bits by Phil Silvers, notably "You're O. K. for TV." Judy Lynn and Lindy Doherty are adequate on the ballads.

James Barton, Olga San Juan, Tony Bavaar: "Paint Your Wagon" (Victor). Although no hit songs have come out of "Paint Your Wagon," several class numbers by Alan Jay Lerner and Frederick Loewe give this original cast album set a big lift. James Barton's rendition of "I Still See Eliza" is a highspot, a beautiful tune delivered in appealing rough style by a dramatic actor. Olga San Juan is also effective in "How Can I Wait," among other tunes, and Tony Bavaar impresses on "I Talk to the Trees." Rufus Smith and Robert Penn also score on a couple of good numbers. Fran Allers batons.

Platter Pointers

Continuing to dip into its vast back catalog of classic jazz recordings, RCA Victor has reissued another outstanding collection of jazz albums as part of its "Treasury of Immortal Performances" series. Included in the release, which should furnish some excellent programming material for disk jockeys, are six-sided sets by Benny Goodman, Artie Shaw and Jelly Roll Morton, plus other sets grouped around top jazz trumpeters and tenor sax men . . . Vaughn Monroe has a potential hit side in "Ooh! What You Did" (Victor) . . Teddy Phillips orch has two pleasing sides in "Wishin'" and "Sunshine and Flowers," Lynn Hoyt and Dick Jessup vocalling (King) . . . Eddy Howard has a likely followup to his "Sin" click in "Stolen Love" (Mercury) . . . Roberta Lee impresses with her bright bouncy workover of "Try Me One More Time" (Decca) . . . Parlay of Johnny Hartman and Perez Prado orch on "Wild" produces some interesting results (Victor) . . . Also in the Latin vein, Edmondos Ros orch hits on "Maria Dolores" (London) . . Helen O'Connell continues to turn out fine slices for Capitol with "Baby We're Really In Love" and "Come What May" (Capitol) . . . Hopping on the Les Paul-Mary Ford slice of "Tiger Rag," George Barnes turns out a driving guitar solo of the jazz classic for Decca . . . Bill Kenny will find it tough to break through with "Please, Mr. Sun" in view of the Johnnie Ray cut for Columbia.

Standout western, folk, religious, polka, blues, rhythm, etc.: Pee Wee King, "Ragtime Annie Lee" (Victor) . . . H-Bomb Ferguson, "Good Lovin'" (Savoy) . . . Eddie Marshall, "Mine, All Mine" (Victor) . . . Eddy Arnold, "Bundle of Southern Sunshine" (Victor) . . . Jimmy Wakeley, "Missing In Action" (Capitol).

Court Rules Maestroes Working In Hotels Have Employee Status

New York Local 802, American Federation of Musicians, won an important victory in its fight against Government classification of bandleaders as employers last week when the N. Y. Appellate Division court ruled that maestroes working in hotels must be considered employees along with members of their bands. Decision was made on a specific appeal by the Statler Hotels against a prior ruling of the N. Y. Unemployment Insurance Appeal Board that Tommy Dorsey and Charlie Spivak were employees for purposes of the unemployment insurance payments.

Decision is seen having a wide effect in the AFM conflicting battle over the Form B contract, the basic agreement between buyers of musical crews and AFM members. In 1947 the AFM lost a decision before the U. S. Supreme Court, which ruled that leaders are employers for purposes of withholding Federal taxes from orch sidemen. It was held that ballrooms, one-nite operators, etc., were buying musical packages from bandleaders or their agents and that the latter must handle the withholding tax routine. AFM execs conceded they had a bad case in this matter, particularly for bands on one-night tours where the job of estimating taxes would be too difficult for the promoters.

In New York State, however, Local 802 has now won recognition for bandleaders on location in hotels as employees. As a result, the hotels must now pay the 2½% payroll tax to the unemployment insurance fund instead of the bandleaders. In addition, complicated bookkeeping headaches have been taken off the shoulders of the bandleaders' managers.

The New York court's ruling may have a wide impact on the employer-employee relationships in other states. Illinois is understood to be adopting the New York formula as are other key states. At present, however, there is no fixed pattern for all the states on the handling of withholding taxes falling within their purview.

Atlantic Pacts Amateur

Odell Turner, Negro blues singer, has been inked to a three-year pact by Atlantic Records.

Miss Turner was a winner of an Apollo Theatre, N. Y. amateur night.

Harms Hales Mellin To Court in Piracy Action on Click 'Sin'

As anticipated by the trade, Harms Music, of the Warner Bros. combine, last week filed an infringement suit in N. Y. Federal Court against Bobby Mellin's Algonquin Music which questions the originality of the defendant publisher's hit tune, "Sin." An injunction, damages and an accounting of all profits derived from the alleged piracy are sought.

"Sin," according to the complaint, was substantially lifted from Harms oldie, "You're a Perfect Jewel to Me (Dearest)," which Gene Buck and Dave Stamper authored in 1919.

Written by Chester Shull and George Hoven, "Sin" was published by Algonquin in September, 1951. Harms asserts that it notified Algonquin that it was infringing by continuing to license recording companies and others to use "Sin," but its protests were ignored.

Capitol to Wax 'Jamie' Cast Set

Capitol Records, which moved into the original Broadway cast album field this season, nabbed the rights last week to the forthcoming legit musical "Three Wishes For Jamie." Musical, which is skedded for a March 14 preem in N. Y., stars Anne Jeffreys and John Raitt. Music and lyrics were penned by Ralph Blane.

Diskery wound up its waxing sessions of the Richard Rodgers-Lorenz Hart musical, "Pal Joey," Friday (11). Although it'll be peddled as an original cast album, the stars of the Broadway revival Vivienne Segal and Harold Lang, were replaced in the Cap recording by Jane Froman and Dick Beavers because both Miss Segal and Lang are under contract to Columbia Records. Col issued a "Pal Joey" LP last spring with Miss Segal and Lang. Similar contractual snarl occurred last year when RCA Victor nabbed the original cast rights to the Irving Berlin musical "Call Me Madam." Victor was unable to etch the show's star, Ethel Merman, because she was a Decca Records pactee. Decca issued a separate album of the show's score with Miss Merman and Dick Haymes. The Cap album will feature Elaine Stritch, Pat Northrop and Helen Gallagher.

Cap's other entry in the legit musical field is "Top Banana" while Victor is represented by "Paint Your Wagon" and Columbia prepping "A Month of Sundays."

Kapp to Coast

Dave Kapp, RCA Victor's pop artists and repertory chief, heads for Hollywood this weekend for briefing of the company's Coast operation. It'll be his first personal confab with Coast recording manager Henri Rene since Kapp took over the a&r post early in December.

Kapp will be gone about two weeks.

Inside Orchestras—Music

Along with the current priming of Easter tunes for the wax market, a dispute has broken out between Ben Bloom Music and Alamo Music, a Hill & Range subsid, over two numbers identically titled "Egbert, the Easter Egg." Both firms are racing to get their versions on wax with Bloom currently in the lead with slices by Guy Lombardo, Merv Shiner, Roy Rogers and a Dave platter for Simon & Schuster's Golden Records line. The Alamo firm has lined up a Rosemary Clooney side. Bloom claims that his song was copyrighted five months before the Alamo version.

For the first time in vet trade execs' memories, a tune has currently climbed to the top of the best-seller lists without benefit of affiliation with either the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers or Broadcast Music, Inc. Tune is "The Little White Cloud That Cried," published by Larry Spier's music firm and as yet without a hookup with a licensing outfit. It's understood Spier and BMI have been talking a deal but without reaching satisfactory coin terms.

Bucking the traditional pattern which dictates that winter and Christmas songs must die the day after Dec. 25, the tune, "Snowflakes," is still climbing in the best-seller lists this month. Originally hypoed as a novelty written by a nine-year-old girl, Marjorie Kurtz, the tune has taken off as a legitimate click via the Guy Lombardo-Evelyn Knight etching for Decca Records where it is one of the top sellers.

Evans score will be used in a later Bob Hope pic "Military Policeman," and David and Jerry Livingston will again be repped in "The Stooge," with Martin & Lewis.

Robbins, Feist & Miller, Metro and 20th-Fox subsids, will split the scores of the four M-G musicals which have already been set. Feist is working on the Johnny Mercer-Harry Warren score for "Belle of New York," which stars Fred Astaire and Vera Ellen. Such tunes from the pic as "Oops" and "Baby Doll" have received a hefty wax coverage.

Robbins is prepping the Arthur Freed-Nacio Herb Brown score for the Gene Kelly starrer "Singing In The Rain." The tunes are oldies from the Big Three catalog, but the pub execs are counting on new etchings to revive the songs as evidenced by the new interest in "I'll See You In My Dreams," which was a plug tune from the Warner Bros. pic of the same name. Not yet assigned are the scores for "Skirts Ahoy," penned by Harry Warren and Ralph Blaine, and the Nicholas Brodszky-Sammy Cahn score for "Because You're Mine." "Skirts" stars Esther Williams and Vivian Blaine while Mario Lanza tops "Mine."

On tap for the Warner Bros. subsids, Remick, Witmark and Advanced, are the Charles Tobias-Peter De Rose score for "About Face," starring Gordon MacRae and Eddie Bracken; "Jack and the Beanstalk," the Abbott & Costello starrer with tunes by Lester Lee and Bob Hilliard; Vernon Duke-Sammy Cahn's "April In Paris,"; and the Bob Hilliard-Carl Sigman scores for "Broadway Revisited" and "A Slight Case of Murder."

Indie pubbers such as Whiteway Music and Howie Richmond are also stepping into the pix score sweepstakes. Whiteway has contracted to publish four tunes from the Columbia film "Purple Heart Diary," penned by Johnny Bradford, Barbara Hayden and Tony Romano, while Richmond, via his Cromwell Music subsid, is publishing the Bob Russell-Lester Lee tune, "Lady Love," from the Columbia pic starring Mickey Rooney, "Sound Off." Mills Music will handle all RKO pic tunes under its new pact with the film studio.

Band Reviews

DEL COURTNEY ORCH (12)
With Tommy Page
St. Francis Hotel, San Francisco

This new combo fused by vet bandman Courtney is grooved to slice down the middle with equal appeal slanted to terpability and entertainment. In this it succeeds mixing as it does pops and oldies overlarded with acceptable comedy specialties and even hoke.

The crew of 12 includes four sax, two trumpet, trombone, and three rhythm consisting of piano, drum and bass, with Tommy Page allotted the vocal chores and Pete Eastman doubling from the band with extra verbals. Tempos are remindful oif Freddy Martin especially in pops when Courtney comes home in full melodic ensemble effect with tones secured by voicing of sax section highpointed by piano.

A complete new library, all special arrangements, is a major credit. This is by Jack De Mello, first trumpet, who has provided Courtney with a wide channel to cruise his music. Dancing is easy and loaded floor is evidence of effectiveness and appeal.

Show a neat interlude with Courtney gabbing to tie up items clicky, including concert arrangement of bits from "Oklahoma," "Hands Across the Table," and "You're In the Army" a music tour of Scotland, China and other points. Piano finale by Bob Moonan with splinters of Chopin and Liszt passes muster.

There is a solid quality about this troupe which augurs okay and pays off in customer kudos. Ted.

LARRY FOTINE ORCH (11)
With Cathy Cordovan, Tony Valentine
Hotel Muehlebach, Kansas City

While not new in the area, the Larry Fotine crew is making its first hotel stand in town in the Terrace Grill of the Muehlebach. The date included the holidays and runs on into January a spell, and the orch is giving a goodly account of itself at the gate.

Musically this orch is long on smooth, sweet arrangements, Fotine formerly being an arranger for Sammy Kaye. He works with an instrumentation of four saxes, two trumpets, trombone, drums, piano and string bass, plus his own clarinet. He draws on this assemblage for a reed lead with fullness throughout, basically featuring the two-beat style. In the matter of rhythms, Fotine offers what the dancers want, a variety being called for in this class room. Portfolio includes pops of the days, several originals from his own pen, a selection of standards and novelty numbers, plus the rhubma, samba and mambo of Latin hues.

Vocally Fotine is better equipped than a number of bands seen here lately. He has blonde Cathy Cordovan to warble the ballads in highly listenable fashion, and to add considerably with her singing of the folky type of song and novelties. Tony Valentine baritones likewise with attractive stylings, veering to the Bill Farrell type, and singing mostly the current pops. Fotine calls on the singers steadily, and occasionally joins the gal in a duet, all rounding out the output of the orch. Quin.

Wolfson-White Set Up Whiteway Pub Firm

Mack Wolfson and Edward R. White have set up a new publishing firm, Whiteway Music. Wolfson, who was formerly professional manager for Edward Kassner, will be Whiteway's professional manager, while White, a former Music Corp. of America exec, will act as general manager.

Last week, Whiteway acquired rights to four songs from the forthcoming Columbia pic, "Purple Heart Diary." Tunes were penned by Johnny Bradford, Barbara Hayden and Tony Romano.

Delores Hawkins to Okeh

Songstress Delores Hawkins has been pacted by Okeh Records, the blues and rhythm subsid of Columbia Records.

Miss Hawkins formerly sang with the Gene Krupa orch.

Norman Granz, "Jazz at the Philharmonic" promoter, has moved his headquarters to Hollywood. Granz will continue to maintain his New York offices and he'll commute from the Coast every six weeks.

Jukebox Fee

gressional attacks against the jukebox industry for allegedly harboring "racketeering elements." This charge, in fact, was made both by Sen. Estes Kefauver and ASCAP in support of the amendment. It's held, also, that the Kefauver-Bryson amendment avoids all of the stumbling blocks which led to the defeat several years ago of the Scott bill, which purported to achieve the same end.

It's anticipated that the case of the jukebox ops will center around three major points: (1) they hold that their industry is a key factor in making hits and thereby it helps the publishers and songwriters; (2), they hold that their payment for the records used in the coin machines is sufficient compensation to the creative end; and (3), they cannot afford to pay the proposed licensing fee.

formula of the Columbia agreement involved a whole series of wage increases for different categories since some of the factory workers had received prior wage increases.

Riding with the most best-sellers in the wax field currently, the end of the strike puts Columbia back into the position of completely and quickly filling retail orders on current and past releases. During the strike, Columbia was straining the facilities of its other plants and had other major firms, such as RCA Victor and M-G-M, pressing for them.

Although Columbia was not crippled seriously by the strike, due to the alternative channels of production, it's figured the diskery lost considerable sales due to inability to make delivery on its pop hits. Production of longhair disks, particularly new releases, was also curtailed during the strike.

Two Top '51 Hits Ruled Ineligible For 'Oscar' Award

Hollywood, Jan. 15.

At a closed-door meeting the Academy of Motion Picture Arts & Science's music branch ruled two top pop hits of 1951 ineligible for Oscar derby since neither were written for nor first commercialized in and by films in which they were used. Tunes are "Because of You" used in Monogram's "I Was American Spy" and "Loveliest Night of Year" from Metro's "Caruso."

"Because," written many years ago by Arthur Hammerstein and Dudley Wilkinson, it became a hit in wake of the Tony Bennett and Les Baxter disks. "Night" is an old standard "Over the Waves," with new lyrics by Paul Francis Webster.

It's understood Johnny Green, Metro studio director and member of the Academy board, appeared at the meeting stating he didn't feel "Loveliest" should be considered and why. Also ineligible are a number of lesser-known ditties such as "Wish I Was" on grounds they are actually modernizations or upbeat versions of old nursery, folk songs.

Known to be in forefront of possible nominees are "Wonder Why" by Nick Brodszky-Sammy Cahn from Metro's "Rich, Young and Pretty;" "You'll Know" by Jimmy McHugh-Harold Adamson from RKO's "His Kind of Woman;" "Never," from 20th's "Golden Girl;" "Cool, Cool of the Evening" by Johnny Mercer and Hoagy Carmichael from Paramount's "Here Comes the Groom."

Music branch is hewing strictly to rules this year to avoid furor of few years ago when Frank Loesser's "Baby It's Cold Outside" won an Oscar although it was charged it wasn't written specially for film since Loesser and his wife performed it five years previously. Even greater howl was raised when the Jerome Hammerstein 2d's "Last Time I Saw Paris" won, although it was published and became a hit before it appeared in a film.

Mann Reelected Prez Of Robin Hood Dell

Philadelphia, Jan. 15.

Fredric R. Mann, paper box manufacturer and musical patron, was elected for his third term as president of the Robin Hood Dell, summer concert organization. Robin Hood Dell enjoyed its most successful season to date in the summer of 1951, Mann reported to the annual meeting of the board of directors. A surplus of $1,900 remained after payment of all obligations.

Two new members named to the board were Ralph W. Pitkin, former City Treasurer of Philadelphia, and Harry Aleinikoff, first violinist who replaces Carl Torello, bassist, as the Dell orchestra's rep. Morton Howard was named manager and Mrs. Davil C. Martin is assistant manager of the Dell.

Ray's 'Cry'-'Cloud' Tops 1,000,000

Johnnie Ray, Columbia Records' atest "new sounds" phenom, has halked up the fastest best-seller ince Patti Page's slice of "Tenessee Waltz" with his coupling of Cry" and "Little White Cloud 'hat Cried." Released eight weeks go, the disk hit the 1,000,000 ales marker late last week and is till going strong on top of the hit ists.

Ray, a partially-deaf vocalist vho used to work in the midwest afes for under $100 a week, has atapulted into the four-figure salry bracket as a result of his nitial waxing efforts. Ray made Cry" and "Cloud" under the)keh label, Col's blues and rhythm ubsid, but has since been upped o the regular pop field where he nade another runaway hit in Please, Mr. Sun."

Ray's hot selling pace is conidered all the more unusual beause of the recent strike at Col's 3ridgeport plant which impeded listribution somewhat. In some reas where Ray's disks were not vailable, a black market price of 2 per platter was set up for "Cry." The impact of television on sales of Ray's disks was shown in the [illegible] upward demand following he singer's appearance on Ed Sullivan's "Toast of the Town" TV how last week. Ray has been encilled in for a repeat shot on Feb. 10.

Columbia Artists Mgt. has set ip three dates in Venezuela, Jan. 8-30, for the concert team of Pierre Bernac, baritone, and Francois Poulenc, composer-ianist.

"Treasury of Immortal Performances" imprint and has followed up with additional albums in the last month. Renewed interest in this field is evidenced by the fact that sales of the second series are going stronger than the initial releases.

Columbia has also been pushing extensive sets framed around leading jazz artists in its "Golden Era" series with four-volume sets of Bessie Smith and Louis Armstrong to be followed by other albums built around Bix Biederbecke, Duke Ellington and others. Decca's subsid, Coral Records, has also been a big factor in the jazz revival with its release of the old Brunswick masters. Coral, in fact, was one of the earliest companies to take advantage of the new speed techniques to showcase the old jazz classics.

New Terp Series Opens Name Bands, Latham, N.Y.

Albany, Jan. 15.

Charlie Spivak's orch opened Sunday night (13) a new series of winter dances at the Circle Inn at Latham, promoted by Bob Snyder. Snyder staged a 13-week fall cycle at the Crooked Lake Hotel near Averill Park, name bands doing a half-hour broadcast over NBC.

Snyder first announced Tommy Dorsey would teeoff Jan. 6, but he was forced to cancel that because Dorsey could not obtain passage from South America to make the date. Among others scheduled are: Bernie Cummings, Elliott Lawrence, Tony Pastor, Ray Anthony and Art Mooney.

Toronto Tooters Fight Canned Music Project For Outdoor Ice Rink

Toronto, Jan. 15.

In providing music for public park outdoor skating rinks here, city fathers and Walter Murdoch, president of the Toronto Musical Protective Assn., are at private loggerheads, with Murdoch insisting that each rink have a leader and seven men for the night sessions at union scale rather than the proposed Muzak pipe-ins.

On weekly music service, Associated Broadcasting Co., holder of the Muzak franchise in Canada, is prepared to supply this to the Parks Commission for $2,700; Murdoch prefers employment of bandsmen, preferably ex-servicemen, for a three-night weekly engagement at $7,000, this amount to cover all public outdoor rinks.

Meanwhile, in connection with the union action, Muzak has now notified city council that the delay in signing the proposed contract is governed by agreements that Muzak has with the American Federation of Musicians, these "agreeing not to displace live talent." Muzak letters to city council now state that, at the time of negotiation, Muzak was unaware of the likelihood of live musicians being replaced. City fathers retort that the public rinks have been newly established this season; that obviously no musicians are being deprived of a living because none have ever been hired.

Florida Sun

I must tell you about the most exciting act of its kind in the entire world before the space limiter cuts this column short. This act is Darvas and Julia. The program states that they are the dance sensation of the Continent. I add to this, AND OF THE UNITED STATES AND ENTIRE WORLD.

Frankly, when you watch show after show, ight after night, in this area which gets them from all over the universe, you get to the place where you don't think there is anything new. But there is something new under the sun, and the act of Darvas and Julia will prove to you that I am correct. Sheer genius created the routines and I don't remember ever hearing as much spontaneous applause as that which greeted them, for they came to town WITHOUT benefit of drum beating, and without local and national publicity offices filling an appraiser in advance with news of their talent and ability. They do things on a dance floor which will amaze you, and their act alone is WORTH FAR MORE than the price of spending an evening at the Lati Quarter.

When I go out on the limb and write this, I recognize that my reputation as a show appraiser is at stake. I am willing to risk it on this statement.

AGVA Ganders Radical Alterations In Insurance After 'Fraud' Charge

The insurance program of the American Guild of Variety Artists has developed into one of the most sizzling issues ever to come up before a governing body of the union. Charges of "fraud," "deception" and "filth" were levelled at unnamed persons connected with the program, and the AGVA board has started to draw up plans for not only a new policy but may make some major changes that will transform the entire format and style of the policy now in existence.

Fraud charges came late Monday night (14) after the board had spent the major part of the day hearing James Donovan, attorney for Matthew M. Adler, insurance program's broker; union's counsel, Silverstone & Rosenthal, and resident counsel Henry Katz. Late that evening, copies of the original signed policy and a copy of a "conformed" policy, presumably an identical carbon copy, were given the board. Both—policies were found to have one major difference. The original policy did not have a clause which makes the union the collection agency for the insurance program. The unsigned copy had that clause and the union had been working under that assumption. It was believed the first time that union attorneys had a chance to study the policy.

AGVA's Liability

Union counsel stated that under the policy which they believed to be a true copy, AGVA is liable for uncollected premiums, which reportedly run as high as $300,000 at present.

Earlier, the board had spent considerable time in attempting to lay the basis of a new policy. There were some discussions on expanded coverage, lower premiums and the duration of a policy to be assigned to a broker.

The day started out with an appeal by Donovan for a level-headed discussion of the program. Donovan declared that without Adler there would have been no accident policy. He claimed that Adler so far has lost about $23,000 on the deal.

Crux of the situation from Donovan's viewpoint was the 15-year tenure of the contract Adler holds with the union. At the outset, Donovan said that this matter could be overlooked if the union was acting in good faith and wanted the insurance program.

Katz, in rebuttal, bitterly attacked the program as presently constituted. He charged that its

Two students of Mary Hardin-Baylor College—Noami Gibbs and Louise Tiegreen—have combined ventriloquy and magic in religious teachings to open a new field in education.

Ventriloquy is used to tell Bible stories to a wooden dummy, Sandy. Magic is employed to bring out a given point in an object lesson. They also write and act in religioso dramas, and Miss Gibbs does chalk talks and puppeteering in the Bible stories.

In an eight-month period, the duo travelled more than 58,000 miles, giving programs in Oklahoma, Kansas and Texas.

AGVA Board Puts Damper on Price For Lefty Slant

National board meet of the American Guild of Variety Artists at the Taft Hotel, N. Y., started off on a hot issue Sunday (13). A resolution was introduced calling for censure of prexy Georgie Price, who in a recent official letter sent to all branches stated that there were Lefty Letters in the organization and that he would keep an eye on them. A group within the union declared that this was the opening wedge to classify as leftists all who opposed the administration.

Shortly before vote was to be taken, Price apologized to any members who may have been hurt by that utterance and stated that he would in future write no letters except along the lines prescribed by the board. Board subsequently gave Price a vote of confidence and the resolution was withdrawn.

AGVA Sidelights

Outgoing national administrative secretary Henry Dunn reported that largely as a result of the $10-assessment last year, AGVA's treasury had progressed from an $80,000 deficit to a $90,000 bank balance. He stated that there was $129,043 collected so far from the levy.

The $3 was a partial payment accepted by a Buffalo organizer.

A motion to fire outdoor head Vic Connors because of his participation in the insurance setup was withdrawn when it became evident that the majority of the board would vote against the proposal.

Board voted to discuss a new insurance contract with only board members in the room.

Henry Dunn declared that the N. Y. district attorney's office had been investigating him because of the AGVA insurance program. Dunn said an informant told him the DA gave him a "clean bill health."

A. C. Muny Aud. Sees 50G Taxpayer Aid

Atlantic City, Jan. 15.

Despite an apparent surplus of $150,000 left over from previous appropriations, operation of the Municipal Auditorium for 1952 will require taxpayer assistance in the amount of $50,000 to overcome an operating deficit. This was indicated as the 1952 budget for the big hall, owned by the city, was passed by city commissioners.

The hall was operated during 1951 under a $75,000 deficit.

Jack Irving Voted National AGVA Boss, Retains Chi Regional Post

As anticipated, Jack Irving was unanimously elected national administrative secretary of the American Guild of Variety Artists at the three-day meet of the national board which started Sunday (13). Irving, who has been midwest regional director and assistant national administrative secretary of the union, will retain his Chi spot as well, but will get only one salary. However, to compensate for increase in living expenses caused by setting up separate quarters in New York, board voted to up his expense allowance by $100 weekly. Total take from Irving's multiple activities in the union will be $175 salary and an equal sum in expenses. Irving succeeds Henry Dunn, who leaves Jan. 18 to open a Hollywood office for the Lew & Leslie Grade Agency. A few board members indicated that although they didn't like the setup, there was nothing they could do since he was the only remaining candidate.

Irving underwent a stiff grilling by some board members before the vote. Peter Chan, from New York, opened the examination with three queries which asked Irving to explain the reason there are no minimum basic agreements in his midwest jurisdiction, whether his outside interests would interfere with performance of duties in AGVA, and whether, and once in the position, he would attempt to move national headquarters to Chicago.

Others followed with similar lines of interrogation. Board member Jerry Wayne, also of New York, sought to know how Irving could perform the duties of the Chi and N. Y. offices simultaneously. Other queries were aimed at smoking out the policies to be instituted by Irving.

Minimum As Maximum

In answer, Irving stated that the minimum basic agreement is a millstone around the neck of the performers in Chicago. He said that those under the union's jurisdiction have benefited through lack of an m.b.a., reasoning that the minimum ultimately becomes the maximum, thus harming the performer.

Irving asserted that his job in Chicago had become largely a matter of paper work which his femme assistant could handle while he was in New York. To this Wayne retorted that if it's a matter of paper work, then Irving was being overpaid and had misrepresented his value to the organization.

Irving says he plans no wholesale shakeup, but will institute a new system.

Dunn's resignation was accepted "with regret" and a committee was appointed to buy him a gift.

Ohio Accepting Liquor Applications at Fast Clip But OK's Tied to Cases

Columbus, Jan. 15.

Even though the state liquor department isn't passing out any permits, it is being flooded with applications because of an Ohio Supreme Court ruling of Dec. 19. In fact, William C. Bryant, director of state liquor control, was forced to name a special five-man board from the department to keep from being snowed under.

The department stopped issuing new permits April 11, 1949, and did not accept further applications until the court ruling.

There were 42,000 liquor permits of all types in Ohio in 1948. The number dropped to 38,000 in 30,000 locations in 1950. There are fewer locations than permits because many permit-holders have several types of licenses.

The department is forced to accept applications, but whether new permits will be issued depends on the outcome in the Ohio Supreme Court of two cases. James P. Tsantles of Fostoria and the state Amvet organization have had their cases consolidated and final arguments were heard Nov. 30, but there is no indication as to when the court will render its decision.

N.Y. Roxy's New Boss, Dave Katz, To Hypo B.O. Via Names on 3-a-Day

• First major impact of the Palace Theatre, N. Y., modus operandi in the two-a-day vaude field is seen in a bid for names by the Roxy. At a press conference last week, David Katz, Roxy's new managing director who succeeded A. J. Balaban (latter remains on the staff as a consultant), declared that the house would be willing to do three-a-day in an effort to entice top names.

Competition of video with one show periodically and the Palace's 10 shows weekly have produced a near-void of headliners in many instances.

Katz, in order to snare certain toppers, would reduce the number of shows at the Roxy. Indications are that money is no object at this point. For example, Katz declared that he would even go beyond the $35,000 and percentages given Milton Berle, if that comic would essay a stand at this house during the summer. Berle got $84,000 in two weeks here during the past summer. Katz stated that he'll take headliners from video, including Desi Arnaz and Lucille Ball, Sid Caesar and Imogene Coca.

In addition, the new m.d. is eyeing engagements by a big league ballet troupe. Katz is also looking forward to a return trip by the New York Philharmonic Orchestra. He would like to spot Roland Petit's Ballets de Paris, and also believes there's a lot of boxoffice in Tallulah Bankhead and "The Big Show." Katz stated that he would permit the broadcast from the Roxy stage as part of the regular stageshow.

House is slated to put in an Eidophor bigscreen installation in March. It's conceivable that the Roxy may serve as a base for theatre telecasts of its stageshow to other houses.

Katz also said that the ice shows will continue to be part of the summer entertainment at this theatre.

Gilded Cage Folds, Acts Switch to LQ

Gilded Cage, N. Y., is slated to shutter Saturday (19) with entire production moving over to the companion operation, the nearby Latin Quarter Feb. 3. Both Cage and L.Q. are operated by Lou Walters and E. M. Loew. Concessionaire Abe Ellis, who holds the chattel mortgage on the Cage, is also in on its operation.

There's some talk that Ben Blue, who was the first headliner at the Cage, is interested in taking the spot over. Blue had been dickering with Ellis on acquisition of a room at the Howard Johnson restaurant on W. 57th St., but deal fell through.

Walters opened this spot originally as a Gay '90s cafe, but shifted format to one similar to that of Latin Quarter.

The acts that will play L.Q. include Fernanda Montell, Costello Twins, Trio Bassi, Sherry Stevens, Ralph Young and Freddie Bamberger & Pam.

The loss encountered in the operation of the Cage has been considerable. Site has housed a long series of unsuccessful clubs in the past decade.

Gilded Cage is the third Gotham cafe shuttering in recent months. The Sugar Hill and the Celebrity Club are now dark.

Shutter E. St. Louis Cafe After Shooting Fracas

St. Louis, Jan. 15.

Club 88, at junction of U. S. Highway 40 and 66-67, near East St. Louis, Ill., was shuttered last week after an affray in which Roy Ashby, Murphysboro, Ill., was shot and seriously injured. When State's Attorney Richard T. Carter announced that he would revoke the club's liquor license, Herbert Thomason, of St. Louis, the owner, refused to surrender it.

The spot, located near the Fairmount Jockey Club, was heavily patronized, especially by St. Louisans who crossed the Mississippi river after Missouri closing hours became effective. Ashby, paralyzed from the waist down, is in an East St. Louis hospital. His assailant, apprehended, refused to tell cops what led up to the shooting.

VEGAS, RENO RING '51 BULLION BELL

By BILL WILLARD

Las Vegas, Jan. 15.

Nevada bettors plunked down over a billion bucks in 1951 to gallop dice, watch the wheels go 'round, pull handles of one-arm bandits, flip pasteboards, and engage in other assorted gambling pastimes. State tax commish figured out approximate total from reports on gambling taxes and license incomes, after sum of $1,503,841 was collected. Amount topped 1950's total by almost $200,000.

The 2% tax on gross income from gaming joynts (sic) brought in $1,041,453. From this figure is computed amount lost by casino patrons—$52,072,600. With gross income purported to be about 5% of dough bet, state accountants found grand total to be around $1,041,440,000 passing across tables.

Additional take from gambling amounted to $387,000 from license fees; $3,369 from penalties taxed gambling law violators, and $76,658 from Continental Wire Service, concern providing race horse books with info. Sag in books was sharp

R.C. Music Hall Cast Castigates Dunn As AGVA Negotiator; Resignee Replies

Henry Dunn, resigned nationally administrative secretary of the American Guild of Variety Artists, faced one of the most severe tongue-lashings during his two-year tenure this week. A delegation from Radio City Music Hall, N. Y., currently negotiating for an agreement, called Dunn's role in organizing that theatre "a bit of treachery." Dunn was attacked for "coddling the Music Hall management," "telling untruths and half-truths" and for an "attempt to sell out the cast."

Delegation appeared before the AGVA national board meeting at the Taft Hotel, N. Y., Monday (14), at which Dunn was present.

Wade Thompson and Danny Walden acted as spokesman for the 103 members of the Hall's cast who are seeking a contract which would hike wages which they claim to be lowest in comparable fields. They also are seeking to lower the number of rehearsal hours. Thompson, who opened the pro-

A.C. Fire Ruins Draw Thousands

Atlantic City, Jan. 15.

Biggest attraction here continues to be the ruins of last week's $4,000,000 beachfront fire, with hotels, restaurants, theatres and all other resort businessmen sharing an unexpected flow of cash from the thousands pouring into the resort.

To help matters along, the weather was beautiful and warm over the weekend. Whether ownership of the four hotels hit and that of scores of near-beach rooming houses will rebuild until a new turn in the economic picture is the big question. Building costs are so prohibitive that it seems unlikely that much construction will be done quickly.

At the Globe Theatre, home of summer burlesque for years, the question of rebuilding being pondered by J. Hornak, general manager of the Hirst Enterprises, of Philadelphia. It will, of course, face a ruling of the city's building department, which may find it necessary to order demolition of the structure should the standing walls be considered dangerous.

Nevada's Billion in Bets

after 10% tax was levied. Vegas casinos converted their book rooms into lounges, or expanded with games, following imposition of the Federal tax, while two Reno and Elko parlors kept in biz by passing the tax on to customers.

Robbins Cahill, sec of state tax commish, reported peak play between July and September, spanning heavy tourist travel.

Reserve Stays Put

The year 1951 began with big splurge, tapering off slightly after Jan. 1. However, fact was noted by observers on local scene that gambling houses were in little danger of dipping into reserves, even during slow periods. Graph of overall enterprises shows few deep drops.

Rooms in resort hotels and surrounding motels were hard to get on weekends all during '51. So pressed were all operators for space that several made plans for expansion.

Flamingo began extension of 100 rooms which will be completed and ready for occupancy coming April. Wilbur Clark's Desert Inn, with ambitious enlargement scheme, hit upon idea of 18-hole golf course upon extensive property holdings. Around this, homes were to be built in the $20,000-$50,000 class. Project is well underway, along with a new 100 room wing adjoining hotel nearing completion.

Following purchase for $5,500,000 of the Last Frontier, new bonifaces Guy McAfee, Beldon Katleman and Jacob Kozloff made no change in physical setup of hospice. Plans for '52 encompass switching of casino-dining room setup, plus tacking on of sorely needed rooms.

From Rustic to Rustic

El Rancho Vegas, with Beldon Katleman in full charge, made extensive alterations, hiring decorator Tom Douglas to change over interior from natural western rustic to Hollywood polished rustic. Cost exceeded $250,000, but more facelifting is being carried over to this year's budget. Guests at El Rancho are housed away from casino in bungalows built during wartime with RFC housing funds.

Thunderbird, controlled by Marion Hicks, began '51 with opening of new chuckwagon-bar lounge to accommodate increasing flow of patrons bursting Pow Wow Room bar. Least pretentious of all Strip caravansaries, this spa caters to "family" trade, building fine word-of-mouth rep for its fine food.

Underway is Club Bingo's timely changeover from casino, with small nitery (Bonanza Room), into Hotel Sahara. Foundations are down, upon which is rising a 250-room ultra-modern establishment to be ready for biz by end of this year or first months of '53.

Inflated Acreage

Since Las Vegas has already passed population mark of Reno, according to unofficial census, there seems to be little indication that the town will not continue to expand. Ten years ago, whole acres of property along the highway stem could be picked up for $100-$300 per. Current listings along this same belt are marked at $300-$500 a front foot.

Vegas has become a rich lode for show biz. In 1944, during war years when only two resort hotels were around—El Rancho Vegas and Last Frontier—average monthly entertainment cost was $20,000-$25,000. In 1951, seven years later, inflationary prices notwithstanding, with total of five huge operations luring the innocents by flashing top marquee names, budgets hovered around $50,000-$60,000 monthly average, including orch and line.

Downtown casino ops often feel slighted because of national attention directed toward the resort hotels. However, as far as income is concerned, very few have reason to complain. Ownership and stockholding are interlocked, with some Golden Nugget brass, in particular, firmly ensconced both downtown and on Strip.

Only One Preemer

Expansion is limited in this section. Two blocks have been set aside by law into which all gambling halls must go about their business. During 1951, only one large casino was successfully launched, the Horseshoe Club, bought by Benny Binion from sinking Clover Club combine. Prior to ownership by Clover Club group, joynt was Eldorado Club, closed by state tax commish because of illegalities found in card games—a rare occurrence in the tightly controlled state gambling setup. After putting up all the moola for complete interior alterations and staking bank, Binion was forced to champ at the bit while a dummy corporation operated gambling officially. Pressure burst political barricades, finally allowing the former Texas kingpin to assume full control of his costly baby. Advent of club under aegis of Binion was boon to Fremont St.

Jackpot Jubilees

Jackpot was very much in evidence, although ops stoutly disclaimed such practices. Their protestations were drowned by raucous loudspeakers proclaiming in carny style the number of slots paying off and amount of silver spewing forth. Generally, these mechanical bandits lure femme trade, with most males heading for dice tables, lo-ball poker, faro, keno, money-wheel. Bingo parlors are also lucrative come-ons to gentler sex, and ditto roulette.

Atmosphere in this stem of bright lights rivalling Times Sq. has always been entirely different from lush, more genteel surroundings of resort hotels. Dice tables in some downtown casinos set a dime minimum, take only $100 limit per toss. Larger halls — Golden Nugget, Horseshoe, Pioneer — will go for $500 bets, and Horseshoe has been known to go $1,000. Human swarm along the street and in many spots is made up of the flotsam and jetsam of bumbling winos, straggly bearded prospectors, businessmen, itinerant and transient gamblers, sharpies, procurers, ex-cons, hoodlums, system men rubbing elbows with tourists from every part of the country, erstwhile elegants, refugees from the plush hospices on the Strip, et al.

ceedings, declared that the Music Hall cast was organized not with the help of Dunn, but in spite of him. "If he wants 10 lessons on how to organize, tell him to come around to see us—we'll give it to him. We resent his taking credit for organization."

Thompson then started to give a program of what should be done before Dunn's resignation is accepted. He was then told that it had been accepted.

Two-Way Battle

Thompson stated that, on several occasions, they not only had to fight management but the AGVA as well. Walden cited a series of events which he stated differed from Dunn's version. One of the primary points in the program, for the Hall cast, was inclusion of a clause which would prohibit management from cutting down the size of the organization. Dunn was also chastised for attempting to conclude agreements without consulting the cast.

In rebuttal, Dunn stated that the task of organizing the Music Hall represented one of the most gigantic jobs of smoking out ever done in the union's history. He declared that whenever organizers since 1942 had attempted to approach Music Hall members, they had refused to talk or aid in any way. Consequently, he started to negotiate with Russell Downing, MH exec veepee, and deliberately started off with one of the worst contracts ever negotiated, in the hope that the cast would wake up and do something. When they started to organize, Dunn said, his strategy worked.

Dunn said he had protected the cast from walking out in a manner that would have cut off union support, and his conduct in the case was such that it was the start of what will result in a contract. Dunn felt that extra-high wages would cause the Hall to reduce the size of the cast.

Included in the Music Hall representation were Maxine Walde, Elizabeth Gillette, Ruth Feldman, Tish McLeod and George Robison.

Committee stated that although negotiations started off badly, they were at this point satisfied with the conduct of Vic Connors who is currently doing the dickering.

AGVA Insurance

administration has increased the organization's expenses with no return to the union. He recalled that the program was under scrutiny by the N. Y. State Dept. of Insurance but that no ruling as to its legality had yet been made. Major question with the Insurance Dept. is whether Adler was legally licensed as a N. Y. state broker. Katz also cast doubt on whether the full program could stand court scrutiny because the insurance setup was allegedly entered into at a time when Adler had not held a license. Katz asserted that monthly premiums have been running as high as $100,000, with the broker's share 30%.

Later in the day, board and attorneys extracted a promise from Donovan that Adler would forget the 15-year deal, but asked that in light of the broker's losses, he be given a term until 1960 in order to realize a profit commensurate with his efforts. He also suggested that the board order all "incentive" payments be made to AGVA instead of to individual organizers.

Also under discussion was the problem of Philly organizer Dick Jones who has been under attack in the courts on the validity of having organizers act as premium collectors. In Pennsylvania, for instance, such persons must be licensed by the state.

Saranac Lake

By Happy Benway

Saranac Lake, N. Y., Jan. 15.

The new year started off with a bang at Will Rogers Hospital, first all-patient show being produced. It proved to be one of the best offerings ever witnessed at the institution. It was written by Grace Davidson and produced by Marion Powers, and in the cast were Shirley Handler, Walter Romanik, Jeanne Romer, Buddy Magni and Don Wright, with added specialties by Bob Coffey and Renato.

Adele Elowis Turell in from N. Y. to chat with Pearl (Loew) Grossman, who is now enjoying an up for pictures while on observation and showing top progress.

All elated is S. Coleman Houff, skedded for the thoracoplasty operation this week. Ditto for Audrey Lumpkin, at a later date.

Friends of the late William Morris, Sr., got together and organized a William Morris Fund to be used to expand the Adirondack collection in the Saranac Lake Library. Exhibit will be augmented from time to time with the upkeep to be taken care of from the fund. William Morris, Jr., recently visited the exhibit and said, "It will not only bring scholars and historians, but it will make Saranac Lake widely known in new circles."

Helen Baugh, of the Washington, D.C., Warner Bros. staff, registered during the holidays for the regular observation period.

A carnation to boniface Mose LaFountain of Durgan's nitery for sending an extra-good show to entertain the patients at the Will Rogers. Larry Day's emcee work was a classic. Howard the magician was good, as was Carol Darling and Lillie Dow, dancers. George Galaderi was on piano for the acts, while Ruby Warren & His Gay Amigos furnished the music between acts. "We The Patients" thrive on things like this—a tonic for all of us.

Joe E.'s Vogue B.O. Cues Cleve. Names

Cleveland, Jan. 15.

Joe E. Lewis, making his first Cleveland appearance in a downtown hotel nitery, last Thursday (10) built up a terrific advance sale that had all the Hollenden Vogue Room's tables sold out for his nine-day stand.

Top cover charge of $2.50 (weekends) was installed for visit of comedian, reportedly drawing down $5,500. Recently taken over by new combine of owners, with Bob Joyce as manager and co-partner, the Hollenden also has inked Georgia Gibbs for two frames beginning Jan. 21.

Another spot to jump into name acts is Skybar Club via the bringing in of George Shearing's quintet at $3,000 for six days starting today (Tues.). M-G-M Records' pianist appeared here in pop concert with Billy Eckstine in mid-November but was hit by a traffic-stopping blizzard. Following Shearing, the spot's operators, Phil Basch and Earon Rein, are set with Dave Brubeck's quartet Jan. 21.

Chi Cops Shutter Strips on License Arrears; Boston Lifts Suspensions

Chicago, Jan. 15.

Chicago police cracked down on near northside strip joints last week, closing five spots. However, move was due not to complaints of lewd shows or "mixing" but to lack of 1952 entertainment licenses. Clubs were Silver Frolics, Playhouse, McGovern's Liberty Inn, Gayety Cage, and Charm Club. It's expected that owners will come up with the dough during the 10-day grace period, but it was pointed out that no entertainment could go on until the spots got permits.

Near westside spots also went periodic "cleanup" for the furniture conventioneers, with squads of cops investigating the shows.

Hub Spots Reopen

Boston, Jan. 15.

Flurry of suspensions of entertainment licenses at local bistros which followed on heels of Archbishop Cushing's recent blast at the "vile, iniquitous and immoral" performances common at Hub niteries, faded last week with majority of shuttered spots allowed to reopen. Public hearings were set for offending spots and with no dissenters appearing at the sessions, licensing board had no alternative but to lift the suspensions. Operators were given stern warnings, however, that conditions must be sapolioed, or else, with cafes closely supervised by police.

Only spot remaining shuttered is the College Inn, main target of prelate's blast, with bonifaces voluntarily relinquishing license for 30-day period. Owners plan to reopen the nitery after the first of February, but will revamp the type of entertainment, scuttling the femme impersonator policy, which formerly comprised the bulk of the floorshow, for more conventional type.

Trinder's Music Hall Show on 6-Wk. Canadian Tour Via Variety Clubs

Toronto, Jan. 15

Tommy Trinder, British comedian, will head his "Royal Command Music Hall Varieties" on a six-week Canadian tour, sponsored by Toronto Variety Club. All profits from the cross-country tour will go for the expansion of Variety Village, vocational training school for crippled youngsters, pet project of the Variety Club Tent here.

Tour opens Feb. 11 with a week's engagement at the Royal Alexandra here, and a score of cities will then be visited in the next five weeks, this taking the British unit out to the Coast for a series of split-weeks and one-nighters in theatres or auditoriums. Top will be $3. It has the full support of the Odeon and Famous Players (Canadian) circuits with managers of both in duplicating situations staging campaigns to insure the success of various dates. All houses of both chains, for instance, will run trailers 10 days in advance, 60 being donated by Associated Screen News. All theatres will also have special lobby displays even when on an engagement at an otherwise rival house.

Whole tour is under the direction of Ernest M. Rawley, including the routing. Rawley is recent seasons brought over British vaude troupes headed by George Formby and Norman Evans for trans-Canada tours and is responsible for getting Tommy Trinder over for his first Canadian visit.

In addition to Trinder, his "Royal Command Music Hall Varieties" for this tour will include Josef Locke, Irish tenor; Alan and Blanche Lund, Canadian-born dance team which was in Trinder's London revue, "Fancy Free," now closed; Ray Overbury and Suzette, the Three Hellos, and Elkins Sisters.

Susan Miller's Brit. Dates

Susan Miller has been signed for the Astor and Colony restaurants, London, starting Feb. 11.

Hollywood, Jan. 15.

Ed Lowry, Coast manager of USO-Camp Shows, issued a call for 100 thesps, singers and musicians for overseas work on salary basis.

It will require at least 100 artists, Lowry said, to organize units for performances at bases and hospitals in Japan, Korea and Alaska sectors.

Orchid, Shamrock, Posy: They All Look Good On Soph for Her Birthday

In a business—show biz, that is—where, despite some surface evidence to the contrary, good will among the admixture of races and religions is a very living thing, it was fitting that Sophie Tucker's birthday should be celebrated at a place called the Shamrock Hotel. That's of course the fabulous spot in Houston built and bonifaced by Glenn McCarthy, and it was at that inn's Emerald Room where Miss Tucker filled a New Year's stand.

It was all tied up on a transcribed radio broadcast last week (12) called "Saturday at the Shamrock" in a halfhour job over ABC. Presumably the natal date was as per program beaming on Jan. 12, but if not, the point is relatively unimportant. What's important was the auspices, plus the fine air of cheerfulness and camaraderie pinpointed at one queensize performer whom time apparently will not stop, as it may take something a lot bigger to still the voice and works of a Tucker.

Since it's nice when a celebration has celebrants, this was taken care of via recorded kudos and kibitzings from personalities elsewhere, mostly Hollywood. For instance, the Coastal contributions were made by George Jessel, Danny Kaye, Eddie Cantor, Jimmy Durante, Ed Wynn, et al. A lot of sentiment there, plus a lot of rubbing. Jessel did his best to floor Miss Tucker on the "age"-old question, but the Red Hot Mama wouldn't retreat from female privilege. Joe E. Lewis wired her that she was still going strong during the McKinley Administration.

Jack Benny spouted a deliberately corny poem, winding up with "regards to Ted Shapiro." Latter is himself marking his 30th season with the star, as against Soph's 50th anni. It was a good cue for a vocal (by Ralph Anthony) of Shapiro's "A Handful of Stars" cleffing.

Unheard but very much in evidence was Groucho Marx, whose telegram thanked Miss Tucker "for keeping sex alive in America." A very personal note was introduced by the quickie reminiscences of Paul Whiteman, who was cut in from Philly.

Possibly the high point could be claimed by a Hollywood-originated voice, strictly out of character and not readily identifiable. He suggested that Miss Tucker go behind the Iron Curtain, start singing, and the Curtain would be raised immediately. The voice signed off as Ed Wynn.

The one sour note was Miss Tucker's being cued about her w.k. charitable efforts. These should have been described in her behalf instead. Just the same, the singer's observation that she hopes to make the $1,000,000 mark on the charity graph got her a little off the hook (she's in the 650G class now by her own admission).

The finis was almost purely for show bizzers. From Saranac Lake, N. Y., where, among other places, her late husband is a deeply-etched legend, Mrs. William Morris, Sr., said hello to Soph for herself and the patients and the Variety Clubs of America. (Incidentally, word from Saranac is that friends of the Morrises here have organized a William Morris Fund to expand the Adirondack collection at the Lake library. William Morris, Jr. on a recent visit to the exhibition, characterized it as an aid to scholars.)

After Miss Tucker's talk-song on "Life Is a Wonderful Thing" she didn't pull any surprise. She just got in there and belted away at "Some of These Days." The Shamrock talent (also McCarthy) helped her launch another year. After 50 years as a performer the next half hundred ought to be a breeze.

Named AGVA Alternate On Coast Board, Femme Rep Raps Rio and Quits

Hollywood, Jan. 15.

After a hectic membership session during which toppers of the American Guild of Variety Artists roasted two femme reps on Television Authority's board for supporting a TVA-AFRA merger, AGVA elected a new board, with one of the reps involved being named as alternate, only to announce her resignation.

Delores Crane, who with Kay Boley was AGVA rep on TVA, says her resignation is in protest against the way the session was conducted by AGVA Coast Chief Eddio Rio, attorney Morton Harper and chairman Rex Weber. She accused Weber of not giving them time to answer the various allegations, charged him with filibustering "to make us look ridiculous," and termed his and Rio's actions "dictatorial."

Rio, on the other hand, declared that the two had been named to the TVA board not only as TVA reps but "to protect variety performers at all times." He said he didn't think they did this when they defied AGVA policy in N. Y. to vote in favor of TVA-AFRA merger.

After the heated verbal exchange, membership got around to electing as exec board members Kay Deslys, Ben McAttee, Harry Kahne, George Riley, Harry Rose, Larry Rio, and Eddie Emerson, and as alternates Byron Milligan, Buddy Ray, Jimmy Val Grey, George West, Mickey Stewart, Gloria Dea and Miss Crane.

Chez Paree, Chi

Chicago, Jan. 11.

Ames Bros. (4), Al Bernie, Grace & Nikko, Johnny Martin, Chez Adorables (8), Cee Davidson Orch (8); $3.50 minimum, $1 cover.

It's an unusual twist for the management here to bring in a quartet as headliner, especially after they had just finished a theatre run in town. However, from opening-night indications, move was a smart one. Figuring that vaude house patrons and bistro attendees are not the same fodder, Chez should do okay biz with this bill for next three weeks.

Ames Bros., currently riding high on labels, are a better bet for supper clubs than theatres. Here their antics punch over sharper and their songs project more. After special intro based on "Lonesome Road" they yodel their current bestseller, "Undecided" and then go into another spiritual, "Noah's Ark," which serves as a vehicle for the antics of Vic, tenor.

"Clancy Lower's the Boom," continues the pattern. It's not until "Because" that group reverts back to straight singing. Bass (Joe) steps forward to intone "Old Man River," a bit overdone, but audience likes it nonetheless. Quartet get together for takeoffs on disk artists of the day with some amusing and accurate carbonings for sock closer.

Al Bernie, while not deserting his imitations, has added a lot more to his routines, weaving most of his material in songs. His quips are funny and his Cantor and Jolson, especially the latter, are meat for this nitery. His English and Brooklyn types, while not new, are done well. There's little letup from all this silliness and comic gets off strongly after chanting two specials.

Grace & Nikko really maul each other in their dance satires. Male takes some punishment, being doused with aqua and pummelled as he tries to explain in accented English the woes of being a dancer. Best of the three numbers is last, a non-Jack Cole takeoff on Hindu terpers.

Johnny Martin is okay as emcee and production singer and the Arden-Fletcher line retains the terps from the previous show but not showing much improvement. Cee Davidson does a noble job with his small band fronting for show and dansapation. Zabe.

Flamingo, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, Jan. 10.

Olsen & Johnson "Hellzapoppin' Revue," with Tessie O'Shea, Marty May, The Konyots (2), J. C. Olsen, June Johnson, Maurice Millard, Billy Kaye, Mighty Atoms (3); N. T. G. Calendar Girls (12), Michael Edwards, Will Osborne Orch (10); no cover or minimum.

Three years have elapsed since Olsen & Johnson unzippered their first "Hellzapoppin' Revue" before Vegas audiences. Returning to the same room where earlier triumphs were recorded, pair pop fine vintage stuff from same bottle with same level. However, everything that pours forth is in the best tradition of typical O. & J. madhouse corn—and likelihood of the Flamingo Room's suffering from lack of biz seems remote.

From opening bit, emaciated J. C. Olsen's mournful piping of "End of a Perfect Day," through just about every phase of madhouse razzle-dazzle, the slam-bang show doesn't let up.

Highlights of the hour-plus revue, are, in order of appearance, Konyots, Marty May, June Johnson, all sketches with Chick Johnson, Tessie O'Shea, and gimmicks perpetrated upon delighted tablesitters.

Konyots, with deliberate slow-motion Apache knockabouts, tickle with their fierce concentration. Marty May makes first appearance in courtroom bit with Olsen & Johnson, breaking up house with his swishantics. During his own spot, he reaches heights with hilarious miming of different types of singers. Later, teamed with Johnson, he intones "Flower Song" to make showstopping sketch. Although aimless, bit nevertheless pulls universal yocks.

British musichall thrush Tessie O'Shea actively engages in roundelays—"Big Moments in Music," "Two Ton Tessie," "Can't Keep the Man You Love"—grabbing mitts with terp exhibs.

June Johnson gets off with plenty of fire during gab duet with pere, and romping in farce bedroom pajama breakup while line cavorts. Olsen, who has to take it easy because of gams broken couple seasons ago, acts as proscenium narrator, guiding his maelstrom into its vortex.

Various and several sight gags use Billy Kaye, Maurice Millard, Mighty Atoms and Chickie Johnson. Audience gets a chance to participate when Olsen ships house line chicks amongst tables to grab males. Corny polka puts mixup onstage with change of coats, partners, etc., for plenty yocks. Another solid come-on is gifting to tablers of ridiculous objects named as they conclude doggerels.

Entrance of vet comic Johnson upon any scene is signal for whoops and hollers, as he invariably captures o.o.'s with expressive mugging. Both O. & J. bring package to finale with sentimental toast, neat touch after bursting their laugh-explosions without letup.

N.T.G. Calendar Girls manage to prance okay amidst the fireworks, aided by Michael Edward's warbling. Grueling score with cues by the dozen is handled expertly by Will Osborne and his philharmonics. Will.

Town Casino, Buffalo

Buffalo, Jan. 11.

Bobby Lucas, Four Aces, Roseanne, Eddie Carson, Curtis & Gilbert, Hermanos Williams Trio, Moe Balsom's Band, Tic Toc Timers; no cover or minimum.

This 105-minute low-budget show pays off in high entertainment values. It packs as much amusement as the average patron can take at a sitting. The Casino with its "Canadian money at par" plug continues to draw substantial Maple Leaf contingents, the number of across-the-border parties and visitors making up a large part of the draw. The cuisine is high in quality and the combo of stage and table fare is the best buy entertainment-wise in this neck of the woods.

Considering the size of the room (over 1,000 capacity), the number of backstage, frontstage, bar restaurant, kitchen and other employees required for the operation, the spot, with its 40 weeks a year of operation, stands out as one of the most important of its kind anywhere.

This show features Bobby Lucas (New Acts) and the Four Aces. The Aces' Decca rep has just begun to seep through here. Quartet's performance is a tribute to hard work. Their vocal quality seems hardly more than average, but the style and manner of its projection is what makes it click. The boys, by good dressing and some stylized histrionics, walk off with heavy salvos.

Rosanne offers some dance interpretations and Curtis & Gilbert hit for laughs with their travesties on radio. Eddie Carson's ventro routine with a cute dummy is above par, particularly his four-voice dialog bit. The Hermanos Williams Trio of acro dancers and the house line of Lindsey Lovelies lend tone to the show, as does Lenny Page, the perennial emcee.

Three shows are spotted nightly with continuous dancing interimmed. The Merry-Go-Round stage bar in the cocktail lounge has Joyce, Patti, Helen, Pat, and Skinner & Larry Pirrone in vocal and instrumental interludes. Burton.

Bagatelle, London

London, Jan. 8.

Joan Heal, Edmundo Ros Rhumba Band, Arnold Bailey & Swingtet; $5.50 minimum.

Joan Heal, current in one of the West End hit revues, has all the potentialities of a strong cabaret attraction. Gal has a forceful personality, a dominating style and a sharp-edged technique in handling a lyric. Despite these plus qualities, her stint fails to measure up to expectations.

Her prime weakness is in choice of material, and she is running the danger of type-casting herself for the more boisterous type of lyric. Apparently aware that her material is not up to standard, Miss Heal overstrains for effect. She tries to put too much into each song, instead of giving the impression of an effortless style.

Throughout the routine, accent is on the vigorous type of comedy number, with only rare exceptions to vary the tempo. Her opener, "Punctuality," which parodies a song from one of the local hit musicals, appropriate enough, but in her rendition of "I'm the Quiet Type," she proves herself to be anything but that. The pitch is kept up with her next lyric, "Why Don't You," although she changes style, if not material, in a Victorian song. A particularly fiendish lyric on baby-sitting, and a somewhat out of key sentimental offering wind a disappointing act.

The Edmundo Ros outfit continues to be one of the top lures at this Mayfair cafe. Backgrounding by the Arnold Bailey combo with Burt Rhodes at the keyboard is up to standard. Myro.

Cafe Society Dtn., N. Y.

Josh White, Gigi Durston; Claude Hopkins Orch (4); $2.50 minimum weekends.

Folk balladeer Josh White is one of the most consistent draws in this Greenwich Village spot and needs little support when he's headlining. He's currently back at Cafe Society Downtown after completing another of his European tours.

White is an impressive stylist with folk and blues numbers, exploiting a small-range voice with unusual coloring and accomping himself with superb guitar technique. For his current stand, White is presenting a standard repertory of familiar tunes in addition to several fresher items. White would do well to give greater accent to the newer tunes since his workover of such standbys as "The Lass With the Delicate Air" has lost some of its savor with the passing years. It's still a firstrate songalong, however, and White clicks strongly.

Gigi Durston, only other turn on the bill, registers moderately with a brace of standard ballads. Miss Durston has an okay voice, but she fails to project with any distinctive style. Her mike style, moreover, is unfinished, marring her delivery with a limited number of artificial and awkward arm gestures.

The Claude Hopkins combo of piano, drums, bass and reed man scores with some nifty jazz sounds interpolated between the vocalists. It's hep stuff geared for the more progressive music devotees without getting too noisy or boppy. Herm.

Chez Paree, Montreal

Montreal, Jan. 12.

Rachel Carlay, Raye & Naldi, Wally Aspell, Boots McKenna Line (7), Palm de Luca Orch (8), Peter Barry Quartet; 85c admission.

From out of nowhere, Rachel Carlay returns to Montreal after a 12-year break. Despite the mitting she receives nightly from the older element loaded mostly with nostalgia, she shoulda stood in the opera biz and skipped the cafe trade.

Making her entrance from the back of the room with a voice guaranteed to keep everyone awake, Miss Carlay proceeds to treat such numbers as "Domino" and "One Night of Love" as though they were cleffed by Wagner and this were a date at the Met. Even "La Vie En Rose" and "C'est Si Bon" come in for the treatment as Miss Carlay bravely runs through the scales and the languages. There is little change of pace and except a few routine gestures and much eye-rolling, everything is handled about the same.

Opening half of this two-act bill is the superb hoofing of Mary Raye & Mario Naldi who prove conclusively that ballroom dancing can be original and something more than just "filler" before the main event. On night reviewed, team did six numbers, drawing spontaneous applause throughout, a thing seldom heard in this room.

Using the simplest of background music, team put the emphasis on their terping and came through, particularly in the "Begin the Beguine" number, with some of the best lifts and spins seen to date in this town.

The McKenna routines are much improved over past offerings, with the girls doing three new numbers boosted by the baritoning of Wally Aspell, a youngster of great promise in this type of layout. The Palm de Luca band does show music and cuts up the dance moments with the Peter Barry combo. Newt.

Desert Inn, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, Jan. 9.

Rosalind Courtright, Bobby Sargent, Colstons (2), Alan Gilbert, Arden-Fletcher Dancers (8), Carlton Hayes Orch (11); no cover or minimum.

Chantoosie Rosalind Courtright brings a new chapter into Painted Desert Room following holiday bubble, which will be marked by only medium biz. Songstint is diverting, but hasn't the potency for top casino baiting. Miss Courtright has following in eastern haunts, hotels, intime supper clubs et al. Appeal, however, is limited to gambling crowd here. Name of Bobby Sargent, youthful comedian from midwest and east, also pulls blank locally insofar as marquee dynamite is concerned.

Miss Courtright turns in melodic job of putting over ballads, mountain plaints (with credit to Dorothy Shay), and showtunes. From ringside stroll purring "Getting to Know You," thrush works over "Once," "When the West Was What It Was," "Granada," trilogy from "King and I," "Jubilee," "Vivre la Vie," and the amusing "Adelaide's Lament" for good exit mitts.

Unusual appearance of Bobby Sargent would have tablers thinking the lad might be a bobbysoxer's balladeer. He knowingly gets down to funny biz, straightaway belting over characterizations of Lithuanian hunky, mug nitery op with fractured Eng., and overlong impresh of Groucho. Brightens up entire frame with above standard jokes, dialecting and phiz contorts to earn yocks and kudos.

Colstons thumb noses at serioso ballroomers in knockout terps. Insertion of slapstick stuff grabs titters, with femme of brother and sister act pulling frustrated, mancrazy attitudes. Over shoulder flips at windup are enough to solicit exit hubbub.

Arden-Fletcher chicks look sleek in waving opener, oddly entitled "Goodbye." Holdover "Mambo" is exciting rhythmic surge with lookers in scarlet getups. Alan Gilbert is capable warbler and skipper. Carlton Hayes batons tooters to make fine music blend. Will.

Hotel Radisson, Mpls.

(FLAME ROOM)

Minneapolis, Jan. 12.

Carl Brisson (2), Arthur Ravel Orch (7); $1.50 $2.50-$3.50 minimum.

For the past six years, Carl Brisson's annual visits to this chi chi room have always been one of the season's top events. Current seventh engagement is no exception. Cafe society again is packing this smart bistro to capacity.

The suave fave comes in this time with a different songalog but tossing in some of the perennials demanded from him. Again he gilds his offerings with that tremendous showmanship which has helped to establish him as a topper. He again proves a superb dramatic actor, a clever comedian and singer.

Once more Brisson excites admiration by his appearance, the effective manner in which he lights his act, his skillful routining and shrewd pieces of business to enhance his stature as a performer. As before, he communicates his good humor, genialty and exuberance to his audience. The result is heaps of fun and excursions into romance, punctuated by customer sighs or laughs as he relates his song-stories of lovelorn and sly maidens.

New numbers for him in this round include a "King and I" medley; "Empty Chair," a ballad of a missing face in a familiar place; "God's Most Ingenious Machine," a spiritual anent the power within a human being; "Give Me Your Hand," an Australian ditty; a "Song of Norway" medley in Norwegian, very apropos in this community, and an original version of "Little Man, You Had a Busy Day." Also among his generous outpouring are "Romance in Vienna," "Nice to Be Nice to Your Neighbor," the always demanded "A Pink Cocktail for a Blue Lady," "Oh, You Beautiful Doll;" the great favorite, "Last Time I Saw Paris" and "All of a Sudden My Heart Sings." The customers were clamoring for more at the finish.

Brisson receives fine support from his own accompanist, Paul Berlin, and from the capable Arthur Ravel orch which also does a neat job for guest dancing. Rees.

Ritz Carlton, Montreal

(RITZ CAFE)

Montreal, Jan. 12.

Helene Francois, with Johnny Gallant; Joe Settano Trio; $1.-$1.50 cover.

Since her appearance last May in this room, Helene Francois shows much improvement in general thrushing and presentation but not much change in her songalog. However, the off-the-cob and hackneyed tunes such as "Domino" and "C'est Si Bon," et al., seem to be what the clientele of this boite want, and Miss Francois is the gal to give it to them, with extras.

Still sporting a socko collection of gowns that maintain interest at all times, this chirper has developed a much easier approach to her audience and generates more warmth and personality during songfest than on previous viewing. Mixing the Gallic items with an occasional English fave, gal did eight-plus numbers on night caught, to plenty of mitting. Chirper still has a few stylized gestures that tend to flatten some offerings. A little more relaxed patter between songs would soften the abrupt, casual intros now being used.

House pianist Johnny Gallant does well with the Francois sessions and interlude music, with the Settano Trio supplying okay terp stanzas. Newt.

Mocambo, H'wood

Hollywood, Jan. 9.

Fran Warren, Eddie Oliver Orch (8); $1.50, $2 covers.

Fran Warren has been merely a disk name to the Coast for a considerable period. Her local bow after a pair of previous cancellations should stir interest for her in other quarters. Certainly, it will mean something to the Mocambo. Building word of mouth indicates a brisk fortnight in the offing.

Red-haired chirp is concentrating more on singing than on styling these days, but her stint retains enough individuality to give added impact to the repertoire. It's a thrushing stint all the way with no time wasted in idle chatter; 10 songs in 21 minutes is par for the course with her.

Turn is well-paced to go from ballad to bounce and it's all done with an easy assurance. Offerings include a touching version of "Over the Rainbow" and a couple of numbers from "Finian's Rainbow," musicomedy she successfully essayed last summer in the east. Others that earn plaudits are "Love You Much Too Much," "This Is Where Love Walked In" and "I Envy Everyone." Wisely, her "Sunday Kind of Love" disk click is kept for encore purposes to have the regular portion of her turn moving swiftly.

El Rancho, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, Jan. 9.

Yma Sumac, Blackburn Twins & Pam Cavan, Angos Perez, Moises Vivanco, Alex Alexander, June Starr, Jim Stuart, Ted Fio Rito Orch (10); no cover or minimum.

Incredible vocalistics of stylist Yma Sumac are bound to cause plenty buzz as the spectacular four-octave range is displayed in many Inca showpieces. Although wane of biz following holidays might cause midweek gaps, full two-frame average grosses will be okay at El Rancho Vegas.

Booking of Peruvian thrush is unusual for such surroundings. Because of exotic appearance, slightly standoffish attitude and undeniable vocal artistry, Miss Sumac will have gambling trade assenting with ovations. During both opening dinner and late shows caught, attention was rapt to pin-drop concentration.

Themed by offstage chanting, Miss Sumac appears in arresting garb for "Bride of the Sun God," first of entire repertoire composed by husband Moises Vivanco, "Tumpa" has dramatic cadences typifying on earthquake. Accomped by Vivanco's guitar, thrush trills "Birds" with eerie sounds, flute quality. Flaunted four-octave span is shown to great advantage by "Inca Love Song," followed by the volatile "Malumbo." Resultant kudos serve as recall, following which she reprises w.k. disk from Capitol album, "Hymn to the Sun," aided by expert Vivanco guitaring.

Blackburn Twins & Pam Cavan cavort for solid deuce. Act once more accent terps, with tiny blonde a refreshing foil to twins' amusing turns. Sex impact has been added to further rope interest—factor missing in previous Blackburn escapades. Two lookalikes romp on for setup "Maybe You're Me," segueing into the neat "Mirror" motions.

After intro, Miss Cavan brightly etches "Cheek to Cheek" in song, to be joined by partners in well-timed "Walkin' My Baby Back Home." Insertion of low-down "One Man Woman" with spicy implications has gal centre of attention. Cavalcade of pic characters lifts "Movies Are Better Than Ever" into top visual category, with extra-kinetic quality of lightly chirped and terped "Once In Love With Pamela" taking trio off to rousing mitts.

Angos Perez, tiny six-year-old, becomes focal point in curtain-raiser. "Quiz kid" routine has the Austrian born prodigy in sesh that emerges a trifle automatic. Works with mother following rapid run-down of Presidents to name capitals of states, issue linguistics. Stands at keyboard for brief Mozart "Minuet," after which a definite lift is felt when the moppet flits about in tapterps. Good hoofing and pronounced feeling carry over to make positive clincher.

Given most difficult chore in months, Fio Rito musicians come through with flying colors on Sumacs backgrounding. Incadenzas are hightened by exciting rhythms of onstage drummer working in costume, plus conducting of Alex Alexander and 88ing of June Starr. Will.

Palmer House, Chi
(EMPIRE ROOM)

Chicago, Jan. 10.

Evelyn Knight, Robert Maxwell, Peggy Ryan & Ray McDonald, Merriel Abbott Dancers (8), Eddie O'Neal Orch (12); $3.50 minimum, $1 cover.

Merriel Abbott, room producer, has temporarily abandoned the revue idea which was such a success here for the past four months. She'll revive it next fall, but meantime the Empire reverts to former star policy with Billy De Wolfe and Margaret Phelan in the next show, Mimi Benzell in March, Kay Thompson and Williams Bros. in April, and Dorothy Shay in May.

Evelyn Knight, now old standby here, is veering away from her tricky novelty tunes, which were hits several years ago, although retaining special-material songs. Blonde, beautifully gowned, steams out with fast "Casey Jones" and then does a special about bistro patrons that finds favor.

Her first ballad "Tenderly" which, while well received, doesn't have the impact of her novelty, "Grandfather's Clock." Singer chides Texas and follows with "St. Louis Woman," which is a bit overstylized. She does a medley of her disk clicks and then has a brawl with members of the band in her rendition of "Snowflakes." Lass gets a fine mitt.

Robert Maxwell hasn't been around these parts for a few years. Young harpist makes a deep impression on first-nighters with his sock jazz harp stint. After giving the strings a workout with "Smoke Gets in Your Eyes" and "Who," he switches to the classics with "Clair De Lune," done in a baby blue spot for lush effect. His Nickelodeon-type versions of "I'm Looking Over a Four Leaf Clover" and "Oh, Solo, Mio" are amusing and his rapid plucking of "Hungarian Rhapsody" gets close attention, but there's one garish passage in swing that could be eliminated. Musician closes with a fiery "Cumana."

Peggy Ryan & Ray McDonald, youthful song and dance team, get across as much on their antics as their talents—and talent-wise they have plenty. Femme is harum-scarum type who might be toned down for better overall delivery. Pair get off "Old Soft Shoe" and then do some cute challenge stunts, depicting styles of Pat Rooney, Bill Robinson and Eleanor Powell. There's a clever closer in Vernon & Irene Castle prototype in Bunny Hop.

Merriel Abbott line returns after four-month tour to score with two numbers. Eight girls seem to do the work of 12, doubling on specialties. Eddie O'Neal romps through the score easily, and does double work this revue, acting as Miss Knights' accompanist. Dance sessions keep the floor crowded.

Zabe.

Last Frontier, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, Jan. 11.

Carmen Cavallaro, Deep River Boys (5), Gene Nash, Jean Devlyn Girl Revue (9), Jerry Vaughn, Bob Millar Orch (11); no cover or minimum.

An altogether pleasant packet in the Ramona Room has the expressive 88ing of Carmen Cavallaro, harmonious warbling of Deep River Boys, plus nifty line numbers of Jean Devlyn Girl Revue to amuse dice-flippers. Biz should be moderate midweek, heavy on weekends.

Cavallaro contrasts with sometimes florid, sometimes easy keyboard etchings, with overall showmanly exposition. Grandiose "Jealousy" melts into impressionist "La Vie En Rose." Extraneous gab intros "Boogie," sequelled by neat contrasting touch on "Clair de Lune." Tablers go for this Cavallaro foray into the classics. Exiting Latintempo is whipped up in "Voodoo Moon," added rhythmic beats supplied by Cavallaro's baton, with Jerry Vaughn pounding Afro-Cuban tub. Request sesh pulls quartet of faves from ringsiders, "Warsaw Concerto," "12th St. Rag," "Rhapsody in Blue," and Cav "Polonaise" theme to lift applause meter over peak.

Deep River Boys chant varied mellifluent wares, beating off with stompy "Lucky Old Sun," and modulating into quiet "Sin." Novelty "Chicken Song" has tab-grabbers chuckling, and followup "Whiffenpoof Song" leading into nostalgia. Excitement is pitched during revivalist "Shadrach," contrasted by "Little Bit of Heaven." Humor once more gets light and polite treatment as combo chants "Mumbles." Ringside amble and journey through room while harmonizing "Nevertheless" wins big mitts for novel exit.

Jean Devlyn Girl Revue steps out from curtain spotting Gene Nash, lone male amongst covey of cute chicks, shouting "Get Happy." Line proceeds to take the lad's advice with brightly stepped terps aided by soloist Renee. Nash and gals return between Deep River Boys and Cavallaro to present one of their best flings in months. Minstrelsy gadabout has gorgeous Candyce King both in sexy vocal and pas de deux with Nash. Latter's "Ballin' the Jack" while Miss King chirps is standout.

Bob Millar orch frames entire musical mission with vitality.

Hotel Statler, D. C.
(EMBASSY ROOM)

Washington, Jan. 10.

Russell Swann, Hank Fort, Charlie Fisk Orch with Ginny Coon and Gene Canfield, Ted Alexander Quartet; $1.50, $2 covers.

Embassy Room offers a fast moving, laugh laden evening, with a little "Kefauver for President" tossed in as seasoning.

The Kefauver angle stems from hillbilly gal singer-composer Hank Fort, offering her latest opus, "The Long Tall Guy in the Coon-Skin Cap." On night caught, Senator and Mrs. Estes Kefauver were in the audience. They were given a sock welcome from tableholders as Miss Fort presented the several stanzas of her song, along the lines of this first one—"If there's more law and order, In each town on the U. S. Map, A major reason why is a Long Tall Guy, In the Coonskin Cap."

Miss Fort, an attractive, slightly gravel-voiced songstress out of Nashville, is a comer in the nitery circuit. She has a warm, easy manner which would stand her equally well in vaude houses, and presents a collection of self-written material. Described as a poor man's Dorothy Shay, there is considerably less sophistication and a lot more back country corn in Miss Fort's type of offering.

In addition to "Long, Tall Guy," she gets the crowd with such numbers as "Put Your Shoes On, Lucy," "Save Your Confederate Money Boys, (the South Shall Rise Again)," "I Didn't Know the Gun Was Loaded" and "We'll Confederate the Whole Darn 48."

For a warmup she has a "Howdy Do" number with aud participation on handclapping. She also gets the visitors working with her in "Sweetie Pie," In this one she has every man grab the hand of the woman nearest him to sing "sweetie pie," etc., at her.

Miss Fort works mostly with a mike on a long cable, wandering about the floor and joking with the customers. In one or two selections, however, she plays and sings at a grand piano.

Following her on the bill appears to be a rough job, but magician-comedian Russell Swann negotiates the chore easily and with complete confidence. He is back in the room after an absence of about a year. Act is very much the same, featuring the comic guillotine number in which he coaxes a man out of the audience to have his noggin lopped off. Act, dressed by a shapely femme assistant, has very fast pace and plenty of laughs, sending Swann off to sizzling returns. The Fisk and Ted Alexander units play for the dansapation, with Charlie Fisk also emceeing the acts. Lowe.

Bar of Music, H'wood
(FOLLOWUP)

Los Angeles, Jan. 3.

Long-time fave Arthur Lee Simpkins has taken over the top-billed spot here to start off the new year, and indications are business will continue to be brisk. Simpkins, with a steadily building following, is one of the few acts Bar of Music could bring in to keep the spot busy after the long-run mark established by Arthur Blake.

Sepia singer makes a good use of a fine dramatic tenor and a trick falsetto to earn hefty returns. Show-wise, he has skillfully paced his stint to run the gamut from pop to opera without a letup. Classical material includes such items as an aria from "Tosca"; pop stuff ranges from "Begin the Beguine" to a streamlined "Loch Lomond" that wins a ready response.

Holdover Helen Boice has sharpened her material to gain added attention. Such items as "No One Gave the Bride Away" and the derivative "Gotta Be Loved to Be Healthy" get an earthy treatment that wins the patrons easily, and she registers strongly in her 15-minute spot.

For the current layout, two-piano team of Felix DeCola & Benno Rubinyi has worked out a routine of classics from which pop tunes have been taken. It listens well. Dance stuff is hand'cd by the Johnnie David quintet. Kap.

Bellevue Casino, Mont'l
(FOLLOWUP)

Montreal, Jan. 12.

Two new entries, comedy-violinist Duke Dorell and acrocontortionists Willie & Jean Lambert fail to do much to the so-so layout currently on view at Bellevue Casino. A few shows such as this, despite the restrained budget during the holiday season, and the Bellevue's rep as the top showplace in town will take a beating.

The Kamarova productions lack the usual sparkle and a lengthy ballet sequence midway through offering is not exactly the kind of stuff that makes the regulars unfold their hands. However, on the credit side is the Armandis quintet which holds over and with precision tumbling and general acrobatics bring the show to a rousing finale. Big favorites in this room, the team (all men) could stay as a permanent part of the show without losing their wallop or appeal.

Terpster Gloria Gilbert, another repeater from the last revue, picks up a hefty reception for her toe work and multiple spins; Lewis Brooks and Lita Terris do v cal and emcee chores with little or no imagination, and dancers Olga Suarez and Bob DeVoye put the emphasis too heavily on the interpretive to be effective.

Duke Dorell's stint in next-to-closing draws yocks when he is hoking up a collection of violin gimmicks, but his gabbing between numbers and so-called comedy material cools out an otherwise okay novelty performance.

The Lamberts take opening slot and warm up the room with their sock acro and balancing efforts. Crowd-pleaser is femme half of duo who gives her partner fine support mainly because of a pair of strong but attractive gams which she uses to good advantage in their slow-motion lifts, etc.

Bix Belair's orch comes through in fine style even when mixing live music with the canned stuff in the ballet spectacle. The Frank Quinn trio fills the relief corner adequately. Newt.

Eddys', K. C.

Kansas City, Jan. 9.

Dave Barry, Leo Diamond, Tony DiPardo Orch (8); $1 cover.

In the post-Holiday stretch, Eddy's Baltimore Ave. restaurant has entered Dave Barry and Leo Diamond to fill the entertainment assignment. Two acts are new to K. C. and carry comparatively little marquee dressing, but the show they give out is good enough to satisfy customers once in the house and to spur some favorable talk among them. In 35 minutes, the display maintains a fairly lively pace and keeps the tableholders active.

Diamond has the opening spot, leading off with a number on his electronic harmonica, and switching to regular mouth harp for a fanciful "Jealousy." Then runs through a sequence of French flavored tunes before bringing out his gadget, a series of harmonicas mounted together for ready use. Back to a regular harp for an unusually good "Third Man Theme," and switches to the electromonica, of his own design, for "Sin" and "Waitin' for the Robert E. Lee."

For a lighter entry Diamond has a second invention, a tier of harmonicas rigged out with bells, clackers, horns, and whatnot, via which he gives a Spike Jones version of several tunes. His straight work is good, and his gadgets give an unusual twist, earning him a good mitt throughout.

Second half is taken by Barry in a round of sound effects gags, chatter, imitations and stunts. He is in from the Coast with a lineup of vocal gyrations, some of which he has done for films and network shows. He opens with the "Mr. Ripple" of the Durante show, and runs through Godfrey, Heatter, Winston Churchill and Sam Spade, gets into some politician types and winds with a straight vocal, likewise drawing good reaction.

O'Keefe's 'Concert'

New Orleans, Jan. 15.

Dennis O'Keefe essays the "one-man show" format next Monday (21) when he starts a four-week stint at the Civic Theatre, presenting the stint as prelude to house's regular offering. He's being given a free hand to work out any format he wants and will probably include a little singing, dancing, chatter and interview stuff.

Although O'Keefe was in vaude with his parents in an act tagged The Flanagans, venture marks his debut in "concert" stuff.

Music Hall, N. Y.

Leon Leonidoff presentation of "Star-Spangled," with Music Hall Symphony, Raymond Paige conducting; Corps de Ballet, choreography by Florence Rogge, solos by Patricia Bowman and Charles Laskey; Glee Club, Stanley Kimes, soloist; Rockettes, choreography by Russell Markert; lighting, Eugene Braun; sets, James Stewart Morcom; costumes, Frank Spencer; special lyrics, Albert Stillman. "The Greatest Show on Earth" (Par) reviewed in VARIETY Jan. 2, '51.

Radio City Music Hall's session this semester is by necessity a briefie because of the length of "The Greatest Show on Earth" pic. Outside acts are eschewed and the Hall is starring its own cast with its massive stage headlining.

Because of the brevity, outside talent isn't particularly missed. Whenever relief from the mass formations is needed, Patricia Bowman and Charles Laskey perform some tasty balleteering. The Corps de Ballet exercises to a collection of Chopin pieces is picturesque. The Florence Rogge choreography makes deft use of both the space and the dancers, and latter's efforts are amply appreciated.

The proceedings start in a sufficiently spectacular groove. The M. H. symph rising from the pit is transported to the near part of stage. The tricks that can be done with this acreage is always enough to cause the peasantry to gape and gasp. It's a show that never seems to lose its wonder.

Another major component is the Rockettes in a set of Russell Markert routines. The block-long line of cheesecake precisions out a mitt winning series of steps. The Glee Club similarly scores strongly with western themed tunes, Stanley Kimes fronting.

Layout is skillfully produced so that there's the customary amount of variety despite the lack of such acts. The tricky entrances of the various components make for considerable novelty.

Hall staff has come through with mucho showmanship for this session. Jose.

Capitol, Wash.

Washington, Jan. 13.

April Stevens, Joey Forman, Laurette & Clymer, Tien Tsi Lie Troupe (4); "Model and Marriage Broker" (20th).

This is a strictly routine layout but, despite lack of show-stopping moments, it clicks pleasantly. Chief attraction lies in fact that quartet of acts are all newcomers to Capitol stage.

Chantoosey April Stevens, whose sultry Victor recordings have won her jukebox attention, doesn't quite live up to the buildup. Despite a low cut black velvet gown, she fails to project across the footlights with the same sexy appeal so many admirers find in her recordings. Her mike approach is more self-conscious than provocative, though she gathers assurance as she goes along.

Miss Stevens tees off with a hit tune of the 20s, "I Love You is All I Can Say," and segues into "Give Me A Little Kiss," a tune for which her style is particularly unsuited. Hits her stride, however, with "You Gotta Know the Tricks of the Trade," a catchy tune with bright lyrics. At this point, pewholders get off their hands and start acting as though they're finally getting what they came for. "Don't Do It," a definitely adult number, gives gal a fine sendoff. Returns for the item that launched her into the bigtime, "I'm In Love Again," and is good for several curtain calls.

Joey Forman has an uneven routine of impressions, encased in an unnecessarily trite and maudlin Hollywood job-applicant background. Lad has an appealing personality and a nice, light satiric touch, but needs to step up pace. Goes through the standard takeoffs to nice results with gallery. Highlight of act, and a hep bit of headline capitalizing, is his return with impressions of the Kefauver crime hearings. His brief glimpse of Senator Kefauver suggests there should be more, with his southern drawl and easy personality a natural for the act. There's a good bit of Rudolph Halley—not quite up to par, but recognizable—and some comic glimpses of Frank Costello, plus a laugh provoking and very creditable takeoff on righteous Senator Tobey. It's a commentary of the times that the crowd welcomed this segment of act with all the enthusiasm once reserved to crooners and film stars.

Laurette & Clymer do okay with a series of comic terp impressions, combining pantomime with dance steps. Though their versi of a turn-of-the-century "lady and wolf" has much merit, with the usual nostalgic appeal of the old tunes and steps, it could be improved by cutting. Customers' reaction mild at show caught.

The Tien Tsi Lie Troupe does a hep job of curtain-raising with their fast routine of unusual and well executed acro stunts. Lowe.

Casino, Toronto

Toronto, Jan. 11.

Toni Arden, Calgary Bros., We Three, Ken Whitmer, Bernie George, Jimmy Cameron, Archie Stone House Orch; "The Strip" (M-G).

Toni Arden is a ladylike songstress who engagingly switches from whisper style to bounce. Brunet youngster is on her swift way up the ladder and will be crowding contemporary songbirds who are currently perching on the top rungs to varying degree.

From her restrained opening of "When You're Smiling," on through the working of the bouncy "You Got to Show Me" and a mood change to "Sorrento," Miss Arden consistently whams across to a begoff reception, this particularly climaxed by her "Lover" in initially tender style and then a bounce switch for a finale that has the customers pounding.

In addition to his headliner, Murray Little has whipped together a lusty 70-minute package that had every act scoring when caught. With house band on stage, and lending staunch selling support to the individual stints, plus the neat piloting of Jimmy Cameron as m.c., the We Three group, (George Floyd, Jack Timmers and Maggie Nelson) swiftly roll the proceedings underway with concerto taps, graceful waltz-time lifts, and a smash challenge finale. Then Bernie George for his celeb impressions, all over nicely on carbon effects; but he could cut out that finish before the mike in which he depicts the bombing of a city, complete with crashing planes and anti-aircraft defense. It's clever on technique but not amusing.

Ken Whitmer, with an assist from Kitty Marshall, has no trouble satisfying customers with his versatile musical switches from sax to clarinet, trumpet, stage band's drums, piano, violin, etc., plus a terrific "Sugar Blues" finish on the muted trumpet. Calgary Bros. also score on their slow motion drunk act and alley brawl, for well-disciplined coordination. Whole bill adds up to one of most evenly diversified wrap-ups seen here in several weeks. McStay.

Apollo, N. Y.

Dizzy Gillespie Orch (13), with Joe Carroll; Ralph & Lorraine, Jellyrool & Zuzu, The Cabineers (4), Ray Sneed, Clark Bros. (2); "Stampede" (Mono).

Standard acts in current sesh make up a mediocre bill in an erratic production. Show has a few high points, but the overload of routine stuff lulls the pewholders.

Headliner Dizzy Gillespie whips up most of the enthusiasm in a wild scat-bop set with his small combo. Comprised of three rhythm, a reed and the maestro on brass, the group clicks with "Swing Low, Sweet Cadillac," "The Nearness of You" and "Ooh Shoobie Doo." Jos Carroll's vocals on "Swing Low" and "Shoobie" are scatology at its best. Gillespie's big band, a pickup group comprised of three rhythm, six brass and four reed, back up the program nicely.

Another lift comes in the closing niche from the Clark Bros.' expert tapwork. The two boys run through some routine cleatwork, but their ease and speed make it a standout turn. Wind with acroterp stunts which although a standard tap team display, get a good mitt. Jellyroll & Zuzu fill the bill's comedy spot adequately, most of the yocks stemming from gal's grinds and bumps rather than the patter. Material is in the cliche guy-gal bickering groove and would do better with sharper lines and less slapstickery.

Ray Sneed, in an interpretive dance turn a la Paul Draper, is too stylized for this house. Sneed is an interesting dancer, but his 10-mi ute stint is too slowly paced for good results. He doesn't win aud until final stretch when he parodies the Applejack as it's danced in Sugar Hill, Savoy Ballroom in Atlanta, and at the Ballet Russe.

The Cabineers, a vocal quartet comprised of three guys and a gal, are only moderate in their songalog. Group looks good and has some okay vocal arrangements, but fails to project any excitement. Offer "While the Moon Was Mellow," "What's the Matter With You" and "Each Time" for a quick getaway. Ralph & Lorraine, white acro-terp team, are listed in New Acts. Gros.

Roxy, N. Y.

Alan Dale, Lew Parker (assisted by Zenia Banks), Lou Wills, Jr., Beatrice Kraft & Dancers (3), Joy Conley, John Tio, Roxyettes; "The Model and the Marriage Broker" (20th), reviewed in VARIETY Nov. 21, '51.

Following the holiday pyrotechnics, the current Roxy stageshow seems to be a letdown, both in the selection of acts and its presentation. On opening day there seemed to be some loose ends that worked against making this show into a cohesive unit. It's probable that after the first day's doctoring by the staff, this defect will have been eliminated.

Presentation has some difficulty getting started. Although Beatrice Kraft and a pair of boy dancers make a competent terp troupe, their stuff didn't have the usual punch. It might be that the Roxyettes' background with choreography too similar to the act took the starch out of this turn. The Kraft offerings are well-routined, but the applause was enough for just one bow.

Topliner Alan Dale makes a good impression on the crowd. The Roxy apparently is relying on record names to hypo admissions, and it's safe to assume that he adds some lustre to the b.o. Dale's pipings are good applause-provokers. His stage routine is okay and includes impressions of various singers. He's a good entertainer.

Lou Wills, Jr., with song assists by Joy Conley, hits a good stride. This dancer has a choice line of flips, nipups, etc. He delivers a briefie of strong diversion. Miss Conley's offerings help him atmospherically.

Lew Parker, who hasn't been on a local vaude stage for some time because of his preoccupation with video, didn't fortify himself with an act for his first recent trip to the boards. He didn't get rolling until late in his turn with his impressions of various types of diners. Even his bit with his wife, Zenia Banks, didn't have its usual effect in this large house.

Completing the act lineup is John Tio. This gabbing mynah exhausts its major impact in the first few minutes of the turn, when it's established that it can speak and whistle and offer some imitations. After that it's evident that the bird has to get a writer both for itself and its assistant.

Oriental, Chi

Chicago, Jan. 10.

De Santos Trio, Martin & Florenz, Joey Bishop, Eddy Howard, Brian Farnon Orch; "My Favorite Spy" (Par).

Management here continues to ride along with top disk personalities, this time Eddy Howard, whose "Sin" has been in or near No. 1 slot for months. Howard, no Johnny-come-lately in the singing ranks, is a relief from overanimated and psuedo-comedian crooners, and gathers applause as he sings each one of his past record hits.

There's no chatter or buildup, just straight singing, which registers with the sitters. Starts with his biggest click, "To Each His Own," and corrals some brisk mitting before he socks over "Sin" with the aid of unbilled duo.

Joey Bishop has changed his style with the brisk quips getting some fine chuckles. Wan-faced comic berates the influence of TV and utters a tirade against modern songs, getting off a creditable softshoe meantime. His impressions of Bette Davis and Ted Lewis are sharp and he has revived his Army routine number, one of his best frameworks of several years ago, for topical effect.

However, most of his applause is stolen from him by his three-year-old son, who does some fine facial squirms of Humphrey Bogart, Groucho Marx, and Jerry Lewis. Youngster is really at home on the stage.

Marti & Florenz have some clever marionettes; Carmen Miranda in a conga dance, a sad sack and tough sergeant hassle, and the inevitable Jimmy Durante. Latter comes off best with a real comic note of small poodle jumping out of toy piano as doll hits the keys. There's an encore interlude with a Dagmar creature that's a little rough but gets heavy laughs.

De Santos Trio, combo dancers and acro workers, would be at better advantage in a club. Here their slow tango and buildup doesn't get the score it should; it looks too easy. Lass, very decorative, does some neat terpery with the partners in between the flips and catches of males. There are a couple of beautiful half-twists and sensational crotch catch and rollover for finish, but patrons don't wake up in time, due to slow tempo.

Los Angeles, Jan. 10.

Josephine Baker, Pat Henning, Norman Brown, orch conducted by Fred Stamer; "Honeychile" (Rep).

The tremendous boxoffice response engendered by Josephine Baker on her first Coast date six months ago at RKO Hillstreet apparently will be equalled in this current stint at the larger L. A. Paramount. Word of mouth and the exuberance of repeat customers should turn the trick—even though the return visit isn't as rewarding as the initial stand.

It's still a socko bit of showmanship, but this time around Miss Baker works only with a local orch conducted by her musical director, Fred Stamer. The trio which she utilized in addition to the orch on her last stint is missing—and gone with it is some of the driving undercurrent that was noted then.

Large part of her material is reprised, including the "Begin the Beguine," "Night and Day" and "Solitude" medley that comprises bulk of her English-language stuff. Also heard again is "This is Happiness," Cubano item that gives her a chance to sell some stepping and intros her first wardrobe change. Still a designer's delight, she makes the most of the window dressing, making it a part of her talent.

With La Baker this time are comic Pat Henning and dancing drummer Norman Brown. Henning is an amiable clown who wins laughs with some confidential comedics and a takeoff on the impression stints of others. Brown displays some fancy tapping and Slingerland stuff although the drum session was spoiled at the first show when the electrician's failure to darken the entire stage weakened the luminous paint gimmick. Kap.

Chicago, Chi

Chicago, Jan. 11.

Saul Grauman & Co. (3), Bobby Winters, Bill Snyder, Pearl Bailey, Chicago Theatre Orch; "Double Dynamite" (RKO).

While this might lack the lustre of top record or video names, there are some real enjoyable moments here. Show, however, doesn't build too well until the last half, with the audience not waking up much before bill is over.

Saul Grauman and his two femmes, after a bit of hoke duelling, finally get down to the business of kicking the giant stairs to coax some tunes out of them. Long-time standard act might go over stronger with a more modern selection of songs, newest being "Bells of St. Mary." Bobby Winters, droll faced juggler, also would register much better in a slot further up, perhaps midst some orch number. Lad really has a comic puss and his nifty handling of tennis balls, Indian clubs and tambourines get him a nice mitt. Finale to "Yankee Doodle Dandy" has the plates spinning like flying saucers.

Bill Snyder, who also does an okay job as emcee while Louis Basil vacations, fills the third position with some facile fingering, which earns him a score. After "Hungarian Rhapsody" he paraphrases "Mary Had a Little Lamb" as the old and modern pianists would have done it, and then does some fancy cadenza work in a variation on "Minute Waltz." From the first chords of "Bewitched" applause breaks out and his new composition, "Flying Fingers," gets him off well.

Pearl Bailey fills not only the singing needs of this revue but the comedy elements. Lass has a natural wit and as much of her applause is derived from her chuckle provoking actions as her tune material. She interpolates "Ma, He's Making Eyes at Me," and then gets real yocks with her specialty, "That's Good Enough For Me," which is also good enough for the seatholders.

Her easy philosophy and wonderful use of hands add to her delivery of "Frankie and Johnny," carefully washed for the matinee trade. She gags through "Million Dollar Baby" and closes strong with her theme, "Tired." Zabe.

New Acts

BOBBY LUCAS
Songs
30 Mins.
Town Casino, Buffalo

Harry Altman (Town Casino, Buffalo) and Bill Miller (Riviera, Ft. Lee, N. J.) have got themselves a new boy. Discovered by Altman a couple weeks ago at Rainbow Inn, New Brunswick, N. J., and following a fortnight's intensive grooming by Altman, this 19-year-old Negro looks like a find. With the backing of his two impresario-owners, he's due to go a long way.

A product of Howard U., Washington, D. C., Lucas takes to singing like a duck to water. His youth and the natural expressive intensity of his race propel him to peak performances. If he can retain his present distinctive boyishness and simplicity, he should make par with the best in his metier.

For his Casino preem, he is given a smash buildup and presentation. His intro and encores are smartly cued and a trio of muted violins for the romantic numbers add a striking note of effectiveness. The skillful piano accompaniments of Isaac Royal are no small factor to easy listening.

Lucas is at his best in numbers exploiting his youth and natural buoyancy. His opening "Zing, Go the Strings" and followup "Hello, Young Lovers" are standout. His idiomatic treatment of "Jericho" and "Plantation Lullaby" are of stellar proportions. "One For the Road" seems too sophisticated and "So Long As I Care For You" is a welcome return to the romantic groove. "Ballin' the Jack" is for the jivesters and the closing "Black Magic" is uniquely delivered without leaning on anyone else's interpretation. Inevitable changes in makeup and lighting will increase the already potent impact of his personality and routine.

Songster got vociferous reception at off-beat Thursday night early show with a spate of commendatory comments coming from ringsiders. Casino is holding him over for an extra week, following which the William Morris office has provided him with several months on the plush nitery circuit. Burton.

RALPH & LORRAINE
Acro-Dance
6 Mins.
Apollo, N. Y.

Ralph & Lorraine, white acro-dance team, shape as sock vaude bets with similar potential in TV and nitery dates. Team has novel approach in its offerings by having Ralph essay the role of a window dresser to Lorraine's mannequin. In stiff-bodied, rigid-legged manner, gal gets across some neat contortions which net solid mitt. In another bit, she simulates a mechanical doll, and they step together in a smartly paced routine.

Both work in sharp, deliberate style to make the most of six-minute turn. Gal's eye appeal is another important plus. They project plenty of charm and work act into a begoff. Gros.

Chi Thumbs Its Nose at Legit Crix; Olivia's 'Candida' Sock Despite Pans

Chicago, Jan. 15.

Olivia de Havilland's name proved to have more effect at the boxoffice last week than the combined weight of all four of Chicago's first-string critics. Despite a savage pasting from three of the aisle-sitters and a moderate pan by the fourth, the film actress pulled a gross of nearly $19,900 for the first eight performances of a scheduled three-week engagement in Thomas Hammond's revival of "Candida."

Moreover, the show arrived with only a small advance sale, and the window sale didn't really get going until the morning after the opening, simultaneously with the publication of the unfavorable notices. Attendance built during the week to capacity the final three performances. With business no longer sellout for the long-run "South Pacific" and "Moon Is Blue," a gag making the local rounds was to the effect that the latter two shows were getting by on the overflow trade from "Candida."

As usual, Claudia Cassidy, of the Tribune, wrote the most critical review, asserting that "The rueful truth is that Shaw is no more hospitable to bores on stage than he was on earth. And Miss de Havilland's Candida is a fearful bore. Her Candida is an intolerably smug female, and the wonder is that both men don't flee into the night." The critic also slammed the supporting cast.

Emmett Dedmon, of the Sun-Times, socked the play, which he called a turn-of-the-century "Life with Father" worthy of protest for the exaggerated feminist "type of mythology perpetrated" by it. He rated the star "a pleasant Candida but no more than that." Sydney J. Harris, of the News, praised one or two others in the cast, but referred to the star only in his closing sentence, "The title role is taken by Miss Olivia de Havilland, a motion picture actress."

Ann Marsters, in the American, wrote yes-and-no review that finally worked around to a mildly thumbs-down conclusion.

Welles to Couple 'Venice' With 'Othello' on B'way Unless Reaction Is Bad

Producers James Russo and Michael Ellis, who are prepping the Orson Welles' Shakespearean repertory for next season, are waiting for a reaction to their announcement that Welles will do "The Merchant of Venice" in repertory with "Othello" before giving the go-ahead signal on the productions. In trans-Atlantic phone conversations, Welles told the producers that he wanted to play Shylock in "The Merchant of Venice," but wouldn't bring the production over if there was any objection to the play because of its chief character.

If the producers set a negative reaction they'll notify Welles to bring over another production. According to the producers, Welles' second choice is "Much Ado About Nothing," but if Claire Luce goes ahead with her plans to produce the play this season, Welles will have to make another selection.

The two plays in the repertory will be budgeted at $35,000, with Welles transporting the productions complete with actors, costumes and sets. Company will include 20 players. Russo & Ellis plan to preem the repertory on Broadway, without an out-of-town tryout, between Oct. 12 and Nov. 20. They're planning on a 16-week run. Welles, who will tour the plays in the English provinces this summer, is reported to have ironed out his difficulties with the U. S. Government over his back taxes.

Elkins Into Army

Hillard Elkins, of the William Morris agency's legit-television department, was inducted into the Army yesterday (Tues.). A request to his draft board for an extension to enable him to arrange his affairs was refused.

Besides representing producers, directors and writers in television, Elkins was active in the legit field.

Fry's 'Sleep' Makes Legit Grade in Cleve.'s Hanna

Cleveland, Jan. 15.

Christopher Fry's "A Sleep of Prisoners," which has been touring the Church circuit, will get its first date in a legit house at Cleveland's Hanna as result of an unusual deal made by manager Milton Krantz.

Krantz figures that if the poetic biblical allegory can draw capacity audiences to churches, as it has been doing on tour, "it must have enough powerful, universal appeal to pull them into my 1,500-capacity theatre."

A number of inquiries from religious groups of all denominations about the possibility of a Hanna engagement, he said, also influenced him to try the experiment.

Leblang Sells 'Shrike' Preview

A new wrinkle in ticket distribution that may have future implications for Broadway was tried this week by the Leblang agency. Brokerage sold the preview Monday night (14) of "The Shrike," at the Cort, N. Y., getting about three-quarters of a house. It's believed to be the first time that a ticket agency has sold a legit preview, normally handled by theatre party agents and subscription clubs.

Several weeks ago, when Saul Lancourt, of the Leblang agency, learned that producer-director-star Jose Ferrer had been unable to sell a preview of "The Shrike," he offerred to take the house on consignment for sale to the agency's regular clientele. Announcements were sent through the regular Leblang mailing list, offering the preview at 20% less than the regular performance scale and minus broker fees. Also, a small allotment was given to the Broadway Ticket Agency for sale to its customers.

According to Lancourt, sale of the tickets at a discount and without commission was a good business move for the agency. He explains that most broker trade comes from repeat orders from people who have seen shows and buy tickets for friends, business associates and clients. On that basis every patron that enjoyed "The Shrike" would tend to repay the discount price and the waived agency fee several times over.

'STATE' EARNS $241,000; N.Y. CAST SET FOR TOUR

"Affairs of State," which is slated to close Feb. 23 preparatory to going on tour, switches next week to Sunday matinee and evening performances, dropping the Monday night and Wednesday matinee showings. The entire present cast, including June Havoc, Reginald Owen, Barbara O'Neil, Shepperd Strudwick, Harry Bannister and Elmer Brown, will go on the road.

The Richard Krakeur production, capitalized at $50,000, has thus far paid a profit of $206,000 and has earned about $35,000 additional in cash reserve, bonds and undistributed profits. Louis Verneuil authored and staged the comedy.

Blondell to Do 'Sheba' For Arena in Balto

Baltimore, Jan. 15.

Joan Blondell returns to the Hilltop Theatre-in-the-Round Tuesdays (22) to star for a week in "Come Back, Little Sheba." She appeared last year in "Happy Birthday," also at the Sheraton Belvedere room.

Producer Don Swann, Jr.'s, supporting cast includes Belle Flower, Wilson Brooks, O. Tolbert-Hewitt.

Equity Library Show

Equity Scrapbook (scenes from Shakespeare) — Lenox Hill Playhouse, N. Y., Jan. 16-20)).

Ashton Pedalling

Frederick Ashton, Sadler's Wells Ballet co-director and choreographer, flew into N. Y. Sunday (13) from London and continued directly on to Hollywood, for conferences with Metro on dances for Moira Shearer's pic.

He'll be back in N. Y. in a week to start a new ballet, "Iseult and Tintagel," for the February season of the N. Y. City Ballet Co., as guest choreographer.

$10 Hike in N.Y., $20 on Rd. Is Won by ATPAM; Philly, Chi House Mgrs. Boosted

Increases of $20 a week for all managers and pressagents on the road (except Philadelphia, where house managers get a $10 boost, and Chicago and Boston, where the raise for house managers is $7.50), and $10 for all categories in New York, has been won by the Assn. of Theatrical Press Agents & Managers. The upped scales are retroactive to last Labor Day and are effective for two years, except that the union may reopen next Labor Day the clause providing for the $7.50 raise to certain house managers.

The new wage schedule was set by attorney Simon H. Rifkind, former N. Y. Supreme Court judge called in to arbitrate the matter when negotiations between the ATPAM and the League of N. Y. Theatres reached a stalemate. With the exception of house managers, the majority of whom are Shubert employees, about 85% of working union members are figured to be not affected by the increase in the salary minimums. Most pressagents, company managers and non-Shubert house managers are already paid over scale.

Although the revised rates don't specifically provide for pressagent associates, it's figured the p.a. chapter of the union will vote to give them at least a share of any increases forthcoming. That is what was done in previous cases of salary boosts. However, consideration of the matter hasn't yet been scheduled.

The new minimums (and the respective raises involved) are as follows:

Advance agent, $245 ($20); company manager on tour with straight play, $200 ($20); manager on tour with musical, $240 ($20); house manager in New York and Philly, $150 ($10); company manager with Broadway straight play, $150 ($10); manager with Broadway musical, $155 ($10); pressagent in New York, $210 ($10); pressagent in New York for a second show for the same producer, $185 ($10); pressagent for pre-Broadway tryout tour, $245 ($20); second pressagent on tour, $175 ($20); house manager in Boston and Chicago, $130 ($7.50); house manager other road cities, $147.50 ($7.50).

The union originally asked for a straight $25 raise for all categories and the League countered with an offer of an across-the-board $10 boost. No other changes in the existing contract were involved.

Bamberger Gives Bid For Non-Musical Philly Tent

Philadelphia, Jan. 15.

Theron Bamberger, managing director of the Bucks County Playhouse, New Hope, Pa., offered to supply a season of summer stock in a tent theatre on Belmont Plateau, Fairmount Park, here, the only bid received by the park commissioners in answer to newspaper advertisements.

Bamberger's offer included presentation of a different play each week, featuring "nationally known artists," for six evenings and two matinee performances. The productions will be given in fireproof tent with a seating capacity of 1,000, at prices ranging from $1.30 to $3.25.

For this privilege Bamberger offered to pay the park commission 5% of the gross receipts, plus 10% of the profits from "incidental concessions." To avoid competition with Robin Hood Dell, outdoor longhair setup which the city partly subsidizes, Bamberger would present no musical attractions. After being studied by the city solicitor, the Bamberger proposals will come up before the full commission Thursday (17).

'Kate' Rings Down Curtain to Over $1,012,000 Profit; Four Flops Fade

Five closings on Broadway last week equalled the mass exodus of the Thanksgiving weekend, but involved only a fraction of the financial loss. Four of the folds were flops, but the fifth was th return engagement of one of th top money shows of recent years.

The big payoff entry was "Kiss Me, Kate," a smash entry of the 1948-49 season, which alled it quits after eight sparsely-attended performances of a return run at the Broadway Theatre at $3.60 top (it played 1,077 times during its original run). The reviews generally noted that the Cole Porter musical was a knockout show, but slugged the cast and production.

The Saint Subber-Lemuel Ayers offering, originally capitalized at $180,000, has thus far paid a profit of $1,012,000, and as of last Dec. 31 had additional undistributed profits of $37,940, including $8,473 from the London production, $3,703 in Scandinavian royalties, $3,452 in royalty refunds and $350 souvenir book royalty, all earned during December. According to th Dec. 31 accountant's statement, th operating loss for the touring production for the five weeks ending that date totalled $7,631, including $6,379 for the week ending Dec. 1 in Huntington, W. Va.

Although this presumably winds up "Kate" on Broadway and the road, at least for some years, th property is figured likely to garner further returns from stock, for which the rights are being released immediately. It's expected that the show will be produced this summer at various major out-

Prep $50,000 Music Tent In Spring at Kingston, N.Y.

Kingston, N. Y., Jan. 15.

A group of Kingston and New York business and show people will begin construction April 1 on a site near this city of the tented Hudson Valley Music Circus. On a plot owned by William Singer, Kingston police commissioner, there will be built a theatre-in-the-round seating 1,000. Cost is estimated at $50,000.

A resident company of 24, plus stars heading the casts, will play a 10-week summer season. "The Merry Widow," "Brigadoon," "Finian's Rainbow" and "Annie Get Your Gun" are among the productions slated.

Backers include William F. Edelmuth, who served three terms as mayor of Kingston; Al Goldin, business manager for Moss Hart and Joseph Hyman; Mortimer Halpern, former Theatre Guild production director; Al Barnett, local antique dealer and father of the Broadway actor, Lee Barnett.

Kingston is in the strawhat belt, nearby Woodstock being an established spot.

'Tidings' Coin To Back 'Christie'

Harald Bromley, who will take over presentation of the N.Y. City Theatre Co. revival of "Anna Christie" and move it to the Lyceum, N.Y., for a commercial run starting Jan. 23, will finance the operation with funds left over from his recent production of "Glad Tidings" at the same house. He has cleared the matter with most of the "Tidings" backers, and expects to get in touch with the others in the next day or two. The few who prefer not to go along on the new venture will receive the balance of their "Tidings" coin, amounting to about 50% of the $50,000 venture.

Cost of acquiring the production of the Eugene O'Neill play will be about $18,000, including around $9,000 or more for moving, etc., and approximately $8,000 in bonds and deposits. Since the N.Y. City Center now operates on a regular production basis rather than under stock rules, no extreme union restrictions will be involved in the transfer, as was the case two years ago with the Richard Aldrich-Richard Myers takeover of "Devil's Disciple." However, about 20 stagehands will be required to operate the show, so the breakeven minimum at the Lyceum will probably come to around $15,000 a week.

The N. Y. City Theatre Co. will share in any profits from the Lyceum presentation, and Emeline Roche will receive a royalty for the use of her settings for the revival. The scheduled 16-performance run at the City Center ends Sunday night (20). The top at the City Center is $3, but will be raised to $4.80 at the smaller Lyceum.

'Egypt' Inks Viennese For Femme Star; Seeks Male

Gusti Huber, former Viennese star, will make her U. S. debut in the leading role in "Flight Into Egypt," the George Tabori drama being produced by Irene Mayer Selznick. The actress came to this country in 1946 after marrying a U. S. Army captain in the Austrian capital, and has been a citizen since 1950. She appeared in films as well as on the stage on the Continent.

The male lead in the show, reportedly the second in importance, is said to be still wide open. Efforts to cast the third main part, a nine-year-old boy with a Continental accent, have also struck a snag, and Mrs. Selznick and director Elia Kazan will hold open auditions tomorrow afternoon (Thurs.) backstage at the Lyceum.

"Egypt" is slated to start rehearsing Jan. 30, and open March 30 at the Music Box, N. Y., after one-week tryout stands in New Haven and Philly.

Trade Slant to Soundoff Of Ginger, Gloria: There's Nothing Like Two Dames

"It's not what you do but how you do it," apparently applies to femme stars who publicly put the rap on their own shows. That seems to be the explanation for the contrast in the trade reaction to Gloria Swanson and Ginger Rogers, who made statements in the press condemning their plays recently during their tryout tours.

In the case of Miss Swanson, she took almost unanimous criticism from those in the trade, reportedly being given the chill particularly by others in the same production and by associates of the management involved. But Miss Rogers, who had done much the same kind of thing, didn't appear to meet resentment for it, even from th management.

Various factors apparently were involved in the different reactions to the two cases. Although both shows had heavy theatre party bookings, Miss Rogers' show, "Love and Let Love," was slated a flop in advance, largely from repeated reports during its extended tryout tour, while the Swanson show, "Nina," was figured to have a chance. More important, however, was that Miss Rogers didn't try to get out of her show, but after giving a critical interview about it, actually insisted on bringing it in and braving the notices. Miss Swanson, however, suddenly announced that she wanted to quit "Nina" and was reportedly persuaded to stick only under threat of Equity charges or a damage suit. Also, Miss Rogers was a big investor in "Love," which was

'FOURPOSTER' PAID OFF; NETS 6G WEEKLY NOW

Backers of "Fourposter," the Playwright Co. production of Jan de Hartog's two character play, starring Jessica Tandy and Hume Cronyn, have been paid off in full. Checks for the entire $40,000 venture were distributed last week. In addition, there are assets of about $20,000, including undistributed profits, bonds and cash reserve. Show is currently in its 13th week on Broadway.

At its present boxoffice pace of almost $23,000 a week, the show is netting around $6,000. Besides their 15% share of the weekly gross, the Cronyns get a third of the profits.

OPERA REVIVAL DUE ON LOCAL BASIS IN ST. LOUIS

St. Louis, Jan. 15.

After a hiatus of almost a decade, a group of natives is prepping a revival of grand opera with strictly local talent. The plans were revealed last week when a petition for incorporation by the Midwest Cosmopolitan Opera and Ballet Assn. of St. Louis, was filed in the local circuit court.

Edwin G. Herchert, owner of a construction firm, is prexy of the new organization, which has ambitious plans, including television presentations. It has announced its first presentation, "La Traviata," Feb. 15-16, with the possibility of repeat performances in Memphis.

A tentative pact has been made by Herchert and Harold Koplar, general manager of the Koplar chain of hotels and the Chase Club, west end nitery, to change the midtown Lyn Theatre into an opera house equipped for TV. Koplar has an application for a TV license pending before the FCC.

'Much Ado' Shapes Up As New London Hit

London, Jan. 15.

"Much Ado About Nothing," Shakespearan revival which opened last Friday (11) at the Phoenix Theatre, looks like a hit. Lavishly costumed and staged, the production, which ran last season at the Stratford Memorial Theatre came in last week under the Tennent Productions management.

Standout performances by John Gielgud and Diana Wynyard help make this top entertainment. Gielgud also directed. Other principal roles are taken by Lewis Casson, Hugh Stewart and Dorothy Tuti Music was composed by Leslie Bridgewater, with settings and costumes by Mariano Andreu.

Director Gene Frankel brought in Morris Carnovsky, of the original Broadway cast as guest star. Supporting cast includes Arthur Ellison, Irene Terte, Kermit Echols, Stanley Siegel, Stanley Mack, Alice Lewis, George Naylor and Thomas Gondesen.

The previous week, the U. of Kansas City presented its third production of the season, "The Enchanted," with Myrtle Zarbnisky, Cornelia Harrington and Lee Marts in the leads. Show ran a week in the school playhouse, and was directed by Dr. John Newfield.

Inside Stuff—Legit

Backers of "Fancy Meeting You Again," comedy by George S. Kaufman and Leueen MacGrath (Mrs. Kaufman), which opened Monday night (14) at the Royale, N. Y., include CBS executive Oscar Katz, $975; orchestra conductor Harry Salter, $1,300; Shubert employee John F. Waters, representing Lee Shubert, $6,500; costume designer Edith Lutyens, $325; attorney Morris M. Schrier, representing Music Corp. of America, $1,950; attorney I. Robert Broder, $650; theatre executive and manager Louis A. Lotito, $325; actor-comedian Paul Hartman, $325; theatrical hauling executive Saul Friedman, $650; theatrical sign agent Leo Brode, $325; Mrs. Lawrence Weiner, wife of the ad agency head, $650; souvenir program agent Al Greenstone, $650; stage manager Joe Olney, $325; attorney Benet Polikoff, $650; former producer Barnard Sachs Straus, $2,600; theatre owner-producer Anthony Brady Farrell, $1,300; co-author Kaufman, $10,400; souvenir program agent Kal Efron, $325; radio-TV announcer Kenneth Banghart, $1,950; ad agency executive Thayer Cummings, $1,300, and souvenir program agent Albert Golub, $325. Chandler Cowles and Benjamin H. Segal are listed as general partners of the venture, which is capitalized at $65,000, with provision for 20% overcall (the latter was not exercised).

June Havoc, starring Jan. 23 in a tele version of "Anna Christie" for Celanese, will get $3,000 for the stint, not the usual $2,000 for the series, as reported last week. In addition, the sponsor is understood paying $1,500 to cancel that night's performance of "Affairs of State," in which the actress is starred, at the Music Box, N. Y. Miss Havoc took over the "Affairs" role from Celeste Holm. The latter is currently playing the title part in a legit production of "Anna Christie" at the City Center. She gets Equity minimum for the appearance in the non-profit offering, but goes on a percentage deal next week, when the play is transferred to Broadway for a commercial run.

Cleveland was taken over by legit pressagents last week. In to bally coming engagements at the Hanna Theatre were Arthur Levy ("Bell, Book and Candle"), Sam Weller ("Guys and Dolls") and Lorella Val-Mery ("Sleep of Prisoners"). Warren Caro, executive-secretary of the Theatre Guild, was in for a confab with Milton Krantz, Hanna manager, and Charlotte Larson, local Guild representative, about subscriptions. Also, Patricia Moore, formerly in Bill Doll's publicity staff in New York, was in town to visit her actor-husband, Dickie Moore, who was here with the touring "Autumn Garden."

Billing on "Gertie" has an unusual twist regarding star and featured players credits. Program and ads list Glynis Johns above title as star. Also in the star spot, above title, but carrying the notation "with," the usual insignia for introducing featured players, is the name of Albert Dekker, in type smaller than the Johns monicker. Again using the word "with," names of featured players Polly Rowles, Alan Napier, Patricia Wheel, Robert Duke appear under the title.

Although not indicated in the program credits, the ballad arrangements for the revival of "Pal Joey," at the Broadhurst, N. Y., are the Hans Spialek ones from the show's original production. Don Walker, billed as having supplied "special orchestrations," did them for only the non-ballads in the revival.

door spots, such as St. Louis, Kansas City, Louisville and Dallas, and the musical tents. and may be packaged for the strawhat circuit.

Four Outright Losses

The other four closings, all outright losses, were "The Number," "Nina," "Lo and Behold" and "Legend of Lovers." All were current-season productions. "The Number," Arthur Carter melodrama presented by Paul Vroom and Irving Cooper, was staged by George Abbott, with Dane Clark and Martha Scott. It played 88 performances at the Biltmore and lost an estimated $50,000 on an investment of $75,000. The film rights, recently sold to 20th-Fox for $37,500, helped limit the deficit on the venture.

"Nina," adapted by Samuel Taylor from Andre Roussin's Parisian hit, was produced by John C. Wilson, with Gloria Swanson, David Niven and Alan Webb co-starred and Gregory Ratoff directing. The $60,000 project was panned but did profitable business during the tryout tour, until Miss Swanson publicly announced her dissatisfaction with it and her determination to quit. That pulled the props from under attendance out of town and killed the advance sale for New York. The production wound up with a loss of around $45,000 on its 52-performance run at the Royale.

"Lo and Behold" and "Legend of Lovers" were both Theatre Guild offerings. The former, authored by John Patrick, was staged by Burgess Meredith, with a cast including Leo G. Carroll, Jeffrey Lynn and Lee Grant. It ran 37 performances at the Booth and lost an estimated $25,000 on its $60,000 investment. "Legend," adapted by Kitty Black from the French of Jean Anouilh, was a critical success in London last season under the title, "Point of Departure," and originally in Paris as "Eurydice." Dorothy McGuire and Richard Burton were starred in the Guild edition staged by London director Peter Ashmore. It played 22 performances at the Plymouth and lost an estimated $35,000 on investment of $65,000.

Detroit Maps Own Plans To Keep Its Legit Alive; Wayne U. Buys Theatre

Detroit, Jan. 15.

The old road may be in its last ruts, but Detroit, like Pittsburgh and Cleveland, is planning to do something to keep theatre alive. As yet informal, but definitely muscular and determined, is the quietly-formed Detroit City Theatre Committee, with Roger Stevens as chairman, and including in its membership Russ McLaughlin, critic of the Detroit News, and Leonard Leone, director of the Wayne U. Theatre.

The Detroit City Theatre Committee is at present making an informal study of the community, with plans to stimulate stage activity here.

Most significant development so far is the purchase by Wayne U. of the old Jesse Bonstelle Theatre and the reconditioning of this 1,200-seat house this fall. Purchase price was $115,000 which, since Wayne is a tax-supported college, is a large sum of money to devote to an off-campus building. In addition to the purchase of this theatre, and its extensive renovation, is the allotment of $60,000 a year to director Leone to operate the theatre, half of this sum being earmarked for salaries alone.

First play presented this year was "Eastward in Eden," a new opera with music by Jan Meyerowitz. Leone, who is head of the drama department at Wayne, hopes the Wayne Theatre will justify itself so that his group can be included in the $20,000,000 building plans now being matured at the university, these plans presently calling for a beautiful modernistic theatre the Bachman Museum.

In addition to the Wayne U. Theatre, there is discussion in Detroit of the possible construction of a legitimate theatre as part of the great multi-million dollar shopping centre about to start eight miles north of the city. This is the suburban development of the J. L. Hudson department store, which will include a branch of the department store, a community centre for restaurants, medical buildings, and other shopping services.

Chi Legit Goes Along to So-So Biz; 'Candida' $20,000, 'Pacific' $40,000

Chicago, Jan. 15.

Much-vaunted furniture convention wasn't much of a help last week to the attractions here. Most of the visiting firemen had seen "South Pacific" by this time and also had a crack at "Moon is Blue" last summer in their mid-year meeting. Despite the bad notices on Olivia De Havilland, "Candida" is doing good business. "Fledermaus," which came back for a two-week stay, after the original Met production played the city last year, is doing little business, despite rather favorable reviews.

Estimates for Last Week

"Candida," Erlanger (1st week) ($3.80; 1,334). Guild subscription holding take down; good $20,000.

"Fledermaus," Opera House (1st week) ($4.94; 3,600). Healthy $38,000.

"Moon is Blue," Harris (37th week) $4.40; 1,000). Still profitable with $16,800; previous week drew just under $20,000.

"South Pacific," Shubert, (61st week) ($5; 2,100). Almost $40,000.

'Roberts' 1st L.A. Rd. Show In 5 Weeks; 'Heir' $1,000

Hollywood, Jan. 15.

After four weeks without a legit offering other than those in the town's intimate little houses, the local rialto came up with a new show last week. Business, however, was weak.

Play, "Heir to the Flesh," opened at the 255-seat Coronet to generally adverse notices. Tally for the initial week was around $1,000, and the play will hold through this frame anyway. Town picks up slightly next week when the Biltmore rekindles Monday (21) with the national company of "Mister Roberts."

'WEDDING' OK $20,500, 'ROBERTS' $24,300, S.F.

San Francisco, Jan. 15.

"Member Of The Wedding," with Ethel Waters and Betty Lou Holland, chalked up a fine $20,500 for its third week at the 1,775-seat Geary. House was scaled to $3.60.

"Mister Roberts," with Tod Andrews, concluded its fourth and final frame at the 1,550-seat Curran Saturday (12) with a strong $24,300. House top was $3.60.

Curran will remain dark until March 17, when "Rose Tatoo" reopens the house. Long shuttering is partly due to sudden cancellation of "Die Fledermaus" and Jose Greco Ballet.

'Dolls' $52,100 for Third Detroit Week; 'Noon' 20G

Detroit, Jan. 15.

"Guys and Dolls" continued to roll up hot grosses in its third week at the Shubert, with third round reaching $52,100. Play, which did $55,000 for the second week and $42,500 the first, is smashing all gross records. It remains one more week before moving to Toronto. It's all sold out.

"Darkness at Noon" did a good $20,000 at the Cass in the first frame of a two-week engagement.

Brooks-Raymond 'Turtle' Neat $12,000 in St. Louis

St. Louis, Jan. 15.

"Voice of the Turtle," with Geraldine Brooks and Gene Raymond, closed a week's engagement at the Empress Sunday (13). With the 1,450-seat house scaled to $2, "Turtle" grabbed a neat $12,000 for eight performances. Resident stock troupe with name stars is continuing this week with Arthur Treacher and Ann Summers in "Clutterbuck," opening tonight (15).

After being dark for five weeks, the American Theatre resumed operations, but in the Opera House of the Municipal Auditorium, Sunday (13), with a week's stand of "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes." A capacity crowd of 3,200 was on deck for the teeoff. House is scaled to $4.88.

'Moon' $11,600, Toronto

Toronto, Jan. 15.

With a city-wide streetcar strike here, the national company of "The Moon Is Blue" did a disappointing $11,600 at the Royal Alexandra, with the 1,525-seater scaled to $3. Play got good reviews.

Daytime window sales were nil but, toward second half of week, pre-curtain sales were substantial.

'Gertie' $6,500 for Four In New Haven Tryout

New Haven, Jan. 15.

Biz for preem of "Gertie" at Shubert last week (10-12) was only so-so. At a $3.60 top, four shows pulled an estimated $6,500.

House is dark this week but relights next week with three-day stand of Cornelia Otis Skinner's solo "Paris '90" (24-26), as number one on a five-attraction cavalcade being sold on subscription basis.

'Candle' $26,000, 'Fancy' 9G, Philly

Philadelphia, Jan. 15.

Legit biz, for the most part, has done the expected post-holiday slide, but a surprise click last week was "The Shrike," which did $18,500 in its single stanza at the Walnut.

Last night (Mon.) "Jane" opened a two weeks' stand at the Walnut as sixth and last ATS subscription show of the season, although a supplementary series of three plays will be offered.

Estimates for Last Week

"The Shrike," Walnut (one week only) ($3.90; 1,340). Preemed here Monday (7) to generally fine notices and good reception. Surprised with a sturdy $18,500 in single stanza. "Jane" current for two weeks on ATS subscription.

"Bell, Book and Candle," Forrest (3rd week) ($3.90; 1,760). In final session this one eased off somewhat, but still considered good with $26,000. Original fortnight had been on subscription. "Month of Sundays" in tomorrow (Wed.) for short tryout.

"Fancy Meeting You Again," Locust (3rd week) ($3.90; 1,580). Off to tepid $9,000 in last stanza, despite generally favorable local reception. House dark two weeks, then Cornelia Otis Skinner.

"The Student Prince," Shubert (1st week) ($3.25; 1,870). Advertising positively farewell trip, this perennial got $23,000 — excellent for the low scale of prices.

'GARDEN' OKAY $17,500 IN CLEVELAND STANZA

Cleveland, Jan. 15.

"Autumn Garden," with Fredric March and Florence Eldridge, at the 1,500-seat Hanna at a $3.70 top, hit an okay $17,500 on the week.

"Rose Tattoo," with Maureen Stapleton and Eli Wallach, moved into the Hanna Monday (14) and Rosalind Russell comes in next Monday (21) in "Bell, Book and Candle."

'Tattoo' Slim $13,200 In Second Pitt Week

Pittsburgh, Jan. 15.

Staying powers of "The Rose Tattoo" were clearly demonstrated at the Nixon last week, when the Williams drama grabbed close to $13,200. That figure was achieved without subscription support and hit only around $4,500 less than the opening session, when attraction already had better than $12,000 in season sales in the till in advance.

Nixon currently has Rosalind Russell in "Bell, Book and Candle" and it'll be the high for the year, with better than $30,000 almost certain now, on strength of better than $20,000 advance sale. "Moon Is Blue" follows.

Ballet Theatre $6,100 For Three in Columbus

Columbus, Jan. 15.

Ballet Theatre, which started slow at the Hartman here last week, built steadily but not sufficiently to overcome low receipts opening night, and garnered $6,100 in three performances Friday and Saturday (11-12). Top for the 1,650-seat house was $4.35.

"Darkness at Noon" is here Jan. 21 for three days.

Greco $17,500, D.C.

Washington, Jan. 15.

Hypoed by good notices, the Jose Greco Spanish Ballet did a fine $17,500 for its first week at the Gayety Theatre. House is scaled to $3.60, but since the ballet is a Theatre Guild attraction, Guild subscribers got the benefit of the special lower rate, holding the take down somewhat.

Ballet now in its second and last week here, with indications that the gross will better the initial stanza.

B'way Reacts From New Year Slump; 'Joey' Solid 39G 1st Week, 'S.P.' 41G, Fonda SRO $38,200, 'Camera' $24,100

Broadway made an expected recovery last week after the traditional post-New Year's sag. With a few exceptions, business was better for all shows, several hitting new highs. The upturn was especially notable since the previous week's take had included the extra-price performance New Year's Eve.

The total gross for all 25 shows last week was $695,700, or 79% of capacity (for the corresponding week last year the total gross for the 27 current shows was $676,300, or 78% of capacity, a jump of 9% from the preceding week).

Week before last the total for all 26 shows was $712,100, or 78%, a drop of 7%.

Of the new entries, "Pal Joey" played to standee attendance at all performances and "Anna Christie," getting generally favorable notices at the City Center, was acquired for commercial presentation on a regular-run basis. The returned "Kiss Me, Kate" drew dire reviews and was quickly closed, joining "The Number," "Nina," "Lo and Behold" and "Legend of Lovers" in last week's five-show exodus.

Keys: C (Comedy), D (Drama), CD (Comedy-Drama), R (Revue), MC (MusicalComedy), MD (Musical Drama), O (Operetta).

Lord Alan Frobisher	Howard St. John
Gilbert Dabney	Philip Friend

"Jane" has many hit potentialities, such as sparkling lines, clever situations and an excellent cast, but as presented here the final impression isn't too satisfying. Drastic changes will be needed before it reaches Broadway if it is to make the grade.

These should not be too difficult, however. The play, written by S. N. Behrman from an original story by W. Somerset Maugham, now runs almost a half-hour overtime. When the necessary cuts are made and the action speeded in the early part of the first act, and in portions of the second act, it should prove a real contender.

The plot deals with "a bawdy old frump from Liverpool," Jane Fowler, who in 1938 decides to marry a young, handsome architect, Gilbert Dabney. She goes to London before the marriage to win the approval of her sister-in-law, Mrs. Millicent Tower, a society leader. Millicent's divorced husband, William Tower, a globe-trotting writer with a "great ability for general disparagement," is on one of his rare visits to his daughter, Ann. Millicent is hoping for a proposal from Lord Allan Frobisher, owner of a string of newspapers who likes his liquor and has a knack with women.

In the second act, six months later, Dabney has completely "reupholstered" Jane, who has now become one of the best-dressed and most popular women in London. She has decided, however, that she had best leave Dabney, who has remained faithful, and marry some one of her own age. She wins a proposal from the cynical Tower with ease, but has much more difficulty with Frobisher, whom she really loves.

A secondary plot deals with the love of Ann Tower for Peter Crewe, a young poet who loves her but cannot marry, because he already has a wife in a German concentration camp. That marriage, he explains, was a mere passport affair to get the young actress out of Germany, but it had not succeeded as she had been arrested before she could leave. Ann's mother disapproves of Crewe, and her father is at first cynically indifferent toward him. They win the sympathy of Jane, however, who gets Lord Frobisher against his better judgment to pull the necessary strings to have Crewe's wife released and sent to London, where Crewe can obtain a divorce.

Edna Best is brilliant in the title role, making thoroughly plausible the great change in the character that occurs between the first and second act. Basil Rathbone gives a suave, polished reading of the role of William Tower, the cynical author. Howard St. John is excellent as Lord Frobisher. One of the high points of the play is his drunken scene, which he skillfully underplays. Irene Browne wrings all the laughs possible from her role of Mrs. Tower. Adrienne Corri is a fresh, beautiful Ann. Both Philip Friend, as Gilbert Dabney, and William Whitman, as Peter Crewe, are highly competent.

Gertie

New Haven, Jan. 10.

Herman Shumlin production of comedy-drama in three acts (five scenes) by Enid Bagnold. Stars Glynis Johns, Albert Dekker; features Polly Rowles, Alan Napier, Patricia Wheel, Robert Duke. Directed by Shumlin; setting, William and Jean Eckart; costumes, Hazel Roy. At Shubert, New Haven, Jan. 10, '52; $3.60 top.

Mr. Ritchie	Alan Napier
Bianca	Anita Cooper
Gertie	Glynis Johns
James	Robert Duke
Sarah	Patricia Wheel
Mrs. Candida Kaufman	Polly Rowles
Rex	Albert Dekker

Broadway has already witnessed, this season, the spectacle of a weak playwrighting sister being salvaged by a strong acting personality ("Gigi"). A similar episode may possibly be in the making with the soon-due arrival of "Gertie." If this lightweight script is to survive (and premiere indications cast a doubt on that angle), it will be primarily on the reception accorded Britisher Glynis Johns, who is making her American debut in this comedy drama.

WANTED
AMERICAN REPRESENTATION
The International Theater Verlag, Heidelberg, Germany, has numerous requests from German producers for successful American operettas and dramas. ITV desires a contact with an established New York agency, to secure German rights to these productions. Interested agencies write to: CONRAD OERLEIN, Director.

Play is somewhat diffused in content and in certain segments becomes a combination of ho-kum and ho-hum. Through its frailties, however, the work of Miss Johns glows as a shining example of pleasing thesping. Glow is the proper word, because script limitations offer little opportunity for incandescent flashes.

Basically, there is a fairly interesting thought comprising the story line here. Plot emphasizes the plight of provincial British maidens in regard to the shortage of desirable males, and theme points up the steps taken by one specific maiden to remedy the situation.

Gertie is the youngest in a family of four—widowed father, brother James, and sister Sarah. Father, a literary dreamer who has spent most of his life on a scientific book which never quite reaches fruition, has dissipated the fortune left by his heiress wife. Sarah, a would-be scribbler who has arrived nowhere with her efforts, is verging on a psycho case because of lack of any actual romance. Gertie, who feels she is pre-ordained to make sex her career, decides to develop that thesis into a real plan.

When a glamorous Hollywood scout turns up, with a Broadway producer (an ex-husband) trailing her in hopes of snaring the talent she is after, Gertie sets forth to utilize the producer to finance her assault on America in search of a rich husband. The melange ends up with the two daughters set for a trip to Broadway, where Sarah's play is to be produced, while son James stays home to look after the old man.

An indication of the charm with which Miss Johns endows her role, may be gleaned from the fact that she plays the essentially contemptible part of a conniver so disarmingly, as to remove the sting from her actions.

Albert Dekker gives authenticity to the producer role and makes his characterization convincing, except in a story-telling scene, which has the playwright attributing to the producer a naivete completely foreign to the hep Broadway he portrays. The scene is a long-winded synopsis by Sarah, the scribbling sister, which may come under the heading of poetic license, but whose license expires after the first two minutes of gab.

Polly Rowles is attractive and at ease as the Hollywood personality; Alan Napier gives a good interpretation of the procrastinating father; Patricia Wheel puts considerable effort into the Sarah role; Rob[illegible] Duke is amiable as the son; and Anita Cooper lends amusing atmosphere as a non-English-speaking housemaid.

Despite its lack of out-and-out sock values, the writing unfolds some very listenable phraseology and peppers the proceedings with intermittent bright epigrams.

Herman Shumlin's staging has act one in the pedestrian category. It is not until well into the second frame that the play shows any signs of catching fire. William and Jean Eckart (Mr. and Mrs.) have contributed an excellent living room setting and Hazel Roy has spruced up the troupe in attractive finery.

Desire Under the Elms

Hartford, Jan. 9.

ANTA presentation of drama revival in three acts (12 scenes) by Eugene O'Neill. Features Karl Malden, Carol Stone, Douglas Watson, Lou Polan, George Mitchell. Directed by Harold Clurman. Setting by Mordecai Gorelik, costumes by Ben Edwards, lighting by Paul Morrison. At New Parsons, Hartford, Jan. 8, '52; $4.20 top.

Eben Cabot	Douglas Watson
Simeon Cabot	Lou Polan
Peter Cabot	George Mitchell
Ephraim Cabot	Karl Malden
Abbie Putnam	Carol Stone
Young Girl	Jocelyn Brando
Man	Charles Aldman
Fiddler	Mark Gordon
Old Farmer	Howard H. Fischer
Woman	Minnette Barrett
Sheriff	Russell Gaige

Neighbors: Ellwyn Dearborn, Colleen Dewhurst, Norma Hayes, George Hoxie, John McLiam, Barbara Schultz, Jutta Wolf, Don Elson.

An excellent cast, coupled with a fine script and the dynamic direction of Harold Clurman, make "Desire Under the Elms" the best chunk of theatre fare to come out of the New Parsons to date. Despite bad backstage lighting opening night, the play went over solidly. It's the first of a five-play series for ANTA.

This Eugene O'Neill recreation is filled with the moral message that our own deep yearnings can carry with them the seed of destruction. This is shown in the love of the hard, patriarchal father for his land, that of the young stepmother for her stepson, and the love of the son for his dead mother. It is a tale of passion between stepson and stepmother.

Cast demonstrates excellent aptness for the roles. As the youth torn between devotion to his dead mother and stepmother, Douglas Watson turns in a highly commendable performance. Karl Malden is topnotch as the hard, soil-loving, God-fearing New England farmer. Carol Stone, in the role of the love-hungry young wife, turns in a skilled job, as do Lou Polan and George Mitchell, the two sons who abandon the farm for the gold of California. The wry humor dispelled by the pair is excellent and aids the play in attaining its goal.

Setting of a New England farmhouse and exterior by Mordecai Gorelik is excellent. Other minor members of the cast also give fine performances. Costuming of Ben Edwards is good.

Boston, Jan. 14.

It seems clear that Cornelia Otis Skinner has done it again in "Paris '90," set of 13 character sketches drawn, in part, from the characters of the artist Toulouse-Lautrec. It is, of course, as all Miss Skinner's things are, of a special and reasonably limited appeal, but it will certainly click with the faithful.

Of the 13 scenes, only four are definitely Lautrec characters, but they are wows, capturing the mood of the familiar paintings themselves and conveying, in Miss Skinner's sensitive lines, a remarkable sense of authenticity. Her finale, a re-creation of Yvette Guilbert in which she does a couple of songs, is the gayest. The portrait of the lion-tamer who has killed his partner in a rage, and the sketch of the call girl invited, unprofessionally, to a picnic, are more powerful.

In fact, the sketches conveying the darker hues are generally more effective than the amusing ones. A portrait of a Boston school teacher, and of a stone angel at Notre Dame, rank with the best in this vein, while the sketch of "La Belle Conchita," won in a raffle by a cadet, and that of "The New Woman," an hilarious parody of an English bicyclist, score on the comedy side. Most of the sketches are held together in a deft thread of continuity, resulting in a cumulative impact.

The major weakness of the show is the music, which is either obvious or of the old vaudeville sound most of the time. This may be partly deliberate, but it does not particularly enhance the mood. However, it offers Miss Skinner a few songs of a traditional character, which she does very well. Her costumes, in the meantime, are exceptionally handsome and colorful, establishing the characters before a word is spoken. The costume changes are exceptionally swift, too, offering a minimum of delay.

While some of the scenes rather fail to go over ("The Professor's Wife," with a Jewish theme, for instance), the whole adds up to a solid evening of entertainment. It clearly proves again what everybody has long known—that Miss Skinner, as a combined writer, actress, imitator and capturer of mood, is without equal today.

Heir to the Flesh

Hollywood, Jan. 7.

Hollywood Playwrights production of drama in three acts (four scenes) by Ramon Romero and Harriet Hinsdale. Directed by Marcene Riley. Set by Vlada. At Coronet, Hollywood, Jan. 7, '52; $2.40 top.

Jessica Osborne	Alice Rolph
Mrs. Ellen Andrews	Nan Price
Lloyd Winston	Glen Vernon
Kay Winston	Marta Mitrovich
Cornelia Winston	Helen Noyes
John Winston	George Lill
Dr. Stephen Burke	Allan Nixon
Dr. Maxwell Winston	Doug McEachin

A soap opera with an unusual peg, "Heir to the Flesh" gets the new Los Angeles legit season off to a bad start. Drama of artificial insemination is, like its subject, strictly heir-satz.

Basically, it's a story of marital difficulties aggravated by a "Silver Cord" theme. Complications are based on some outrageous coincidences, mainly the manner in which the wife's former boy-friend, who unknowingly was the donor of her test tube baby, is dragged back into her life.

Trite writing, inept direction and wooden acting combine to make the three-acter interminable, even though it is a shorter script than normal.

Edw. E. Horton Acquires Road Rights to 'Nina'

Winter Park, Fla., Jan. 15.

Edward Everett Horton has acquired the road rights to "Ni ," the Samuel Taylor adaptation of Andre Roussin's Parisian farce, and plans to present it on the road this spring with himself in the role of the husband. The Broadway edition of the play, with Gloria Swanson, David Niven and Alan Webb co-starred, closed last week.

Horton opens tomorrow ight (Wed.) in his perennial touring vehicle, "Springtime for Henry," as the initial bill of John Huntington's Central Florida Drama Festival, at the local highschool auditorium.

Can. Repertory Theatre Preps Spring Road Tour

Ottawa, Jan. 15.

Canadian Repertory Theatre, which does a full season of stock in Ottawa, will tour for two weeks when it closes here May 17. Tour, first in its three-year career, will cover mostly one-nighters in the Ottawa area, after 35 straight weeks in the city.

CRT's Christmas-New Year season offered three recent English plays, two of them too British to have any U. S. hopes. These are "On Monday Next," by Philip King, and "The Happy Family," by Michael Clayton Hutton.

Third play, M. J. Farrell's and John Perry's "Treasure Hunt," which was a London hit, has a wacky middle-aged femme as chief character—a gentle screwball with a European-type train compartment in the living room. Plot, about an old, proud but destitute Irish family taking in a trio of English folk as paying guests needs developing, in more solidly humorous fashion. The lead was excellently played by CRT's Amelia Hall.

Off-B'way Show

Spippin House

(PROVINCETOWN PL'H'SE, N.Y.)

The new comedy by Ted Tiller, which the Drama Troupers are currently presenting at the Provincetown Playhouse, is a dispirited potpourri of all the cliches of the madcap family type of comedy. The author's scripting has a desperate air when, after presenting the Spippin family with a crisis in the first scene, in the visit of the two awful female relatives of Mrs. Spippin who suddenly descend upon them and abuse their hospitality for three acts, he rings down his final curtain on the delivery of a telegram announcing the impending visit of a pair of Mr. Spippin's relatives.

None of the actors should be blamed for not being able to make this stuff amusing, although the obviously more experienced Anne Ives as a comic maid achieves better results by attacking her lines less broadly than the others.

Trade Slant

regarded as being a sporting gesture.

The reviews of the two actresses generally bore out the contrasting reaction of the trade. Thus, Miss Rogers got predominantly friendly personal notices, while Miss Swanson received mostly personal pans. The difference in the critical reaction to the two stars seemed not so much in the actual opinions of their respective performances, but more a matter of tone.

According to inside sources, members of the "Love and Let Love" cast and representatives of the management remained on excellent terms with Miss Rogers, and her closing-night party for the company was said to have been very friendly. In contrast, the other actors and representatives of the management of "Nina" are understood to have stayed generally aloof from Miss Swanson.

One or two columnists of the New York dailies ran pieces sympathetic to Miss Swanson, but most of the editorial comment, if any, was cool. The press for the most part was inclined to be generous toward Miss Rogers. Both shows involved were flops.

Fancy Meeting You Again

Chandler Cowles and Ben Segal production of comedy in three acts by George S. Kaufman and Leueen MacGrath. Staged by Kaufman. Features Miss MacGrath, Walter Matthau, Margaret Hamilton, Glenn Langan, Ruth McDevitt, Reynolds Evans. Set and lighting, Albert Johnson; costumes, Kathleen Ankers; production associate, Ann Noyes. At Royale, N. Y., Jan. 14, '52; $4.80 top ($7.20 opening night).

Judge Patterson	Reynolds Evans
Martin Vellabrook	Glenn Langan
Amanda Phipps	Leueen MacGrath
Lucy Bascomb	Margaret Hamilton
Millie	Vera Fuller Mellish
Visitor	Richard Purdy
Sinclair Heybore	Walter Matthau
Mrs. Cornelius	Ruth McDevitt
First Nubian	llsworth Wright
Second Nubian	Earl Jones

An overdose of Kaufmans responsible for a not so fancy evening in "Fancy Meeting You Again." George S. Kaufman and wife Leueen MacGrath wrote the play; Miss MacGrath plays the lead, and Kaufman directed. Su total is a dull, feeble confection lacking in taste, wit and sparkle.

Miss MacGrath is a sculptress who believes she has lived in several incarnations for 5,000 years. Along comes an art critic who blasts her latest opus — and he's the Guy who's been her elusive lover through all these incarnations. Or so she says. Some obvious situations result as the femme tries to pin him down this time, but it's not real comedy. A few cute gags don't compensate for the dull stretches.

Miss MacGrath, very attractive and quite talented, certainly isn't suited for this type of farce comedy, playing it fairly heavily. Kaufman's direction is just as stolid, too.

Walter Matthau manages to keep his equilibrium as the critic-lover, and gives the play more than it deserves. Margaret Hamilton, in one of her infrequent safaris from films, is fairly amusing as the sculptress' secretary, but even sh plays in too even a key. Ruth McDevitt has some funny moments as a fussy head of an art committee who in a onetime incarnation was a bordello madame in Rome. Reynolds Evans is good in the role of a judge and Glenn Langan is handsome and frustrated as the discarded mate. Richard Purdy has a good menacing bit as a heavenly messenger, and Vera Fuller Mellish is amusing as an astringent maid.

Albert Johnson's set is striking and Kathleen Ankers' costumes appealing. The play is not.

Anna Christie

N. Y. City Theatre Co. (George Schaefer, artistic director) revival of drama in three acts (four scenes) by Eugene O'Neill. Stars Celeste Holm, Art Smith, Kevin McCarthy, Grace Valentine. Directed by Michael Gordon; settings and costumes, Emeline Roche. At City Center, N. Y., Jan. 9, '52; $3 top.

Man-at-the-Bar	Lou Gilbert
Johnny-the-Priest	Frank Rowan
Longshoreman	Eli Segall
Longshoreman	Matt Resnick
Postman	Arthur O'Connell
Bartender	Jerry Paris
Chris Christopherson	Art Smith
Marthy Owen	race Valentine
Anna Christopherson	Celeste Holm
Mat. Burke	Kevin McCarthy
Johnson	Robert Anderson

This Eugene O'Neill success, which Pauline Lord made a hit in the 1921-22 season, proves somewhat dated in form and attitude, but contemporary in vigorous characterization and emotional impact. Despite all its imitators have done to over-familiarize it in the 30-year interim, it remains absorbing and compelling drama. Moreover, it is admirably presented by the City Center staff and excellent cast.

Having already demonstrated her musical comic talent on the stage, Celeste Holm proves a convincing dramatic actress in this first serious part on Broadway since the memorable bit she played in "Time of Your Life," in 1939-40. With commendable directness and lack of bombast, she makes O'Neill's soiled heroine a plausible figure. If the performance has limited depth, it offers compensations in its quiet intensity and in various poignant touches.

As her father, the blundering old former salt water sailor with a fanatical awe of "dat old davil" sea, Art Smith presents a neatly dimensioned characterization, although his Swedish accent sometimes blurs his lines. Grace Valentine is both amusing and touching as the likeable old waterfront belle. And Kevin McCarthy is believeably rugged as the muscle-brained hero, Mat Burke. There are also competent bit portrayals by Jerry Paris, Lou Gilbert, Frank Rowan and Arthur O'Connell.

Michael Gordon has staged the play expressively, making eloquent use of music for backgrounds and scene-setting, and Emeline Roche's scenery and costumes are a triumph of imagination over budget limitations.

Plans to Syndicate Winchell Series

New York Post, which last week started an "expose" series on columnist Walter Winchell, plans to syndicate it via the Post-Hall Syndicate. Paper's circulation has picked up about 35,000 copies daily, it's reported.

Meanwhile, the N. Y. Mirror, Winchell's home base, has made no formal recognition of the Post's blasts, except to install streamer headlines above its nameplate that read, "There's Only One Walter Winchell," "Everybody Reads Walter Winchell."

Goodman New Time Pic Critic

Erza Goodman has been tapped as the new film critic for Time magazine. Goodman, who until recently was columnist for the Los Angeles Daily News and who has done freelance flacking and feature articles on Hollywood, starts on the mag around Feb. 1.

He replaces Lester Bernstein, who transfers to Time-Life's Rome bureau end of the month, after two years in the reviewing post.

Hy Gardner's Column Revision

New York Herald Tribune will greatly step up its coverage of "hard news," from Hollywood, as differentiated from speculation and gossip, at the same time that it institutes a format revision on Hy Gardner's "Early Bird on Broadway" column.

Starting Jan. 28, Gardner's stint will be retitled "Early Bird Coast to Coast" with more items on film folk and pix. Although the column has covered Hollywoodites in the past, the proportion of pic items will be increased by the H-T's dispatching of Joe Hyams to the Coast as Gardner's legman. Hyams has been working for Gardner in Gotham.

In addition to gathering material for Gardner, Hyams will cover the Coast film scene for the daily, wiring in stories to compete with those Tom Pryor does for the rival N. Y. Times.

Buchwald's N. Y. Column

Art Buchwald, who writes a "Paris After Dark" column for the Paris edition of the New York Herald Tribune, will also do a pillar for the New York edition. It will be syndicated by the H-T in the U. S.

Column will appear three times a week under the label "Europe's Lighter Side." Parts of it will be picked up from the Paris script and other parts specially written. While Buchwald will continue to headquarter in Paris, he'll do considerable traveling to get in other continental flavor.

The 29-year-old columnist is currently in New York on a three-week visit. He's a former Paris Variety mugg.

'Emily & Mabel' Cartoons

"Emily And Mabel," book of cartoons based on Emilio (Mike) Angelo's daily series in the Philadelphia Inquirer, is being published and distributed this week by the Inquirer as a circulation stunt. After that, the John C. Winston Co. takes over the $1 paperback for national distribution. Winston also published Angelo's previous cartoon book, "Just Be Patient," a series on medicos and hospitals. Tome, issued in September, has sold over 25,000 copies so far.

Angelo, who also appears on TV in Philly (WFIL) as a cartoonist, is in N. Y. prepping details with scripter Beth Brown for a tele show based on "Emily And Mabel." Duo are spinsters on a steady search for a male.

Agnes de Mille Lets Hair Down

Agnes de Mille's "Dance to the Piper" (Atlantic-Little, Brown) is one of the most graphic show biz books of the season. It's a warm, rich, bitter autobiography, as compelling for its bluntness and revelations as for its scope and characters. The book roams from films and legit to modern dance and ballet, and back again to the theatre, for an absorbing chronicle. Scripting, too, is firstrate; Miss de Mille tells her story with the skill of a novelist.

Granddaughter of economist Henry George, daughter of Broadway playwright-Hollywood director William C. de Mille, niece of director Cecil B., a girl who grew up among entertainment world greats, Miss de Mille found her connections a hindrance rather than aid to a career. This is the poignant recital of her unsuccessful struggles to establish herself as solo dancer in the U. S. and Europe; her trials as Broadway dance stager, and the more successful years as ballet creator ("Rodeo") and Broadway dance director ("Oklahoma," "Brigadoon," "Bloomer Girl," etc.).

Of particular trade interest are the study of early filming days in Hollywood; her sharp portrait of uncle Cecil B.; how the late Charles B. Cochran took her over in London; her first failure in N. Y. legit, staging the dances for "Flying Colors." Especially vivid and harsh is the chapter on the launching of the Broadway musical, "Hooray For What," with the brawling among actors, writers, directors and management, etc.

There are fascinating portraits of Charlie Chaplin, Geraldine Farrar, Elinor Glyn, Pavlova; tributes to Martha Graham, Marie Rambert, Antony Tudor, Rodgers & Hammerstein; especially a book-length orchid to her incredible, intrepid mother, who shepherded her through the long grim days trying to launch a stage career. There's a provocative chapter on ballet and sex. The world of ballet gets a long going-over, perhaps one-sided but certainly pin-pointedly, and one gets a first-hand history of the dance in America, as well as a vivid, varied slice of show biz Americana. Bron.

'51 'World Communications'

According to newly-published "World Communications," put out by UNESCO at $2.50, the United Kingdom stood first in daily newspapers sold per 1,000 inhabitants in 1951, with 624. Runners-up in the first five were Norway, 464; Australia, 455; Sweden, 416, and the U. S., 354. Israel was a surprise sixth with 235 and Japan stood seventh with 224.

In film productions per year, India's 289 total was second to the U. S.'s 450, and rankings of the next five, in this order, were Japan, Italy, France, German and U. K.

The widest disparity shows up in television sets per nation. The U. S. figure is 13,400,000 and U. K.'s second place is 1,000,000. After that it's a stragglers procession, third going to Soviet Russia with a "believed to have" 50,000 receivers, and France rates fourth with 30,000. On basis of total populations as roughly computed by Variety, the American figures represents about 9% (of 150,000,000) and the U. K. about 2% (of 53,000,000). Hence, while the U. S.'s total units sold or in operation are more than 13 times that of Great Britain, the percentage gap on saturation is only a little more than four times.

The Soviet set distribution, while highly "unofficial" as a figure, would amount to about 1/38th of 1% of the 192,000,000 population, latter taking in the whole Union plus its "acquisitions." The French statistic gives it a rating of about 1/14th of 1% of 42,000,000 population.

'Yankee Priest'

Rev. Edward F. Murphy, author of "The Scarlet Lily" and a member of the Lambs, is the first to hit the 1952 bookstalls with a volume that seems tailor-made for the current biopic cycle. It's called "Yankee Priest" (Doubleday $3.50) and covers a life time of a Going-My-Way sort of career between Salem, Mass., where he had to split the billing of his natal day with a tenement house fire, and New Orleans, where he is now professor of philosophy at Xavier University and somewhat a thorn in the side of the "white supremacy" gang.

Book has some hilarious stuff on his dealings with those in show biz. Scul.

Argentina Publishing Woes

Cost of books and magazines is soaring in Argentina, where currency restrictions and government suspicion make it hard to import foreign publications. Publishers issue reasonably cheap translation of the world's output of books by famous authors, but whereas six years ago these translations were within the reach of all classes, their cost is making them prohibitive for most today.

In the past month the prices of daily newspapers also has been doubled. Newsprint curbs have forced newspapers to cut down on circulation, and venders have only a limited number of newspapers and magazines for distribution.

Buenos Aires publishing firms, which 10 years ago were doing flourishing business with all the other Latin-American countries, now find themselves stymied by the paper shortage and currency difficulties. The increased costs are making it hard for many to keep in operation. Prices of paper and printing materials have increased by 90% in the last couple of years, while wages have been quadrupled.

Phonevision

Zenith will have no recourse against regular home viewers, who will pay the proposed $1 fee to have the phone operator unscramble the PV signals and then possibly invite their friends and neighbors in to witness the show, ither on a "share-the-cost" basis of for free. According to the exhibs, several instances occurred during the PV tests last spring of Zenith's "guinea pigs" charging their friends who drop in to see their show.

Number of Chi houses equipped for big-screen video, which would be necessary for the exhibs to carry out their scheme, is presently about five. But a number of others have already put in orders for the equipment, while another group is awaiting results of the first showing in this country of 20th-Fox's Eidophor system before inking with any other big-screen manufacturer. In addition, it's reported that Trad-O-Vision, which is offering a low-cost theatre TV system, has been pitching hard in the Chi market and might have a number of deals lined up. Exhibs feel that it would not take too many theatres, if they were strategically located around the city, to put PV out of business.

Zenith, for its part, will undoubtedly be forced to make stick a ban against any PV customer charging an admission fee for its shows. For that purpose, the company has the experience of theatre TV itself to count on. While no actual test case has been heard, sports promoters, or networks that have carried some sports events on an exclusive basis for home video, have been able to prevent any theatres from picking up those events for use via their big-screen systems.

SCULLY'S SCRAPBOOK

By Frank Scully

Hollywood, Jan. 10.

The expense I give myself trying to save a buck. Take that pitch Jerry Lewis made for the victims of muscular dystrophy on M & L's recent Colgate Comedy Hour. I tried telephoning congratulations to them at the El Capitan Theatre (which NBC is leasing from Archbishop McIntyre), but the house hasn't had a phone since Ken Murray checked out.

From NBC's switchboard operator I learned M & L had dressing rooms at the studio. In fact, she was sure they were there by now. But their line was busy . . . still busy. So I decided to compose a telegram. However, by the time I had got the prose up to my own high standards (which is pretty hard to do on Sundays) the comics had left for a round of the niteries.

The next day, still determined not to let my thanks die on the vi , I traced them to the Par lot. Though it was the day before New Year's, they were working. They were hilariously lousing up the high calling of paratroopers in a picture currently tagged "Jumping Jacks."

I could, of course, have sent my billet doux by special delivery for 18c, but considering the day I figured that no courier, even if sober, could be trusted to get through the traffic congestion. So I decided to drive over to Par myself and maybe pick up some cutrate gas on the way.

Hal Wallis was on the set, but Walter Seltzer was in his office. We arranged for him to meet us.

As we neared the Par publicity entrance a guy was standing nearby. For New Year's Eve, he looked like a crestfallen dreamboat.

"You look like an actor," I said. He was. He turned out to be Tony Curtis, whose home lot is Universal. He had a day off and tried to crash the Par lot to see Jerry Lewis. He told the cop he and Lewis were old friends. In fact, Lewis had been best man at Curtis' wedding to Janet Leigh. Nevertheless, the cops had given the interloper the old heave-ho.

As president emeritus of Gate-Crashers Local No. 7 (the lucky one), I decided this brushoff needed a retake.

This One Is The Tony?

"Get in the back seat," I suggested. "Maybe you'd better lie on the floor. Alice will drive us through the DeMille gate, and then when we're out of sight of the cops you can sneak around the stages to your old pal."

We let him off inside the lot and a block from where the M & L crew were working. It took us about five minutes to find a parking space and as we neared the spot where Norman Taurog was directing Lewis, a GI came up to us. He looked familiar. It was Curtis! He had wrangled a uniform out of wardrobe and had changed faster than a protean artist.

Lewis was doing a scene which required him to walk past a servicemen's club, stop and decide to go in. As Lewis walked in, Curtis walked out.

Lewis stopped dead, let out the wildest whoop of his repertoire and just about went nuts with delight.

"You know," he said, after he calmed down a bit, "I looked down and thought, 'This guy's pants are too short for him' and then I saw it was you!"

He turned to Messrs. Wallis and Taurog. "Say, why can't we shoot it this way? Why can't Tony play it?"

Hal Wallis knew why. Curtis was a Universal property. There would be the devil to pay if he played without a signed release. As far as the Par records showed he wasn't even on the lot officially as a visitor.

"Well, why can't he walk on with me, with his back to the camera?" Lewis wanted to know.

"Tony's hair is too long for a GI."

"Okay, so we'll give him a haircut," suggested Lewis.

But Tony was having none of that horseplay.

After a shot was okayed (the one with Curtis, I prophecy, will never get beyond the cutting room floor) it seemed about time for me to get into the act.

Lewis was talking to Taurog again.

"Jerry Lewis?" I cut i "I'm Long John Silver, sheriff of Kern County. I have a subpoena for you."

I handed it to him. Deadpan. He played it deadpan, too. Subpoenas are a serious and frequent thing in his life.

"May I open it?" he asked.

"Sure," I said.

He opened it. It read:

"I WANT TO THANK YOU FOR THE GREATEST GIFT RECEIVED IN YEARS—YOUR PITCH FOR THE VICTIMS OF MUSCULAR DYSTROPHY LAST NIGHT ON THE 'COLGATE COMEDY HOUR.' MAY YOUR REWARD IN 1952 BE THE BEST YOU'VE EVER HAD, FRANK SCULLY."

He looked at me. He said nothing. For a minute he doodled around with the document and then put it back in the envelope. He didn't know where to put it. Dean Martin wasn't around anywhere.

I had meant to thank Hal Wallis for cleaning up "Sailor Beware" and particularly for taking my name out of the original script. That was a sore point in the Scully dynasty.

When "Sailor Beware" began slumming on Broadway 18 years ago, My Sis and a friend from the Women's University Club bought a pair of balcony seats. Being Theatre Guild sureseater sort of people, this foc'sle stuff had them blushing as if by mistake they had wandered into Minsky's.

Cradle-Shopping, Table-Hopping—Quelle Biz!

But the topper came in the second scene when some bagslingers in a Panama pub began reading a three-week-old issue of the New York Mirror. Hazel was reading Winchell. Another dame named Ruby sauntered in and began reading over Hazel's shoulder. What she read startled her. It seems the Scullys were cradle-shopping.

There was nothing libelous this. Actually we were. "Sailor Beware" opened in New York on Sept. 28, 1933, and Sylvia Frances Scully was born at the New York Hospital on Oct. 21, 1933. So we were cradle-shopping during the opening weeks of this bawdy show. We

But birth announcements through the medium of bawdy Broadway

But birth announcements through the medium of baudy Broadway shows was not in the New England tradition. As aired i "Sailor Beware" it floored my Sis. At the end of the act she and her friend managed to sneak out a side exit of the Lyceum Theatre and never went back to see how Messrs. Kenyon Nicholson and Charles Robinson resolved the problem of the sex-life of sailors on leave.

Naturally with this skeleton in the family closet I was curious to see how Hal Wallis had cleaned up "Sailor Beware." He did it very well. Normally when Dean Martin is talking to a wench and Martin says to Lewis, "Three's a crowd," it is Lewis' cue to say, "Okay, Hazel, get lost." "Sailors Beware" has that sort of sudsing and, brother, it must have needed three rinses.

In his version Hal Wallis took the gobs off the U.S.S. Dakota and put them in a submarine. Then they submerged, with Lewis hanging on to the periscope. That cleaned up the original dialog so that even my Sis could have enjoyed it. Too bad she isn't around to see it.

However, little Sylvia Frances can catch the new version. She's the one referred to in the play version. She's now a freshman at Smith. I suppose they have picture houses at Hamp. I must tell her to applaud especially loud for Jerry Lewis, the one who made the pitch for the victims of muscular dystrophy—the kids who can never grow up to be famous like Lewis, because m.d. kills all its child victims in childhood.

the "availability and sale of such time periods will in no way affect ABC's impartial news and public forum coverage of the political campaigns or of the national nominating conventions."

War Chest Counts

The same "equal time and facilities" provision still holds true, but henceforth if the supporters of Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, Gov. Earl Warren, Sen. Robert A. Taft or Harold E. Stassen—the four Republican nominees projected thus far—want to take the stump via ABC's NBC's cream video facilities, it remains simply a matter of which one has the biggest TV war chest in penetrating the medium.

Thus the "Friends of Eisenhower," who have already scheduled their first NBC-TV show from Madison Square Garden, N. Y., on Feb. 8, may, with a sufficiency of funds, be in a position to dwarf the number of programs scheduled on behalf of the other candidates. For if another candidate wants equal time and an equal spread, he can have it—but only if he can pay for it.

The NBC reversal, part of an overall political programming pattern for the network completed only this week by veepee William F. Brooks and presented for final approval to prexy Joseph H. McConnell, was dictated primarily by the economics attending television and the soaring costs of time and programs.

Back in 1948, at the last general election, there was no problem. There were plenty of sustaining periods and no worries about preemption. As for radio, there was always a sufficiency of sustaining slots, particularly in so-called "fringe" segments, to take on all comers on a cuffo basis. Also, even if it involved preempting regular shows, the costs were little compared to TV today.

But NBC-TV is riding wide and handsome these days with its SRO status. There is no open time, and to preempt a show for a political candidate not only means a rebate on the time, but also for the program. And today a program could not only mean straight acting talent, but choreographers, dancers, scenic designers, etc. A handful of such rebates in order to cuffo political candidates, NBC reasoned, and the network would be operating in the red once again.

Similarly, a factor in both the NBC and ABC decision at such an early date (since the conventions don't start until July) is the stepped-up tempo of the campaigning, which, in previous general elections, seldom began to take on such excitement and interest until April or May at the earliest.

The decision of ABC to make commercially sponsored time periods available prior to the conventions, according to Thomas Velotta, veepee in charge of Radio News and Special Events, and John Madigan, director of Television News and Special Events, was based on "the intense interest in this year's election, the number of announced and potential candidates for the nation's top office, and the multiplicity of groups favoring various candidates who wish to utilize radio and television in furthering the interests of their favorites. Requests from groups supporting two candidates to purchase time periods on the ABC networks have been received."

Kramer. It's about time a bold, strong move was made to protect the industry and individuals in it who are slandered and attacked by irresponsible sources. I offer my personal support."

Eric Johnston, MPAA president, issued a statement in support of Kramer's action and promising any assistance he needs in the battle. He said:

"This is a policy which the whole industry will pursue with vigor. Our industry never objects to honest criticism but we do resent false attacks. One of the things of which Hollywood is proudest is the fact that in none of the investigations has there been any evidence of Communist propaganda in motion pictures. It is proud of its Americanism."

Probe Red Infiltration Of SWG in '45 Strike

Hollywood, Jan. 15.

House Red probers will dig into the extent of Communist infiltration of the Screen Publicists Guild during the 1945 film strike at hearings starting Monday (21) in Washington. There will probably be eight witnesses from Hollywood, including some "repeaters," from prior hearings.

Hollywood is only one item on the committee's agenda at both the upcoming Washington hearings and scheduled February sessions on the Coast. Film testimony will be sandwiched in with reports on waterfront and defense plant activities to wind up "odds and ends" of the Hollywood probe.

It's understood that both Gilbert Miller, producer of the shows, and Billy Rose, owner of the Ziegfeld, have been involved in the negotiations. Rose is also identified with the NBC video operation as a consultant, which may give that network an edge. On the other hand, it's reported that CBS' Williams S. Paley and Olivier enjoy a relationship that could throw the deal in Columbia's favor.

network to the Midland and the north, there has been a growing demand for more program time. There will be more vigorous demand when the first Scottish station is launched in the next three or four months. Different habits, particularly in the north, have led to an agitation for an earlier start of night shows. With their slashed schedules, the BBC, which already subsidizes TV from its radio earnings, hasn't the resources to expand its programs. Hence, if the demand is to be met, it can only be done through some form of sponsorship.

When Winston Churchill and other members of the Cabinet return from their current U.S. huddles, the government will determine its radio and TV policy, probably for the next 15 years. That there is an inherent British objeetion to any form of sponsored broadcasting is widely recognized. Despite this natural reluctance, the government may consider that advertising programs will most readily solve difficult and complex problem.

to cast the pic. It wanted Gene Kelly, who was starred in the show, but his success in it resulted in his getting inked by Metro. M-G consistently refused a loanout deal and, in turn, tried to buy the property from Col for its own production with Kelly. Col prexy Harry Cohn preferred to keep the property on the shelf to selling under such circumstances.

Still unable to get Kelly, possibility is now seen of Cohn starring Harold Lang, who is in the current Broadway version. Kelly, in any event, has commitments that will keep him busy for 18 months.

Col paid $75,000 plus a percentage of the net for the property. Contract also included clauses giving Col options on the services of John O'Hara, who did the book, and George Abbott, who produced it. If exercised they'd have run the total price up to $200,000. Present version has been produced by Jule Styne and Leonard Key in association with Anthony Brady Farrell.

Chemical Bank Now Leasing Films, 10 Foreclosed Pix Going to WCBS-TV

In what's believed to be the first time that a bank has turned over to television a group of feature pictures it has financed and then foreclosed, the Chemical Bank & Trust Co., N. Y., leased a package of 10 such films this week to WCBS-TV, key station of the CBS video web in N.Y.

In disclosing its leasing of the films to WCBS-TV, a spokesman for the bank said his organization "now recognizes TV as an added source of motion picture revenue." He emphasized, though, that the bank is not entering the film syndication business. Pix have been turned over to TV Exploitation, Inc., new indie distrib outfit, for syndication. Law firm of Gettinger & Gettinger is the principal partner in the outfit.

Most of the films involved were produced by indies. Among the titles are "Texas, Brooklyn and Heaven," "Crooked Way," "Inner Sanctum," "Lovable Cheat," "Four Days' Leave," "Blonde Ice" and "Sofia."

Price of the films has been withheld but, based on previous film purchases made by the station, it's believed the bank obtained about $2,000 on each of the pix for a one-shot screening. That would give the bank about $20,000 out of the N. Y. market alone for the package of 10. If it decides to syndicate the pix to other stations around the country, it's estimated that it could clear several hundred thou-

Top-Coin Campus Bookings Presage '52 Band Biz Boom

Anticipation of a band biz upbeat this year by agency execs has been buttressed by the growing demand for orchs to play college prom dates. Although campus bookings had fallen off during the post-war period, the large number of colleges that have come back into the dance fold during the current semester is seen having an important role in changing the overall band picture. Ballroom promoters are also viewing the campus upbeat with enthusiasm because they feel that the revived interest in undergraduate dances will carry over into their setup.

According to Howard Sinnott, one-niter department head of General Artists Corp., many colleges and universities have increased their prom budgets under pressure from the student body. Institutions which had dropped prom affairs entirely or had gone in for local orchs are again opening their dances to agency properties.

Agencies attribute the revived interest in dance dates on the college level to the fact that young collegians have again taken over campus activities. During the post-war years the undergraduate crowd

Video Exhibitors Eye Conventions As Coin-Getter

While theatre television execs are working on several entertainment projects to bolster the relatively small number of top sports events available, they are also eyeing the industrial and public service uses of big-screen video as potentially lucrative fare. By renting their theatres in the morning hours to manufacturers for mass sales meetings and to others for convention purposes, stockholders meets, etc., TV exhibitors believe they may find a way for the first time to produce revenue in the non-boxoffice parts of the day.

Such uses of big-screen TV to date have been confined to the mass Civil Defense meetings staged for CD workers in Washington and New York. For these, of course, the participating theatres did not charge, and they plan

FREE BREAKFAST AS COAST AUDIENCE LURE

Hollywood, Jan. 22.

CBS-TV will shell out for coffee and doughnuts on cross-the-board basis in an attempt to lure a studio audience for its Al Pearce show, which is slated to preem Feb. 11. Show will originate live from the Coast at 7:45 a.m. Hollywood time, and web execs think the offer of a free breakfast will be a requisite to get an audience in off the streets.

Because of its 7:45 a.m. air time (10:45 a.m. in the east), Pearce and the rest of the cast, along with the production crew, will be getting to the studio at 6:30 each morning for a camera runthrough. Show will be the earliest on a Hollywood to N. Y. basis, since NBC-TV's "Dave 'n' Charley," that web's earliest, tees off each day from the Coast at 8:30 a.m.

TREND IS AWAY FROM MIDCITY

By NED ARMSTRONG

St. Louis, Jan. 22.

Close examination of a number of important road cities reveals a hidden factor which may be contributing heavily to the decline of theatregoing in these cities.

America's great inland urban centres are moving away from themselves. A major shift in the population centre of gravity has occurred in recent years, and the great residential areas, formerly close to downtown, have gone out to the country.

The residential tide in these cities has gone out and left many famous old theatres, such as the Cass in Detroit and the Hanna in Cleveland, beached in the traffic-congested, business, non-dwelling heart of the city. The theatre is now an hour or more from the new suburban residential communities which have been built five, 10 and 20 miles distant from "the loop." After 7 p. m. the downtown city streets of Detroit and Cleveland are virtually empty. The new city has gone home, miles away from its daytime centre of activity.

And, by ironic and perhaps significant circumstance, not only is the former bright-light area of such cities as Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Detroit and St. Louis now dark at nightfall, but the immediate vicin-

Hillman's Scoop On Truman Diary

Marking the first time that a U. S. President has allowed his private papers and diaries to be made public while he is still in office, Farrar, Straus & Young will publish a book on President Truman March 18 which is based on his diaries and correspondence. Titled "Mr. President," the book has been written by William Hillman, Mutual Broadcasting correspondent in Washington. According to the publisher, Hillman scooped the D. C. press corps by obtaining not only the papers but a series of private interviews with the President.

In his preface to the book, Hillman quotes Mr. Truman as saying that he is making the material available at this time because "I want the people to know the Presidency as I've experienced it and to know me as I am." Hillman, to avoid charges of favoritism or prejudice, has been non-selective in his choice of material. Only restrictions set on the diaries and papers is that they carry only through 1949 and are subject to the usual security regulations.

Hillman also managed to take a photog in for his interviews with the President. As a result, the

NBC Not Surprised at Press Brushoff Of 'Today' as News Encroachment

Fact that the dailies around the country haven't taken too kindly to NBC's new 7 to 9 a.m. "Today" TV show, which premiered last week with considerable fanfare, doesn't particularly come as a surprise to the web brass. Newspapers' major criticism is aimed at the program's attempt to project the news.

Even before the early-morning TV show went on the air, the dailies were beginning to get in their digs, one Coast paper a couple weeks back indulging in some excoriating verbiage on the grounds that NBC's video chieftains were venturing into "stupidities."

NBC firmly believes that the press in general is out to knife the show as an encroachment on the newspapers' primary function as a communications medium. Within the past couple of weeks, the web press department had been lamenting the fact that it was becoming increasingly difficult to either get into the listings or make an impressionable dent on pictorial-editorial space, because of the show's major accent on delivering the morning news and feature events to waker-uppers.

The New York City TV reviewers were practically unanimously "thumbs down" in their reaction toward the show and with but a few isolated cases, such as one daily in Cleveland and another in Washington, the TV eds throughout the country went on a panning crusade.

TV Sponsor Catches Boat On So. California Flood

Cinderella Girl Of '52, Roz Cleaning Up in 'Bell' Tour

Pittsburgh, Jan. 22.

There's every reason to believe that Rosalind Russell will wind up the legit Cinderella Girl of 1952. Film actress, who has taken to the road for a few months in last season's Broadway hit, "Bell, Book and Candle," which originally starred Lilli Palmer and Rex Harrison, has been grabbing close to $5,000 a week for herself since the tour got under way. Advances in other cities indicate that she will do as well or better until a halt is called in May, so that Miss Russell can begin a new picture, "Never Wave at a Wac."

Miss Russell's deal with producer Shepard Traube, sponsoring the John van Druten comedy, calls for 15% on the first $20,000 and 20% thereafter, and biz has been averaging almost $30,000 weekly. Take was more than

NEW $37,500 DIVIDEND FOR 'LIFE WITH FATHER'

"Life With Father," already the biggest hit in stage history, has just paid another major dividend. The Howard Lindsay Russel Crouse comedy last week returned $37,500 additional profits, bringing the total net thus far to $1,066,000 on its $25,000 investment. The Oscar Serlin production holds the Broadway record of 3,213 performances, having opened in November, 1939, and playing nearly eight years.

The latest payoff represents more profits for the 1951 calendar year from the film rights, which were sold to Warners on a guarantee and percentage basis. Additional returns are expected next year, principally from the picture's foreign release. Payment of a 150% dividend eight years after a production's original opening is believed to be unique in show biz annals.

Plush Gershwin Festival Set for '53 Longhair Tour With Blessing of Family

An unusual longhair novelty is being offered to local concert managers for next season, under title of the Gershwin Concert Orchestra. Company of 30, including 25 musicians plus vocal soloists and conductor, has the blessings and cooperation of the Gershwin estate and family.

Presentation, which has been put together after a year of involved negotiations with Gershwin family members and various lawyers, and only after certain rigid conditions had been met, is being produced by bandleader-manager Howard Lanin and booked by Columbia Artists Mgt. Ira Gershwin and arranger Robert Russell Bennett have been sitting in steadily as consultants. Although the tour won't start till February, 1953, and no literature has gone out yet, the tour is one-third booked on the basis of phone or personal talks by Columbia with local managers. Surprising amount of these bookings are for colleges.

Also tagged as the Gershwin Festival, the presentation is the brainchild of Andre Mertens, Columbia veepee and head of its foreign department, who also heads the bureau's Mertens & Parmelee division. Mertens, who

Former Commie Tells How Pix Reds Veiled Membership From Each Other

By FLORENCE S. LOWE

Washington, Jan. 22.

A former high Communist Party functionary told the House Un-American Activities yesterday (Mon.) that film industry Reds refused to affiliate with the Los Angeles group, insisting on hiding their identities even from fellow members. In addition, two Screen Publicists Guild members, once business partners, described the "Communist control" of the 1945 studio strikes and the efforts of party leaders to dictate the policies of the SPG.

Max Silver, ex-county organizational secretary for the Communist Party in Los Angeles, told of his efforts to "utilize Hollywood activities and names" in the "anti-Nazi struggle" of the larger unit. He stated that, despite the reluctance of V. J. Jerome, "cultural czar" of U. S. Communists, to consolidate the Hollywood groups with any other, a meeting was held at the home of film producer Frank Tuttle to discuss the matter. Tuttle was not present. Mrs. Tuttle and Mrs. Sidney Buchman, former wife of the Columbia studio exec, participated.

The group voted down joint participation, Silver stated, due to "security reasons because they were not willing to run the risk of having their names disclosed to anyone by working with the Los Angeles organization."

Balance of testimony by Silver, described by a member of the committee staff as "the most important witness we've ever had," was devoted to Communist infiltration into professional and newspaper groups in Los Angeles. He stated, at one point, that the "top number" of Communist Party members in the entire area, including Hollywood, had been 4,000.

Break With Glass

Screen publicists Charles Daggett and George Glass, voluntary witnesses, differed in personal detail in their testimony, but both agreed the jurisdictional strikes of '45 were Communist-inspired and controlled through the conference of studio unions. Daggett, who had previously refused to answer the committee's questions except to state he was not a Communist, made a clean breast of his Red activities against a background of thinly veiled bitterness over a break with his ex-partner, George Glass. He described his return to the party, in which he had been active during the 1937 Seattle Newspaper Guild strike, after a dinner at the home of Ring Lardner, jr., member of the 1947 "Hollywood 10."

All through his description of this dinner and subsequent meetings at the homes of such alleged Communists as songwriter Jay Gorney, scripter Abe Polonsky, and later at the home of attorney Ben Margolis, Daggett included Glass as a companion and fellow guest. He stated they had been asked by Lardner to "join the party to help end the conflict," and agreed to do so. He added that he and Glass entered and left the party together.

In describing the "six to 10" meetings he attended, Daggett admitted he considered himself a party member, though he paid no dues, being then unemployed. He mentioned the following, all pre-

Mein Kampf, Revised

Toronto, Jan. 22.

"There is nothing these people would like better than to bankrupt their target by making them fight the same suit over and over again," was the comment of Fredric March and his wife, Florence Eldridge, here last week during a stopoff in their tour of "The Autumn Garden." The Marches were referring to the Stanley Kramer $1,000,000 libel suit against the Wage Earners Committee for its recent charges of Communism against Kramer and its picketing of his film production of "Death of a Salesman," March, who starred in "Salesman," also came in for a rap from the WEC.

It cost the Marches almost $50,000 in legal fees several years ago to fight the same charges against them, and they eventually won a libel retraction from Counterattack, anti-Red publication, in addition to a clean bill from Congressional probers.

Industry Support Soars For Kramer in Suit On Red Rap by Coast Group

Hollywood, Jan. 22.

Support for Stanley Kramer in his $1,000,000 libel suit against the Wage Earners Committee was voted by the Motion Picture Industry Council, representing 12 industry organizations. Group not only took a stand against "irresponsible" charges of Communism aimed at film companies and personalities, but urged the industry to fight against "malicious and unfounded" picketing of motion picture houses. Official statement said:

"The Motion Picture Industry Council has noted with increasing concern the attacks made by irresponsible groups on the loyalty and patriotism of the motion picture industry, particularly in the unjustified picketing of motion picture theatres and in the distribution of defamatory circulars. It, therefore, resolves:

"That the Motion Picture Industry Council commends Stanley Kramer for his courageous stand in instituting a libel suit against the Wage Earners Committee for the malicious and unfounded picketing of his picture, "Death of a Salesman," and pledges to him our complete support in the action he has taken."

Meanwhile, the Wage Earners Committee filed an answer in Superior Court, denying that Kramer had been damaged by the publication of the WEC pamphlet or that he was entitled to punitive damages. Pamphlet described the producer as "notorious for Red-slanted, Red-starred films."

Truman Requests $170,000,000 For O'Seas Info Setup

Washington, Jan. 22.

An overall, record-breaking $170,000,000 program for the State Department's overseas information program is requested in the President's $85,400,000,000 budget sent to Congress yesterday (Mon.).

The President pictured the new program as including a global shortwave radio network which would even encompass ship-borne transmitters capable of reaching more and more people behind the Iron Curtain and overpowering Soviet "jamming" attempts.

Highlight feature of the giant budget would be $36,727,086 "for the purchase, rent, construction, and improvement of facilities of radio transmission and reception." Another $30,000,000 is asked for the operation of broadcast activities, as distinctive from acquiring new facilities. This is more than $10,000,000 greater than is being spent for the purpose in the current fiscal year which ends on June 30. Another $10,600,000 is asked for the production, purchase and adaptation of documentary films for use overseas.

TVA Reps Huddle UCLA, Cornell Labor Consultants On 'One Big Union' Plan

The five labor unions in Television Authority yesterday (Tues.) held their first meeting with labor relations experts of the Universities of California and Cornell, who are studying possible blueprints on which the unions could merge. While the Screen Actors and Screen Extras Guilds are not in the TVA setup, the film unions are making information available to the college representatives, who will try to come up with a merger plan that could integrate the Coast guilds along with the live talent unions.

Meeting at the N. Y. State School for Industrial Labor Relations were Dean M. P. Catherwood, of the state's Institute for Industrial & Labor Relations at Cornell, and Edgar L. Warren, director of the Institute of Industrial Relations of UCLA, who are directing the study.

Among the labor toppers attending the parley were Louis Simon, Actors Equity; George Heller, TVA; Frank Reel, AFRA; Hy Faine, AGMA; Ben Irving, Chorus Equity; Jack Irving, AGVA; I. B. Kornblum, TVA Coast attorney and other union execs.

Research staffers from the universities will sit in on various union board meetings and will also hold regional meetings to learn the performers' problems. Because this is one of the most complex union mergers contemplated, with 30,000 members involved and much multiple card-holding, one of the first orders of business will be a survey of the memberships.

Colleges are working as a public service, charging only travel expenses and similar items. Report is due before July 1, which TVA has set as a deadline for merger.

Hollywood, Jan. 22.

Graham Greene is due Saturday (26) from Indo-China for final huddles screenplaying his novel, "End of the Affair," which David Lewis will produce. Morris office is pitching it to majors as package, possibly with Jean Simmons and Gregory Peck.

No director is set yet, nor decision whether Greene will screenplay.

Bluenose Aussies Rap 'Moon' Legit, 'Kate' Tunes

Attack of Puritanism seems to be hitting Australia. The legiter "Moon Is Blue," which opened in December and was expected to have a long run, closed down Jan. 5, reportedly due to censor pressure. Trio of cast-members is on its way back to England.

The state-owned Australian Broadcasting Commission has just banned four songs from the musical, "Kiss Me, Kate," as too risque for Aussie audiences. Songs are "I Hate Men," "Too Darn Hot," "Always True to You in My Fashion" and "Brush Up Your Shakespeare."

Both "Moon" and "Kate" are J. C. Williamson Theatres productions. "Kate" hasn't even opened yet, being due to preem Feb. 2 at His Majesty's, Melbourne, and censor's action is problematical. Meantime, however, as a precaution, Dorothy Stewart, Williamson's N. Y. rep, is sending out alternate lyrics, similar to those used in Boston prior to "Kate's" N. Y. opening, when censor trouble arose there.

Rise to $366,000,000 Admish Tax Seen in '52 Via Truman Budget Talk

Washington, Jan. 22.

Government budget-makers estimate the 20% general admissions tax should bring Uncle Sam $366,000,000 in the next fiscal year, which commences July 1, 1952.

The figure, included in the 1,200-page budget which President Truman sent to Congress yesterday (Mon.), indicates Federal experts believe the film theatres will do nearly $1,500,000,000 business, because an estimated 80% of the admissions levy comes from the flicker houses.

The President reported that for the last fiscal year, ending June 30, 1951, admissions tax receipts came to $346,492,000. Estimate for the current fiscal year is $357,000,000.

lives in Westport, Conn., first suggested the project to his neighbor, Frances Godowsky, George Gershwin's sister, with the idea of using her as one of the soloists. (A soprano, she had toured Europe with brother George, giving concerts.)

Gershwin family got interested in the project, as Mertens unveiled it. George Gershwin had toured with Paul Whiteman, but aside from such isolated programs as Gershwin nights at Lewisohn Stadium, N. Y., or Robin Hood Dell, Philly, there's been no such project as this since the composer-pianist died in 1937. Venture is being looked on as a Gershwin memorial, with family therefore taking an unusual interest in the event.

'Classical' Standard

Special orchestra is being assembled for the event, to be conducted by Lorin Maazel, who was a "boy wonder" batonist a decade ago. Soloists will include concert pianist Jesus Maria Sanroma, soprano Carolyn Long and baritone Theodor Uppman. Contract between Columbia and the Gershwins calls for estate and family approval on all matters; specifies the program to be an "all-Gershwin performance on a 'classical' (as contrasted to a 'jazz' or 'popular') basis"; that there be "no dramatic performance of any composition," and the programs to read "by permission of Ira Gershwin and the Rose Gershwin estate."

Gershwin's publishers, Music Publishers Holding Co. and Chappell, have to okay the music and arrangements used. Program, suggested by Ira Gershwin, will run the gamut from pop to longhair despite the "classical" auspices. It will include an overture of w.k. melodies; songs by soprano and baritone; transcriptions for piano; finale of Concerto in F; "American in Paris"; selections from "Porgy and Bess," and the "Rhapsody in Blue."

Tour will run minimum of eight weeks, and may go to 18 if enough bookings eventuate. It will consist of one and two-night stands, with five or six performances a week. It will start Feb. 9, '53, in Pennsylvania, head midwest and northwest, into Canada and back east.

Equity to Stiffen Alien Rules In Rico Rumpus

Replacement of Roger Rico last week as male lead of the Broadway edition of "South Pacific," expected to result in a stiffening of Actors Equity's attitude toward enforcement of its alien rules. It's recalled by members of the union's council that when permission given last spring to import Rico from Paris as successor for Ray Middleton, the management sought the concession on the plea that no American singer was suitable for the assignment. Now, George Britton, American, has been promoted from understudy to take over the part.

With Britton's promotion, presumably at considerably less than Rico's $2,500 a week, a council member suggested privately that the union would actually have been doing a favor to the management if it had refused the requested waiver of the alien rule to permit the employment of the French singer.

"If we'd turned it down," he observed, "they'd have hired an American, probably at much less money, thereby saving the difference and avoiding all the headaches in the ousting of Rico and the $2,500-a-week payoff. But can't you just imagine the howls if we'd done so?"

Under Equity regulations, aliens may not be engaged as replacements, whether the original player is a foreigner or an American.

$90,000 Payoff

Despite Rico's reported statement last week that he intended to bring suit against producers Richard Rodgers, Oscar Hammerstein 2d, Joshua Logan and Leland Hayward for breach of contract, the singer has taken no such action, nor has he filed a protest with Equity. Efforts to reach him for comment have been unsuccessful.

Meanwhile, the management paying him his regular $2,500 a week for the balance of the contract. Since the pact extends through next September, the total payoff will come to about $90,000.

Decision to drop Rico was made by the management after it had been unable to persuade him to step out. When the singer was signed last spring he did not know English, but it was assumed that he could learn to speak it phonetically while studying the language.

There was some delay in his taking over the part, and he had a marked accent when he finally did so. However, instead of improving, his accent became steadily worse and there were growing audience complaints about his unintelligibility. So the management finally decided to replace him, even if it meant paying him off in full.

An angle of the situation is that during the approximately six months he was in the show, Rico missed approximately 30 performances, mostly because of laryngitis. Since Pinza had been out of the cast about 90 times during his 14-month stint, that has revived trade comment as to whether operatic stars are capable of singing eight performances a week and speaking lines, as required in legit.

Larry Adler's 1st Date In Western Hemisphere In 2 Yrs., at Casino, Toronto

Larry Adler will play his first North American date in two years. He's been signed for the Casino Theatre, Toronto, week of Feb. 28. Adler's last date before going abroad was at the Chicago Theatre, Chicago, in January of 1950.

Adler left the U. S. with Paul Draper after a trial of their suit stemming from an accusation of leftist leanings. The litigation ended in a hung jury.

In recent months, Adler has been entertaining troops in Korea.

Vogel Helming Theatres, Schenck Pic Co. After Loew's Divorcement

Joseph R. Vogel, Loew's v.p. and general manager of theatre operations, is expected to head the new domestic exhibition company to be formed upon completion of divorcement. That Loew's prexy Nicholas M. Schenck will continue at the helm of the production-distribution outfit following the separation is regarded as a foregone conclusion. Studio and foreign department officials will continue in their posts, it's anticipated.

Loew's divorcement decree is scheduled to be entered in the N. Y. Federal Court on Feb. 6. Next step will be a vote by stockholders ratification shortly after.

Charles C. Moskowitz, v.p., treasurer and board member, likely will remain with the film company, as will J. Robert Rubin. Rubin is a v.p., director and counsel for the parent outfit and general counsel for Metro. Seen in a top spot with the new theatre company is Leopold Friedman, Loew's v.p. and general counsel.

Also staying on the theatre end, it's believed, are Oscar Doob, general theatre exec; Eugene Picker, film buyer and head of Greater N. Y. theatres; John Murphy, in charge of outside N. Y. houses, and Ben Joel, buyer for the non-N. Y. theatres. Ernest Emerling remains as the circuit's ad-pub director.

Howard Dietz, Loew's v.p. and M-G ad-pub director, is seen continuing in that position.

Revived Pix Interest In B'way Legit at High Fees; Par Eyes 'Banana,' 'Bell'

Hollywood's revived interest in acquiring screen rights to Broadway legiters—and at high prices—is further evidenced this week by preliminary talks on two more shows. They are "Bell, Book and Candle" and "Top Banana."

Paramount has its eye on "Banana," the Phil Silvers musical current on Broadway, and is also interested in "Bell." It is understood Metro and Warner Bros. have likewise indicated interest in "Bell" to Mary Baker, of the Sam Jaffe office, which is repping author John van Druten on the Coast.

Film interest in both properties is unusual aside from the fact that it further marks a switch from the hands-off policy concerning expensive legiters that has been evident for the past three years. In the case of "Bell" there was only the mildest flicker of Hollywood attention while the show was on Broadway with Lilli Palmer and Rex Harrison. That's all changed as result of the smash biz of the current road tour in which Rosalind Russell is starred.

Original asking price for screen rights was $185,000. Miss Baker has set no new figure as yet, but Moni-

Skouras, Others in Amus. On UNESCO Panels

Spyros Skouras, 20th-Fox prexy, will be a panel member in a discussion of "The Mass Media and Community Education" at the third national conference of the U. S. National Commission for UNESCO. Conference will be held at Hunter College, N. Y., from Sunday (27) to Wednesday (30).

In addition to the 20th prexy, participants include Sevellon Brown, publisher of the Providence Journal; Arch Crawford, prez of National Assn. of Magazine Publishers; Dorothy Lewis, coordinator, station relations UN radio, and Davidson Taylor, general production director, National Broadcasting Co. Lyman Bryson, professor of Education, Columbia University, will be the moderator.

Other show biz personalities taking part include playwright Sidney Kingsley, ANTA members Rosamond Gilder and Elizabeth Burdick, and playwright Marc Connelly.

Suggest Industry Short To Extol USO Actor Tours

Suggestion is being made in New York that the industry produce a public relations short on one or more of the player tours for troops in Korea, Alaska, the Aleutians and other spots. Thought is that such a short could not only have great public relations value, but would also be worthwhile commercially.

There are difficulties in clearances with the Army and with various studios to which stars are under contract. Film execs who've pondered the idea feel, however, that these hurdles could be overcome.

See Reappraisal By Studios on Ban Of TV for Players

Major studios' policy banning contract players from TV performances headed for reappraisal shortly, possibly with the result that the tele nix might be somewhat relaxed. Par is said to be ready to lead the way as the result of its discovery of the unexpected popularity of Charlton Heston, who has a top role in Cecil B. DeMille's "The Greatest Show on Earth."

Heston, under his pact with Hal Wallis, from whom Par borrowed him, is contractually free to do TV work. He also was a tele player prior to pix. It's figured that the combination of his appearances in the two fields had accounted for the big public spotlight. Pix alone, or TV alone, could hardly have skyrocketed him to the top in such a brief time, observers feel.

Widespread interest in Heston was pointed up beyond any doubt in N. Y. last week. It came as Paramount's ad-pub department put out some feelers on possible promotion breaks for the actor in advance of the company's release of "Warbonnet." He's the only star in the pic, consequently value of his name will figure largely in the selling.

When the information was passed around that Heston would be available for appearances, the Par flacks were virtually deluged with invitations. Result is that Hes-

US Newsreel Blackout Continues in Rio; Cos. Rely on Gov't Action

American newsreels are continuing their embargo on shipments to Brazil. Yank distribs are making no direct protests on their own against the decree which caused the cessation, but are letting the State Dept. "carry the ball."

Feeling is that the Department, which as far as possible always has refused to take up the cudgels for the industry, has a direct stake in the Brazilian situation. Its information program is more importantly affected than the commercial newsreels.

Meantime, the Vargas government has started to enforce another portion of the recent decree which included the newsreels. It is fining theatres that are failing to fulfill the quota requirement that they play one domestically-made pic for each eight foreign-mades.

Joaquim Rickard, Latin American rep for the Motion Picture Assn. of America, will take off today (Wed.) for Rio in an attempt to ease this portion of the decree. Actually, the objection to it is

TALK $12,000,000 MATTY FOX DEAL

Plan by which RKO would sell 650 pictures to a group eyeing the product for television has been broached on the Coast by Matty Fox, it's disclosed in N. Y. this week. Fox, who's a part owner of United Artists and board chairman and principal stockholder of Motion Pictures for Television, Inc., is now at work on negotiations in Hollywood.

Insiders relate that the talks so far have been based on a purchase price of $12,000,000. Howard Hughes, RKO's controlling stockholder, has indicated willingness to unload the pix library at that price.

If it's wrapped up, the mammoth deal would represent the first major break in the dam holding back important Hollywood films from tele. The report that Hughes is agreeable to the principle of releasing product to the new medium in itself is seen as significant, in view of all other top studios' hands-off policy.

Fox's associates and sources of financing haven't been disclosed but likelihood is that he'd pay off the $12,000,000 mostly as he, in turn, collects from telecasters who license the product. It's said in some quarters that Fox already

Sullivan Seen Campaign Chief For Kefauver

Gael Sullivan, executive director of the Theatre Owners of America, reportedly will serve as campaign chief for Senator Estes Kefauver in the latter's drive for the Democratic Presidential nomination. Sullivan, on his way from New York to a TOA exec board session in Los Angeles, couldn't be reached for comment yesterday (Tues.) on the report.

Sullivan was executive director of the Democratic National Committee in 1947-48, prior to joining TOA. He has been close to the Tennessee Senator for several years. Kefauver, while a guest at a TOA board luncheon at Sullivan's invitation recently, publicly expressed high praise of the TOA exec director.

Davis hopes to return to his headquarters at the end of this week, but may remain longer.

National Boxoffice Survey

Biz Okay Despite Bad Weather; 'Vadis' Again Champ, 'Dreams' Still 2d, 'Model,' 'Poison' Next

Despite unfavorable weather, including low temperatures, snow and rain in many keys, current stanza is shaping okay at the nation's boxoffice. Biz still is being hurt by transport strikes in Toronto and Baltimore. There are few new entries this session but most of these loom strong.

Still pacing the field is "Quo Vadis" (M-G) which continues as champ by a comfortable margin. It again is being closely followed by "See You in My Dreams" (WB) although the latter does not have the advantage of upped scales which prevail for "Vadis" in most locations.

Third money is going to "Model and Marriage Broker" (20th), just getting under way this round. "Another Man's Poison" (UA), also just out, a stout fourth-place winner, hanging up several nice to big sessions. "10 Tall Men" (Col), getting a batch of new bookings this round, is pushing up to fifth position while "Decision Before Dawn" (20th) is slipping from third to sixth slot.

"Favorite Spy" (Par) is taking seventh spot while "Man in Saddle" (Col), fairly new, is winding up eighth. "Detective Story" (Par), although in only a few locations, will be ninth and "Westward the Women" (M-G), 10th.

"I'll Never Forget You" (20th), showing a burst of strength this week; "Lavender Hill Mob" (U), "I Want You" (RKO) and "Tales of Hoffmann" (Indie) are runner-up films in that sequence.

"Room For One More" (WB) shapes as one of the coming strong entries based on two initial playdates. It is fine in N. Y. and smart in L. A. "Scandal Sheet" (Col), also new, is big on initial date at N. Y. Paramount. "For Men Only" (Lip) is light in N. Y., good in Denver and okay in L. A. for first week on release.

"Latuko" (Indie) is rated terrific in its preem week in L. A. "Pandora and Dutchman" (M-G) looms uneven this stanza, with only two good sessions out of five. "Death of Salesman" (Col) shapes big in N. Y. and Boston, and fine in L. A.

"Distant Drums" (WB) is okay in Cincinnati, brisk in Washington and fine in Seattle. "Cimarron Kid" (U) looks oke in Washington. "The Well" (UA) shapes staunch on second Chi week. "Fixed Bayonets" (20th) is mild in K. C. and Seattle. "Capt. Fabian" (Rep) looms nice in Omaha and Louisville.

"Weekend With Father" (U) looks stout in Louisville and nice in Providence and St. Louis. "Japanese War Bride" (20th) is mild in Cincy and fair in Balto.

Nation's B.O.s Fail to Snap Back From Dec. Slump; Weekends Hold Up

Pulse-sounding by Variety of major theatre circuits this week indicates b.o. has failed to snap back from the slide suffered in December. Christmas week and the first 15 days of January saw grosses that were on the whole lower than those of parallel stanzas a year ago.

Biz picked up substantially last June and continued to improve into September. There was a limited spurt in October and November, when the b.o. was as strong or, in some cases, stronger, than the previous year.

December saw a falloff that continued right through the first two weeks of January. Figures haven't all been compiled yet for the past (third) week, but theatremen are not optimistic. Bad weather, which has been a factor right through December and January, was particularly rough during the Jan. 13 week, especially on the Coast.

While figures for the chains vary in different territories, average for the first two weeks of January ap-

Judy, Skelton 'Carnivals' Skedded for Reissues In Wake of Vaude, TV Sock

Acclaim received by Judy Garland for her two-a-day shows at the Palace, N. Y., and by Red Skelton for his video stints has prompted Metro to reissue films of both stars. Billed as a "Judy Garland Carnival" and a "Red Skelton Carnival," pix of each performer will be tested in a single engagement at one Loew house in two different localities, and if successful will be skedded to play the entire Loew circuit.

Double bill of Miss Garland's films is slated to open in about two or three weeks at Loew's State, N. Y., which is just a block away from the Palace, where Miss Garland is currently scoring heavily at the b.o. Originally Loew set "Meet Me in St. Louis" (1945) and "Babes in Arms"

Raibourn Disputes DuMont, Says Par Willing to Sell But DuM Lacks Coin

Washington, Jan. 22.

Contradicting testimony by Dr. Allen B. DuMont, Paramount Pictures tele v.p. Paul Raibourn, who is also a DuMont board member, told the FCC today (Tues.), that Par is ready to make a deal for conversion of its Class B stock in DuMont Laboratories but that Dr. DuMont would not sign the agreement.

Dr. DuMont had testified that Par has been unwilling to relinquish its interest in his company (which the FCC contends is a controlling one), and said that he had offered cash but that Par prez Barney Balaban was opposed to the cash deal for tax reasons.

Raibourn said that while Par would accept coin, Dr. DuMont has always been hamstrung by lack of cash for operating his firm and has felt that capital required to buy out Par's interest—amounting to 25%, and reported to have a market value of over $10,000,000—could better be used for expansion.

Other points Raibourn made were:

(1) Par's relation with DuMont is very satisfactory for the public;

(2) Par could have gained undisputed control of DuM by buying additional stock but refrained because policy has been to leave Dr. DuMont in the saddle;

(3) He confirmed Dr. DuMont's testimony that a deal couldn't be arranged for sale of B stock to outsiders because those interested wanted a controlling interest;

(4) It was Par which suggested that the 4-4 balance of directors on DuM board be changed to 5-3 in favor of DuM, because the amount of B stock, held by Par, remained constant while the A stock had been increased.

(5) Par elected Balaban to the DuM board when it became apparent its investment in the company had assumed major importance.

(6) Regarding the most recent discussions on disposing of Par's

UPT's Microwave Buy-in Reflects Tie Of Electronics, Films

United Paramount Theatres' 50% buy-in of Microwave Associates is viewed as further evidence of the growing ties between the film and electronic industries. Microwave, a Boston outfit which manufactures tubes and component parts, will give UPT a laboratory for experimental purposes as part of its steady move into broadcasting, especially on the television side.

UPT execs emphasized that, despite Microwave's corporate name, the deal has nothing to do with the manufacture of microwave relay equipment for UPT's anticipated closed circuit of theatre TV. Rather, they pointed out, because of the circuit's expansion into video, they wanted a laboratory and manufacturing setup similar to that enjoyed by NBC with its parent RCA company, the DuMont network with DuMont labs, etc.

In addition to its work in theatre TV, UPT also owns WBKB, TV station i Chicago, and is currently seeking approval of the Federal Communications Commission for a merger with ABC. If and when that happens, the theatre circuit will be in the broadcasting business on a full network scale. Dana W. Atchley, Jr., now with UPT, will become prexy of the expanded microwave plant. In addition, UPT execs Leonard Goldenson, Robert H. O'Brien, Simon B. Siegel and Jason Rabinovitz will joi the Microwave board.

Creelman Exits W-T-Sun

Eileen Creelman, film critic and columnist for the New York World-Telegram & Sun, has resigned. She moved over to the paper from the Sun when it was merged with the W-T and has been serving as second stringer to the latter's Alton Cook.

This is the second move of femme pic critics on N. Y. dailies since Jan. 1. At that time, Irene Thirer, who had been out ill for 18 months, returned to the Post, with Archer Winsten continuing in top spot.

Joe Mankiewicz Awaits Story to Start M-G Pact

Joseph Mankiewicz said in New York this week that he'd start work under his new Metro producer-director-writer pact as soon as he and the studio agreed on a property. Meantime, he added, he's about to start writing on a play he has been mulling.

Mankiewicz said that the M-G contract had not been signed yet, but hitches that had developed had been straightened out during a quick visit he made to the Coast for that purpose. Deal calls for three pix in five years, with the proviso that Mankiewicz can do all his writing and whatever other preparation possible in New York.

Metro pact is non-exclusive and Mankiewicz is open to indie offers.

Raibourn Opines Bankers' Par Yen KO'd DuM Deal

Dr. Allen B. DuMont's version, in Federal Communications Commission testimony last week, of Paramount-DuMont stock negotiations, which was refuted by Paul Raibourn before the FCC yesterday (Tues.), was even more extensively contradicted privately by the Par v.p. earlier in the week.

Du Mont testified that his company had offered Par $12,000,000 in 1950 for its DuMont stock, but that it had been turned down. Raibourn told VARIETY that Par had accepted, but DuMont was not able to consummate the deal. He added that was then renegotiated to $6,000,000 cash and notes, again to $3,000,000 cash and notes, and finally to a straight exchange of DuMont "A" and "B" stock, but DuMont still didn't take it up.

Raibourn is v.p. of Paramount and handles its television activities. He is also treasurer of DuMont and a member of its board. He was responsible for the original deal by which Par acquired 29% of DuMont for $164,000 more than a dozen years ago.

FCC's current hearings are in an effort to show that Par exercises control of the TV firm. Both Par and DuMont are endeavoring to prove that Par does not have control, so that they can escape the FCC rule that one licensee can own no more than five stations.

DuMont's testimony that Par nixed a $12,000,000 offer was part of his description of efforts his company made to have Par dispose of its holdings. He said he and Raibourn agreed on the $12,000,000 deal, but when Barney Balaban (Par prexy) got hold of it he kicked it out and the deal collapsed.

DuMont testified further that Balaban wanted added terms put into the agreement which would still have left Par with the same degree of control although it would have parted with 90% of its holdings.

Raibourn, in commenting on the

RKO Admits Swedish Priority to Pic Title

With RKO's Groucho Marx-Marie Wilson-William Bendix starrer, "A Girl in Every Port," scheduled for national release in February, it developed this week that Arthur Davis Associates, a foreign film distributor, has a Swedish import of virtually the same title. Moreover, this entry is also slated for release shortly.

Conferences between Davis and RKO's legal department resulted in an admission from the major that the indie distrib has priority on the title. Meantime, Davis is rushing a print of his picture (a musical) for scrutiny of the N. Y. State censor in order to get the English-titled film on the screen as soon as possible. Pic stars Nils Poppe and Cecile Ossbahr. He later plans to dub the import for TV distribution.

Mary McCall Reps Pix In Military Recruiting

Hollywood, Jan. 22.

Motion Picture Industry Council appointed Mary McCall, Jr., to represent the film industry at a meeting called by Secretary of Defense Robert Lovett in the Pentagon Building this week.

Miss McCall will handle the industry's cooperation in the forthcoming program to recruit women for the armed services.

Par Slowed in Fight On NPA Color TV Ban; MPAA, TOA Join Tiff

Present involvement of Paramount's Washington counsel, Paul Porter, in Paramount-DuMont hearings before the Federal Communications Commission, has slowed the company's fight on aspects of the National Production Authority's ban on color TV. It has also put brakes on Par's intent to swing into production of its Lawrence Chromatic tele tube.

Meantime, both the Motion Picture Assn. of America and Theatre Owners of America have joined in the battle on the color nix as it applies to theatre-tele, and Par may get some help from that quarter. Par intends to resume its own fight full-strength when Porter is free.

Company shortly before the color ban acquired a factory in Stamford, Conn., to make the tubes, which can receive either black and white or tints. It had intended to turn out about 50,000 a year as a spur to other manufacturers to acquire licenses for production. With the NPA boom lowered, plant is being held down to development work. Par doesn't want to build up a backlog which it can't sell now, since improvements are constantly being made and company is afraid that any stockpile will become obsolete.

Par maintains it should be free to make the tubes inasmuch as they require little more in the way of materials than ordinarly b&w jobs.

FLYNN CHARGES FRAUD IN MARSHALL SUIT

Los Angeles, Jan. 22.

Errol Flynn filed a cross complaint against his former partner, William Marshall, who tied up the actor's pay last month with a suit in Superior Court charging failure to pay a promissory note for $25,000. Flynn charged fraud, and asked the court to cancel the note.

Suit involves "Hello, God," a documentary which Marshall produced and for which Flynn gave a $25,000 note to acquire a half interest. Marshall, according to Flynn, represented that he spent more than $50,000 on the film. Actor declares the producer never spent that much, but used a lot of old newsreel footage as a substitute for new film.

Par, Sol Lesser in Deal On French Invention

Paramount and Sol Lesser have made a deal by which Par will work on the development of Pictoscope, coin-saving production device to which Lesser acquired U. S. rights last year. It is a French invention.

Under the Par-Lesser deal, studio will share rights with the indie producer in return for money it is investing in the development process. It is hoped to have it commercially available within the year.

Gadget works something like putting a pair of bifocal glasses in front of the camera lens. While the top part catches the actors performing, bottom gets a card placed a short distance in front of the lens and on which a set or scenery is drawn. Its value is seen for TV, as well as films.

MPAA Compromise Seen Necessary For SIMPP Okay of Spanish Deal

Although Ambassador Stanton Griffis said in Madrid Monday (21) that he expected a new film deal would be signed within 24 hours, it appeared from the attitude of the Society of Independent Motion Picture Producers that the agreement would not win U. S. industry ratification. Pact must be okayed by SIMPP to make it effective.

Motion Picture Assn. of America, after a mixed attitude on it when it was brought back by international department topper John G. McCarthy last September, is now much in favor of it. Ellis G. Arnall, SIMPP prexy, indicated after New York confabs last week that if the MPAA wanted the indies' concurrence, either the majors or the Spanish would have to give way on a deadlocked point. Madrid government has refused to compromise, which leaves it up to the MPAA.

Point at issue is divvy of 100 import licenses allowed under the agreement. Majors get 60 and all other outfits (including indies) that do not have at least five exchanges in Spain get 40 via Spanish distribs. Arnall said indies must be assured a specific number of permits—even if a very small quantity—to maintain their trading position.

In the event the Spanish continue uncompromising, Arnall wants the MPAA companies to guarantee a specific number, just in case they are needed, out of their 60. That proposal is expected to get a loud squawk from the majors, but they'll apparently have to give in if they want to see the agreement effectuated.

Majors like the principal part of the pact because it cuts the cost to them of import permits from about $14,000 to around half of that and puts transactions on an above-board basis.

Griffis has been working with the MPAA in obtaining passage by the Spanish of the deal. His remarks concerning signing within 24 hours were in connection with his announced resignation as ambassador.

See Griffis Active in Pix In Quitting as Envoy

Stanton Griffis, whose resignation as Ambassador to Spain was accepted Monday (21) by President Tfuman, possibly will now take a more active hand in the film industry, trade observers feel. He's chairman of Paramount's executive committee and had been associated with a number of other show biz firms prior to turning diplomat.

Griffis, who is nearing 65, had also been Ambassador to Poland, Egypt and Argentina over the past 10 years. Actual date for his withdrawal has not yet been set.

Film Industry Presses Govt. On TV Tint OK

Washington, Jan. 22.

United action was taken by the motion picture industry yesterday (Mon.) to obtain Government sanction to go ahead with commercial color theatre TV operations.

In a joint request to the National Production Authority, the Motion Picture Assn. of America, Theatre Owners of America and National Exhibitors Theatre Television Committee called for assurance that theatre TV is not covered by Order M-90, which bans production of color video equipment, except for experimental uses. If such assurance cannot be given immediately, the industry requested a conference, such as was given the home TV receiver industry, to present its views. Request was made to Henry H. Fowler, NPA administrator.

Meanwhile, NPA called a second industry conference, tentatively scheduled for Feb. 8, to discuss opposition to its ban on home color receivers. Occasion for the meeting is officially to determine whether the ban is fulfilling its purpose but, it is understood that complaints, principally from Paramount, that the order goes too far, prompted the action. Par has claimed it was given assurance at

STRESS 'NEW' SALES METHODS

Jessel All for Progress

George Jessel in Hollywood last week lifted the lid on the secrecy that has surrounded the nix by the Motion Picture Assn. of America board on a scene in 20th-Fox's "Wait Till the Sun Shines, Nellie." Board looked at the pic in New York on an appeal by 20th from a Breen office nix on the sequence.

Jessel, who produced the pic, disclosed that the cut consisted of a scene showing a rural home equipped with running water, sink, bathtub and toilet. Jessel said object of the scene was to show the progress of the American farmer and devices he is able to acquire to make living easier.

Breen office, however, objected to the dialog. As the panning camera catches the lavatory, one of the players remarks: "That's labor-saving device."

Petrillo Drops 17 of 29 Changes Asked By His Aides, Easing Pact With Pix

Miami Beach, Jan. 22.

Elimination by prexy James C. Petrillo of 17 of the 29 contract changes demanded by his own Coast reps made negotiations here last week of a new agreement between the American Federation of Musicians and the major Hollywood studios a soft touch. Deal for a 15% wage hike and a number of improvements in working conditions was negotiated with company execs in four hours.

(Execs of several of the majors, back in New York this week, agreed that the pact talks had been extremely amiable. They expressed the wish that there should be more union leaders "with the understanding Petrillo has of industry problems—and also with his sense of humor.")

Major company toppers were alarmed at first when their studio labor contacts arrived here from the Coast with a list of the 29 demands that had been served on them. Execs and the 10-man studio contingent spent quite a few hours going over these points and preparing to argue them out with Petrillo the following day.

However, when the session started with the AFM leader, a group of his Coast reps and the union's International Executive Board, Petrillo announced right away that he had eliminated 17 of the demands as unworthy of attention. That left only 12 to be dealt with, of which one concerned basic wages and other various subsidiary items.

Basic wage request for a 15% hike was considered reasonable by the employers, since the musicians had had no increase in almost 5½ years. Contract under which they were working was originally worked out in September, 1946, and had been extended once for

Metro Approves First 'Vadis' Pacts With Indies, Chi's Oriental Included

Metro within the past week approved its first licensing contracts with non-affiliated theatres for "Quo Vadis." At the same time the M-G homeoffice reportedly was deluged with exhibs' bids for the film, with many of the proposed terms in conflict with the company's announced policy. Some bids, for example, came from theatremen in towns of less than 100,000 population through the company specifically announced the pic will go only to exhibs in cities with a population over that figure.

In general, the bids were said to reflect confusion by some exhibs to the extent that the initial playoff of "Vadis" will require more time than originally anticipated. In line with this, some theatre ops also proposed playing the film on a two-a-day basis, whereas M-G already has reported that experience so far shows that a continuous run is preferable. There also has been some misunderstanding on splitting advertising costs.

Non-Loew's spots which have booked the epic with h.o. approval on terms are the Des Moines Theatre, Des Moines, for opening Feb. 2; Carolina; Charlotte, Feb. 10;

Milt Pickman Joins Wald-Krasna as V.P.

Hollywood, Jan. 22.

In making the deal, Pickman sold out his interest and severed his connection with the Felix Ferry-Milton Pickman agency.

Johnston, Prexies Just Pals at Meet In Miami Beach

Meeting of Eric Johnston, prexy of the Motion Picture Assn. of America, with company toppers in Miami Beach last week was convivial and friendly. Any undercurrents were lost in Johnston's expressed desire to get full-swing at once into the industry's domestic problems.

MPAA prez told the assembled execs he was calling off his proposed trip to Uruguay for the film festival there, with a stop in Brazil to look into restrictions recently imposed. Johnston's planned Uruguayan trip, so quickly after returning to the MPAA from Government service, had been a cause of some objection withi the MPAA board.

Huddle, which took place at the home of Metro prexy Nicholas M. Schenck, pretty much took the form of a report by Johnston of a tour of the homeoffices of MPAA member companies the previous week. At that time, Johnston and his staff sought out ideas on means by which the Association could best be of service to its members.

MPAA prexy was asked numerous questions by the execs. They agreed that the Association should get with both feet into such industry problems as exhib antitrust suits, exhibitor relations in general, arbitration, public relations and numerous other subjects.

Accompanying Johnston were Joyce O'Hara, his principal aide, and counsel Sidney Schreiber. Company execs included Schenck, Barney Balaban, Spyros Skouras, Ned E. Depinet, John J. O'Connor, Jack Cohn, Theodore Black and Sam Schneider.

Dietz to Coast Feb. 15 For 'Band Wagon' Film

Howard Dietz, Metro's ad-pub v.p., hops from the homeoffice to the Coast Feb. 15 to begi work on Metro's "I Love Louisa," based on "The Band Wagon," hit legit musical of 1931. Dietz will write new lyrics for the pic in collaboration with Arthur Schwartz, who'll pen the music. Dietz and Schwartz similarly were teamed on the original legiter, which Max Gordon produced.

Arthur Freed, who will produce, returned to the Coast from N. Y. yesterday (Tues.) after a three-week stay.

ALL MAJORS POINT TO MKT. CHANGES

Spate of distrib sales meetings and new merchandising approaches were seen this week reflecting an intensive drive by the film companies to develop new methods of doing business which would be more compatible with the changed market conditions.

Metro has a two-day division managers conclave set to open next Monday (28) in Chicago. Same outfit has announced a plan to award exhibs $1,000 in monthly prizes for top promotion campaigns.

Paramount is following through on last week's N. Y. meeting with two field sessions. Twentieth-Fox called in number of exhibs to discuss merchandising at a homeoffice huddle yesterday (Tues.). Republic is underway with a series of field sessions on sales and promotion. Importance of bigger and better bally is shown in United Artists' plan to build up its ad-pub department with additional personnel.

Call for new techniques was put out last week by both Spyros P. Skouras, 20th's prexy, and A. W. Schwalberg, Par's distribution topper. Part of 20th's overall plan is to have pix ready long in advance of release to allow for maximum time to work on promotion.

Schwalberg's message to the N. Y. division managers' meeting in N. Y. last week was for the sales reps to "stay with" a pic after a booking deal has been closed and seeing to it that a full campaign job is done.

Various of the companies are out to combat numerous distressing situations in current conditions. In many instances films are played off so quickly that the ad-pub campaigns have insufficient time to penetrate. Also, word-of-mouth en-

Pic Co. Chiefs Get Invite by TOA

Film company sales chiefs and ad-pub toppers, in addition to production officials, have been invited to sit in at the windup of the Theatre Owners of America board meeting in L. A. on Jan. 31 for a general discussion of industry affairs. Bids to the conclave were sent out this week by TOA prexy Mitchell Wolfson.

To be chaired by Charles P. Skouras, TOA's board head, conference was called for an exchange of views on difficulties facing all segments of the trade. Ultimate aim is to give each branch a better understanding of the others' problems.

TOA board session, which opens next Monday (28), will take up a wide assortment of subjects, with the spotlight likely to be shared by distrib selling practices and proposals for a system of industry arbitration.

Wolfson also was slated to sit in on TOA's trade practice grievance meeting for exhibs from various southern states opening tomorrow (Thurs.) in Atlanta. However, he was forced to remove this from his sked to work on the board huddle preliminaries. Repping TOA's headquarters will be Dick Pitts, information director. Georgia circuit op E. D. Martin will preside at the meeting.

Schine Would Protect Small Rivals For Additional Time to Divest Theatres

Buffalo, Jan. 22.

Schine Theatre Circuit won additional time to divest theatres under its antitrust decree, by terms of an amendment filed with the trial court today (Tues.) by the Department of Justice. In exchange, Schine has agreed to certain trade practice conditions to protect the position of smaller independent competitors.

Schine still holds seven threatres which were to have been unloaded by June 24, 1951, plus 18 others to be sold by the end of next June. Amendment pools the houses and provides that one-third shall be divested by June 24, 1952, two-third by Dec. 24, 1952, and the remainder by June 24, 1953.

This extra time is hemmed in with certain conditions:

1. Schine circuit must notify the public and real estate brokers no reasonable offer will be refused. Any offer is regarded as reasonable if the price bid, plus the profits of that particular theatre since June 24, 1951, add up to " reasonable offer."

2. If unable to sell houses at reasonable terms, then up to half of them—with court approval—may be leased to exhibitors wh have not been defendants in antitrust suits nor associated with such defendants. Schine must not have a profit-sharing clause in any lease and must sell the property prior to expiration of such leases.

3. In the case of theatres where Schine is leasing the property, such theatres may be sublet but the

Up to Pix to Cash In on Headstart Over TV—Einfeld

While Hollywood's film-makers have scored plenty of ground in enhancing the entertainment values of their product, television has fallen into a rut, Charles Einfeld, 20th-Fox ad-pub v.p., declared in N. Y. yesterday (Tues.). Film industry clearly has the jump on TV and it's up to the trade to cash in on it via enthusiastic bally, he said.

Commenting on TV's problems, the film exec stated that TV has come face to face with the necessity of coming up with "better shows." He added:

"This is the same problem that faced us years ago when we asked for 'better pictures.' I think we have solved this problem because pictures are better. But our job is to inform the public in new and more effective ways of the finer product coming from the studios.

"Right now TV is in a serious way. One of the largest department stores in the country reports that it is selling more radio than television sets, which shows that the public isn't buying television entertainment as it is supposed to be. Let's strike while the iron is hot.

Theatre Network Television, indie outfit booking shows for big-screen video, petitioned the Federal Communications Commission yesterday (Tues.) for permission to participate in the hearings on the assignment of exclusive channels for theatre TV, which are scheduled to kick off in Washington Feb. 25.

Halpern, pointed out in its petition that it is the only firm in the business dealing exclusively in theatre TV and that it is the only one which has networked shows to different big-screen circuits. As a result, TNT said, it's in a position to furnish the FCC with much valuable information on the entire question.

The judgments with interest are i aggregate of $21,000.

African 'Latuko,' Sans Breen, L. of D. Seals, Not For Exploitation Houses

"Latuko," feature-length documentary based upon life and customs of an African tribe of that name, will not be sold to exploitation-type houses, its distrib declared in New York this week. He said it will be restricted to art theatres.

Statement by Irving Lesser, prez of Producers Representatives, which is releasing the film in the U. Pic, now in a highly successful engagement in Hollywood, has also been refused a Breen office seal.

Color picture was lensed in Africa by Edgar M. Queeny, a top exec of the Monsanto Chemical Co., who is turning over profits from its theatrical exhibition to the Museum of Natural History, N. Cinema Amus. Suit Vs. Distribs Into 3d Week

Denver, Jan. 22.

The case of Cinema Amus., Inc., against Loew's, 20th and RKO for $1,000,000 damages, because of claimed inability to get appropriate run and films for operation of the Broadway in 1945-46, has dragged into its third week, with only three witnesses heard to date.

Harris Wolfberg told of his days in distribution and also in the theatre business, and claimed that the Broadway had not shown what he "would call a profit." Asked if the Cinema books had not shown a profit, Wolfberg, Cinema president, said, "if they did it was because a lot of items such as salaries, which should have been charged up, weren't entered on the books."

The other witness has been Sidney Samuelson, Pennsylvania theatreman, who came here to testify as to the desirability of the various Denver first-runs, and Broadway manager John Wolfberg.

Universal has a strong outdoor feature in "Bend of the River." It is a pioneer actioner that combines topnotch values into a picture that should rate a hearty reaction at the ticket window. Pictorial splendor of the Pacific Northwest is advantageously shown in Technicolor, the story is soundly fashioned and the performances, topped by James Stewart's, are excellent.

The screenplay has been ably crafted by Borden Chase to either avoid or freshen the standard ingredients that go with most outdoor dramas. This veering from formula keeps the interest high, and Anthony Mann's vigorous direction makes sure that as much action as possible has been crowded into the footage without sacrificing characterization.

Basic plot line is a simple affair, as lifted from Bill Gulick's novel, "Bend of the Snake." It deals with a band of settlers who make a long, wagontrain trek into the Oregon country to claim the country from the wilderness and the hardships of such pioneering. However, the basic line has been embroidered with fresh touches that include new sets of heavies as the yarn progresses and a logical devolopment that socks suspense with the action.

Stewart is the wagon train guide, leading the settlers into Oregon. He rescues Arthur Kennedy, a former Missouri raider, from a hanging and the latter joins the party for the trek to Portland, where group boards a river steamer for a journey into the back country. The summer passes and promised supplies that are to carry the settlers through the winter do not arrive.

Stewart returns to Portland, finds the town gold-mad and the supplies held up for more money. In a razzle-dazzle melee, Stewart, again joined by Kennedy, makes off with the steamer and supplies. After the water trip, they are set upon by Howard Petrie and his men, who are trying to recover the goods. Kennedy's greedy side comes out when he sees a chance to sell the supplies, at a high profit, to miners, but again Stewart is able to master the situation and get the food to the settlement.

There's an Indian raid on the wagon train, but handled differently than might be anticipated. This time, Stewart and Kennedy venture out at night to pick off the small group of marauders one by one in a suspenseful sequence. The other assorted action setups are also brought off with the same kind of fresh touches.

Stewart's handling of his role has the punch he displayed in that former successful outdoor feature, "Winchester 73." Kennedy socks his likeable heavy role. Julia Adams fulfills romantic demands of her top femme role, and Rock Hudson pleasantly projects the part of a young gambler who joins the settlers.

Jay C. Flippen, head of the pioneer group; Stepin Fetchit and Chubby Johnson, river boat operators; Howard Petrie, Lori Nelson and the others come through with excellent support.

Producer Aaron Rosenberg assembled a fine set of values for the picture, not the least of which was the location lensing in the Northwest, where rugged beauty of the terrain adds punch to the story. Irving Glassberg did the outstanding photography. Russell Schoengarth's editing is good, as is the music score by Hans J. Salter.

Smoothly-fashioned drama of femme with year to live and a bought husband; spotty b.o.

Hollywood, Jan. 22.

Metro release of Lawrence Weingarten production. Stars Van Johnson, Dorothy McGuire, Ruth Roman, Louis Calhern; features Ray Collins, Michael Chekhov. Directed by Gottfried Reinhardt. Screenplay, Paul Osborn; based on story by Jerome Weidman; camera, Ray June; editor, George Boemler; music, Bronislau Kaper. Tradeshown Jan. 16, '52. Running time, 84 MINS.

Ellen Pierce	Dorothy McGuire
Maud Redwick	Ruth Roman

Dr. Warren Pritchard	Ray Collins
Dr. Fromm	Michael Chekhov

Molly	Diane Cassidy
Gardener	Stapleton Kent

Arthur	Norman Field

Bill	Patrick Conway
Mr. Redwick	Alex Gerry
Mrs. Redwick	Lucile Curtis

This is a smoothly-fashioned film but with only a modicum of interest in the general film market. Attention of distaffers may be stirred in some locations through belting, exploitation-wise, of the plot theme. Such handling will get modest support from the familiar names of Van Johnson, Dorothy McGuire, Ruth Roman and Louis Calhern, who add some help for companion feature billing.

It is a drama of a girl with a heart condition who has only a year to live. Her rich father, always indulgent, arranges things so she can have a husband and some fulfillment as a woman during that last year. The scheme is going along fine until the bride is tipped, near the end of her time, that her husband was just another of her father's gifts. The shock of that, plus becoming aware she has only a short time to live, sets up the climactic denouement, but she regains the urge to live after finding the husband has fallen genuinely in love with her, submits to a new operation and a happy life is promised at the finale.

There's nothing wrong with the way the picture has been written, directed and played, but it just doesn't have the stuff that can be easily figured as appealing to the general run of filmgoers. Miss McGuire does an excellent job as the girl. Van Johnson, as the purchased husband, is acceptable, as is Louis Calhern as the father. Ruth Roman, the girl dropped by Johnson for the more lucrative job of being Miss McGuire's husband, gets rather short shrift in the footage and story interest. Ray Collins is good as a doctor.

Gottfried Reinhardt directed the Lawrence Weingarten production and within the limits of the story interest rates credit for understanding handling. Paul Osborn scripted from a story by Jerome Weidman. Weingarten's production provides a smooth polish to the assorted physical values, rating top assists in the technical line. However, he is inclined to permit the otherwise fine musical score of Bronislau Kaper to get too loud and busy in the climactic sequences. Cleffing would have been much more effective if allowed to back the drama quietly.

The U. S. Forest Service's "Smoke Jumpers," the intrepid men who parachute to fight forest fires, provide the interesting basis for this outdoor adventure feature from 20th-Fox. Told in brilliant Technicolor, it's the kind of red-blooded yarn that usually wins the fans to the ticket windows and can be counted on for generally good business in most playdates.

Richard Widmark heads the predominately masculine cast. Joseph M. Newman directed the Harry Kleiner script with an action emphasis, combined with exciting fire scenes, that puts it over strongly. Plot drama is told against a background that features the careful training and the danger that becomes matter-of-course to the "Smoke Jumpers" who invade the forest from the skies to put out blazes. Villain responsible for the fires depicted is Montana's summer heat lightning.

Picture gets underway with Widmark taking his crew off to fight just such a blaze. Unfortunately for him, he is the only survivor of the paratroop outfit when it is trapped by the fire and he is accused by the son of one of the crew of running away from his men. Incident is blacked out in Widmark's mind, so he actually doesn't know if he was guilty of cowardice, and events have him assigned to training new recruits until his name comes up again to handle a danger assignment.

Plot blazes itself out when the son joins Widmark's latest dangerous mission as a reinforcement, battles him during the raging fire, is saved by the leader and gradually realizes his suspicions were wrong.

Actually, the dramatics are contrived and rather ordinary, but the setting and the way Newman's direction keeps the film and excitement moving insure high interest for the action fan. Widmark grooves his character for popular response, and Jeffrey Hunter, the young man who suspects him, comes through very strongly. Constance Smith, as Widmark's wife, hasn't much to do.

Topnotch support is supplied by Richard Boone, Warren Stevens, James Griffith, Joe Sawyer and the other assorted outdoor types in the cast.

The beautiful photography is by Charles G. Clarke. His cameras take every advantage of the location and the use of color to point up sight values. Other technical assists are good.

Long on the RKO shelf, "At Sword's Point" was titled "Sons of the Musketeers" when it went into production in December, 1949. The Cornel Wilde-Maureen O'Hara starrer has been revised in the interim and now emerges as a fast-moving period melodrama that should prove satisfying for family houses.

Scripters Walter Ferris and Joseph Hoffman, who screenplayed the Aubrey Wisberg-Jack Pollexfen story, have whipped up a fairly interesting adaptation that should hold attention of either juvenile or adult audiences. Localed in medieval France, yarn is woven around the troubles of aging queen Gladys Cooper. Her problems stem from nefarious designs of Robert Douglas, as the Duke de Lavalle, to seize control of the country. His plans call for him to wed princess Nancy Gates and put her young brother to death.

But Douglas reckons without opposition of Wilde, Miss O'Hara, Alan Hale, Jr., and Dan O'Herlihy. Children of the original four musketeers, they rally to the queen's aid and foil the plot. Footage is liberally filled with swordplay, chases and hand-to-hand combat whose effect is enhanced by Ray Rennahan's fine Technicolor camerawork.

True, variations of the story incidents have been seen in previous "Musketeer" films. However, the casting of Miss O'Hara as a femme swordsman represents a novel approach, and the physical values that producer Jerrold T. Brandt has endowed the picture put the entry on a higher budgetary plane than the average costume actioner.

Performances, for the most part, capture the flavor of the period. Wilde is a lusty D'Artagnan, who wields his sword and swings on chandeliers in the best Fairbanks tradition. Miss O'Hara shows surprising skill with a rapier, and her visual charms stand up well in the romantic department. Hale and O'Herlihy are well cast as the other musketeers.

Miss Cooper portrays the queen with regal bearing while Douglas does well as the heavy. Miss Gates, as the princess, and Blanche Yurka, as a tavern keeper, head the supporting players. Direction of Lewis Allen reined the film with an eye to action, and there are few scenes where the speed lags. Sid Rogell, onetime RKO production head, receives screen credit as executive producer.

"Outcast of the Islands" is one of the most ambitious and costly pictures to come from a British studio in some time. It is a big-scale production with many crowds and powerful marquee names. Another plus factor is the Carol Reed tag. He produced and directed. Nevertheless, it cannot be regarded as a top ranking b.o. attraction for the home trade and may encounter serious censor trouble in America.

Picture is based on the Joseph Conrad story, but the screenplay fails to capture the authentic atmosphere of the Far East in which the story is set. The backgrounds are genuine enough, but the plot is loosely constructed and the editing occasionally episodic.

The outcast is played by Trevor Howard. He is saved from the police, after being involved in a swindle, by the captain of a trading vessel who takes him to his island outpost. There, he double-crosses his friend, tricks his partner and falls in love with the daughter of the blind tribal chief.

Within that outline, the film concentrates on developing the shifting character of the outcast as a man without honor, without principle and without friends, yet having a devouring passion for the native girl. The love-making scenes between Howard and the girl, unless duplicate shots were taken, may offend the Breen rules. Likewise, there may be criticism of the manner in which native boys are shown naked in the river.

With a firstclass team to set the pace, the acting generally maintains a high standard. Ralph Richardson, polished and dignified as usual, gives a sterling performance as the captain of the trading boat. Howard has the lion's share, and fills his role with distinction. Robert Morley chalks up another success as the captain's partner while Wendy Hiller is nicely restrained as his wife. The native girl is played by Reed's discovery, Kerima, in a sultry key, without the trace of a smile and with barely a line of dialog throughout the entire film. Top supporting roles are competently filled by George Coulouris, Wilfrid Hyde-White, Frederick Valk and Betty Ann Davies.

Reed has not succeeded in extracting the suspense normally associated with his work. Film is somewhat overlong and shows signs of substantial scissoring in an endeavor to keep it within reasonable bounds. John Wilcox has lensed the production skillfully while Brian Easdale has contributed a satisfying musical score.

Just This Once

Gay, pleasant comedy with Janet Leigh, Peter Lawford.

Hollywood, Jan. 17.

Metro release of Henry Berman production. Stars Janet Leigh, Peter Lawford; features Lewis Stone, Marilyn Erskine, Richard Anderson. Directed by Don Weis. Screenplay, Sidney Sheldon; based on story by Max Trell; camera, Ray June; editor, Fredrick Y. Smith; music, David Rose. Tradeshown Jan. 10, '52. Running time, 90 MINS.

Lucy Duncan	Janet Leigh
Mark MacLene	Peter Lawford
Judge Samuel Coulter	Lewis Stone
Gertrude Crome	Marilyn Erskine
Tom Winters	ichard Anderson
Frank Pirosh	Douglas Fowley
Mr. Blackwell	Hanley Stafford
Jeff Parma	Henry Slate
Stanley Worth	Jerry Hausner
Herbert Engel	Benny Rubin
Adam Backwith	Charles Watts

A gay, pleasantly-paced round of comedy is offered by "Just This Once." Film has a youthful spirit in both feel and the cast toppers, and is played lightly for satisfactory results on all counts. It should please in the general market and hit an okay boxoffice level, although outstanding takes are not indicated.

Janet Leigh and Peter Lawford team to carry off the star roles. He's a rich playboy with a disregard for money, and she's a femme lawyer hired by Lewis Stone to curb Lawford's dissipation of his fortune. Two principals do their full share to keep it gay and amusing. Their performances are extremely likeable.

Screenplay by Sidney Sheldon is deftly written and sparked with nifty dialog and situations which Don Weis' direction sells strongly. When Stone brings Miss Leigh into the picture she puts Lawford on a small weekly allowance, cancels his charge accounts and tries to accumulate the estate's income to pay off the bills he has run up.

Lawford rides with the situation, even to the extent of moving in with Miss Leigh because a clause in the deal requires that he be given shelter. The few bedroom farce-type situations that arise add to the general amusement and create a problem with Miss Leigh's stuffy finance, Richard Anderson. Footage moves along smoothly to wrap up all the complications for a clinch finale between the two stars.

Producer Henry Berman has cast the show well and has given it a nice physical polish. Lewis Stone's character of advisor to Lawford is quietly effective. Marilyn Erskine does well by her scenes, as do Douglas Fowley, Hanley Stafford, Benny Rubin and others. Anderson has his moments as the finance and there is one particularly amusing sequence in which he refuses a raise from his engineering firm boss, played by Stafford.

Ray June's lensing, tight editing and the David Rose music score are able contributions.

Alan Paton's bestselling novel of a few years back, which was made into a Broadway musical, "Lost in the Stars," two seasons ago, has now been turned into an absorbing pic. Filmed in its native South African locale, and in London, under the sympathetic eye of the author in the capacity of scenarist and co-producer, the pic emerges as a very moving film, full of simplicity and charm.

It is also a little slow, grim and even-toned and a bit of a tear-jerker. Its pace, subject matter and lack of marquee strength will limit its mass appeal, but otherwise the pic is a strong bet for roadshow stands, specialized and art houses, and sure to recoup its modest-budgeted coin. Artistically, the film should reap critical praise and good word-of-mouth for its worthwhile screen treatment of an eloquent theme.

"Cry, the Beloved Country" has a refreshing quality about it, in unusual scenes of Negro native life in South Africa, in striking outdoor shots, and in the quaint, almost Biblical speech of most of the Negroes. There is also sharp, biting commentary in the scenes of squalor in which the Negroes live. Cast itself is unusual, with a couple of American Negroes, some British talent, a couple of South African actors, and the rest natives. Only one cast-member, Canada Lee, will be known here from other U. S. film or stage ventures, although a few others have been seen in minor screen appearances before.

The picture is a strong social document in its study of the perplexed conditions of a sub-

Big Boost for Films

Council of Motion Picture Organizations' plea for further industry promotional advertising in the nation's press got a big boost with the editorial in the New York Daily News last Wednesday (16). It was a big plug for films in general and Paramount's "Greatest Show On Earth" in particular.

COMPO is pushing for further institutional advertising on the basis that the copy which ran in hundreds of papers last October has paid for itself many times over. Results weren't necessarily direct in number of tickets sold, COMPO press chief Charles E. McCarthy has pointed out, but in reversing the downbeat and cynical attitude of the newspapers toward Hollywood. He points to the surprise editorial in the 2,000,000-circulation New York tab as the prime example of a switch that has taken place throughout the country. Of particular interest is that the News is also owner of a tele station, WPIX, N.Y.

Major company prexies have already okayed COMPO's desire for another splash in newspapers cross-country, and ads are now being worked out. The News' editorial stated, in part: "Until the other day, we'd been inclined to lend a sympathetic ear to current moans and groans from our California movie capital. You know: Movie-making costs too much—TV's killing us—if it weren't for popcorn sales every producer out here would be on relief. Then the other day, we ankled over to the Music Hall to see 'The Greatest Show On Earth,' tagged by our shrewd Kate Cameron as a four-star production. Kate didn't give us a bum steer. . . An added observation: 'The Greatest Show On Earth' runs two and a half hours, and appears in sparkling Technicolor. As of now, TV can't compete with any of that. Take your tears elsewhere, Hollywood. All you need is more real show business, like your man DeMille's."

New Pacts Give White Collarites At 20th, Par $4 to $8 Increases

Agreement on terms for new pacts covering homeoffice employees at 20th-Fox and Paramount has been reached by the companies and the Motion Picture Homeoffice Employees Union, H-63, affiliated with the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees. Final signing of the pacts is expected by the end of this week, after the union and the film companies iron out some minor points of legal verbiage. Pact marks the first agreement between the pix outfits and the IA local, which recently took over jurisdiction of the white collarites from the defunct Screen Office and Professional Employees Guild.

New pacts, set to run for two years, call for an approximate general increase of 10% with a minimum of $4 per week and a maximum of $8, union shops, arbitration of grievances by the American Arbitration Assn., and an automatic wage increase at the end of one year based on the cost-of-living index.

Union is also near finalizing a pact for homeoffice employees at RKO. H-63 officials and RKO negotiators met yesterday (Tues.) and reportedly came to an agreement on all important issues. Union expects to come to a final understanding with RKO by next week.

Chi's Ad Cut

Chicago, Jan. 22.

Chicago amusement advertising, the major portion of which is picture space, reflects the growing decline of the Chi boxoffice.

Report for the year from the four dailies shows that Chicago Tribune had a 9½% drop; the Daily News almost 10%, the Sun-Times, 12%, and the Herald-American, 13½%.

Painters Local 44 Charter Revoked In Sorrell Fracas

Hollywood, Jan. 22.

International Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators and Paperhangers of America revoked the charter of Painters Local 44 after local failed to carry out an international exec board order making Herbert Sorrell, ineligible to hold office, be a delegate or business agent, for five years. Action stems from Sorrell's activities as leader of the conference of Studio Unions strike in 1945.

Present members of the local, mostly outside the pic industry, were ordered by the international to transfer to other locals. Local spokesman said they were unable to comply with the order since Sorrell held a term contract with the union.

Union also has filed a suit in Superior Court asking for declaratory relief and to designate who is responsible for the contract. Conspiracy action, originally filed in 1947 against the majors and the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees, is also currently before the Supreme Court, decision being expected shortly.

Branton Syndicate Provides Financing For 'Moulin Rouge'

Dollar financing for "Moulin Rouge," film version of the Pierre La Mure novel about painter Toulouse Lautrec, will be provided by a syndicate headed by G. Ralph Branton, veepee of Monogram-Allied Artists, it was disclosed this week. Group has banded together in Moulin Productions, Inc., and is repped by Stillman & Stillman, N. Y. film attorneys.

Picture was originally to have had its financing arranged through United Artists. Coin would have come through Walter E. Heller & Co., Chicago film backers, and Romulus Films of Britain, headed by John and James Woolf. Romulus, however, remains in the new bankrolling setup and will provide pound and franc capital.

While UA is understood to be now out of the financial picture it's still in the running as a potential distributor. Meantime, the starting date for the venture will likely be around June 1, with lensing to be done in England and France.

John Huston will produce, direct and screenplay "Rouge," while Jose Ferrer will star. Ferrer, meanwhile, may relinquish rights to a legit production of "Moulin."

RKO's N.Y. Staff Cut

As a result of what was termed an economy move, RKO Theatres has sliced four members of its homeoffice pub-ad staff. Dropped last week were Ray Malone, Vincent Liguori, Ruth Newman and William Thalman. However, two of the staffers were transferred to other jobs within the organization.

Malone and Liguori, veteran members of the department, were named theatre managers, Malone being assigned to the Alden, Jamaica, N. Y., and Liguori the RKO 125th St., Manhattan.

ARTY PLETHORA NO PROBLEM

With 10 first-run art houses operating in what may loosely be termed the Broadway area, and an 11th scheduled to open early in February, there has been some concern in film circles on just how enough suitable product could be found to supply these sure-seaters. Paradoxically, least concerned are the exhibs who run these houses. Although they admit that bidding for available films would become keener, they generally view the situation with an unusual degree of optimism.

As one successful art house operator put it, "It's like waiting for a bus. Another one always comes by." And he cited the experience of recent years where when one source dried up there was always a new one to replace it.

"We've had French, Italian and English pictures," he declared, "and now 'Rashomon,' a Japanese film. And when necessary we've been able to get suitable American product." He pointed out that although there was presently a shortage of top-quality French and Italian films, these markets were always available and would undoubtedly come through again with the type of pix that appeal to U. S. audiences. He noted, too, the renewed popularity of British films, with "Lavender Hill Mob," as the current outstanding example.

Operators of the art houses were quick to stress that they were not thinking only in terms of foreign

While Warner Bros. has confirmed that another big stock buy is under consideration, the outfit's expected purchase price is likely to be well above the $15 per share which is now being mentioned. WB proxy statement, which was sent to stockholders in advance of the annual meeting in Wilmington on Feb. 19, reports that about $15,000,000 would be appreciated for the purchase of about 1,000,000 common shares. This narrows down to $15 per share, obviously.

However, the buzz in financial circles is that the WB board probably will ask stockholders to offer sale of their stock at up to $16, or even $16.50. Higher price is based on the market value of the issue on the N. Y. Stock Exchange. WB trading over a recent period has been at about a 14⅞ level. In light of this, and unless the current market price falls unexpectedly, corporation's offer to acquire its own stock at only up to $15 per share could hardly bring in anything near the 1,000,000 desired.

On the annual meet's agenda is the election of six directors and a vote on retirement of 1,152,215 common shares which WB now holds in its treasury. That's the number of shares which the company acquired earlier in line with its capitalization shrinkage program. Outfit laid out $16,685,532 in buying up the block. WB now has 5,619,785 shares outstanding.

Board nominees, all incumbents, for a term of two years are Albert, Harry and Jack Warner, John E. Beirwirth Waddill Catchings and Robert W. Perkins. Stockholders last February elected Samuel Carlisle, Stanleigh P. Friedman, Charles S. Guggenheimer, Samuel Schneider and Morris Wolf to two-year terms.

Columbus is now left with 41 second-run houses, (including two downtown), where before there were 49.

Harry Cohn's Col Holdings Down 4%; Proxy Discloses Exec Option Changes

Clarify RKO Situation

RKO has put an end to the peculiar situation whereby one corporate pocket of the outfit owed the other $23,032,693 in 3% notes. It stemmed from a bookkeeping arrangement dating back to the old RKO parent corporation prior to divorcement.

The parent was a holding company. The theatre subsid declared dividends up to the parent, which in turn provided the production-distribution subsid with operating funds. Production-distribution issued the 3% notes to the parent.

Upon divorcement, the notes in effect were inherited by production-distribution, which issued them in the first place. They've now been cancelled. Clear?

Loew's '51 Net Down Slightly To $7,804,370

Loew's net profit for the fiscal year ended last Aug. 31 represented a drop of 1c per share under the previous year, the corporation disclosed yesterday (Tues.) in its annual report. Earnings amounted to $7,804,370, equivalent to $1.52 per share, including net credit of about $754,000 due to reduction of prior years' depreciation charges.

This compares with net income of $7,854,454, equal to $1.53 per share, in the previous year, which included $808,020 profit after taxes from the sale of capital assets.

Outfit started off fiscal 1951-'52 on the upbeat. For the 12 weeks ended Nov. 22, '51, Loew's had a net operating profit, before Federal taxes, of $2,932,987, compared with $2,090,127 for the corresponding period a year earlier. Net profit, after taxes and adjustments was $2,089,339, equivalent to 41c per share, in the recent period, against $1,994,934, or 39c per share, in the earlier corresponding period.

Total of 38 features and 40 shorts were released during the fiscal year covered in the report. Most outstanding of the outfit's pix were "King Solomon's Mines," "Kim," "Royal Wedding," "The Great Caruso," "Go for Broke" and "Show Boat."

Loew's operating revenues totalled $176,199,895 in the year, down from $178,024,811 the preceding year. Operating and general expenses amounted to $147,812,121 in the new year, including $70,621,375 listed for amortization and write-off of films. Expenses in the previous year reached $151,655,672, including film amortization and write-offs of $71,485,584.

Total current and working assets were carried at $113,948,402, including $77,864,042 in film production inventories. Total current liabilities were listed at $26,685,286.

Apex, Souvaine Deal

Reciprocal distribution deal has been worked out between Souvaine Selective Pictures and Apex Film Distributors, Ltd., a firm recently formed in London by Sydney Box. Arrangement calls for Souvaine to handle Apex product in the U. S. while the Box outfit will release certain Souvaine films in Britain.

Two-way pact was disclosed in New York last week by Charles M. Amory, Souvaine general sales manager. Lou Bunin's "Alice in Wonderland" is the initial Apex release for England while Souvaine will distribute the Sydney Box production, "Mr. Lord Says 'No!'" in the U. S. next month.

Prexy Harry Cohn's share of Columbia Pictures common stock dropped to 19.43% of the total outstanding, stockholders were told in the proxy statement sent out this week in advance of Col's annual meeting in N. Y. Feb. 20. Last year the chief exec had control of 23.66% of the total issue.

Exec v.p. Jack Cohn's share was listed at 12.23%, representing no change from the previous year.

Over the year, Harry Cohn unloaded 23,187 shares, cutting the total which he beneficially owns to 126,266. He also votes 4,054 shares which are owned by members of his family. Col had 670,670 shares outstanding as of last Nov. 30, when the count was taken for the proxy report. Recently Cohn transferred 25,000 shares to trustees other than himself for the benefit of his children.

Nine incumbent directors are up for reelection at the Feb. 20 meeting. They're listed follows, along with remuneration for the last fiscal year: Harry Cohn, $201,400; Jack Coh , $145,600; Abe Schneider, treasurer-v.p., $130,000; Nate B. Spingold, ad-pub v.p., $108,000; Abe Montague, distribution v.p., $130,000; Leo M. Blancke, director and financial advisor, $6,000; Donald S. Stralem, director and financial advisor, $6,000; Arnold M. Grant, director, $6,000, and Henry Crown, director, no remuneration.

Options Vote

Also up for a vote is issuance of options to purchase 5,125 shares to exec producer Irving Briskin at $13.66 per share. In the event there's no ratification of this, Briskin would have the right to terminate his employment deal, dated Jan. 1, 1951, which gives him $1,750 as weekly salary for the first

Burstyn Points Up 'Vagueness' of Law In Ban on 'Miracle'

Washington, Jan. 22.

New angle in state censorship of films was laid before the Supreme Court yesterday (Mon.) by Joseph Burstyn, Inc., smarting against the ban on the Italia import, "The Miracle." Burstyn petitioned the tribunal to test the power of the New York State Board of Regents to throw out the film on the ground it was "sacrilegious."

Burstyn has lost in the N. Y. courts, which have upheld the censorship powers of the Board of Regents. Burstyn contends the state law, permitting ban of a motion picture if it is sacrilegious "is so vague and indefinite and its meaning so uncertain that its enforcement violated the due process clause of the 14th Amendment."

"In the absence of any judicial construction of the word 'sacrilegious' and the creation of any standards," says the brief, "it is impossible to determine in advance what is prohibited and what is permitted by statute. The statute as construed violates the Constitutional warrants of separate church and state, and of freedom of religion. The authorities charged with enforcement of the statute must adopt some religious dogma as a standard for action. The official sanction of any religious doctrine and its enforcement by government authority is patently breach of the 'wall between church and state'."

Golding's Coast Stay

David Golding, ad-pub director of Samuel Goldwyn Productions, transfers from the N. Y. homeoffice to the Coast next weekend on a temporary basis. He'll work with studio publicity chief Al Vaughan on east-west coordination of promotion for the upcoming "Hans Christian Andersen."

During his absence, which probably will be about two months, Martin S. Davis will supervise publicity operations in N. Y.

Los Angeles, Jan. 22.

"Room for One More" shapes smart $32,000 in three theatres while "For Men Only" looks to reach okay $27,000 in four houses.

Pop-priced holdovers are getting oke but not hearty trade, being led by "10 Tall Men" with nice $22,000 in second week in two spots. Five-day second frame for "Pandora and Flying Dutchman" is passable $20,000 in two houses. Second round for Josephine Baker onstage with "Honeychile" is just fair $19,000. K.C. Marks Time With 'Bayonets' Not So Sharp 15G; 'Spy' 14G, 11 Days

Kansas City, Jan. 22.

Trend this week is moderate, a trio of holdovers and otherwise medium fare slowing up pace. "Fixed Bayonets" in four Fox Midwest houses looks leader with medium take for 8 days. "Quo Vadis" in fourth week still is getting big money. "Favorite Spy" did well in 11 days at Paramount. Weather is unseasonally mild, after earlier cold wave.

Indpls. Going For 'Dreams,' Loud 15G

Indianapolis, Jan. 22.

Biz is spotty at first-runs here this week, with two standouts on card. "I'll See You in My Dreams," at Indiana, is smash and getting top coin in city. "Quo Vadis" is still plenty strong in fourth stanza at Loew's, and may hold again. "Another Man's Poison" at Circle is only fair.

Estimates for This Week

Circle (Cockrill-Dolle) (2,800; 50-60)—"Another Man's Poison" (UA) and "Lincoln in White House" (Indie). So-so $8,000. Last week, "Double Dynamite" (RKO) and "Panelled Door" (Indie), $8,500.

Loew's (Loew's) (2,427; 90-1.25)—"Quo Vadis" (M-G) (4th wk). Still solid $12,500, making it about $83,000 for run thus far.

Lyric (C-D) (1,600; 50-76)—"Silver City" (Par) and "Captive of Billy Kid" (Rep). Tepid $5,000. Last week, "Lost Continent" (Lip) and "Superman and Mole Men" (Lip), $5,500.

'Forget'-Vaude Sturdy $22,000, D.C.; 'Cimarron' Hot 9G, 'Dreams' 12G, 2d

Washington, Jan. 22.

It's a routine session along the mainstem, with biz continuing even keel but with no standout. Holdovers are steady and predominate the scene. Of newcomers, "I'll Never Forget You," hypoed by a solid stageshow at Loew's Capitol, shapes as best bet. "The Medium," at Lopert's Playhouse launched by a fancy preem and generally favorable notices, is disappointing. "Cimarron" looks good at Keith's.

Estimates for This Week

Capitol (Loew's) (3,434; 55-90)—"I'll Never Forget You" (20th), plus vaude topped by Kyle MacDonnell. Pleasant $22,000, with stageshow helping. Last week, "Model and Marriage Broker" (20th) plus vaude, better than hoped for at nice $20,000.

Columbia (Loew's) (1,174; 44-74)—"It's a Big Country" (M-G). Above average $7,000. Last week, "Unknown Man" (M-G), so-so $4,500 for first-run.

Chicago, Jan. 22.

While the Chicago Loop was filled with holdovers, mild weather, plus host of conventioneers, seems to be giving the local picture houses a better session than a week ago. Only new bill is "Mr. Imperium" and "Aladdin and His Lamp" which is reaching fine $12,000 at the Grand. Ziegfeld is bringing back "Tales of Hoffmann" and first week of return date should hit nice $5,500.

'Quo Vadis' Socko $30,000 in Balto

Baltimore, Jan. 22.

The transit strike continues here into its second week and not a single bus or streetcar is moving. As a result downtown spots are taking a beating, particularly at night. Private transportation is being put to wide use, and sparking weekend trade slightly. "Quo Vadis" is doing a valiant job at Loew's Century, coming through with a sock figure, despite the transport tieup. "Another Man's Poison" is trying hard at the Town for a fairly good take. "Lavender Hill Mob" opened strongly at the Playhouse.

New Pix Tilt B'way; 'Sheet'-Ink Spots Hotsy $84,000, 'Room' Rousing 22G, 'Command' 20G, 'Show' Sock 150G, 2d

After sagging sharply for three days starting last Wednesday, Broadway first-runs staged a smart recovery over the weekend to wind up current session with a strong total. The fact that this is exam week in the schools is bolstering trade in final days of stanza. Rain last Saturday night came too late to hurt the boxoffice, and business soared the following day to make it an unusually big Sunday at many houses.

Launching of five new bills, some of them showing marked strength, also is giving business at the deluxers a jab in the arm. Standout among the new entries is the Paramount, with "Scandal Sheet" plus stageshow headed by the Ink Spots, Sarah Vaughan and Erskine Hawkins band. This combo wound up its first week with a big $84,000 with a three-week run in prospect.

Both the Globe and Warner have coin-getting films. Latter, with "Room For One More," is heading for a nice $22,000, pic getting lavish praise from many reviewers. "Submarine Command" looms strong with a probable $20,000 at the Globe.

"Light Touch" is strictly lightweight with $14,000 or close, one of dullest first weeks at the Capitol in months. "For Men Only" also is highly disappointing with less than $10,000 in sight at the State.

Still sock champion is "Greatest Show on Earth" with condensed stageshow at the Music Hall. Second week is climbing above the initial session, with $150,000 likely as against $146,000 for opening round. The Hall managed to partly overcome the waits in long lines last Saturday by starting the day earlier. First day of second week (Thurs.) actually topped the opening day of the engagement for "Show."

"Quo Vadis" is only a step behind the previous stanza with smash $29,000 for 11th week at the Astor, this being the third session on current continuous-run policy. The preceding week was $30,000.

"Model and Marriage Broker" with stage bill headed by Alan Dale and Beatrice Kraft Dancers is holding firm with solid $75,000 probable for second round at the Roxy. Combo goes a third week.

"Detective Story" still continues in amazing fashion, with sock $19,000 for 11th round at the Mayfair.

Estimates for This Week

Astor (City Inv.) (1,300; $1.25-$1.80) — "Quo Vadis" (M-G) (12th wk). Current round here started yesterday (Tues). The 11th session held to an amazingly big $29,000 after $30,000 for previous week. Although the 11th week for run here, it is only third week under present continuous-run policy. Played here eight weeks (final week of 4 days) on two-a-day, $2.40 top.

Bijou (City Inv.) (589; 80-$1.50) —"Cry, Beloved Country" (Indie). Opens today (Wed.) with special upped-price preem. Regular run starts tomorrow (Thurs.). Last week, house was shuttered.

Capitol (Loew's) (4,820; 70-$1.80)—"Light Touch" (M-G) (2d wk). Initial week ended yesterday (Tues.) was thin $14,000 or near, lowest here in months for opening week. In ahead, "Westward Women" (M-G) (2d wk-9 days), $11,000.

Criterion (Moss) (1,700; 50-$1.80) —"I Want You" (RKO) (5th wk). Current round ending Friday (25) is holding near mild $10,000 after $11,000 last week.

Globe (Brandt) (1,500; 50-$1.80) — "Submarine Command" (Par). First week winding up tomorrow (Thurs.) is heading for big $20,000. In ahead, "Favorite Spy" (Par) (3d wk-10 days), okay $14,500 to wind up very strong run.

Fine Arts (Davis) (468; 90-$1.80) —"Lavender Hill Mob" (U) (15th wk). The 14th stanza ended Monday (21) held at $8,200 after sock $8,500 for 13th week.

Mayfair (Brandt) (1,736; 50-$1.80)—"Detective Story" (Par) (12th wk). The 11th frame ended Monday (21) continued very solid with $19,000 after $20,000 for 10th week. Stays a couple of days past the 12th week to open "Sailor Beware" (Par) on Jan. 30.

Normandie (Normandie Theatres) (592; 95-$1.80)—"Pandora & Flying Dutchman" (M-G) (7th wk). Current stanza ending tomorrow (Thurs.) is standing firm with $6,300 after $6,100 for sixth week.

Palace (RKO) (1,700; $1.20-$2.40) —All-vaude, two-a-day policy topped by Judy Garland (15th wk). This week started yesterday (Tues.). The absence of Miss Garland from show Thursday, Friday and Saturday because of illness meant five fewer shows, but picked up in great style on Sunday (20) when bill resumed. For five shows of 14th week ended last Sunday, house hit $20,500 after great $39,000 for 13th frame.

Paramount (Par) (3,664; 70-$1.80) —"Scandal Sheet" (Col) with Ink Spots, Sarah Vaughan, Erskine Hawkins orch onstage (2d wk). Initial round ended yesterday (Tues.) soared to big $84,000. Now looks to play three weeks. In ahead, "Double Dynamite" (RKO), with Tony Bennett heading stageshow (3d wk-8 days), $55,000.

Park Avenue (Reade) (583; 90-$1.50)—"Tom Brown's Schooldays" (Indie) (3d-final wk). Initial holdover stanza ended Sunday (20) was $5,200 after okay $7,300 opening week. "St. Matthew's Passion" (Indie) opens Jan. 28.

Paris (Indie) (586; $1.20-$2.40)—"The River" (UA) (20th wk). The 19th frame ended Sunday (20) held at $8,800 after $8,700 for 18th week. Improvement stems mainly from fact that house moved up start of midnight show to 11 p.m.

Radio City Music Hall (Rockefellers) (5,945; 80-$2.40)—"Greatest Show on Earth" (Par) with stageshow (2d wk). Likely will climb to smash $150,000, to beat the inital week. Earlier Saturday opening was a factor in getting more turnover. First week was big $146,000, slightly over expectancy. Set to hold for third and many more weeks at current gait.

Rivoli (UAT-Par) (2,092; 90-$1.80)—"Decision Before Dawn" (20th) (5th wk). Present session ending tomorrow (Thurs.) is continuing steady with okay $13,000 after $14,200 for fourth week. Stays about two weeks more, with "Viva Zapata!" (20th) due to open Feb. 7.

Roxy (20th) (5,886; 80-$2.20)—"Model and Marriage Broker" (20th) with stage bill topped by Alan Dale, Beatrice Kraft Dancers (2d wk). Holding nicely at about $75,000. First week was solid $82,000, but below hopes. Staying a third round although bill originally was only booked for two weeks.

State (Loew's) (3,450; 55-$1.80)—"For Men Only" (Lip) (2d wk). First week ended yesterday (Tues.) hit lightweight $10,000 or less. In ahead, "Wild Blue Yonder" (Rep) (2d wk), $8,500.

Warner (WB) (2,756; 85-$2)—"Room for One More" (WB) (2d wk). First stanza ended Monday (21) reached nice $22,000, with some strong reviews helping pic build. In ahead, "Distant Drums" (WB) (3d wk), way off to $13,000 after two big weeks in previous sessions.

Sutton (R & B) (561; 90-$1.50)—"Tales of Hoffmann" (Indie) (5th wk). Fourth session ended Monday (21) held strongly at $8,000 after $8,500 for third week.

Trans-Lux 60th St. (T-L) (453; 90-$1.50)—"Bonnie Prince Charlie" (Indie) (3d wk). First holdover frame ended Saturday (19) continued nicely with $4,200 after $7,500 first week.

Trans-Lux 52nd St. (T-L) (540; 90-$1.50)—"It's a Big Country" (M-G) (3d wk). Second round ended Monday (21) was $3,200 after modest $5,000 opener. "Japanese War Bride" (20th) opens Jan. 29.

Victoria (City Inv.) (1,060; 55-$1.80)—"Death of Salesman" (Col) (5th wk). Fifth session ending today (Wed) is holding very well with $17,000 after solid $20,000 for fourth week. Stays on.

'DREAMS' LIVELY 20G, FRISCO; 'MODEL' 18G

San Francisco, Jan. 22.

London Nightclubs' Name-Act Policy Seen on Way Out in '52; Too Costly

By HAROLD MYERS

London, Jan. 15.

The era of big time and big money cabaret in London is, apart from a few isolated instances, likely to disappear in 1952. West End niteries, after an expensive Festival season which left many of them in the red, are tightening their belts and indulging in an economy campaign which may leave the field mainly open to low-paid British artists.

When cabaret made its re-appearance in the 1949-50 season, most London nightclubs were still flushed as a result of the lush spending days of the postwar boom. Comparatively big inducements were being offered to attract experienced American and Continental artists. And for a time the boom continued. But as the spending money of the public began to dry up, too many of the night spots found themselves operating in the red, and began to regard the cabaret as an additional financial burden which the current level of business failed to justify.

Because of the scarcity of trained cabaret talent locally, the West End club and cafe operators were compelled to look abroad for their acts. Too frequently the names they needed to hypo business commanded salaries which were uneconomic. Therefore, they had to turn to artists in the more modest brackets who had no name value in London. In many cases, these artists have opened cold and have had to build on word-of-mouth publicity. But by the time the news got around, their engagement was at an end and another unknown was taking over. So it went on throughout the whole of last season in many leading night spots.

Niteries Turned To Vaude Acts

Gradually, operators in a number of cafes dropped the unknown importations and substituted local vaudeville acts, which, in many cases, worked for a fraction of the salary paid to visitors. Many British artists are prepared to accept around $200 a week in cabaret, whereas artists from Broadway or Paris demand two or three times that figure as a minimum plus some contribution towards travelling expenses.

Although the accent is unmistakably on economy, there will be the occasional splash booking. Leading the field at this writing is the Bagatelle, which has scooped the field with a four-week booking for Sophie Tucker starting May 5. This deal was first inked a year ago by the cafe's operator, Harry Levene, but the opening was postponed because of Miss Tucker's leg ailment. She will be doing two shows a night. The Bagatelle will be paying more than $3,000 a week plus travelling expenses for Miss Tucker.

One of the few top ranking attractions likely to play London this spring is Edith Piaf. The Cafe de Paris, which recently had a boff season with Noel Coward at $2,800 per week, is reported to be offering the same amount for the French star. It is also known that a number of London niteries would be interested in booking Josephine Baker if a salary agreement could be reached.

The Embassy Club in Bond St., which paid substantial money for imported acts last season without attracting the necessary business, and subsequently switched to cheaper British names, is to have another fling later this month. It has booked Claude Machant's Afro-Cuban Dancers at about $1,700 a week in the hope that this will lure trade.

As a sign of the times, the Empress Club put up the shutters on its Crystal Room on New Year's Day, and the spot will stay dark for a month. It is no secret that this room has been operating at a big loss in recent weeks and is planning a complete reorganization of policy before operating as a night club again. The Crystal Room has relied mainly on Continental talent, but the last artist to play there was Sue Carson, who currently also is appearing in Val Parnell's "Peep Show."

One or two places have experimented with revues, some costly and ambitious, others cheap and dowdy. The Pigalle, the lowest-priced eating night spot in town ($2.50 minimum), has been putting on the most lavish shows.

Cotes Taking 'Sheba' Into London This Year

London, Jan. 15.

Peter Cotes, who has given up his lease on the New Boltons Theatre Club, branches out into commercial management with "Come Back Little Sheba," an American play which will start a provincial tour in the spring before coming to London. His wife, Joan Miller, will take the role played by Shirley Booth in New York.

The new management at Boltons tees off Feb. 4 with "Dark Heritage" by Shirland Quinn; with Robert Beatty and David Hutchison topping the cast.

New operators of the Boltons are Neville and Peggy Armstrong, who run a publishing company, and Basil Ashmore, who started the New Lindsey Theatre Club after the war.

Brit. Quota Pix Dearth Unlikely

London, Jan. 22.

Fears by exhibitors that sufficient product would not be available to enable them to fulfill the 30% quota in the second half of the current quota year, are not substantiated by producers. Sir Henry L. French, director-general of the British Film Producers Assn., believes their advance estimate of 70 first features would measure up with actual production.

Every year, he explained, the Board of Trade asks the British Film Producers for advanced estimates of production. These are whittled down by the BFPA and only firm schedules are included in their estimates. Last year, when the BFPA reckoned there would be 70 first features, exhibitors felt that acutal production would not exceed 64.

One of the main reasons for exhibitor concern is the condition in the 1948 Films Act that the quota has to be fulfilled separately in each half yearly period. It is understood, however, that BOT legal experts have advised the films division that theatres which fulfilled their quota over a yearly period could not be prosecuted if they failed in one of the two half years.

SQUARE DANCING SEEN 180-DAY BRIT. WONDER

London, Jan. 15.

Square dancing may be all very well in the wide-open spaces of Canada, or the U. S., but if the craze caught on here in any serious way, it would put almost every dancehall out of business. But despite the Royal seal, the British Broadcasting Corp. ballyhoo and a demonstrating circus touring the country, it is unlikely to prove more than a six-month wonder, if that.

Although some people claim that square dancing was sweeping the country, inquiries show that it is heartily disliked all round. For dance hall promoters, it is financially disastrous, as a dance floor normally capable of accommodating 1,000 terpers, can barely hold 100 square dancers. If the hall was operating at capacity, more than 90% of the customers would be wallflowers.

For the remaining 10% on the floor, it has been suggested that the energetic demands of the routines give the dance too much of a "toil and sweat" flavor. Further, all intimacy between couples is lost, and that is not good for the "holding a girl in the arms" theme which most dance establishments plug.

Where square dancing has been tried out, it has scored only a modest success, yet further effort is being made to boost it. At Manchester recently, all the male dancers were given special shirts, and here there is every likelihood that the Lyceum will make Monday nights square dancing night.

J. Arthur Takes Charge Of Rank Milling Biz

London, Jan. 22.

J. Arthur Rank has assumed chairmanship of the family milling business, Joseph Rank Millers, on the death of his brother, Joseph V. Rank, recently. His film interests, however, will remain unchanged.

Last weekend, Rank confirmed that despite the new appointment, he would continue full activity and interest in his film business.

Urges Film Bank To Save German Pix Production

Hamburg, Jan. 15.

The only chance to save Western Germany's motion picture industry lies in the formation of a privately-backed Film Bank, which would pool credits and use them to finance production, according to Dr. Alexander Grueter, head of the Hamburg Film Financing, Ltd. Grueter is also co-general manager of National Film, the second largest distribution company in Germany.

Grueter described the present production setup as "five minutes before 12." Lack of financing has been plaguing the German film biz for the 18 months and resulted in several folderoos, bankruptcy cases, firings, production schedule cuts and other adverse effects in the industry.

Grueter suggested that big banks all over Germany, along with other private capital, should establish this Film Bank with a basic capitalization of $2,380,000. Not more than 25 pix per year should be financed during the bank's first two years of existence, he said, adding that in the early phases of operation federal and state governmental credits should also be maintained.

Grueter also suggested that credits should be made available only to six or eight big producers so as to eliminate the dozens of very small production and distrib companies. Some people wondered whether this means that Grueter would favor the reestablishment of monopolies, on the pattern of the Nazi's state-owned film trust, UFA.

Sydney Legiter Swings Back to Film Policy

Sydney, Jan. 15.

Palace, 872-seater here, after a mild try with stageshows under the Fuller, and later the Williamson banner, reverts back to a film policy Jan. 31 with "Cyrano" (UA) for Hoyts.

Last legit show was "Moon Is Blue," which failed to get going. The Fuller unit tried several British comedies with little success, with the exception of "One Wild Oat." A more recent hit was Cyril Ritchard-Madge Elliott combo in Coward's "Private Lives."

British Attempt to Emulate COMPO Setup Near Crackup as Topper Quits

London, Jan. 22.

With the resignation of Ralph S. Bromhead as administrator of the British film industry's Better Business Campaign, which was announced last Wednesday (16), the attempt to create a local counterpart of COMPO seems likely to disintegrate after two noteworthy accomplishments in its short life.

Bromhead has quit the top post in the organization at his own request, in view of the reduced activities of the campaign and his increasing responsibilities in other directions. He will remain available for consultation on several issues which are still being followed up.

In its 18 months of existence, the all-industry panel has to its credit the nationwide showmanship campaign (prizes were distributed last fall) and finalization of negotiations for a combined film industry trailer to be aired fortnightly over the British Broadcasting Corp.-TV networks. First in this series was televized last Thursday (17).

The work of co-ordinating the "Current Release" program is now to be taken over by the Kinematograph Renters Society and a small industry committee. They will, presumably, get requests from producers and distributors for inclusion in the program before giving the BBC the last word on the subject.

The Better Business Campaign was financed from the earnings of the industry shorts and quite a substantial amount is believed to be left in the treasury. Apart from salaries and parttime officials, the only major expense incurred by the committee have been in connection with the showmanship contest and a film show which recently wound up a Provincial tour.

London Legit Bars Critic From Reviewing Show

London, Jan. 22.

P. L. Mannock, vet drama critic of the Daily Herald, was barred from reviewing the current Embassy production, "The Loving Elms," because the management had taken exception to recent notice of his on "The Merchant of Yonkers."

Mannock hadn't received tickets for the first night of "Elms," but assumed they had gone astray in the mail. When he arrived at the theatre, he was told by a press-agent that he was welcome to see the show, but couldn't write about it. Embassy is a non-West End tryout spot.

Arg. Pix Studios Face Dark Future

Buenos Aires, Jan. 15.

Only a month prior to folding up for the summer vacation, which will last from Feb. 25 to March 5, Argentine film studios are living in a state of suspense while their fate is debated between producers and exhibitors, with the former demanding highly increased percentage terms. The first demands by the producers at the meetings called by Press and Information Minister Raul Apold, ended in a stalemate, with the exhibs stating flatly that if the industry is in a financial quagmire it is only because producers persist in making bad pictures which satisfy nobody.

Apart from these producer demands, exhibs have some headaches. The Argentine Authors Assn. has just finished drafting a charter, which has to be approved by the government, embodying a clause granting screen writers heavy percentages of film grosses. That's one of them. The producers also presented the exhibs with a virtual ultimatum that they must contribute more generously to advertising their product. The cost of publicizing films has become greater, because newsprint cuts have slashed the size of newspapers. Radio and billboards as well as other less efficacious advertising media consequently must be used more heavily.

New British Govt. Seen Unlikely to Aid NFFC With Big Coin Grants

London, Jan. 22.

The prospects of the National Film Finance Corp. getting the extra $5,600,000 promised by the Labor government are now thinner than ever. Although not giving a final thumbs down to the request, Peter Thorneycroft, Board of Trade prez, indicated to a trade union deputation last week that ther was a limit to the amount of financial aid the government could give to an industry which had not succeeded in gaining the confidence of the investing public.

Yesterday (Mon.) the BOT prexy received another labor deputation, this time from the Film Industry's Employees Council, representing technicians, actors, electricians, musicians and extras. This delegation also stated the case for further financial aid to the NFFC, although critical of the way in which the current balances were being used up under the Group scheme. Claim was made that this was providing financial aid to the major organizations, who, through their links with exhibition and distribution, were well able to raise their own coin.

Ealing Halts All Aussie Production, Closes Studio; Govt. Redtape Blamed

Sydney, Jan. 22.

Continued refusal of the Capital Issues Board governmental setup attached to the Robert Menzies Liberal Party government at Canberra, to permit the inflow of capital for Aussie film production is seen by industry leaders as sounding the deathknell of local production.

Direct result of this policy is that Ealing has halted all production in Australia and is closing the Pagewood studios.

Major reason given for shuttering Pagewood was the refusal of the government here to okay flow of Aussie capital into Ealing for a continuous production schedule.

Ealing was lined up to do Nevil Shute's yarn, "A Town Like Alice," but the film now will be done in London if produced at all.

Ealing, under the production guidance of Eric Williams, is the only British (or American) studio to be established here for continuous production. Williams said today that it was impossible to carry on because the company had not received cooperation or sponsorship for films made in Aussie in the past five years. Pix made here over the last few years included "The Overlanders," "Eureka Stockade" and "Bitter Springs." Studio also was used by 20th-Fox for "Kangaroo" and Michael Gordon's "Wherever She Goes."

Some time ago a powerful local syndicate headed by Charles Munro was ready to come into Ealing on a solid financial basis to produce "Robbery Under Arms" and other pix. In association with Ealing, the Munro syndicate planned four films annually, with the importation of top stars for added marquee value abroad. However, the Capital Issues Board refused the syndicate permission to float a company, indicating that there were sufficient films coming into Australia to meet the entertainment needs here.

'Where's Charley?' Has WB Wondering When Bolger Film Can Be Released

London, Jan. 15.

The British film version of "Where's Charley?" which was lensed by Warners last year with Ray Bolger and Allyn McLerie, may not be held up after all. Originally, pic was to be put in storage pending the run of the stage version, which was planned to open in April with Norman Wisdom starred,

Last week it became known that arrangements for the legit production have been indefinitely delayed and Wisdom has accepted a commitment to go into a new edition of "Folies Bergere," which will open at the Prince of Wales early in April.

By an arrangement with Warners it is understood they will receive a green light to release the film locally next September if the stage version has not opened by that date. If the play should be presented the film will have to be delayed.

NEAGLE TO DO LONDON PLAY, POSSIBLY 'JOAN'

London, Jan. 22.

Anna Neagle, who returned to England last week with her producer-director husband, Herbert Wilcox, is to do a stage play before returning to the screen in the fall. She will either star in a New York Theatre Guild production of "St. Joan" here or in a new modern comedy to be presented by Tom Arnold.

Decision will be made within the next few weeks, but whichever subject is chosen, the star will do a short provincial tour before coming to the West End.

Plan Caucasian Heavy For New Japanese Pic

Tokyo, Jan. 15.

Screen actress Shirley Yamaguchi, who recently returned to her native Nippon after a lensing stint in Hollywood, is readying a new Japanese pic that will cast a Caucasian heavy opposite her and a young Japanese actor.

Film will be titled "Port of Shadow." Script is based on Japanese bestseller, "Fog Flute," by Jiro Osaragi. It involves a triangle affair with a Japanese girl, her young Japanese lover and a middle-aged foreigner.

West German Film Prod. Still Sharply Limited By Scarcity of Coin

West German film production continues decidedly limited because of lack of financing, according to George H. Bookbinder, indie distributor and prez of All Star Productions, who arrived in N. Y. last week after several months in Germany. Dearth of domestic coin, he said, has prompted several local companies to enter into joint production deals with foreign firms.

Monogram Pictures, Associated British-Pathe and Lux Films of Rome are participating in Europa Filmverleih, a production-distribution outfit with a release schedule of five German and five foreign pix. Several U. S. majors, notably Metro and 20th-Fox also have lensed locationers in Germany in co-operation with native filmmakers.

Bookbinder expects to turn out some four-reelers as well as a full-length pix in association with a German company. The shorts would be suitable for English dubbing and the U. S. TV market. He claimed that when a distributor has fresh German language product to offer exhibitors it helps him sell his other films.

Bookbinder said that both a screen quota and an import quota are still being discussed in Germany. It is unlikely that Parliament will enact such legislation for some time.

But when Parliament does vote on screen legislation, German observers feel that those foreign firms which aided local production will be granted more consideration on licenses than overseas companies that have done nothing.

Bookbinder, who also is associated with Franco-London Films, producer of the Laurel & Hardy pic, "Atoll K," will probably work out a U. S. distrib deal for this film before returning to Germany.

Brit. Eager For German Permits

London, Jan. 22.

Because Germany is now regarded as a lucrative market. British producers have been eager to take up the 30 export licenses allocated to the British film industry. Requests received by the British Film Producers' Assn. had to be sliced by more than 50% in order to keep within the fixed quota,

The BFPA is to make periodic checks with license holders to insure that product is shipped to Germany in good time. If there is any indication of a producer defaulting, the license will be transferred to another company.

British accepts the limited allocation because of the advantages of convertibility, arranged in a trade agreement between the German government and the British Board of Trade.

Tennent to Do 'Atom'

Edinburgh, Jan. 15.

"The Atom Doctor," play on Scottish Nationalism by Eric Linklater, given world preem at the International Festival here in 1950, is to be produced by H. M. Tennent, under new title of "The Mortimer Touch." Comedy is a modernized version of Ben Jonson's "The Alchemist."

Rehearsals begin next month for British tour in March, prior to London production.

'No Pix Work' Edict For Olivier Being Appealed

London, Jan. 22.

Last year's High Court ruling that $42,000 paid to Sir Laurence Olivier for not working in films for 18 months after the completion of "Henry V," is to be taken to appeal.

The Crown decided to challenge the lower court's decision and has briefed Sir Frank Soskice as attorney. Olivier will be represented in the appeal court by Frederick Grant.

Yank Tourists' Upbeat in France

Paris, Jan. 15.

Statistics recently released by the Bureau Du Tourisme show that last summer and fall showed an upsurge in Americans visiting abroad and one of the richest gambling takes in France since the war. Summer and fall figures showed about 69,000 tourists abroad without counting those who had arrived previously and were still on tap, Male travelers exceeded femmes, and the predominant reason given for touring was for pleasure. Personal business came next. There were twice as many ship arrivals as by plane. Show biz people must have buried their identity since few are listed as such. Most of the voyagers came from New York, with 19,375 from New York City and 4,893 from the rest of N. Y. state.

Biggest take for the gameing rooms, with Baccara top game, was at the Enghien-Les-Bains rooms, six miles north of Paris. This gets the Paris trade because near, and pays off accordingly. Total receipts were $2,300,000. The next biggest take was Deauville, which took in $1,470,000. Above figures covered the take until Oct. 31 when most resort casinos close for the winter.

Both Nice and Cannes on the Riviera exceeded Deauville if total receipts of the two casinos in each city are counted. Nice take was $2,080,000, with the Palais De La Mediterrane and the Casino Municipal counted. Cannes gross was $1,752,000, including the Casino Municipal and Palm Beach. Evian-Les-Bains had a $1,014,000 take; Charbonnieres, near Lyon, had $771,000; Aix-En-Provence, near Marseille, $720,000, with both catering to roulette and baccara fans. In the remaining casinos strewn about France the take averaged from $1,500 to $270,000.

After all deductions and heavy taxes, the net for the big spots was not very high. In the case of some of the biggest casinos, the expenditures and taxes ran as high as 80%. Nevertheless, this is one of the bigtime tourist draws in France.

WARNER PLANS SELLING TEDDINGTON PLANT

London, Jan. 22.

Only about two days after Tom O'Brien, M.P., sought assurances from the Board of Trade prez, Peter Thorneycroft, that no studios would be sold for purposes other than film production, it was learned that Warner Bros. was well along in negotiations for the sale of its Teddington lot to an aircraft manufacturing company. Negotiations have been in progress for some weeks, and home office execs of WB in N. Y. have been kept fully informed of the development.

The company involved in the deal is reported to be the Hawker Aircraft Co., which admitted the talks are on but would not say how the property would be used.

During a substantial part of 1951 the Teddington plant has been dark. The last WB picture to be lensed there was "Crimson Pirate," although most of the filming on this Burt Lancaster production was done on location in Italy. There is nothing on the floor there at the moment and Warners has no subjects lined up for future production at Teddington, although projects are being readied for Elstree. Other recent Warner British productions have been filmed at Associated British's Elstree studios. Both "Captain Horatio Hornblower" and "Where's Charley?" were done there.

Strong Films Lift London Cinemas; 'Queen' Socko $16,000, 'Lone Star' Loud 20G, 'Tickets'-'Racket' $9,200

London, Jan. 15.

A new Anglo-American production set the pace at the boxoffice last week, chalking up the best figure at the Warner in nine months with "African Queen." Co-starring Katharine Hepburn and Humphrey Bogart initial frame was smash $16,000. Film attracted standout press reaction and long lines were in evidence daily.

At Metro's Empire, "Lone Star" opened with a strong $20,000; while at the Odeon, Marble Arch, the dual bill of "Two Tickets to Broadway" and "The Racket" hit a very good $9,200 opening week.

Estimates for Last Week

Carlton (Par) (1,128; 70-$1.70) — "Something to Live For" (Par). Opened quietly with average $5,300 on week. Stays second week with "Quo Vadis" (M-G) set to follow Jan. 25.

Empire (M-G) (3,099; 55-$1.70)— "Lone Star" (M-G) and stageshow. Finished first round with handsome $20,000. Holds for at least another fortnight.

Gaumont (1,500; 50-$1.70)—"His Excellency" (GFD). Disappointing $6,400 for opening round. Stays another fortnight.

Leicester Square Theatre (CMA) (1,753; 50-$170)—"Come Fill Cup" (WB). Started off modestly with around $4,300 in first four days. Stays another two weeks.

London Pavilion (UA) (1,217; 50-$1.70)—"M" (Col) and "Five" (Col) (4th wk.). Winding current run with fair $4,800 after $5,500 in third round. "Close to Heart" (WB) and "Walls Folsom Prison" (WB) opens Jan. 18, Odeon, Leicester Square (CMA) (2,200; 50-$1.70) — "Elopement" (20th) and "Take Care Little Girl" (20th) (3d wk.). Holding modestly at $4,800 in final weekend after good $7,500 for second frame. "Phone Call From a Stranger" (20th) begins Jan. 17.

Odeon, Marble Arch (CMA) (2,200; 50-$1.70) — "Two Tickets to Broadway" (RKO) and "The Racket" (RKO). Strong double feature getting very good $9,200 in initial stanza. Holds, with "Painting Clouds with Sunshine" (WB) set to follow.

Plaza (Par) (1,902; 70-$1.70) — "Place in Sun" (Par) (3d wk.). Still attracting big business at $8,100. Stays a fourth week with "Outcast of Islands" (BL) starting Jan. 19.

Warner (WB) (1,753; 50-$1.70) — "African Queen" (Indie). Best opening week here since "Hornblower" (WB). Smash $16,000 and still going strong. Holds, with "Streetcar Named Desire" (WB) set as next pic.

Mex Court Okays Both 'Alice' Pix for Exhibs

Mexico City, Jan. 15.

The Walt Disney-RKO "Alice in Wonderland" now has full exhibition rights throughout Mexico, but so has the French version of the same story. This stems from the First District Court here refusing Jose Manuel Chavez, distributor of the European "Alice," an injunction to keep the National Cinematographic Board from registering the U. S. "Alice." This would have given his pic exclusive exhibition in Mexico.

The court ruled that the point of law was not the matter of the original "Alice" story and its copyright complications, but of two separate film versions of that tale. The law, the court held, permits full exhibition of any and all versions of the same standard story, this being merely a case of commercial marketing. The NC board has registered both films.

Forced Exhibition Of Mex Films Barred By Court Permanent Order

Mexico City, Jan. 22.

The bugbear of forced exhibition of Mexican pix, at least 50% of the playing time, that has annoyed U. S. and other foreign film distributors here during the last five years, apparently was killed by Federal Judge Ignacio Burgoa when he made permanent the injunction he allowed top exhibitors against enforcing the clause in the cinematographic law which demands 26 weeks of screen time a year for Mexican films. The measure was announced last summer.

Injunction allows the exhibitors exactly what they asked—freedom of exhibition. Judge Burgoa agreed with them in their contention that the clause is unconstitutional because it amounts to a monopoly, forcing marketing of a particular product. Exhibs now are at liberty to play as many U. S. pix or Mexican films as they desire. Judge Burgoa also made permanent the temporary injunction he had earlier granted the exhibitors against another clause of the law which forbids them to partner with producers or distributors.

National Exhibitors Assn., gratified by the freedom of exhibition victory, declared that forcing exhibition of Mexican pictures was going overboard in the government's zeal to aid the Mexican industry.

Exhibitors' victory doesn't sit well with the producers, some of whom brand it a near-knockout to their trade. They argue that there are numerous top Mexican films which can't find playdates not because of the lack of cinemas, but because of sharp competition from U. S. and other foreign films. Hector Fernandez, manager of the Producers and Distributors Assn., said the Mexican trade hopes the government will appeal to the supreme court.

$231,000,000 Spent In Mexico by '51 Tourists

Mexico City, Jan. 15.

Tourists, a majority of them Americans, spent $231,000,000 in Mexico last year, according to prelim estimates of the Mexican Tourist Assn. This spending, somewhat lower in dollars, was an all-time high in actual number of pesos, the current worth of which is 8.65 per dollar. The total number of tourists was 400,000, a new record.

Citing that American tourists spent $315,000,000 in Europe last year, the association asserts this does not worry Mexico at all, because greatly improved visitor facilities in this country make it likely to get even a greater number of visitors in 1952.

Cinema Workers Occupy Havana House to Force 2 Idle Spots to Reopen

Havana, Jan. 22.

Over 65 film theatre workers stormed into the Encanto Theatre Wednesday (16), completely occupied it and declared themselves on a hunger strike.

Workers of the Theatre Workers Union threatened a theatre slowdown if two film houses, the Encanto and the Alkazar, closed for several weeks, did not reopen within 24 hours The theatre managers said the houses had closed because of slow business.

According to labor union chiefs, however, the houses were closed because the owners wanted a $2,000 monthly rental fee, plus a $20,000 "bonus" to reopen. They also alleged that the owners are receiving $90 per day from the insurance companies while the theatres remain closed.

The dispute has been referred to Minister of Labor Dr. Edgardo Buttari, who has called a meeting of the two factions.

A new film controversy flared in Germany as the Assn. for Jewish-Christian Collaboration here called for an intensified boycott by the public of films of Veit Harlan, Nazi Germany's top pic director. In the most well-organized campaign yet, the association practically blanketed Frankfurt with huge posters calling the citizens to stay away from theatres playing Harlan pix. It also called on exhibitors to skip booking these films. The occasion for the new uproar was the general release of Harlan's second postwar pic, "Case of Hanna Amon." It is due here shortly.

The boycott appeal said that Harlan's comeback severely damages the reputation of German film artists abroad and that it implies that the German public, by going to see his pix, align themselves with the "horrible mass murders of Hitlerism to which Harlan lent his talent in the motion picture field."

During the Nazi rule, Harlan directed "The Jew Suess," an anti-Semitic pic which set off new wave of anti-Jewish repercussions at the time. After the war Harlan was twice tried by denazification courts, charged with having committed crimes against humanity by directing "Suess." He was acquitted both times. However, a strong anti-Harlan movement got underway all over the country.

His first postwar pic, "Undying Lover," set off numerous riots and protest demonstrations. It was banned in about a dozen big cities, including Frankfurt. Both "Lover" and "Hanna Amon" were shot in Goettingen, a city in Lower Saxony where the neo-Nazi Socialist Reichs Party emerged as a strong political force last year. In Munich, the use of the Geiselgasteig studios, believed to be the most modernly equipped studios in Europe, was denied Harlan.

The postwar appeal was signed by prominent Frankfurt citizens, including Mayor Walter Kolb; Karl Pieper, chairman of Frankfurt district Trade Union Federation; Eugen Kogon, leader of the German European Movement; Karl Gerold, editor of Frankfurter Rundschau; Dr. Hugo Stenzel, editor of Frankfurter Neue Presse, and professors Boris Rajewsky and Dr. Franz Boehm of the University of Frankfurt.

Meanwhile, the owner of one of the biggest Frankfurt film houses, bowed to pressure by trade union and city authorities and decided against showing "Lover." Exhib said he decided to duck the booking after Mayor Kolb threatened to forcibly prevent the film's showing.

The new Harlan dispute is the third controversy in Germany about films within the last few weeks. Protests were also launched against the release of a greatly scissored version of "Oliver Twist" (Rank) as well as against 20th-Fox plans to release "Desert Fox."

Malvin Wald Sells Filmakers Interest For Denmark Deal

Hollywood, Jan. 22.

Malvin Wald, who sailed for Denmark Jan. 12 aboard the Gripsholm, exited his one-third interest in Filmakers (Ida Lupino-Collier Young) for a deal with Danish producer Carl Mosbey involving screenplaying of one film and a minimum of 13 vidpix. He'll draw $12,500 for an original screenplay, "Copenhagen Story."

Amount of dollars he'll receive is still to be worked out, with balance to be deposited in a Danish bank for him to draw for living expenses there. Vidpix yarns, for which he'll get 5% gross revenue, will be shot in Technicolor from Hans Christian Andersen stories. Telepic deal could result in distribution here in direct competition to Samuel Goldwyn's Danny Kaye starrer, "Hans Christian Andersen," currently filming. Wald retains a profit-sharing arrangement on past filmakers pix.

Mosbey family owns Danish-American steamship line.

NPA OK's 11 Theatre Projects, Nixes 13

Washington, Jan. 22.

Acting on a final batch of 507 commercial construction applications for the first quarter of 1952, National Production Authority has approved 11 theatre projects and nixed 13 others. At the same time, three radio-TV contruction projects got the green light while two were prevented from starting.

Most of the theatres okayed either had their scarce materials on hand, or didn't need any for the work to be done. The new list of 507 projects supplemented an earlier one of 2,052 cases on which NPA acted earlier.

Reveal Story of Distrib Suing Owner of Pic On U.S. Infringement

Detroit, Jan. 22.

Settlement of a damage suit involving the 17-year-old Julien Duvivier-directod film, "Golgotha," in Federal Court here last week brought to light a fantastic story of how an indie distrib rented prints from the picture's owner, secured a U. S. copyright on the pic, then sued the owner for infringement.

Golgotha Corp., according to Sam Waagenaar, head of Circle Film Enterprises of Hollywood, was owner of the film in the U. S. but failed to apply for a copyright in Washington. Company, he said, supplied prints in 1939 to Alban J. Norris, prez of the Michigan Film Library.

After acquiring the prints Norris staked claim with the Register of Copyrights. Records of the Library of Congress' copyright office show that Norris applied in 1939 by depositing several prints of "Golgotha—That All Might Live." He sued the Golgotha Corp. for infringement in 1946.

Two years ago Waagenaar picked up U. S. distribution rights to the picture from A. C. I. Film of Paris, which assertedly owns the worldwide rights. American distrib subsequently discovered that Norris was claimant to the U. S. copyright on the pic.

Waagenaar brought an unfair competition, injunction and damage suit against Norris in Federal Court. In a settlement before Judge Theodore Levin without a jury, Norris agreed to turn over his negative of "Golgotha." Waagenaar, in turn, agreed to supply two copies of the film at printing cost to Norris with the understanding that he is to release the picture only in Wayne County, which includes Detroit and environs. Waagenaar is to have all other U. S. rights. No damages were assessed.

"Golgotha," incidentally, was first screened in the U. S. at the Academy of Music, Brooklyn. French-made picture is a story of the betrayal, trial and execution of Christ. English adaptation was done by Forrest Izard and I. E. Lopert. Latter now heads Lopert Films.

Reason why Norris' claim to "Golgotha" went undetected for years, observers feel, is that the film is principally shown in churches and rural communities. Such screenings, it's pointed out, are frequently overlooked by the trade.

Cinderella Girl

$90,000 for the three weeks in Philadelphia and here last week at the Nixon, "Bell" did just as well.

As a matter of fact, Miss Russell appears to be the hottest legit b.o. attraction to hit the hinterlands this year. Word gets around fast. Days before she opened here, the Nixon had hung up its best advance in a long time, around $20,000. The house had its top week since Henry Fonda in "Mister Roberts" last season.

Traube seems to think that what she's doing in "Bell, Book and Candle" will send other names scurrying for road vehicles when they can get coin like this. He says such people as Van Johnson, Tyrone Power and others are considering tours now, if they can find the right vehicle. They'd rather play the keys, Traube claims, in something already established, than chance Broadway in new ones, particularly considering the experiences of Ginger Rogers in "Love and Let Love" and Ann Sothern and Robert Cummings in "Faithfully Yours."

It is Traube's opinion that what Miss Russell is doing may well mean the renaissance of the road, because of the big money there's available for the Hollywood biggies. That, and the fact that they want to do plays and are not so anxious to gamble on Broadway.

London Interested

Smash success of Shepard Traube's touring production of "Bell, Book and Candle," starring Rosalind Russell and Dennis Price, has revived interest in the film rights to the John van Druten comedy and prospects for a London edition. The show paid off its production cost after only three-and-a-half weeks' operation.

The offering, capitalized at $25,000, actually cost about $15,000. It grossed $7,500 in a three-performance break-in Dec. 21-22 in Wilmington and pulled a total of nearly $90,000 the following three weeks in Philly. On last week's $30,800 take in Pittsburgh, the show netted an additional $6,000. It's in Cleveland this week, and goes to Detroit next week. The production breaks even at around $16,000 travelling and $15,000 standing still.

Miss Russell, who gets 15% of the first $20,000 weekly gross and 20% thereafter, is under contract through May. Six weeks before that, she and Traube are to discuss an extension of the deal.

Video Exhibitors

to continue such events as part of their public service duties to their respective communities. But there are a number of other events, they point out, for which they can charge, either via renting the theatre on a four-wall deal for a few hours in the morning or by taking a cut of an admission charge.

United Paramount Theatres execs, for example, revealed this week that they were approached early this winter by the Girl Scouts, which wanted to stage its annual convention in theatres throughout the country, rather than bringing all the scout delegates into a central meeting point. UPT figured it could break even on such a deal by charging the Girl Scouts only 15c per seat. Details could not be worked out in time, however, so the project was called off.

TV exhibs also visualize the use of their theatres to present refresher courses for schoolteachers. It would be possible, they visualize, to bring all the grade and high-school teachers in the country together at the same time in their local theatres. In the same way, a surgeon who has developed a new surgical technique could demonstrate it to medicos in all parts of the country simultaneously.

Also in the works are lecture series, which would be staged either by the participating theatres or by the various lecture bureaus. Exhibs believe that it's possible to find at least 2,000 people in a community of any size who would be interested in attending a lecture delivered by the personalities now on the gabfest circuit. Speakers on theatre TV could talk to thousands of people at the same time, making more money than if they set out on their usual tours.

Inside Stuff—Pictures

20th-Fox's "Viva Zapata" gets unusual play in the February issue of Argosy, with the mag devoting its cover and 32 pages to the film. Feature is presented as a "novelette in words and pictures." Argosy sent photographer Sam Shaw on location to take the pix and had Merle Miller turn John Steinbeck's screenplay into a novelette.

In addition, film and feature get an extra plug from mag's editor, Jerry Mason, who points out that "Argosy's editors believe new techniques can be developed to tell great stories with words and pictures. These 32 pages are an example of what we mean." Film stars Marlon Brando and was directed by Elia Kazan and produced by Darryl Zanuck.

Metro, via its house organ, The Distributor, throws the spotlight this week on what it feels is the "mysterious" policy of some newspapers in accepting ad coin from the film companies and at the same time publishing copy "unjustly" detrimental to those same sources of revenue.

M-G paper, which is edited by Mike Simons, comments: "The mystery is even deeper when all of us know that the movies are the people's great mass entertainment, catering to far more people than any other and certainly to the same people who read newspapers."

'New' Sales

dorsements haven't a chance to fully circulate.

While some sales execs privately confess there's little that can be accomplished in the way of bringing in good coin with product lacking in entertainment values, they're plenty concerned over pix which draw critical acclaim but still falter at the b.o. The "art" circuit is being re-appraised in light of the heavier revenue the offbeat houses, which numerically growing, are now yielding. Showcasing of some films, particularly in N. Y.'s first-runs, is growing as a problem in view of the pre-opening campaign costs.

Distribs relate these are but a few of many factors which must be coped with in the present market.

Par's N. Y. meeting originally was slated to run only two days but was extended to five when it became apparent that the business of selling pix, particularly such an epic as "Greatest Show on Earth," demanded that much extra time.

Schwalberg, ad-pub director Jerry Pickman, assistant distribution topper E. K. O'Shea and other homeoffice department heads will take up the new sales push with exchange managers of the east, southern and mid-eastern divisions at a four-day confab opening tomorrow (Thurs.) in N. Y. This will be followed by a similar session opening Jan. 31 in Chicago.

M-G distribution topper Charles Reagan will preside at that outfit's Chi meet. High on the agenda will be plans to swing "Quo Vadis" into wider circulation via competitive bidding across the country.

Under its new showmanship program, as announced by ad-pub v.p. Howard Dietz, M-G will designate one film per month for the exploitation competitions among theatremen. Contest starts Feb. 1 with "Invitation," Van Johnson starrer. Although a new pic will be selected each month, theatre ops will have four months in which to develop the campaign and submit it, thus the deadli on "Invitation" is May 30.

Kramer Support

ance of Theatrical Stage Employees, said he'd prefer to adopt a policy of "wait and see" before he personally could give the Kramer organization complete exoneration regarding Communist influence.

In this connection, he said he opposed the use of the plays of Arthur Miller for films and indicated that he had its doubts about certain players "who always seem to be popping up in Kramer pictures." Kramer's film, "Death of a Salesman," which the Wage Earners Committee picketed in Los Angeles and which brought about the producer's $1,000,000 libel suit, is based on the Broadway stage success by Miller.

Brewer stressed that the WEC group was the last organization in the world to be able to determine "who was or was not a Communist." Film labor leader declared that the industry at last was taking a realistic view of the Communist problem, and if it continued as alert as it is now, Communist influence will be completely weeded out. He felt that the industry could have foregone all the probes and resultant problems if it had been on the alert.

The IA leader declared that his organization had worked hard to unearth the influence of Communism in the industry. "We were," he said, "the most potent force that was not neutralized captured."

Brewer also indicated that i general he did not favor the recent settlement with the "Hollywood 9" but pointed out that he recognized the problems the companies involved faced from a legal standpoint. "The case," he said, "presented many legal problems, and it is difficult for me to say how I would have acted had I been the position of the film companies."

Brewer, who returned to the Coast Friday (18), said he was in New York to discuss routine business with Richard Walsh, IA prexy. He noted that they had discussed policy matters and that he had learned Walsh's thinking on many problems confronting the union. IA's Coast topper termed the recently concluded negotiations with the majors "as the smoothest we've ever had." He said that the employment situation at present is extremely favorable because the slack which would have existed because of the decline of independent production had been absorbed by telepix production.

Brewer disclosed that negotiations are now underway with the Alliance of Television Film Producers, made up of Ziv, Bing Crosby Enterprises, Jerry Fairbanks, Flying A Productions, Roy Rogers, Televideo, Frank Wisbar, TCA, Primrose Productions and William Broidy-TV. He believed that the final pact would be similar to the one signed with the major film companies.

Labor leader said that the raise obtained for film workers was within the 10% allowed by Wage Stabilization Board, and that he believed that the regional board, meeting in San Francisco this week, would recognize the contract with the majors as the pattern for the industry.

(1939) for the State engagement, but after eyeing the latter decided that it was of too ancient vintage for current showing. As a result, Loew execs are weighing "Little Nellie Kelly" (1940) and "For Me and My Gal" (1942), with the latter favored to end up on the dual bill with "Meet Me in St. Louis."

Skelton "Carnival" opens today (Wed.) at the Loew's Dayton, Dayton, O. For this showing Metro has coupled "Whistling in the Dark" (1941) and "Whistling in Dixie" (1942).

In a test of the pulling power of big name femme stars, M-G is bringing back "The Postman Always Rings Twice" (1946)) starring Lana Turner, and "A Woman's Face" (1941), with Joan Crawford. Double bill opens today (Wed.) at Loew's Grant, Atlanta.

pears to be down by about 5% to 10% from 1951.

One theatre exec mentioned as especially noticeable now a tendency to further contrast between midweek and weekend biz. He said that Saturday-Sundays were comparatively good, but that the rest of the week had further fallen off.

When the same pic will do good grosses on weekends and n.s.h. the rest of the week, circuit exec opined that film quality apparently had less to do with weak biz than attendance habits.

QUIT YOUR WORRYING, HOLLYWOOD

Until the other day, we'd been inclined to lend a sympathetic ear to current moans and groans from our California movie capital. You know: Movie-making costs too much—TV's killing us—if it weren't for popcorn sales every producer out here would be on relief.

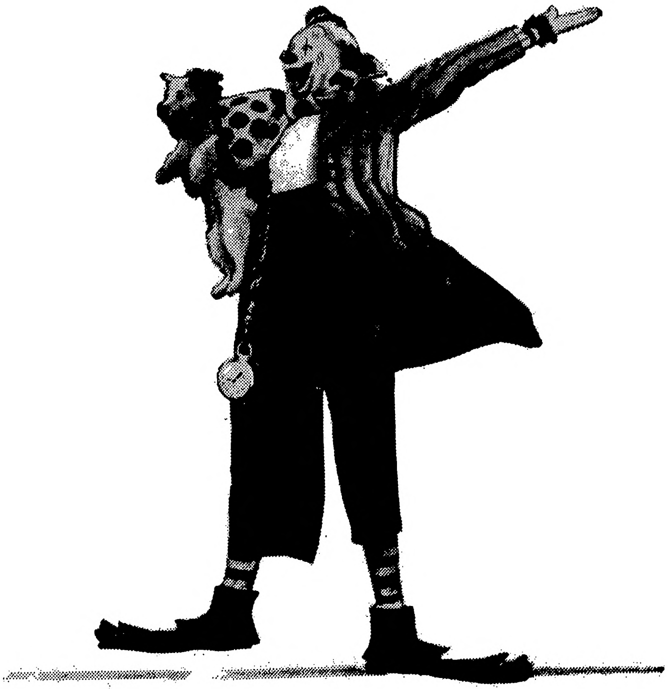
Then, the other day, we ankled over to the Music Hall Theatre to see "The Greatest Show on Earth," tagged by our shrewd Kate Cameron as a 4-star production.

Kate Told The Truth

Kate didn't give us a bum steer. In this one, ol' master Cecil B. DeMille has filmed a color-splashed thriller of the Ringling-etc. circus that's aimed right at the section of a spectator's backbone that quivers pleasantly at sight of a real show. Occasionally, the old film wizard allows such actor folk as Betty Hutton, Gloria Grahame or James Stewart to draw a bead right on your heart.

An added observation: "The Greatest Show on Earth" runs 2½ hours, and appears in sparkling Technicolor. As of now, TV can't compete with any of that.

Take your tears elsewhere, Hollywood. All you need is more real showbusiness, like your man DeMille's.



Paramount presents Cecil B. DeMille's "THE GREATEST SHOW ON EARTH" Starring Betty Hutton • Cornel Wilde Charlton Heston Dorothy Lamour Gloria Grahame with Henry Wilcoxon • Lyle Bettger Lawrence Tierney Emmett Kelly • Cucciola • Antoinette Concello • and James Stewart • Produced and Directed by Cecil B. DeMille • Color by Technicolor • Produced with the cooperation of Ringling Bros.-Barnum & Bailey Circus • Screenplay by Fredric M. Frank, Barré Lyndon and Theodore St. John • Story by Fredric M. two years and once for one year. Another temporary extension carried over from last September until Jan. 15, when the new Miami Beach pact became effective. It is for two years.

10%—Plus 5% Hike

Wage increase is actually stated as 10%, plus 5% more or whatever portion thereof is approved by the Wage Stabilization Board. Federal approval is not required of the 10% rise, but anything beyond that necessitates a WSB okay. In any case, new pact puts an $18.50 per week ceiling on any increase.

The hike affects some 600 to 800 year-round staff musicians and hundreds of others who answer studio calls for part-time employment. New contract continues terms of the prior agreement under which AFM members reserve rights in the re-use of music tracks for TV. Television rights were not mentioned in last week's negotiations.

New pact provides that recording sessions of more than six continuous hours draw an hour's pay penalty, and all recording done after midnight will be at time and a half. Musicians currently employed as staff members will be "frozen" until January, 1953.

It is also stated that contract musicians will be tendered new contracts 30 days before expiration of their previous pact. A non-playing orchestra manager, receiving not less than scale for a sideman, will be hired for any recording session using five or more musicians. Orchestra managers for smaller groups will receive not less than $2 per musician employed. Copyists shall receive time and a half for work in excess of eight hours.

Technical end of the negotiations was carried on by labor reps from the eight studios, headed by Charles Boren, labor contact for the Motion Picture Producers Assn. They were advised by Johnny Green, and Joseph Gershenson, heads of music departments of Metro and Universal, respectively.

Also in from the Coast to sit in with the company prexies and v.p.s on the talks were Y. Frank Freeman, Paramount studio chief, and B. B. Kahane, v.p. and exec producer at Columbia.

Promotion Rep On Coast Due for UA

With plans about set for reorganization of its N. Y. ad-pub department, United Artists' next step may be establishment of a West Coast office tenanted by a promotion rep who would be in direct contact with indie producers releasing through the outfit. Post under consideration is that of a liaison officer, similar to the UA setup which was abandoned a few years ago in an economy move.

Max Youngstein, UA v.p. and ad-pub director, expects to be on the Coast with prexy Arthur B. Krim and his pard, Robert Benjamin, in a week or 10 days. At that time the idea for setting up the new spot will be given active consideration.

Under the new setup in N. Y., Youngstein, who's taking on an expanded exec role in management, will be succeeded as ad-pub director by Francis Winikus. Latter's post, that of assistant ad-pub chief, goes to Al Tamarin, who has been publicity head.

Moving in as publicity topper will be Mort Nathanson, who's now serving as publicity rep on Sam Spiegel's "African Queen." Department will be further expanded with additional personnel when the reorganization takes effect around March 1.

Roger H. Lewis has resigned as v.p. of the Monroe Greenthal Co., advertising agency, with which he has been associated since 1947. Prior to that he was in charge of N. Y. campaigns for 20th-Fox.

It's figured likely that Lewis will join United Artists as ad manager, a post now open.

More Hysteria Than Cancelled Newsreels Told by Par's Morgan

More hysteri than actual cancellations of theatre newsreels accompanied video's entry into the film coverage of news events, according to Oscar Morgan, Paramount's shorts and newsreel topper. Practically all the exhibs who dropped newsreels because of tele competition have reinstated the film news service, he noted, with the only holdouts being those who are not subscribing to newsreels because of economy reasons rather than a fear of tele competition.

Morgan pointed out that during three-month sales pitch, Paramount News had signed or re-signed more than 1,500 newsreel customers, and is actively engaged a sales and promotional drive to push the news events.

Realization by exhibs that theatre newsreels are of superior quality, better reported, edited and presented has resulted in their reinstatement in TV-conscious areas, Morgan emphasized. He indicated, furthermore, that there were still millions of homes without tele sets and these people look to theatres for a visual presentation of the news.

H-N's Next Pic Due For Austrian Prod.

H-N Productions, which recently completed "For Men Only" for Lippert release, will likely turn out its next venture in Austria, producer-actor Paul Henreid disclosed in New York last week. Henreid, whose partners in H-N are Edward and William Nassour, said the project is tagged "Rendezvous in Vienna." It's an original by Robert Hill based upon a "true story" told to the star.

"Rendezvous" has been on the H-N production slate for some months but shooting has been delayed due to difficulties in clearing some rights to music for the film. Henreid anticipates that this problem will be adjusted shortly. He came in from the Coast for a series of radio and TV interviews to help plug "Men" at Loew's State, N.Y., and left for Boston Sunday (20) to bally the film's preem at the Paramount and Fenway Theatres there.

After "Men's" Boston launching, Henreid returns to Hollywood this week. He's scheduled to start "Prince of Pirates" for Sam Katzman at Columbia Feb. 12.

Latest Vets Pic Seeks To Crack 16,000 Dates

Record number of bookings for "One Who Came Back," latest short subject from the Disabled American Veterans, is being sought by the film industry.

Bookings will have to exceed 16,000, figure achieved by two previous DAV films, "How Much Do You Owe," with James Stewart and Gen. Jonathan M. Wainwright, and "On Stage, Everybody," with Bob Hope.

Pub-Ad Staffers Set To Picket Broadway Pic If Talks With Majors Fail

First action planned by pub-ad staffers affiliated with District 65, Distributive, Processing and Office Workers of America, if no agreement or definite proposals are reached with pix companies by the union's Feb. 1 deadline, will be a demonstration on Broadway against a picture of one of the companies involved in the negotiations. Union has been holding talks with Warner Bros., Columbia, Universal, 20th-Fox and United Artists since mid-November for a new pact to replace the one which expired Oct. 31, 1951.

Entire Screen Publicists Guild, according to a union spokesman, will take part in the demonstration, although negotiations are being held with the companies on an individual basis. Neither the picture nor the company to bear the brunt of the initial demonstration has been selected, the union spokesman reported. He indicated that this decision will be made at the time the action is contemplated.

Union is reportedly making some headway at Columbia, Warners and United Artists where talks have continued on a more or less regular basis. However, negotiations at 20th and Universal were said to be lagging.

Indie Skeds 8 Pix

Hollywood, Jan. 22.

Four-ply increase in production for 1952 was announced by American Pictures, which made two films in 1951. Five of the eight films on this year's program will be shot in Hollywood and one each in Spain, Brazil and the Philippines.

First on the 1952 program is "City Beneath the Sea," an Aubrey Wisberg-Jack Pollexfen production, followed by "Invasion U. S. A." "One Woman's Story" will be filmed in Spain, starting in April.

Studio TV Ban

ton has a full sked of press, radio, TV and community events dates lined up from the present to early next month when he treks to London for "Greatest Show" opening.

Heston's film work has been far too limited to result in such enthusiasm, even though the Par build-up boys have been doing a continuing promotion job with him. He was spotted by Wallis on a kinescope of CBS-TV's "Studio One" and signed for the film-maker's "Dark City." He's been seen only in this pic and the DeMille circus epic, which is now in limited circulation. Conclusion is that TV deserves a good part of the credit for the newcomer's prominence.

Meanwhile, continuing plenty enthused about the value of TV is Roy Disney, prexy of Walt Disney Productions. On the Christmas holiday the past two years Disney allowed portions of "Alice in Wonderland" and "Snow White" for telecasting. These showings proved "a great selling aid" in theatrical marketing of the cartoon product, Disney said in his annual report to stockholders last week.

Disney's evaluation of the importance of TV on that limited basis and Heston's overnight fame will combine to influence the new thinking on permitting film players to appear on TV shows, it's said. Top film producers have been clinging to the belief that repeated TV shots might lead to the public's becoming "fed up" with certain stars. Another reason has been that the top Hollywood names on TV would be in competition with standard pix in theatres.

The new reasoning in some quarters is that a few widely-spaced assignments in TV would enhance the popularity of his film "names," particularly the relative newcomers approaching stardom.

Wall St. Short Interest Off at UPT for 2d Mo.

Wall St. short interest in United Paramount Theatres has declined for the second consecutive month. Further indication of the comparative strength of film shares on the New York Stock Exchange is that UPT is the only company in which there has been any shorts dealings at all since Nov. 15.

Exchange's report for the 30 days ending Jan. 15 shows the shorts interest in UPT dropped to 4,920 shares from 7,120 at the same time the previous month. That, in turn, was a decline from 8,535 as of Nov. 15.

Shorts trading represents the sale of stock before it has been purchased, with the aim of covering by buying later at a lower price. It's playing the market in hope of a down trend.

films. The general thinking of the industry has changed, they emphasized, and the exhibs and distribs were reconditioning their thinking accordingly. Theatre owners admitted they were following no set policy at the present and were prepared to accept any type of product that could prove a b.o. draw.

In this connection, they pointed out that the major distribs are beginning to realize that they can get more coin out of a long run in the small theatres than out of short engagements in the large Broadway houses. It was more than quite possible, they agreed, that more top-quality products of the majors would be available to them in the future.

The arties for the most part are grouped in the 57th St. area and above, and it is the view of one exhib that the film business has definitely moved uptown. "Many of the people come come to our theatres," he said, "won't visit one of the large Broadway houses." He asserted that the general atmosphere of Broadway had deteriorated and that the Broadway houses had lost their appeal. He noted that the intimacy and comfort provided by the arties had drawn many filmgoers uptown.

Latest to enter the art house fold is the Arcadia, Third Avenue & 59th St., which closed down over the weekend for a complete refurbishing job, and will be reopened next month by the Walter Reade circuit as the Baronet under a first-run policy. In discussing the possibility of the shortage of product, Walter Reade, head of the circuit, declared: "We have sufficient contracts to get suitable films. We wouldn't be spending $100,000 to redecorate the house if we didn't think we could get product." Reade, who also operates the Park Avenue, added that his circuit never has had to close a house because of lack of product, and that anyway "competition was good for us."

New Baronet Theatre will join such established specialized houses as the Sutton, Paris, Normandie, Little Carnegie, Park Avenue, World, Fine Arts and three Trans-Lux theatres. In addition, houses such as Cinema 48th and 55th St. Playhouse are used occasionally for first-run specialized products. Two legit houses, the John Golden and the Bijou, are employed for two-a-day reserved seat showings. For example, Bijou housed such recent long-run as "Red Shoes" and "Tales of Hoffmann" and also gets Alexander Korda's "Cry the Beloved Country."

Pix Headstart

With the kind of product we have there is a vast movie-going audience ready and waiting, if we let them know about our pictures."

Einfeld addressed his remarks to a group of 125 circuit operators and indie exhibs participating in 20th's merchandising meeting at the homeoffice, aimed to step up showmanship energy and ingenuity. Outfit's upcoming lineup and promotion plans were outlined.

Al Lichtman, distribution head of the company, stressed that two-thirds of 20th's 1952 releases already have been completed and many of these will be delivered six months in advance of release. Angle he underlined is that this will provide maximum time for the mapping of promotion work.

sand dollars on only first-run TV showings.

Chemical Bank's package of 10 films is thought to represent those on which the bank put up first money financing to the producer and then took over all rights to the product when the producer failed to pay back the loan. Bank of America has also foreclosed on a group of indie-produced pix on the Coast recently which it helped finance but, despite bids from various TV networks and syndication outfits, it has decided to try getting its money back first by selling them on a subsequent-run or reissue basis to theatres.

WCBS-TV, incidentally, also pacted this week for the package of 26 feature film oldies being syndicated by Peerless TV, the new vidfilm production-distribution firm headed by Edward Small and George Shupert. Majority of these are films originally produced by Small for theatrical release through United Artists. WCBS-TV previously had purchased Snader Telescriptions' package of 17 films, most of them representing Sir Alexander Korda productions.

Station, as a result, now has a total of 53 features never before shown on video in N. Y. It's tentatively planned to release them on the station's various feature film programs during the first week in February, as part of a N. Y. TV premiere hoopla. Present plans are to slot them on the "Early Show" and the "Late Show" each night of the week and on the "Late Late Show" Saturday nights. Station presumably selected the first week of the month to tee off the packages, since that's the week in which the various rating services check on the programs.

three and a half years and $2,000 per week for the next three and a half years. Originally, Briskin was to receive options for 5,000 shares at $14 each, but because of the 2½% stock dividend paid last Dec. 28, the number went up to 5,125 and the price went down.

Amendments to stock option deals with Schneider and Joseph A. McConville, president of Col International, also are to be voted upon. Under the proposed new plan, McConville's and Scheider's options would be rendered non-transferable except by will or law of descent. Purpose of the new restriction, which the two execs agreed to, is to allow for them to exercise the options without realizing taxable income on the difference between the market price and the option price. This is permitted under the Revenue Act of 1950.

Up for a vote also is a new provision in Spingold's employment contract which would allow him a leave of absence of up to 20 weeks annually without compensation and a vacation of six weeks with compensation. This replaces a Col option to place Spingold on a part-time basis.

Subsid's Big Boost Ups Pathe's Earnings To $1,250,000 for 1951

Sharp boost in Pathe Industries, Inc., earnings for 1951 was attributed this week to the big increase in business chalked up by one of its principal subsidiary outfits. This was V. D. Anderson Co., designer and supplier of vegetable oil extraction equipment. Pathe's earnings for the year are estimated at $1,250,000, compared with a loss of $1,342,000 for 1950.

Pathe's '52 outlook has been further enhanced by a continuing mounting volume of film processing work in the TV and motion picture fields. Under terms of its sale of Eagle Lion Classics to United Artists last year, Pathe handles all lab work for indie pix released by UA.

Pathe Laboratories, another subsid, is now spending $250,000 for construction of an additional plant in Hollywood for processing 16m TV film. This will increase the company's capacity by about 35%.

Parent org recently arranged a $4,300,000 loan from four banks to pay off obligations due and for general corporate purposes.

Par-DuMont

interest he said, "It looks like we are stymied. I just don't know where to go from here."

(7) Answering question why Par shouldn't reduce its representation on DuM board from three directorships to one, he said that it would be advantageous to DuM in settling the control question but disadvantageous in depriving the company of the three Par directors' experience.

The four days of hearings before the Commission last week on Par anti-trust issues and the proposed ABC-UPT merger unfolded a fabulous story of the meteoric rise of Dr. DuMont and the complications he got into because he borrowed $164,000 from Par in 1939.

That $164,000, which bought for Par all the Class B non-voting stock in DuMont, is the reason why the licenses of DuMont's three TV stations (New York, Washington and Pittsburgh) have been placed on temporary status and put in jeopardy pending a determination of Par's eligibility, in view of its anti-trust violation, to hold broadcast licenses. And until that determination is made, possibly i six months, neither DuMont nor Par will know whether each can have its limit of five TV stations or have five between them.

Dr. DuMont testified that Par's TV station in Los Angeles, KTLA, and its formerly owned station in Chicago, WBKB, have never carried DuM programs. He said that Par would not accept th usual affiliation requirements because it wanted freedom to do its own programming.

He further testified that Par has never offered to supply films to DuM and that DuM has made no efforts to get program material from Par.

Cry, the Beloved Country merged native population ruled by the whites in South Africa. It is also a simple but eloquent plea for brotherhood in its story of the difficulties facing well-meaning persons of both races.

More particularily, "Cry" is the story of simple, naive Negro country preacher (Canada Lee), who goes to the big city of Johannesburg to seek a missing sister and wayward son, and who finds both in the crime-ridden, slum elements of the city. But before he has met up with his son, the latter has engaged in a robbery and killed a white man. The dead man is not only ironically one of the few whites who has tried to help the blacks, socially and financially, but is also the son of the rich farmer in the rural area where the preacher has his church.

The lives of the two elder men thus criss-cross several times as the threads of the story are untangled, to provide much of the message and some of the most poignant scenes in the film. The two have never met in their native heath; the white man has even felt it an affront to hold the hand of a black man. Their first meeting in far-off Johannesburg, when the preacher has to reveal that his son has killed the other's, is a gripping scene made memorable by Lee's poignant portrayal.

The film is full of touching moments or gifted bits, as when the preacher first meets his repentant son in prison; meeting of the preacher with the young girl whom his son has wronged; the courtroom scene when the son hears his death sentence pronounced, and the final meeting of father and son in the death house. No less poignant are such scenes as later meeting of the black preacher and white farmer; the sessions of white and black priests in Johannesburg; interrogation of scared, bewildered natives by white constabulary; meeting between the simple preacher and his devious brother, and some of the scenes between the white farmer and his wife.

Lee's performance as the troubled old preacher, restrained and underplayed, is a rich, heartwarming portrayal, dominating the film. Charles Carson is sometimes a little stiff as the rich farmer, but otherwise quite appealing. Sidney Poitier is manly and striking as a young Negro preacher, and Geoffrey Keen sensitive and likeable as the white head of the church mission. Joyce Carey is warmly moving in the role of the rich farmer's wife. Edric Connor lends strength to the role of the preacher's opportunist brother.

Two natives, Lionel Ngakane and Ribbon Dhlamini, play the wayward son and his girl, and deliver two very moving performances in reticent, restrained style. Albertina Temba, as the preacher's wife, also makes a brief role stand out.

Direction is expert, avoiding any suggestion of slick, contrived situations, and production is ample, though modest. Bron.

Smoky Canyon

New adventure of The Durango Kid. For action market.

Columbia Pictures release of Colbert Clark production. Stars Charles Starrett and Smiley Burnette; features Jack Mahoney, Dani Sue Nolan, Tristram Coffin and Larry Hudson. Screenplay, Barry Shipman; directed by Fred F. Sears; camera, Fayte Browne; editor, Paula Borofsky. Tradeshown N. Y., Jan. 18; '52. Running time, 55 MINS.

Names of Charles Starrett and Smiley Burnette provide the b.o. value in the action market for this routine oater. In "Smoky Canyon," latest adventure in "The Durango Kid" series, Starrett as the mysterious masked upholder of law and order brings to an end a bitter range war between cattlemen and sheepowners. War was fomented by Carl Buckley, an unscrupulous cattleman being paid by an eastern syndicate to keep Montana beef from the market—thus skyrocketing the price of beef.

In the course of the range war, Jim Woodstock, an honest rancher, is murdered, for which Jack Mahoney, his daughter's fiance and a sheepman, is framed. In the 55 minutes of running time marked by the usual fisticuffs, gunplay and frenzied horseback chases, "The Durango Kid" brings to an end the range war, exonerates Mahoney and reunites the lovers.

Starrett handles The Durango Kid role with his usual competence. Burnette provides the comedy relief, which appears forced but should go over big with the small-fry. Mahoney does okay as the framed hero, Dani Sue Nolan is a traditional western heroine, and Tristram Coffin makes an authentic heavy.

Barry Shipman screenplay is standard and Fred F. Sears direction is creditable as is the lensing of Fayte Browne.

Tim Holt in routine program oater.

Hollywood, Jan. 21.

RKO release of Herman Schlom production. Stars Tim Holt; features Richard Martin, Linda Douglas, Frank Wilcox, Robert Sherwood, John Pickard, Kenneth MacDonald. Directed by Lesley Selander. Screenplay, Arthur E. Orloff; story, William Lively; camera, Nicholas Musuraca; editor, Samuel E. Beetley. Tradeshown Jan. 18, '52. Running time, 60 MINS.

Tim	Tim Holt
Peg	Linda Douglas
Regan	Frank Wilcox
Kenny	Robert Sherwood
Dawson	John Pickard
Wheeler	Kenneth MacDonald
Mary	Wendy Waldron
Katie	Patricia Wright
Old Timer	Tom London
Dale	John Merton
Chito Rafferty	Richard Martin

Tim Holt is up to his likeable heroics in a stock program western that is just about par for recent releases in his RKO series. For the kiddies and Saturday matinee trade in the western programmer market.

Holt and saddle pal Richard Martin deliver a wagon train of pioneers to its destination in cattle country only to find the ranchers want no squatters fencing the land. There's a deeper reason for the skullduggery somewhere, and the script makes reference to it but never explains why some nonranchers are so interested in keeping the settlers out.

The hero buddies cross guns with Linda Douglas, girl rancher, and her no-good brother, Robert Sherwood, then come up against the more experienced dirty work of Frank Wilcox, saloon operator. Latter hijacks Kenneth MacDonald of his land claim papers and all of the settlers' money. His boys also try some bushwacking on Holt and Martin with no success, and the plot runs back and forth until the hero is able to get the goods on Wilcox and gun him down.

Holt and Martin are up to their usual standard, although kiddie fans are more than likely to find the latter's romantic urges mighty "sticky." A casting surprise is the spotting of Linda Douglas in the femme lead. While her role is no better than that usually given an outdoor heroine, she makes it much stronger, indicating adaptability to regular features. Another good casting note is Wilcox in the heavy role. He gives it an authoritative polish. Sherwood is good as the weakling brother and others come through acceptably under Lesley Selander's direction.

Fort Osage
(COLOR)

Average western with Rod Cameron; for more general situations.

Hollywood, Jan. 16.

Monogram release of Walter Mirisch production. Stars Rod Cameron; features Jane Nigh, Morris Ankrum, Douglas Kennedy, John Ridgely. Directed by Lesley Selander. Story and screenplay, Dan Ullman; camera (Cinecolor), Harry Neumann; editor, Richard Heermance; music, Marlin Skiles. Previewed Jan. 14, '52. Running time, 72 MINS.

Tom Clay	Rod Cameron
Ann Pickett	Jane Nigh
Arthur Pickett	Morris Ankrum
George Keane	Douglas Kennedy
Henry Travers	John Ridgely
Nathan Goodspeed	William Phipps
Sam Winfield	Stan Jolley
Mrs. Winfield	Dorothy Adams
Indian Chief	Francis McDonald
Martin	Myron Healey
Rawlins	Lane Bradford
Old Indian	Iron Eyes Cody
Martha Woodling	Barbara Woodell

An average round of feature western ingredients are supplied "Fort Osage" to promise a generally okay acceptance in lesser action market. Rod Cameron's name should help in the more general situation.

Plot is another of those tales about frontier scouts, wagon trains of pioneers, warring Indians and greedy whites that plays off in standard fashion. It could have used more action and less talk. Cameron, a scout, is hired to lead a wagon train across Osage Indian country but balks on the deal when he discovers the redskins are on the warpath because crooked whites, Morris Ankrum and Douglas Kennedy, have violated treaty terms.

Ensuing action finds Cameron making his accusations after avoiding a number of ambushes set up by Kennedy. Kennedy kills Ankrum when latter decides to turn honest, is pursued by Cameron and vengeful Indians and wiped out, thus permitting the wagontrain to go through as originally scheduled.

Cameron is a likeable hero and Jane Nigh fills the bill as the heroine, figuring in the proceedings as the daughter of Ankrum who does not know of his dishonesty. Ankrum and Kennedy are properly villainous. John Ridgely, William Phipps, Stan Jolley, Dorothy Adams, Francis McDonald and Barbara Woodell are among others involved.

Lesley Selander directed the Dan Ullman script, handling it well in the action moments but letting it drag during talky sequences. The Walter Mirisch production gives it a standard outdoor mounting. Cinecolor process used leans to orangey tints but otherwise Harry Neumann's lensing is good. Brog.

Stormbound
(ITALIAN)

Dubbed Italian import, adequate as filler for minor spots.

Republic release of Aldo Raciti production. Stars Constance Dowling; features Andrea Checchi, Aldo Silvani, Bianca Doria. Directed by Luigi Capuano. Screenplay, Comenico Meccoli, Fulvio Palmieri, Corrado Pavolini, based on story by Capuano; camera, Gabor Pogany; editor, Robert M. Leeds; music, Alessandro Cicognini. Reviewed New York Theatre, N. Y., Jan. 16, '52. Running time, 60 MINS.

Barbara	Constance Dowling
Rol	Andrea Checchi
Marco	Aldo Silvani
Maria	Bianca Doria
Stefano	Mirko Ellis
Sergeant	Tino Buazzelli
Nina	Paola Quattrini

An Italian languager dubbed in English, "Stormbound" rates only as filler material for minor situations.

Yarn about a femme American reporter bent on interviewing a notorious bandit in Sicily shows some promise at the outset, but it loses its interest as the pic settles down to an abundance of unimaginative conversation and implausible melodramatics within the confines of river shack where the bad man finds refuge from a storm and the police.

Constance Dowling, an American actress is the newsgal. She and others, including tenants of the shack, clearly were handicapped by the script and direction.

Lighting and camera work meet requirements of the inexpensive production. Gene.

His Excellency

Politico story may do for some U. S. arty houses.

London, Jan. 8.

GFD release of Ealing-Michael Balcon production. Stars Eric Portman. Direction and screenplay, Robert Hamer; camera, Douglas Slocombe; editor, Seth Holt; music, Ernest Irving. At Odeon, London, Jan. 8, '52. Running time, 84 MINS.

George Harrison	Eric Portman
Sir James Kirkman	Cecil Parker
Lady Kirkman	Helen Cherry
Peggy Harrison	Susan Stephen
The Admiral	Edward Chapman
The G.O.C	Clive Morton
Jackie	Alec Mango
Morellos	Geoffrey Keen
Fernando	John Salew
Charles	Robin Bailey
Dobrieda	Eric Pohlmann
The Chef	Paul Demel
Fernando's Wife	Elspeth March

When "His Excellency" was first presented as a West End stage attraction more than 18 months ago, it had the additional merit of topicality, a political story in the days of the Socialist government. That there has been a change in the political setup, naturally dates the piece somewhat; nevertheless, it doesn't affect the basic plot which is handled warmly and with understanding. Pic is a long way from being a top ranker, but should qualify for steady biz here and rates consideration for the art house trade in America.

In this filmic version, Eric Portman plays the role he created on the stage, the humble trade unionist appointed governor of an island after prolonged periods of industrial unrest, strikes and sabotage. As an ex-docker who himself had been on strike and had lived near the poverty line most of his life, the new governor's sympathies are mainly with the underpaid, downtrodden workers, but his first efforts at reform are blocked.

The tubthumping methods of the governor, who goes around the docks and the native districts explaining his viewpoint to the workers, is contrasted with the starchy approach of his predecessors and his colleagues. But when trouble breaks out again and rioters are in control, he is reluctantly compelled to bring out the troops to restore order. In breaking away from the red-tape attitude of his administration, he restores peace by addressing a mass meeting of strikers, collecting a black eye and a torn coat in the process.

Mainly through the excellent work of Portman, the story maintains strong appeal. His characterization is stamped with sincerity. Cecil Parker contributes another distinguished performance as his principal advisor, at first resentful, but later warming to new chief's methods. Helen Cherry plays his wife with considerable charm while Susan Stephen as the Governor's daughter, displays a neat measure of independence. Edward Chapman, as the admiral who has to toe the line; Clive Morton, as a typical general; and Alec Mango top a polished team of supporting artists.

Robert Hamer's direction from his own script, based on the play by Dorothy and Campbell Christie, maintains the tempo of suspense. Lensing by Douglas Slocombe is up to standard and Seth Holt has edited competently. Myro.

Genoa, Jan. 8.

Minerva release of a Fortezza-Omnium International Production. Stars Aldo Fabrizi, Lucia Bose, Ave Ninchi, Marcello Mastroianni. Directed by Luciano Emmer. Screenplay, Emmer, Sergio Amidei, Ennio Flaiano, from story by Amidei and Giulio Macchi; French dialogues and adaptation, Jacques Remy and Jean Ferry; camera, Alekan; songs, Kosma; editor, Jacques Poitrenaud. At Lux Theatre, Genoa. Running time, 110 MINS.

Mimi	Lucia Bose
Mrs. DeAngelis	Ave Ninchi
Marcello	Marcello Mastroianni
Franco Martini	Franco Interlenghi
Christine	Helene Remy
Gianni	Galeazzo Benti
Singer	Yves Montand

Makers of "Sunday in August" have come up with another lightweight comedy number along similar semi-documentary lines. Despite a slow second half, pic makes for good entertainment in a light vein. Good value for all Italian situations. Beyond that, it carries weight via name and performance of Fabrizi. Severe pruning job in second part would help it and likely make it okay for U. S. art spots.

Visit of a group of Italian sports enthusiasts to Paris occasioned by an international football match is pretext for some neat spoofing of Paris and "le tourisme" as well as of its provincial visitors. At night, both male and femme contingents take off secretly to catch the Paris-after-dark they've heard so much about. Most of them, notably Fabrizi, whose one thought has been women, are disappointed. Only the youngest of the lot finds happiness and love with a newsstand girl. The Paris-after-dark sequence is overlong, repetitive and though this allows for visits to several niteries and their shows, these are seldom up to expectations. In disappointing the visiting footballers, producers obviously also delude the pic's audience.

Fabrizi gives one of his best restrained performances and gets able backing from a large cast. Franco Interlenghi and Helene Remy shine as the romantic duo, sensitively directed by Luciano Emmer. Yves Montand socks over his two songs, one being, "Autumn Leaves." Hawk.

Royal Journey
(COLOR)
(Canadian)

Boff documentary feature of Princess Elizabeth-Prince Philip tour of Canada and U.S. Okay b.o.

Ottawa, Jan. 21.

United Artists (U. .) and Columbia (Canada) release of Tom Daly production for National Film Board. Features Princess Elizabeth and Prince Philip. Directed by David Bairstow. Ballet sequences directed by Gudrun Parker; camera, Osmond H. Borradaille, Ron Alexander, Dennis Gillson, Bob Humble, Wally Sutton, Grant McLean, Lorne Batchelor; editors, Ron Dick, Victor Jobin; technical supervisor, Gerry Graham; music, Lou Applebaum; commentary written by Leslie McFarlane. Previewed at Nelson Theatre, Ottawa, Dec. 20, '51. Running time, 52 MINS.

This is no glorified newsreel or mill-run documentary of the recent Canadian tour of Princess Elizabeth and Prince Philip. Okay camera work, intelligent editing and the new Eastman 35m color stock are among the items that haul it into the good b.o. prospects class. "Journey" is a natural for Canada and should catch better than average bookings in the U. S. and foreign markets, where distribution deals are pending. Prime feature is, of course, the Royal Couple, but it's more than a log of their trip; it's the first and probably best screen coverage of Canada and the Canadian people, with footage made in every province on every level.

The gentle, effective color is given adequate use in the pageantry of Quebec, the dignity and pathos of the Ottawa ceremonies, Toronto's fast-paced reception of the pair and the powerful Niagara shooting. First interiors are the Winnipeg ballet sequences, with the ballet and Her Royal Highness in glittering evening regality lending a Hollywood touch. There's the Royal Canadian Mounted Police show at Regina, the stampede at Calgary, the Rocky Mountains and Indians in British Columbia as well as the sea shots on the Pacific coast. Edmonton's oil fields and Montreal's $200,000 spread precede the Washington episode, where President Truman almost steals the screen from Their Royal Highnesses. A Laurentian snow sequence has a Christmas card beauty and a steel mill interior i Sydney, N. S., gets boff cameraing. Powerful finale is the storm-swept debarkation at Newfoundland.

"Journey" uses nine commentators to advantage, helped by Leslie McFarlane's bright scripting. Kudos go to National Film Board workers for making a top film under difficulties; inability to make retakes anywhere, lack of lighting facilities and pre-planning except in one or two instances, necessity to shoot without script, "temperamental" color stock requiring controlled temperatures and no precedent in its use, and dozens of other drawbacks, including less than a week to produce distribution prints for filmers. For instance, Lou Applebaum wrote and recorded the music in just under a week.

"Journey's" 52 minutes will probably send it to duallers outside of Canada, but it could stand up as a single anywhere. Gorm.

Incantesimo Tragico
(Tragic Spell)

Genoa, Jan. 15.

Lux release of an E.P.I.C. production. Stars Maria Felix, Rossano Brazzi, Charles Vanel, Massino Serato. Directed by Mario Sequi. Screenplay, Luigi Bonelli, Mario Sequi; from story by Bonelli, Sequi, and Marinucci; camera, Piero Portalupi; editor, Guido Bertoli; music, Roman Vlad. At Nuovo Odeon, Genoa. Running time, 95 MINS.

Oliva	Maria Felix
Pietro	Rossano Brazzi
Bastiano	Charles Vanel
Berto	Massino Serato

Though elegantly equipped productionwise, this costume meller lacks bite and is paced too slowly for general acceptance. Its cast names carry weight in some countries, but reception should prove mild. It offers little for the U. S. market.

Story involves a legendary curse passing to the finder of a rich treasure, sowing destruction and death, but finally dying with the woman, played by Mexican actress Maria Felix, falls off a horse and is killed. Probably due to underplaying (except for conventional finale), it fails to carry along its audience and the treasure hocuspocus fails to jell. Actors have little to work with. Camerawork by Piero Portalupi is impressive while Roman Vlad's music appears overworked. Hawk.

Genoa, Jan. 1.

Dear Film release of an Amato-D.S. production. Stars Walter Chiari, Isa Barzizza, Silvana Pampanini, Carlo Campanini. Written and directed by Metz and Marchesi. Camera, Vincenzo Seratrice; music, Pippo Barzizza. At Nuovo Odeon, Genoa. Running time, 88 MINS.

Walter Milani	Walter Chiari
Fernando	Carlo Campanini
Grazia	Isa Barzizza
Silvana	Silvana Pampanini
Prof. Frugoni	Enrico Viarisio
Anna	Nyta Dover

Intelligent treatment and the arrival of a new comic star will help parlay this comedy into high brackets among Italian grosses. Presence in cast of two top pinups will also help. U. S. chances, however, will be confined to Italian-language spots. Story successfully spoofs psychiatrist pix in telling about a department store owner who is subject to frequent nightmares. In these, he is plagued by a villain who always subjects him to ridicule. When the villain's double, in the form of a timid clerk, shows up in the same store, a bungling psychiatrist suggests a friendly approach may result in calmer dreams.

In giving his double role a zany yet human quality, Walter Chiari emerges as a definite comic personality. With an appeal directed particularly at younger filmgoers, his talent, if properly keyed, can be built further. Strong support comes from other cast members, and the frankly freudian dream sequences give lookers Silvana Pampanini and Nyta Dover a chance to display their physical outfittings. Carlo Campanini and Isa Barzizza are fine as manager and his daughter. Hawk.

A NEW YORK PARAMOUNT THEATRE ATTRACTION!

Ind. Exhib Uses His TV Repair Shop To Woo Patrons Back to Theatres

In the running battle between films and video for the entertainment audience, Kenneth Law, operator of the Cozy Theatre, Argos, Ind., is in a unique position. Law is also in the TV repair business.

Apparently Law's loyalty favors film exhibition, since he is reported using his TV connection to lure tele set owners back to his theatre. According to the bulletin of the Allied Theatre Owners of Indiana, Law is preparing a series of mailing pieces and sales letters which will go to video set owners. Law, the bulletin notes, had no difficulty preparing a list of set ow , since he used the names of his own TV clients.

The theatreowners' bulletin also points out that Law's sales pitch had authority "because he gets right into all the homes in his area that have television and has an opportunity to talk with the owner and learn how ownership has affected his entertainment buying."

While the Allied bulletin does not suggest that all exhibs go into the TV repair business, it says that it might be a good idea for other exhibs to buy such mailing lists from their local TV servicemen.

Reaction of non-theatre-owning TV repairmen was not recorded.

COMPO Invites Exhibs To Comment on Holdout Of Pix for Choice Periods

Council of Motion Picture Organizations has invited exhibs' comments on the complaint voiced by United Paramount Theatres v.p. Edward L. Hyman that distribs have been holding back on choice releases until holiday periods. As a guest byliner in VARIETY'S anniversary issue last Jan. 2, Hyman beefed that Thanksgiving, Christmas, New Year's, Easter and Labor Day "are primarily singled out and pointed to for the best product."

Circuit exec declared: "It is a terrible mistake to cut down on the flow of good product, and bunch out best releases at certain peaks, especially now when we face constant and alert competition. If we cannot keep the motion picture habit instilled in our patrons, we are in a fair way to lose the battle, and we must face the fact that once the motion picture habit is interrupted by a series of poor pictures at any time during the year, it takes several weeks to recapture the lost patronage and, in some cases, no recapture is effected."

COMPO's invitation to exhibs for comment was forwarded this week in a membership report issued by the Theatre Owners of America. TOA notes that COMPO intends to bring the pros and cons on Hyman's observations before the distribution heads of the major companies.

Rounding up exhib opinion on distribution policies represented COMPO's first move in the specific field of trade practices, in the opinion of observers. All-industry outfit, in concerning itself with trade and public relations, heretofore has refrained from the specific business of the distribs' licensing of their pi

CASPARY YARN FOR UA AS GOLDSMITH PROD.

I. G. Goldsmith, who turned out "The Scarf" and "Three Husbands" for United Artists last year, will do a third film for the same distrib, the indie producer revealed in New York this week. Venture, he said, will be a screen version of "Mother and Daughter," a Vera Caspary (Mrs. Goldsmith) novel which Little, Brown & Co. is publishing next fall.

Picture will probably go before the cameras in Hollywood sometime in July, Goldsmith declared. Meantime, the producer and his wife, who arrived from the Coast Jan. 14, plan to sail for Europe on the Constitution next Wednesday (30). Couple will debark at Naples. In a stay of several months on the continent, Goldsmith will aid in putting "The Scarf" and "Husbands" into distribution there. Films have not as yet been released in the European market with the exception of Sweden and Holland.

Christopher Awards Set for Beverly Hills Feb. 14; Prizes Total 25G

Annual Christopher Awards will be distributed Feb. 14 in Beverly Hills, it was disclosed in New York, Monday (21), by Father Keller, founder and director of the organization. Prizes total $25,000 and will be split among the film, book, TV, radio, newspaper and magazine fields. Object of the awards is to stimulate creative people in these categories "to provide the public with the high quality literature and entertainment they really want—and deserve."

The 1952 prizes will be divided as follows: $10,000 to the producer, director and writer of an "important and successful" film; $5,000 to the producer, director and writer of an "outstanding" television production; $3,000 to the producer, director and writer of a "highly acclaimed" radio presentation; $2,000 to the writer of a newspaper story of "unusual merit"; and $2,000 to the author of a magazine article that reflected a "high sense of values."

Christophers, in addition, are spreading their concepts by 16m films. Group screened a half-hour documentary in New York this week outlining how a TV producer could do a better job from a moral standpoint. Short is titled "Television Is What You Make It." While a distributor has not been set for the film as yet, Father Keller declared that it will be released both theatrically and on TV.

Lawrence, Mass., Exhib Sues for $23,000,000

Boston, Jan. 22.

All the majors except 20th-Fox have been named defendants in a $23,000,000 antitrust suit filed in Federal Court here by Jean Campopiano, owner of the Capitol Theatre in Lawrence, Mass. Campopiano charges that he has been denied first-run product for 15 years by the defendants.

Named in the suit were RKO, Loew's, Universal, Columbia, Paramount, United Artists and Warners. Also named were Warner Bros. Theatres of Boston, Warner Bros. Circuit Management Corp. of Boston and Lawrence, and the Massachusetts Amus. Corp., operator of four Warner houses in Lawrence.

Campopiano, a lawyer as well as an exhib, is acting as his own counsel.

ocratic politics since 1932. He served as second assistant postmaster-general by appointment of President Truman from October, 1945, to February, 1947, and is well acquainted with most of the key figures in Democratic politics.

What Sullivan would do about the TOA post if the report on the Kefauver job proves correct is uncertain. Presumably, he would be forced either to take a leave of absence or resign.

Kefauver's decision to seek the Democratic nomination was disclosed on a Mutual radio show Sunday, "Washington Whirl," by the Senator's wife. She said she and her husband had talked things over and she "had a feeling" he would seek the nomination. The Senator said he would make his position known officially about Feb. 1.

ca McCall, van Druten's New York rep, said "it definitely will be ' igher." That's on the basis of the road success, plus the generally higher prices available in Hollywood than was true when "Bell" opened last season.

"Banana" is likewise unusual, in that until a week or so ago there was no film interest at all. That's because its best skits are old burley routines and most studios have been afraid of law-suits, since the skits' origins are vague and no clear title to them can be obtained. Likewise, music and lyrics have attracted no great attention, so it was figured there was little to buy.

That's been changed by the revived interest in big-money properties.

testimony, declared it was wholly DuMont's seeming inability to consummate the deal that caused it to fall through. Frankly speculating, Raibourn said he thought the reason might well have been the unwillingness of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., which had floated a stock issue for DuMont, to see Par get out.

The Wall St. house had a twofold interest in seeing Par stay, Raibourn speculated. One was that its interest in DuMont added prestige to the latter's securities. Second was that via Raibourn as treasurer of DuMont and Par's three members on the board, a strong balance wheel was provided to keep DuMont's operations stable.

As Raibourn described the 1950 negotiations, DuMont offered to buy Par's holdings for $12,000,000. Par accepted. When DuMont was apparently unable to swing it, the deal was renegotiated at $6,000,000 and notes. Again DuMont was unable to close.

New negotiations followed and a price of $3,000,000 and notes was agreed upon. When that failed of consummation, Raibourn said Par made a final offer. It volunteered to give up all of its 560,000 shares of DuMont "B" stock for a block of "A" shares which it would distribute among its stockholders. That deal likewise fell through, Raibourn said.

Par already holds 43,200 shares of DuMont "A." The two classes of common have identical rights and preferences except that holders of "A" are entitled to elect five members of the DuMont board and the president and vicepresident, while "B" holders are entitled to three board members and the secretary, treasurer and assistant treasurer. No action can be taken by the stockholders without approval of a majority of both classes of shares.

more a matter of principle than practice, since it is doubtful if there is enough native product to fulfill the quota.

All of the moves are part of the extreme nationalism of the Vargas regime. Newsreel embargo has resulted from a demand that companies which send in the reels buy Brazilian-made newsreels or documentaries for distribution in the U. S. to the extent of 10% of the imported footage.

State Dept. has ordered the Embassy to make a complaint on the matter, but so far it has been done on an unofficial basis. Industry and the Department both feel that the decree is an abridgement of freedom of speech.

Another decree limiting to 8% the size of dividends which U. S.-owned companies in Brazil may send out of the country will not affect films, it is believed. None of the American distribs is remitting dividends larger than 8%.

However, when Federal Jurist Michael Igoe insisted on holding the company to the decree, M-G closed a deal with the Oriental, which was not a defendant in the Jackson Park case and not bound by the decree.

Color TV Pitch

the industry meeting in October with Defense Administrator Charles E. Wilson that it could proceed with production of the Lawrence chromatic tri-color tube. However, the NPA order, issued in November, barred use of the tube in color receivers.

NPA indicated the same manufacturers who were here at the Wilson meeting will be called again. The agency said nothing about including 20th-Fox, which desires to produce equipment for the Swiss Eidophor theatre TV system.

The picture industry request had not yet been received when the conference was decided upon. Picture industry request to Fowler, submitted by attorneys for the organizations involved, called for an official interpretation of Order M-90 as it applies to theatre TV.

"Great progress," the industry stated, "has been made recently in the development and simplification of the necessary large-screen projection equipment. It is of real importance that the scientific advance in theatre projection equipment for color television not be impeded. A question has arisen, however, as to whether Order M-90 limits or prohibits the development and manufacture of this equipment."

The attorneys said they have been advised that "little, if any, critical material will be required for color projection over and above that now permitted for black and white theatre TV. We are also informed that the production of a color TV projector—to serve thousands of people—will require no more critical materials than one or two home receivers.

"In view of the limited number of color theatre TV installations which will be made at an early date and the insignificant amounts of additional critical materials which would be needed for these significant installations, there would appear to be no sound reason to limit the development of this new industry."

Letter was signed by James L. Fly and Vincent Welch, for MPAA, and Marcus Cohn, for TOA and NETTC.

Museum officials revealed that they have received approval from the Motion Picture Assn. of America for the documentary to be screened in art houses but the okay does not extend to general release. Whether the picture will be shown in different states, it was pointed out, depends upon what action individual censor boards take.

As yet the film has not been submitted to the N. Y. State censor panel. But, according to Lesser, it has already been passed by official reviewing groups in Memphis and Kansas. Entry reportedly has had no problems following its preem last week at the Paramount Theatre, Hollywood.

In appraising the picture in VARIETY, reviewer Brog said:

Global Policy Meet March 23-29 Slated For 'Vadis' in Rome

First world-wide conference to map policy for a single picture has been set for Metro's "Quo Vadis." Arthur M. Loew, president of Loew's International, has skedded the conclave for March 23-29 in Rome with a homeoffice delegation and M-G reps in every foreign territory to attend. Total of 82 N. Y. execs and ad-pub and sales managers of 37 countries will sit in.

All details on promoting and general handling of the epic in each area will be determined at the session, over which Loew will preside. Discussions of sales policy will be led by Morton A. Spring, 1st v.p., and Samuel N. Burger, international sales manager.

Talks on various selling approaches will be given by Sam Eckman, Jr., managing director of M-G in Great Britain; N. Bernard Freeman, manager of Australia and New Zealand; Charles Goldsmith, coordinator of the British Empire countries; Dave Lewis, regional director for Europe; Seymour Mayer, regional director for the Far and Middle East, and Maurice Silverstein, regional director for Latin America.

Promotion plans will be outlined by Dave Blum, ad-pub director of the foreign department; Arthur Pincus, assistant director, and Morris Frantz, ad head.

In effect, the seven-day conference is designed to lay the groundwork for what M-G hopes will be the biggest sales push for a single film on the books. Company clearly is aiming to outgross "Gone With the Wind" via the intensified campaign. Only booking date for "Vadis" set in the foreign territory is in London, where the pic opens later this month.

Plan, in general, is to offer "Vadis" only at scaled-up admission prices in every territory. Production will be dubbed in Italy, France, Germany and Spain, and titles will be superimposed for some other areas.

'Vadis' Censoring for Britain

Objections made by the British film industry's pic censor against "Quo Vadis" were anticipated, according to a Metro spokesman, and these offending parts will be eliminated before the film opens in England.

One complaint was described by the spokesman as "the usual British objection to the personification of Christ," and he noted that this scene would be cut. Another contemplated cut will be the elimination of the crunching sound in the scene where Buddy Baer breaks the neck of a bull.

A Reuters report from London said the film would be banned to all children unless certain cuts were made. Story said that the film censor had granted the film an "X" certifcate — usually reserved for horror films.

THE WIERE BROTHERS

RETURN TO ENGLAND TO MAKE HISTORY IN LONDON'S WEST-END ENTERTAINMENT WORLD

It's the First Time That Impresario VAL PARNELL Has Transferred a Complete Musical, "PEEP SHOW," From the LONDON PALLADIUM to His Other Ace House—THE PRINCE OF WALES THEATRE—in Which THEY ARE STARRED.

It Is Also Unprecedented for Nitery Chief BOB BARNETT, to Book an Attraction for His Top London Nite Spot—THE EMBASSY CLUB—At Same Time Permitting It to Double at a West-End Theatre.

Our Sincere Thanks to VAL PARNELL For His Confidence in Us

Thanks to Our Accompanist MILDRED SEYMOUR for Her Perfect Co-operation

The British Press Raved About THE THREE WIERE BROTHERS In Val Parnell's "PEEP SHOW"

". . . Graced with the recurring appearance of the WIERE BROTHERS (who were in the Royal Command Show). One of the slickest, funniest and technically brilliant acts to be seen on the Palladium stage for years."

(NEWS CHRONICLE)

"A BRILLIANT TRIO . . . Best of all are the WIERE BROTHERS, a brilliant trio who last appeared in London before the War. Their return is overdue, for nothing quite like their witty act—fiddling, dancing, general inconsequence and playing the fool in the most beguiling fashion—has been seen here since. It is one of the most delightful turns ever presented at the Palladium."

(DAILY TELEGRAPH)

"The show belonged to three bouncy little Continental-born comics called the WIERE BROTHERS."

(DAILY GRAPHIC)

"The Palladium's best for many months, thanks largely to the pep and variety of the THREE WIERE BROTHERS . . . Their crazy mime and music aptly combines a Transatlantic frenzy with a Continental finesse. Their act could be called practically anything, since there seems to be nothing they cannot do. They sing, dance, tumble and juggle with violins as smoothly as they play them. They shine out from a spectacular show that blazes with vitality . . ."

(DAILY MAIL)

"Leading the show are those three triumphant Royal Variety Show performers, the WIERE BROTHERS . . ."

Nassers Challenge Legality Of AFM Royalty on Pix for Tele

Hollywood, Jan. 22.

American Federation of Musicians has been challenged on its 5% recording trust fund formula for pix going into television, with James and George Nasser, now in the process of trying to get four of their pix back from United Artists for TV, declaring they will take the issue to the U. S. Supreme Court, if necessary.

Nasser brothers contend the AFM formula is not legal, that they won't pay it unless a court says they must. Result of their position can have wide repercussions throughout the industry, for it's the first time anyone has challenged AFM's TV format, and a court verdict against the union could create an avalanche of pix to video.

Stand by the Nassers came following intervention by the AFM in the upcoming Nassers-UA hearing with a petition alleging that under original agreement inked between Nassers and union in 1948, showing of pix on TV would be a violation unless they signed 5% pact with union.

George T. Goggin, attorney for the Nassers, immediately advised Leonard Horwin, attorney for the AFM, that "we are resisting the petition on the grounds that it is premature, and has no particular significance insofar as our rights to acquire title of the pictures from UA in concerned. In the event the pictures are released for television any union right will be determined but in any event they (the union) are relegated to an inferior position. They have no valid legal lien of any kind or character against the pictures or proceedings derived therefrom in exhibition on TV. If they can prove a claim—which we doubt—it would still be nothing more or less than a general unsecured claim.

"Unless the court otherwise directs we will not sign any agreement with the union for rescoring the pictures for television. Why should we pay them for nothing? No one has wanted to challenge them so far, but we do. We'll take it into court to challenge the legality of such an agreement," he declared.

Horwin, in his intervening petition for AFM, stated attention is called to the fact that exploitation of the motion pictures on television is in violation of the agreement with the union and an infringement of the copyright of the AFM and its members, unless such exploitation is preceded by an agreement between the union and the Nassers."

The Nassers have filed a show cause petition with referee in bankruptcy Benno B. Brink to force UA release of their pix, stating the theatrical of the pix has reached the point where there is virtually no revenue, and they demand release of the pix so that they can channel them into TV. UA is resisting, contending televising of the pix would harm theatrical showings.

A hearing originally skedded for yesterday has been delayed to Jan. 25 at the request of Lloyd Wright, attorney for UA, who asked the continuance on grounds UA toppers would be here at that date. Goggin acquiesced to his request, and the hearing—also a test case—will be held next week.

UTP 'Movie Quick Quiz' Adds 6 More Stations

Chicago, Jan. 22.

Walter Schwimmer Production's "Movie Quick Quiz," being distributed by United Television Programs, is catching on fast with six more stations buying the series last week. "Quiz" is a televersion of "Tello-Test," Schwimmer's longtime radio quiz package bellringer, currently aired on some 250 stations.

Besides WGN-TV, Chicago, and KSTP-TV, Minneapolis, which bought in earlier, KHJ-TV, Los Angeles; WOW-TV, Omaha; WFIL-TV, Philadelphia; WXYZ-TV, Detroit; WMAL-TV, Washington, and WAAM-TV, Baltimore, have signed for the tele show.

The 15-minute cross-the-board strip is being sold for a minimum 26-week cycle. Quiz segments use 60-second films supplied by the packager who also suggests formats.

Gerard Into Vidpix

Hollywood, Jan. 22.

Barney Gerard, producer of the "Bringing Up Father" series at Monogram, severed connections with that studio and is organizing a company to produce both theatrical and television films.

Gerard joined Monogram in 1946 and made five "Father" films until his male star, Joe Yule, died. He is working out a TV angle on the George McManus newspaper strip.

Ventura Dubbing Vidpix Closeups

With virtually all American TV film distribs and a flock of foreign producers attempting to find a way to make lingual pix acceptable for tele, French filmmaker Ray Ventura has come up with a compromise solution. He is planning to shoot closeups in English and dub medium and long shots.

Straight dubbing of French, Italian and other foreign-language product is both too expensive and unsatisfactory. Subtitles are generally too small to be easily read on a tele screen. As a result very few foreign pix are used on TV, despite the availability of thousands of them at low cost.

Difficult and expensive part of

'Hickok' to WABD

"Wild Bill Hickok" series of telefilms, currently aired Thursday nights via WJZ-TV, ABC video flagship in N. Y., switches to DuMont's WABD starting Feb. 9. Series on the DuMont key outlet will be aired Saturdays from 6:30 to 7 p. m.

Kellogg will continue as bankroller, through the Leo Burnett agency.

AUTRY PREPS OAKLEY COMIC STRIP VIDPIX

Hollywood, Jan. 22.

Gene Autry, Armand Schaefer and Mitchell Hamilburg have acquired television, radio and merchandising rights to the "Annie Oakley" comic strip by Eli H. Leslie, with Autry's Flying A Pictures skedding a series of 52 vidpix in the spring. They're hunting a 17 to 18-year-old femme who can ride and shoot, for the lead.

Autry will hold contests in cities where he's now personaling. Lou Grey will produce. Hamilburg has already set the manufacture of costumes, and a merchandising campaign also gets underway in the spring.

Crouch to Sound Masters

Sound Masters, Inc., N. Y., commercial film production firm, has set up a new TV film department and has signed William Forest Crouch, former exec producer of Filmcraft Productions, as exec producer.

Sound Masters, in addition to its new vidfilm work, will continue to turn out industrial and other nontheatrical product.

Goetz-Spitz Offer 8 Int'l Pix Oldies To NBC for 500G; Eye Capital Gains

Hollywood, Jan. 22.

William Goetz and Leo Spitz have approached the NBC-TV web with an offer to sell outright for about $500,000 all eight features produced by them under the old International Films banner. Under the deal, eyed as a capital gains venture by Spitz and Goetz, NBC would take over the films to syndicate any way it desired. It would represent one of the largest films-to-video deals to date.

Indie producer Sol Lesser, meanwhile, also has put in a bid for the package. Lesser wants them to distribute to TV stations under his recently-formed Producers Representatives, Inc. Producer set up the P-R outfit following his exit from Peerless TV, the vidfilm production-distribution outfit established by Edward Small and George Shupert.

The Goetz-Spitz package does not include any Universal-International product. Instead, it comprises films made for International prior to its merger with U. Seven of these were originally released through RKO and the eighth through U. Pix star such names as Gary Cooper, Orson Welles, Claudette Colbert, Edward G. Robinson, Joan Bennett, Loretta Young and Lew Ayres.

Films were all made between 1943 and 1946. Lineup includes "Casanova Brown," "It's a Pleasure," "Along Came Jones," "Belle of the Yukon," "Woman in the Window," "The Stranger," "Dark Mirror" and "Tomorrow Is Forever."

NABUT's Script Unit

National Assn. of Broadcast Unions & Technicians, CIO, which has been expanding in the entertainment field, with squawks of "raiding" from AFL and Authors League of America unions, has added a scripting unit.

Associated Film Writers, eastern screen writers union, has affiliated with NABUT's Assn. of Documentary & Television Film Cameramen. The former members of AFW will have representation of the ADTFC executive board.

Packard Pacts 'Rebound' Series

In the latest instance of a television advertiser buying a selective "celluloid network" to get his sales pitch into only those markets he wants to hit, Packard Motors this week wrapped up plans for booking the Bing Crosby-produced "Rebound" series of half-hour vidpix into a select string of 19 stations.

Markets were selected for Packard by the Maxon agency, which handles the account. According to a spokesman for Maxon, the films will be playing to almost 15,000,000 sets, despite their hitting less than a third of the total TV mar-

Lesser, Fairbanks Talk TV Prod.-Distrib Deal

Hollywood, Jan. 22.

Sol Lesser, without a television distribution outlet since severing relations with Peerless Television and Edward Small, is talking a possible production-distrib deal with Jerry Fairbanks Productions.

Lesser is confabbing with Fairbanks and v.p. Sid Rogell on a deal whereby resources would be pooled for joint production-distribution. Fairbanks says, however, discussions are "in the early stages—we have a long way to go."

650 RKO Pix

has offered a down payment of $1,000,000 and that Hughes has frowned upon this.

Loose Comparison

Actually, RKO's entire stock issue of about 3,900,000 shares is quoted on the N. Y. Stock Exchange at $4.25 per share, for a total of $16,575,000. In view of this, the $12,000,000 price for the back product alone would seem excessive unless easy terms on the payoff were part of the agreement, it's reasoned. Incidentally, figuring RKO's overall market value simply by multiplying the number of outstanding shares by the trading price is not valid since any heavy buying immediately would up the per-share price. The $16,575,000 figure is used only for a loose comparison.

Since Fox appears as the key figure in the projected transaction, hep observers are disinclined to brush it off as a wild dream. This might normally be the case with a proposal of such spectacular nature, but Fox has a reputation for following through on deals.

He was instrumental in obtaining UA control for himself and pards Arthur B. Krim and Robert Benjamin. He also managed to swing UA's purchase of Eagle Lion Classics. Neither of these involved an immediate cash outlay by the purchaser.

Fox, backed by David Baird, also put together his Motion Pictures for Television Co. via an amalgamation of several small TV outfits. MPFT is now one of the biggest TV film distributors.

The total number of 650 represents RKO's complete library of sound pix made through 1947. Films made after that year require costly clearance through the American Federation of Musicians if they're to be TV-ed and consequently would not be covered in the projected buyout by Fox.

TELEVISION'S GOING THATAWAY

NBC Dickers for KMPC

Negotiations are under way, it's been learned, for NBC to acquire KMPC, the Richards' station in Hollywood. Presently the network is without an owned-and-operated station on the Coast and acquisition of the outlet owned by the widow of G. A. Richards would mean NBC divesting itself of one of its other o&o stations. It's presumed it would be either KOA in Denver or WTAM in Cleveland.

Once before NBC initiated a move to acquire KMPC, one of the most lucrative radio operations on the Coast, but nothing came of it. However, it's known that serious discussion is now taking place, with John K. West, who heads up the Coast operations for NBC, currently in N. Y. with Bob Reynolds, manager of KMPC, for huddles with NBC-RCA brass. Amount involved is not known.

It's understood that KMPC, recently the target of the protracted news-slant bias hearings before the FCC, has been up for sale because the Richards estate presumably needs cash.

NBC merely says "no comment."

NBC's 'Point of No Return' On Basic Economic Study for Radio

NBC has not sent out its letter to the radio affiliates announcing that, effective July 1, its new Basic Economic Study, with its drastic reappraisal of affiliate standing, would go into effect. The letter was scheduled to have gone out "on or before Jan. 15" and, once delivered, would have made a fait accompli of the network's unprecedented move toward repatterning its radio operation to the new TV economy.

Under the new study, it reevaluates an affiliate's stature in terms of its ability to deliver a radio audience in the face of TV inroads, and makes commensurate readjustments on the amount of the sponsor spoils it will receive from NBC.

As far as NBC is concerned, it has reached a "point of no return," in which network prexy Joseph H. McConnell is determined not to retreat from the new formula. He put himself on record at the Boca Raton, Fla., convention and subsequently at a followup meeting in New York, when irate affiliates, some even threatening secession, implored that the network hold everything in abeyance pending a more exhaustive examination of the AM-TV facts. McConnell turned them down cold.

It now appears that, in order to crystallize its position, NBC needs more influential, solid stations to

Newspapers In Ad Swipe at TV

Newspaper industry cracked back at television's persistent claims that it can deliver a lower cost-per-thousand audience via a near-full page ad in the N.Y. Times yesterday (Tues.) placed by Moloney, Regan & Schmitt, newspaper reps. Ad copy, claiming $1,000,000 will no longer buy a "big TV campaign," said that "$1,000,000 spent in newspaper advertising will buy a big newspaper campaign of 1,000-line advertisements every other week for a full year in 79 newspapers in the 63 TV cities."

Ad was topped by a cartoon depicting a husband and wife carrying two auxiliary video receivers into their living-room to set up next to their original set. Cartoon was captioned, "Excuse us a moment—three of our favorite programs come on at the same time." Underneath the caption, the ad read: "In newspapers the reader can look at all the advertisements in the same issue."

Also included was a box of questions and answers, which claimed that the advertiser pays to secure the TV audience, whereas the newspaper itself pays to secure the newspaper audience. According to a Moloney, Regan & Schmitt spokesman, the newspaper rep firm paid for the ad, with no cost participation by newspapers. He said it was scheduled for the one-shot insertion in the Times only.

CBS-TV Eyes Cass Daley

Cass Daley may be the next personality to be signed on a long-term exclusive basis by CBS-TV. Web this week is close to a deal with the comedienne to appear as star of a weekly half-hour show.

It's expected that the program will have a variety-revue format, spotlighting the usual guest acts.

Involved Station Ties Add Up To 'TV Puzzlement'

What happens when manufacturing-broadcasting ownership interests start to overlap and get in each other's way, has become increasingly accented ever since NBC, which is owned by RCA, pacted the rival Philco corporation to sponsor the political conventions and general elections on television. And to a lesser degree, it's manifested in the CBS-TV signaturing of Westinghouse for the politico ride.

It's reported that RCA is miffed over the failure of its subsid NBC operation to offer the NBC-TV pickup of the conventions to the parent company. Not that there's any guarantee that RCA would have gone for the deal, but it's understood that RCA felt it was entitled to first refusal on sponsoring the conventions.

RCA-Philco sensitivities stemming from manufacturers' private ownership of television stations appear to be nothing new, however. In Philadelphia, Philco owns WPTZ, which is the NBC video affiliate in that city. But when the local RCA people want to go into Philly television to plug their products, they find it necessary to do business with the ABC outlet (WFIL-TV) or some other station, because of the recurring Philco identification and tagline that

KAISER-FRAZER BUYS 'SHOW OF SHOWS' SEG

Kaiser-Frazer this week signed with NBC-TV to pick up the final half-hour segment of the web's Saturday ight "Show of Shows" on an alternate week basis starting Feb. 16. Auto firm replaces Eversharp on the show, and will alternate with Lehn & Fink. Agency for K-F is Weintraub.

Car outfit now bankrolls "Ellery Queen" Sunday nights on the ABC-TV web. While a final decision has not been made, it's believed K-F will drop the "Queen" show at the expiration of the present cycle, in about six weeks.

PATTERNS DIFFER FROM RADIO ERA

By GEORGE ROSEN

As television continues to grope for some semblance of permanency in formulating its own patterns, it becomes increasingly apparent that the whole TV program structure is taking on a uniqueness of its own, quite distinct from radio or any other facet of entertainment.

Through the years when radio was the dominant kilocycle attraction, it was the prevailing practice of sponsors to latch on to a show or top personality and stick with it year-in-year-out. Johnson's Wax enjoyed an identification with Fibber McGee & Molly that transcended a mere business arrangement. Ditto Kraft and Bing Crosby; Maxwell House Coffee and Burns & Allen. And so on down the line. The client and the star were as closely bound on the golf links as in the studio.

But in TV, the client is rare who can call his show his own. The economics attending video no longer permit for such long-range, close-bound relationships. Friendships in terms of client-program relations are predicated on 13-week options — and sharing the talent's affections with other sponsors. The Bob Hopes, Kate Smiths, Sid Caesars, Jimmy Durantes, Danny Thomases, Arthur Godfreys and other top TV personalities, unlike the Crosbys, Hopes and Cantors of another era, are playing the "split personality circuit" in TV with a multiplicity of sponsors, with a realization that next season the sponsors will be represented by a new dramatis personnae, perhaps on another network, and the stars will be transferring their allegiance to another Mr. Moneybags.

Accelerated Turnover

As the TV programming sweepstakes continue to shape up, it also becomes increasingly evident that the programming turnover will be at a far more accelerated pace than in radio. The cost factor makes this a necessity. With time and talent fees spiraling on an average of every six months, the client, faced with a situation where he's paying as much for a 30-minute show in 1952 as it cost him for a full-hour attraction in 1951, has no alternative but to scan the program horizons on a continuing basis in quest of lower-budgeted shows, or throw in his lot with other participating clients. As costs continue to rise, the alternate-week sponsorship of a show will become more and more the prevailing practice, as, for example,

Whys & Wherefores Of TV Violence to Be Sifted in NAEB Study

In addition to its quantitative analysis of program content on New York tele, the NAEB group is prepping a study of violence in the medium. Latter won't be merely a cataloging of the murders in whodunits, but will examine the amount, kind and context of the violence. Psychological context in which the mayhem occurs will be considered, including violence in humorous situations.

Study will also probe into the amount of violence performed in the interest of law and order and analyze whether each individual act of violence was essential to the plot or gratuitous, tossed in for its sadistic effect.

Another aspect will be an analysis of programs appraised favorably or unfavorably by the critics and programs standing high and low in public acceptance (according to the rating services) in relation to the amount of violence they include. It's expected this will indicate whether a large dose of violence helps or hinders a show's standing with critics and public.

'52 Study of N. Y. Viewing Habits Shows Crime, Drama Programs Up, Variety Shows, Comm'ls Ease Off

New York's television output in the past year has 50% more crime shows and a sizeable increase in dramatic programs, and the proportion of time devoted to commercials has declined slightly, according to preliminary results of a survey released today (Wed.) by Dr. Dallas W. Smythe, director of studies for the National Assn. of Educational Broadcasters.

Figures were released by Seymour N. Siegel, NAEB prexy, based on monitoring New York's seven tele outlets for week of Jan. 4-10. Project, paralleling one made exactly a year before, was financed by a grant from Fund for Adult Education established by the Ford Foundation. First study was made to arm the educators with data for their appearance before the FCC last January to demand allocation of video channels to schools and colleges.

Tele dramas show a hefty increase, jumping from 33.2% of total air time in '51 to 42.3% in '52. Drama beamed for kids declined from 7.8% last year to 6.6% this year, but general drama rose from 25.4% to 35.7%.

Within the drama category, crime soared from 10 to 14.8% in the 12 months; 10 minutes out of every hour on the air is devoted to cops and robbers stuff. Westerns rose from 7.8% to 8.4% while romantic dramas dipped from 5.7% to 4.6%. Domestic dramas, sparked by new daytime soapers, climbed from 1.1 to 4.0%. Comedy drama slid from 3.3% to 3.1% as action drama went from 2.1 to 2.3%. Musical dramas and adaptations of classics each occupied 0.8% of total air time.

Kid-Slanted Varieties Up

Contrariwise, variety programs skid from 18.4% of air time last year to 10.7% this year. While general variety accounted for 13.6% of N. Y.'s video time last January, this year it took only 6.2%. There was a slight pickup in

Tallu's Time Out

Alan Shulman, cellist in NBC's "The Big Show" orchestra (he's also in the NBC Symphony), composed a symphonic work, "A Laurentian Overture," which had its preem at last weekend's series of concerts of the N. Y. Philharmonic, under Guido Cantelli, at Carnegie Hall, N.Y. Shulman dedicated the opus to Tallulah Bankhead, "Big Show's" star-emcee.

Because the Philharmonic's Sunday afternoon (20) concert was broadcast, Miss Bankhead prevailed on NBC to knock off rehearsals of "The Big Show" for a full 12 minutes that afternoon, so that cast, technicians, orch, etc., could listen to "her" overture. NBC footed the bill for salaries involved in the 12-minute layoff, while the broadcast was piped into the Center Theatre, where "Big Show" rehearses and airs. Added ironic touch was that a rival network, CBS, was beaming the broadcast.

Biow-Schenley Final Split Due To Policy Snags

Within a year after losing approximately $4,000,000 of the Schenley liquor billings, which were subsequently inherited by BBD&O, the Biow agency this week parted company with its remaining Schenley biz, totalling another $2,000,000. At the same time the Biow agency announced the resignation of Erwin D. Swann, the agency's Schenley account exec. Swann, for years one of the top liquor specialists in the advertising field, had just returned from a month's trip to Mexico when he was apprised of the Biow-Schenley split. His future plans are still indefinite.

Biow agency had the Schenley business since 1942. Final split resulted from policy differences between the agency and the client. Schenley billings had been split three ways, among Biow, BBD&O and Weintraub, with the latter having the lucrative Blatz beer subsid account, in addition to some liquor brands.

What agency will inherit the $2,000,000 account (Cream of Kent and Old Stagg brands) from Biow is still undecided, with Schenley shopping around for a new agency.

CANNON MILLS EXPANDS 'GIVE & TAKE' TO TV

Cannon Mills this week bought the Friday 10 to 10:30 a.m. period on CBS-TV for a video version of its "Give and Take" show, which winds up CBS' morning programming setup.

Since Arthur Godfrey does his Friday morning radio show from his farm, CBS-TV is not able to simulcast Godfrey on Fridays as it does through the rest of the week. As a result, Lever Bros. bought the 10:15 to 10:30 a.m. simulcast on a Monday-through-Thursday basis only, and the web also set its 10 to 10:15 news show for the first four days of the week. Thus, the Friday 10 to 10:30 slot was open until Cannon decided to move in.

Same sponsor has been bankrolling "Give and Take" Saturday morning on CBS Radio for the last six months, and also has a participating spot in NBC-TV's Kate Smith daytime show.

NBC Radio Stars To Get Chummy

A "Call Back to Radio" campaign, in which top stars will make "direct-phone" appeals to 5,000 listeners a week, is being launched by WNBC, N. Y., and may be adopted by other NBC o-and-o outlets and affiliates across the country.

The plan to hypo radio audiences is based on use of a tape recorder playing into a telephone. A star such as Kate Smith, Eddie Cantor or Tallulah Bankhead is recorded giving a personalized invitation to hear his show and mentioning the specific guests. A station staffer calls the prospective listeners, says "Tallulah Bankhead (or Kate Smith) would like to talk to you," and starts the tape. At the end of the taped message, staffer adds other personalized selling chatter.

Concept of WNBC general manager Ted Cott is that after the novelty factor of tele wears off, set-owners return to radio. However, their dialing habits don't come back easily and the plan is to promote radio listening by reminding fans where their stars are via the "vocal autographs."

NBC exec veepee Charles R. Denny has given the go-ahead to WNBC on the plan and is working on development of the idea for other outlets. Jim Gaines, o-and-o stations veepee, is also helping shape the plan.

Staff of three will make the calls, which would total 260,000 over a year in N. Y. Project was field-tested, with persons called expressing pleasure at "talking with" the celebs.

DuMont, Life in Politico Coverage For Co-op Sales; Admiral's ABC Deal

In a deal designed to give local television stations a chance to show a profit on their airings of next summer's political conventions, the DuMont net and Life magazine teamed yesterday (Tues.) for comprehensive coverage of the meets, which will be offered to DuMont affiliates throughout the country on a co-op basis for sale to local sponsors. Life itself is not bankrolling DuMont's coverage but is pooling its reportorial and photographic resources with DuMont's technical facilities for "coverage in depth." Life-DuMont announcement follows by three days the news that Admiral will bankroll the conventions on ABC.

Offer of the events on a co-op basis will give the stations a chance to earn some money, it's pointed out, because in most cases they will not be faced with the costly pre-emption problems facing outlets taking feeds from the other nets. One major station operator is said to have complained that it will cost him $20,000 to take a feed from NBC or CBS. If he takes the DuMont-Life coverage, he pays DuMont only $7,500 for the service and then can sell the events to a local bankroller at his full card rate. DuMont has established a scale of payments based on each station's card rate, which in turn reflects circulation in each market.

Plan, announced jointly by DuMont general manager Chris J. Witting and Life publisher Andrew Heiskell, wraps up plans for the four major networks. ABC this week set a deal with Admiral to sponsor its coverage, while NBC had previously pacted with Philco and CBS with Westinghouse. While most stations have already made commitments with NBC, CBS or ABC for their feeds, it's conjectured in some circles that DuMont's plan may throw the ticklish station clearance problem into the air again, since some of these stations may try to check out of their commitments to take the DuMont deal.

DuMont, naturally, automatically will take over feeds for its three

Lone-Markets Coy On Election Ties

Some of the major single station TV markets in the country are still holding aloof from making any commitments to either NBC or CBS on pickups of the political conventions and general election in November.

As of the moment it appears that NBC, which has Philco sponsorship coin riding with it, has the edge, since the stations involved are all basic NBC affiliates. Nonetheless, CBS, with its Westinghouse sponsor identification, is making an all-out stab to latch on to the desirable single-station cities.

These include WKY-TV, Oklahoma City; WTMJ, Milwaukee; WDAF-TV, Kansas City, and KSD, St. Louis. NBC has more or less of a verbal commitment from P. A. Sugg, who operates the Oklahoma City station, but nothing's been signatured as yet. KSD, owned by the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, feels obligated for local sponsorship tie-ins with the daily for direct pickups from the Chi conventions, and thus wants to hold off on any defiite network tie. Both WTMJ-TV and WDAF-TV want to "study the picture" before agreeing to anything.

NBC DICKERS 5-YEAR SAMMY KAYE PACT

NBC is dickering with Sammy Kaye on a five-year exclusive radio and television pact. Pitch is a move to bring over to NBC Kaye's tele show for Listerine, currently on CBS-TV, and his radio show for Sylvania, now on ABC. His disk deal with Columbia Records, a 10-year pact, wouldn't be affected.

Kaye's Saturday evening video show has built to a 20.0 Nielsen rating, its high for the season.

Snowballing

Ogden, Utah, Jan. 22.

Len Allen, KLO chief announcer and deejay, nearly got himself into a tough spot while pitching for the March of Dimes last week. Allen offered to clean the snow off the sidewalk of the person sending in the biggest contribution to the polio fund.

Cropper came when a check for $100 showed up, sent in by officers at Hill Air Force Base, who calmly informed Allen they had 180 miles of walks and parking ramps at the base. The airmen relented finally, and put mechanized equipment to work on the job.

Last year Allen didn't get off so easily. He offered to wash dishes for the biggest donation, and ended up in the crockery laundry of a local restaurant.

Mail Order Setup May Have Revise Due to Chi Beefs

Chicago, Jan. 22.

Mail order business this past Christmas season hit a peak level at Chi radio stations, but the execs are currently doing some reappraising in the wake of a wave of listener complaints. The delayed reaction "headaches" that hit several station front offices have left the brass wondering if the Yuletide revenue from the mail order pitches isn't more than offset by the unhappy audience relations involved.

One network station, it was learned, received over 600 letters of complaint as the result of a pre-Xmas saturation plugfest that netted about $3,000. With the more than 600 specific beefs, plus the unregistered uncomplimentary word-of-mouth, the station's management figures the time sale wasn't such good business after all.

The beefs in this case apparently didn't arise out of the quality of the product itself, but rather because of tardy delivery. The orders were placed as Xmas gifts and when they failed to arrive in time, the dialers demanded refunds. Fortunately, the company is making good on all delayed shipments. But the station recognizes that in the minds of the dissatisfied customers it's pegged with the brunt of the blame.

There's another sales technique that AM execs are afraid is costing them audience good-will. That's the accounts that use booklet offers and other mail pull devices to build up a "prospect" list. Such a method for finding "leads" is a common and usually legit practice. However, it's recognized that when a dialer sends in for a pamphlet which is delivered in person by a salesman, the outlet airing the original pitch may come in for some disfavor by association if the really uninvited caller proves hard to shake.

GE MAY SHIFT GOODWIN TO CBS, REVAMP FORMAT

CBS television department and Young & Rubicam have been having talks as possible prelude to General Electric moving its twice-a-week Bill Goodwin daytime show over from NBC-TV, upon expiration of the current cycle.

Goodwin had been alternating with the General Foods-sponsored Bert Parks show, which occupied the Monday-Wednesday-Friday segments on NBC, with GF, via Young & Rubicam, switching the Parks show to CBS effective last week.

Switchover of General Electric has more or less been anticipated in some quarters in the wake of the General Foods move, since the agency regards the bracketing of the two shows as a natural. It's reported likely that, should the NBC-to-CBS shift materialize, General Electric will revamp the Goodwin show format.

TVA Snafues DuMont Deal For Dayton Benefit Show Due to Cuffo Talent Angle

Dayton, O., Jan. 22.

Television Authority, which has established a strict ruling against any talent playing a benefit without pay, snafued DuMont's scheduled participation in a special March of Dimes show aired last Wednesday (16) via WHIO-TV, local outlet.

DuMont, together with the other networks, was asked to send some of its top personalities here to participate in the show. Web asked, however, if it could join the show via a cut-in from one of its N. Y. studios. Station agreed but then TVA execs, learning of the plan, insisted that if the show originated in N. Y., under its jurisdiction, the talent would have to be paid. Other nets got around this by sending their performers here, since WHIO-TV has no TVA contract.

Although the talent had previously agreed to work the show sans pay, DuMont agreed to pay the scale talent, but not those who usually receive pay over scale. WHIO-TV then agreed to pay the overscale performers, such as Pat Meikle, Don Russell and others. When performers representing the other nets heard of that, though, they asked to be paid also. Station could not afford such a hefty coin layout, so asked DuMont to withdraw from the show.

DuMont, incidentally, had already ordered sets, costumes and props for the program, so was out what it had spent on those items, along with the trucking charges.

WGN-TV Exclusive On Both Chi Ball Teams for 1952?

Chicago, Jan. 22.

Although as far as can be learned no deals are set as yet, it looks highly possible that WGN-TV may go into the baseball season with exclusives on the home games of Chi's two major league teams. If that occurs it will strengthen the Chicago Tribune station's claim as the No. 1 sports outlet and will certainly ease general manager Frank P. Schreiber's task in lining up bankrollers.

For the past two seasons WGN-TV's cameras played a singleton out at the White Sox park and are expected to do likewise this year. But the telecast of the Chi Cubs has traditionally been shared with indie WBKB. This season, however, because of the pending ABC-United Paramount melding, WBKB, owned by Balaban & Katz, a UP subsid, has so far been holding back on signing for the Cubs again until there's a better indication as to when the merger will come about.

WBKB manager John Mitchell is presently in Washington for the FCC hearings on the merger and should return with some idea as to the timetable. He obviously doesn't wish to shell out TV rights coin (the two stations paid the Cubs $35,000 each last year) unless

'Today' Casualty

Chicago, Jan. 22.

Apparently the only casualty during the hectic premiere week of NBC-TV's "Today" was Bill Heyer, member of W. Biggie Levin's staff. Heyer flew into New York to catch last Wednesday's (16) show, and returned to Chi later in the week minus a front tooth and with several broken bones in his right hand.

Heyer was jumped by a mugger while on his way from his hotel to the "Today" studios in the wee morning hours to watch the rehearsal of the Dave Garroway-emceed show. The thug scored with the first blow, knocking out his victim's tooth. But Heyer counter-attacked with a righ cross that splintered several bones in his hand. The mugger went down and Heyer dashed toward the sanctuary of Rockefeller Center.

'TV Breaks Down Stadium Walls'

San Francisco, Jan. 22.

Members of the Republican National Committee huddling here last week on their convention plans for this summer received a first-hand report on what changes television might bring to the nation's political setup from Sig Mickelson, CBS-TV news and special events chief. Mickelson, representing the four network pool, emphasized to the GOP'ers that an audience of at least 60,000,000 will be participating intimately in all their sessions and declared that the politicos will no longer be able to work in the "comparative secrecy" of the convention halls.

"We're standing on the threshold of a new era of democratic processes—an era that promises to extend widely the participation of the average American citizen in those processes," Mickelson said. He pointed out that, without TV, the conventions could be witnessed by only 12,000 to 16,000 capacity of the stadiums. Now, with TV breaking down the stadium walls, he said, "there cannot but be changes for the better in the democratic processes." He noted that in 1948, the last election year, there were 403,000 sets throughout the U.S. By mid-summer, he said, there will be a minimum of 17,300,000 sets, providing a potential audience of 60,000,000, which is more than the average vote.

In answer to specific questions put by committee members, Mickelson said that the availability of TV will ease considerably the pressure for tickets to Chi's International Amphitheatre, where the conventions are to be held. He declared that, because of the tremendous costs involved in picking up the conventions, "getting a sponsor to help pay the cost means we can get a better job done." Democratic National Committee is scheduled to meet within a few weeks and it's expected that Mickelson, or some other TV exec, will address it on the same theme.

Westinghouse's 500G Added Politico Splurge for Full CBS Radio Impact

Westinghouse Radio, in a switch from its original intention of taking only 93 CBS Radio stations for coverage of next summer's political conventions, has decided to pick up the total CBS domestic network of 193 outlets. Time buy on the other 100 stations will up the cost to Westinghouse by $500,000 for the CBS package, which includes coverage of both conventions, a 13-week "get-out-the-vote" series and the Presidential election returns.

It had originally been thought that Westinghouse, by taking only the partial radio network, would become the first major advertiser to use CBS' new "selective facilities" plan. Plan provides that CBS has the right to sell a show to a non-competing advertiser in all markets not purchased by the original sponsor. It's believed that the plan might have spurred Westinghouse into buying CBS' full complement of 193 stations, on the assumption that another sponsor, by paying the time charges, could capitalize easily on a series of major programs with which Westinghouse has been associated from the start.

CBS' full network comprises 206 stations, but the remaining 13 are in Canada, Puerto Rico and other countries outside the U. S.

Meanwhile there appeared every indication this week that the West-

Janis Paige Vamps ABC 'Redhead'; Mary McCarty In

In a last-minute disagreement on conception of the show, Janis Paige and ABC decided over the weekend to call it quits on her starring in "The Redhead," which preems on the radio web tomorrow (Thurs.) at 8 p.m. ABC program veepee has inked Mary McCarty for the role.

Miss McCarty, comedienne who recently was at the Plaza and Waldorf hotels in Gotham, was in "Miss Liberty" and "Bless You All" on Broadway.

Authors League Asks FCC Move Vs. 'Blacklist'

Authors League of America this week fired a double-barreled blast at "blacklisting" in radio and television, passing a resolution against "political controls" and petitioning the FCC for a hearing to discuss the screening of writers and others by the AM and TV licensees.

Letter to FCC chairman Wayne Coy, signed by ALA prexy Rex Stout, declared that the FCC has jurisdiction over the matter, since the Commission has power to regulate licensees whose conduct does not serve the public interest. "Practice of blacklisting has spread to such an alarming extent," ALA charged, "that it has assumed the proportions of what may properly be characterized as an industry policy."

ALA, citing its anti-blacklist resolution, said that blacklisting of individuals is "an improper interference with the exercise of their profession" and thus bears on the operation of outlets in the public interest. ALA said there is inadequate presentation of writers' works, due to blacklisting of other creative personnel and "denial to the public of its constitutional rights to see and hear" works of established authors. Letter says blacklisting, "if not actually illegal, is certainly wholly at variance with the American tradition of freedom expression and due process."

Writers group asked that Stout, Oscar Hammerstein 2d, John Hersey and Elmer Rice be granted an audience. It added that Merle Miller, Authors Guild prez, has prepared a report on blacklisting for the American Civil Liberties Union which Doubleday is publishing in April, and that the ACLU is also expected to ask for a hearing in March.

ALA resolution said that

Await TVA Action On Phil Loeb Nix

Membership meeting of Television Authority tomorow afternoon (Thurs.) at the City Centre, N.Y., will mull the request of a segment of the video performers that NBC-TV's "The Goldbergs" be declared "unfair" as long as Philip Loeb is off the program. Actor to replace Loeb as "Papa Goldberg" has not yet been picked.

While it would be up to the TVA board to make an "unfair" listing, the board would find it difficult to act against the wishes of the members if the latter press overwhelmingly for rapping the show, due to start on NBC-TV a 7:15 p.m. strip Feb. 4. The rap could keep off the show other TVA actors, including packager-star Gertrude Berg, since she is also a union member.

Although a membership meeting of Actors Equity voted, 180-3, on Jan. 11 recommending that the Equity council declare the show "unfair," the council did not take that action last week. Equity exec secretary Louis Simon explained that this was because the matter comes under TVA's jurisdiction. The council passed a resolution sharply condemning the "blacklisting" of Loeb and recommended that Equity reps on the TVA board

ZIV'S $20,000,000 RADIO BIZ

ABC's Sexy Copy

"Take Those Pajamas Off, Katie" and "Wife Finds Hubby in Arms of Steno" are copy themes of an extensive ad campaign ABC launched this week in behalf of its new soap opera blocks. Drive is part of a big stepping up of the web's ad expenditures.

Unusual aspect of the campaign, which is costing $25,000, is that it is promoting audiences for the daytime serials by appealing to potential listeners through mass-circulation dailies like the N. Y. Daily News with copy that apes the gossipy tabloid yarns. Ads for "My True Story" have heads such as "Mate Says Neighbor Ogled Wife," "Wife's Pajamas Indecent, Hubby Claims," and "Wife Says Foursome Got Gruesome."

Mitchell DeGroot, ABC advertising-promotion director, is inserting 10 ads daily in each of six papers for five weeks—or a total of 900 ads. They are going into dailies with a total circulation of 4,500,000: N. Y. News and Journal-American, Chicago Tribune, Detroit Free Press, Los Angeles Examiner and San Francisco Chronicle. Cities chosen are areas where the web has owned-and-operated outlets.

ABC decided on the gossipy approach because the more usual type of copy and ads on radio pages aren't successful in promoting audiences for the washboard weepers, DeGroot told VARIETY, since most daytime listeners have already formed tuning-in habits. The small-space ads, similar in typography and copy to that of the sheets in which they are run, are scattered through the food, society, news, entertainment and similar pages that appeal to women. All ads running on any day will be devoted to one of chain's nine soapers, based on incidents of that day's script.

Additionally, ABC is shelling out for an ad campaign for its WJZ-TV, N. Y., which will kick off Monday (28) in the News and World-Telegram & Sun. The three-week drive is over and above the station's regular advertising in the Times, Herald Tribune and W-T-S.

Teleprompter's $1,000,000 Billings Bonanza; Signs 200G CBS Pact

By BOB STAHL

Saga of an idea which has climbed in less than a year from a $400 weekly gross take to almost $1,000,000 in yearly billings was revealed this week with news that Teleprompter Corp. has signed a five-year contract with CBS-TV for use of the prompting device. Deal, which is non-exclusive with CBS, will earn well over $200,000 a year for Teleprompter.

Basically an electronic cueing device for actors, newscasters, politicos and others on video, which eliminates the need for the unwieldy printed cards in use on most programs, Teleprompter has recently set up offices both on the Coast and in Washington. In Hollywood, it has been demonstrated at the 20th-Fox studios, Universal, Warners, Republic and Monogram and deals are now in the works for each one. Major film studios which have tested it are reportedly interested in its potential as a time-saver in rehearsals, which has been its biggest value in TV.

According to Teleprompter chief Irving B. Kahn, former radio-TV publicity chief at 20th-Fox, the device has a dual advantage—it can

CBS Preps Hoopla For Coast TV City

CBS-TV prez Jack L. Van Volkenburg, accompanied by program veepees Hubbell Robinson, Jr., and Harry Ackerman, will host a party on the Coast Monday night (28) for the network's major Hollywood talent to brief the performers on the web's TV City plans for next fall. Ackerman arrived in N. Y. from the Coast Monday (21) for a week's huddles with Robinson and Van Volkenburg on programming plans for the summer and fall. Trio is slated to plane out Friday night (25).

Web's TV City, currently under construction on the Coast, will be launched next fall with four studios. It has not been decided yet which programs will move into the new setup when it's finished. Also under discussion is the feasibility of building film studios at the video centre. CBS is currently renting outside studio space for such shows as "Amos 'n' Andy," which it airs via film.

Noting that there will be at least 10 network shows originating from the Coast by spring, CBS execs said it has not been decided whether any now emanating from N. Y.

Lacy's 33 Hrs. Per Week

Jack Lacy, WINS (N. Y.) disk jock, shifts to a 12:30-6 p.m. schedule, six days a week on the indie, starting Monday (28). Although he'll be giving up his "Lacy on the Loose" morning show, d.j. will be upped from 26½ to 33 hours on the air weekly.

That works out to more consecutive airtime than other Gotham platter spinners. WNEW's Art Ford, who also does 33 hours weekly, has a break between his afternoon and "Milkman's Matinee" stints.

N.Y.-to-L.A. Pickup For Godfrey Isn't Lipton Cup of Tea

Indicating that the new microwave link to the Coast isn't meeting with the complete satisfaction of some advertisers who've given it a spin, Lipton's has pulled Arthur Godfrey's "Talent Scouts" out of both the San Francisco and Los Angeles markets. Reason is that the show, originating in N. Y. at 8:30 p.m. Mondays, was viewable on the Coast at 5:30 p.m., which the sponsor found much too early a period to attract enough of an audience to warrant the added networking cost.

It's believed that "Scouts" is the first show to be aired live from N. Y. to L. A. which has failed to make the grade because of the three-hour differential. CBS-TV is offering Lipton's the alternative now of either airing it on the Coast via a "hot kinescope" on the

1,100 STATIONS CARRYING SHOWS

With the sale thus far to 171 stations of its forthcoming "I Was a Communist for the FBI" transcribed series, the Frederic W. Ziv Co. has parlayed its transcribed radio programming operation into an annual gross biz of more than $20,000,000. That more than doubles the annual gross take of four years ago which, coincidentally, corresponds with the emergence of TV into the bigtime. For the latter reason alone, the Ziv saga of big-league radio programming for local station sale adds up to perhaps the major AM phenomenon of a decade.

The auxiliary repercussions stemming from the Ziv transcribed packaging operation as one of the unique facets of modern-day broadcasting find, for example, the major networks, alarmed over the increasing inability to sell radio shows on a national basis, (1) gearing their sales and program patterns more and more to the "Ziv technique"; and (2) such major stations as NBC's key Gotham outlet becoming one of Ziv's best customers, although basically it's a rival operation in the program field.

Indicative of the Ziv reaffirmation of radio's potency on a local level, the company (headquartered in New York, Cincinnati and Hollywood) has splurged to the tune of $2,500,000 in programming over the past year alone—surpassing even the individual major networks on coin investiture on building of properties.

Amount represents $650,000 for the new "FBI" anti-Commie series, which preems on a national distribution basis March 30; programming-production costs on the Fred MacMurray-Irene Dunne "Bright Star" series, and setting a new 52-week cycle for "Bold Venture." Other major entries on the Ziv roster, designed to vest local kilocycles with qualitative programming for hometown sponsorship at low cost, include such items as "Cisco Kid" and "Boston Blackie" (both currently doubling into Ziv's TV transcribed packaging setup); "Meet the Menjous," Guy Lombardo and approximately a score of other shows.

Of a total of 1,300 radio stations around the country, about 1,100 are using Ziv properties. While one station in a town has an exclusivity on a specific show, rival outlets in the same town or city have access to other Ziv properties.

Shows are scaled at from $10 to $750, based on population. Company presently has a sales force of 100 in the field.

The new anti-Commie series starring Dana Andrews as ex-FBI undercover agent Matt Cvetic, incidentally, represents a departure for Ziv (and radio programming generally) in its skirting of so-called "formula shows" and projecting a message with Page One overtones. The Ziv sales boys are shooting for a 400-station blanketing.

Mpls. Cafes to Boycott Pabst Beer, Blame TV Fights for Loss of Biz

Minneapolis, Jan. 22.

At least 10 top cafes here, acting individually, are preparing to discontinue the sale of Pabst beer because their Wednesday night business is so far off—much worse than other nights—and they blame the Pabst fight telecasts.

Story was broken by Max Wi ter, Shopping News columnist, himself the co-owner of one of the loop's most flourishing cafes, the 620 Club, and also general manager and a principal stockowner of the Minneapolis Lakers, professional basketball team.

While the establishments have television sets and show the Wednesday night fans, patrons apparently prefer to witness the bouts in their own sitting rooms, the owners say they've found.

CBS 'Big Town,' 'Man Against Crime' Live-to-Film Status Seen Sparking Wholesale Trend in TV Dramas

Emergence of film as the top medium for television dramatics, which has long been anticipated in the trade, moved a step nearer reality this week with news that "Big Town" and "Man Against Crime," both top-rated CBS-TV shows airing live from N. Y., will move to the Coast soon and switch to film. It's believed the two shows mark the first big network productions to shift from a live to a film basis.

In addition to these, Harry Ackerman, CBS-TV Hollywood veepee, revealed that "Our Miss Brooks" and "Life With Luigi" will both be filmed for airing next fall. Upcoming Ginger Rogers show, also tentatively set for a fall preem, will comprise mostly film, although it may also go live from time to time from Hollywood. Pilot film "Brooks," with Eve Arden reprising the role she originated and now plays in the CBS Radio version, will be lensed Feb. 2. Pilot on "Luigi," with J. Carroll Naish starring in the title role he plays in the radio series, is scheduled for lensing in mid-March.

Ackerman also disclosed that CBS is contemplating the creation of a special film production setup, to produce vidpix for syndication. CBS is now handling the Gene Autry show and "Range Rider," both produced by Autry's Flying A Productions, on that basis but has not produced any films on its own for syndication. NBC-TV, on the other hand, has been syndicating vidpix on a local spot basis for some time and now has in

Cleveland's Radio Heads in Drive To Combat 'TV Talk'

Cleveland, Jan. 22.

General managers of Cleveland's eight radio stations have announced the start of a broad study program to "truly determine the Greater Cleveland market in terms of the effectiveness of all advertising media."

When completed, the survey "would show the amounts of time the average Clevelander spends listening to radio, watching TV, reading magazines and newspapers."

Purpose of the survey is to challenge present TV talk and figures that are based "upon cumulative totals which have piled up in the last few years, and do not represent the number of TV sets now actually in working order in the number of homes as presently published."

Current TV set-total, as disclosed by the city's three TV stations is over 525,000.

The proposed survey, which will be done by a national research organization (as yet not named) will also seek to secure information on the amount of automobile and other "out-of-home listening done during various hours of the day

Rice May Reconcile On 'Celanese' Stand---If Casting Policy Changed

Playwright Elmer Rice, who recently checked out of the TV Playwrights Co. via a blast at the producers of ABC-TV's "Celanese Theatre" for alleged blacklisting of talent, may reconcile with the group if they agree to change their casting policy. Negotiations are currently in progress among Rice and execs of the Ellington agency, which handles the Celanese account, and the William Morris office, which produces the series, to clear up the hassle prior to the scheduled April 2d airing of Rice's "Street Scene" on the program.

Rice told VARIETY that "Street Scene" had been booked on the Celanese lineup of plays at the start of last season. Under his contract, he pointed out, he must give notice of withdrawal at least six months prior to the show's scheduled airing. As a result, he said, the producers have the legal right to stage the show whether he is in favor of it or not. But, he emphasized, if they don't comply with his requests, he will ask the producers not to present the play.

Playwright stressed that his feelings in the matter have not changed. "I want to see them revise their casting policy so that it will not amount to blacklisting," he said. "If that is done, I will feel that I have achieved what I

WNBC All-Nighter To Cue Network?

Plan for NBC to feed a network during the post-midnight stretch may grow out of WNBC's (N. Y.) plan to air round-the-clock. Starting Feb. 1, the web's Gotham key will broadcast all night with six-hour symphony program.

While other N. Y. outlets are beaming during the wee hours, their insomnia programs are of the pop music or show biz chatter type. WNBC's counterpoint approach is to air symphonic music exclusively. However, if surveys reveal that the classical beat isn't wrapping up a sufficient audience, another programmatic diet will be essayed.

For the present WNBC g.m. Ted Cott does not plan on selling the time, although sponsors may be inked after the period's potentials are explored. It's planned to feed the show to NBC stations in Washington and Cleveland, and eventually to other outlets that desire it.

One factor which has kept the webs from going into post-midnight operations is the union cost. For even a two- or three-station hookup, AFRA network fees must be paid. Some years back the Mail Order Network planned to link up WOR, N. Y., and WGN, Chicago, for an all-night show, but found it would have to pay the network announcing scale, which greatly exceeds the fee of two local announcers.

Interestingly, much of the U. S. can be blanketed with a few clear channel kilowatters at night, due to the greater range of AM signals after dark.

THE VOICE THAT SELLS...

The young man steps out on a television screen, and sells. Sells a song, sells himself, and sells for sponsors.

Up against the toughest competition in all television, he's been able to draw and hold big audiences. bigger, in fact, than those of 31 other leading nighttime network programs.

Even more important, he has brought in those audiences to a sponsor at a remarkably moderate cost-per-thousand viewers... at a cost that beats no less than 47 other leading nighttime network programs.

He can do it for you... week after week or on a "limited engagement" basis. He can do it for you... on a quarter-hour, half-hour, or full hour basis, to suit your demands, your budget.

He can sell you, if you ask him to.

"Newstand Theatre," latest entry in the midweek vidrama derby, also is one of the numerous half-hour blocks which have attempted to challenge the longest running (fifth season) Wednesday visualer, "Kraft Television Theatre." Latter majors in the 9 to 10 p.m. berth and "Newsstand" kicked off on ABC-TV at 9:30 on the cheerful theory that the day-and-date Kraft might be having an off night. It didn't work out as presumably planned, because Kraft's first half, at least, was clicko and promised ditto. The 9:30 to 10 direct competition is CBS' "The Web" and DuMont's "Starring the Editors."

It just so happens that the initialer, "The Foster Portfolio," was a diverting comedy made to look better by the presence of bespectacled Wally Cox, the inhibited comic with an invisible twinkle. He gave it a nifty start in a series packaged by Wilbur Stark and done in co-op with Crowell Pub. Co. Latter furnishes story material from its chain of mags—Collier's, American and Woman's Home Companion. No plug for the mag house, merely a graphic display.

Cox did one right up his alley, a henpecked, near-impoverished drudge with a secretive $750,000 or so in stocks and bonds. There were lots of chuckles in the comedy, and at the finale, Cox was discovered by his wife and investment counsellor 88ing and singing in a real lowdown gin mill. Just to show it wasn't all make-believe, Cox gave a smash workover of "Basin St. Blues." It could easily be a mild pasquinade job for waxing.

Corking assist came from the whole cast, especially Mildred Clinton as his mousey frau, and Ruth Gilbert, in her copyrighted Brooklynese waitress characterization; plus Joseph Allen, Jr., as stock advisor, Wilfred Lytell as latter's boss, and Harold Gary in a neat bartender bit. It was also a good adaptation by Sheldon Stark and Bernard Dougall of a story by Kurt Vonnegut, Jr., in Collier's. Seymour Robbie's staging met the required standards and so did the lensing. Trau.

WILLIAM WINTER AND THE NEWS
Director: Fred Gadette
30 Mins.; Sun. 10 p.m.
15 Mins.; Mon., Wed., Fri., 10 p.m.
PAUSON'S CLOTHES
JENKEL-DAVIDSON OPTICIANS
KPIX, San Francisco

There is an aura of restraint and seriousness in this amalgam of news and comment which enlists attentiveness as well as registers authority and impartiality. Without any attempt at playing the oracle the roundup of subject matter carries logic and conviction which together with a casual delivery makes for rewarding listening.

Working almost entirely without notes from a desk backdropped by maps and graphs, Winter ranges the news of the day, both foreign and domestic, with enough reference to maps to clarify material concerned. There is no editorializing to speak of and analysis of events is adequate to convey text. Frequent use of background material gives dimension for purposes of clarity.

There are instances when a more trenchant dissecting of events would further enhance the program but the allover impact holds above par nonetheless. Guests are well chosen (Prime Minister Liaquat of Pakistan, Mme. Pandi of India, Young Han Choo, Korean Consul, Ali Khan, etc.), and queries are illuminating and interesting.

Commercials by Al Johnson and daughter Pat (for Pauson's) and Jane Day (for Jenkel-Davidson) are conservative and effective with lack of over-reaching a credit to show.

Solid stuff throughout. Ted.

Brace of Stark TVers Set for ABC Tryouts

ABC-TV is giving tryout showcasings to two projected video stanzas in the Friday 9 p.m. slot.

Constance Dowling will be starred in "The Lady is a Copy," which gets an airing Friday (25). Ernest Truex and Sylvia Fields will be co-starred Feb. 1 in "The Big Hero." Both shows are packaged by Wilbur Stark.

Tele Followup Comment

NBC-TV's "Original Amateur Hour" kicked off its fifth year Tuesday (15) with a clicko show that demonstrated why this series has built its audience over the past four seasons. Highspot was the appearance of Paul Winchell and Jerry Mahoney, who 15 years ago got their start via a shot on the radio edition (which is still going strong on ABC). The young ventrilo, who has his own tele stanza for Speidel on CBS-TV, reprised some of the gags he used in his first AM shot. The items were still funny, as evidenced by the fact that they are still around in their original form and in switches.

Gagwriter Hal Block came on in the guise of a Western Union messenger, and did a cute bit with emcee Ted Mack on the problems of video fame, being nicked for bigger tips by hackies, etc. Dave Garroway also added to the anni festivities, bringing in a birthday cake, and G. S. (Gus) Eyssell, prexy of Rockefeller Centre, Inc., was picked up from the studio audience for a tribute to the series' aid to show biz. Guesters were good, although Mack should have sidestepped the "surprise" act, as the celebs were listed in program skeds.

All acts were up to the show's usual standard, including a student accordionist from Detroit, a gal singer from Sioux Falls, a hot GI trombonist, a fast-stepping gal tapster from Woodbridge, N. J., etc.

Art Carney, subbing for the vacationing Jackie Gleason as emcee of DuMont's "Cavalcade of Stars" Friday night (18), displayed a nice comedy ability, something akin to several other comedians but still potent enough to permit him to stand on his own. (Until now, he's been a regular caster on "Cavalcade," playing straight man to Gleason in the sketches.) Since he's a more subdued type than most video comics, Carney's chief value would seem to lie in the skits, in which he has displayed a variety of characterizations and talent. Whether he can hold his own as star of a weekly vaudeo series remains to be seen, but he certainly could manage the correctly-scripted situation comedy with no trouble.

Thus, on Friday's show, his opening monolog was a little weak. But he scored solidly in a couple of sketches, as a punchdrunk boxer being interviewed for the TV fans and as the manager of a department store sending his charges out into battle with bargain-seeking hausfraus (as can be seen, the ideas were none too original but the scripting was good). With Gleason away, the show took on almost a straight vaude format, spotlighting several good guest turns.

Kitty Kallen pleased with a couple of tunes, in which she was given exceptionally good scenic backing. Leo DeLyon registered with his unique comedics, especially that two-voiced singing he does. Beachcombers, a vocal quartet, impressed with the good routining of their act and moppet Verna Raymond, who's appeared on several Milton Berle shows, was on hand to please viewers who like the small-fry entertainers. Arnold Stang scored in one of the sketches. June Taylor Dancers (6) backed the acts well and the entire cast socked across a Mack Sennett beach takeoff for the finale.

Ed Sullivan's "Toast of the Town" on CBS-TV last Sunday (20) was a tri-partite production with marquee strength and general impact reserved for the first TV'ing of '51 awards made by the N. Y. Film Critics. A reprise of the pic accolades (17th in the annual skein) consumed about a third of the hour, and ran smoothly enough under the ringmastering of NYFC chairman Bosley Crowther of the N. Y. Times, who got the wand from Sullivan.

Some potency was missing in that among clips from films kudosed, there were none from "Streetcar Named Desire" following a nix by the producers to give them a video showcase. Instead there was an appearance by producer Charles K. Feldman in behalf of the Warner release, plus director Elia Kazan, palmed for his chore, who also represented Vivian Leigh as best actress in same film.

Of two scenes shown from as many pix, the topper was awardee Arthur Kennedy in a dramatic vis-a-vis with Peggy Dow from "Bright Victory (UI). Kennedy's scroll was accepted by legit-film actress Jane Wyatt. The teeoffer was for the Italian "Miracle in Milan," best of foreign, produced and directed by Vittorio De Sica, with distrib Joseph Burstyn present to receive the plaudits. Sullivan delivered an overlong narrative intro, but it didn't help any because the scene shown was the finale which, out of context, failed to impress in the face of critical salvos for the overall production itself. All N. Y. film critics were in the audience and their names were plugged on-screen. Crowther also put in a big plug for films in general.

Show got underway with a George Gershwin medley interpreted by dancers Elaine Dunn, (Copa, N. Y.) and Helen Wood ("Pal Joey"), singer Danny Scholl ("Top Banana") and hoofer Hal LeRoy. The latter was the big gun. After the film awards, there were two quick pace-changers in John Tio's talking parrot and gospel singer Mahalia Jackson. Then "Toast" went into its end ride with Phil Spitalny's Hour of Charm contingent. They ran through a number of neatly done variations on "Twinkle Twinkle Little Star" with Spitalny's fiddling frau Evelyn calling the instrumental shots and the vocal groups getting their nifty pitches. Second piece had Evelyn fronting for "You, Night & Music" and then the whole group worked to the finish "The 48-ers," a patriotic tune.

Some of the formulae that were so successful in the '20's aren't working out that way in this era. The college musical was a frequent inhabitant on the screens at that time. Eddie Cantor's attempt to revive that form of entertainment on the Colgate program Sunday (20), over NBC-TV, didn't work out entirely satisfactorily.

Probably one of the major reasons why this session didn't hit the Cantor par, is the fact that the comic spread his talents quite thinly, in this show. He was on for most of the time. Other performers weren't given a chance to take front-and-centre for any length of time. Although this comic is one of the top performers about, it was too generous a dose to take at one sitting. This was especially true, in view of the fact that much of the writing wasn't sufficiently socko to make the grade.

Cantor, of course, had the good sense to kid the fact that he had himself cast as a college freshman. It served as the peg for several gags, but afterwards the situation got tiresome.

Singer Robert Clary showed himself to be an ingratiating performer. French singer shows considerable feeling in song. A moppet tapster, Sharon Baird, repeated a sock impact made several weeks ago.

There was a lengthy skit satirizing "Detective Story," which wasn't very funny. Kirk Douglas turned up for a briefie at the end of this segment, for a surprise end. Actress Esther Dale also appeared in a bit with Cantor and Clary.

"CBS Television Workshop" bounced back strongly Sunday (20) with its presentation of "Careless Love," a jazz fantasy, after its preem fiasco the preceding week with "Don Quixote." While it's difficult to determine what was new or experimental about "Love," that factor will undoubtedly come up for questioning in much that the "Workshop" attempts to do. Regardless of that, Sunday's show, an original by John L. Gerstand and Norman Brooks, was amusing and interesting drama, well produced, directed and acted.

Yarn, which spotlighted Conrad Janis and his Tailgate Jazz Five, was actually based on the tune, "Bill Bailey, Won't You Please Come Home?." Janis, as the trombonist in the combo, played so hard that he became "real gone," evaporating into thin air as he "sent" himself. His girl-friend, Lenka Peterson, urged the rest of the crew to play more music in an attempt to bring him back. They paraded up and down the streets of New Orleans, playing most of the songs in their repertoire, until it hit them that his name was Bill Bailey and there was a song about his coming back. Band promptly swung into that and Janis came back from where he had "gone."

Tailgate combo is currently playing on 52d Street, N. Y., and they evidenced with their socko playing on the show that they're real pros in the Dixieland style. Janis, while he encountered a little difficulty with his southern accent, along with most of the others in the cast, scored solidly in both the thesping and playing departments. Rest of the cast are okay, including Miss Peterson; Edgar Stehli, as an old-time trombonist himself and a friend of the band; Michael Dreyfus, as the guitar-playing leader; Leonard Yorr, as a talent agent, and Edith King, as Lazy Mary, who ran the nitery they were trying to crash.

Producer Norris Houghton and director Dick Linkroum carried off with technical skill the disappearance of Janis and his return to life. Camera work and the settings, representing the New Orleans waterfront, were good. "Workshop," incidentally, will attempt an adaptation next Sunday (27) of John Hersey's "Into the Valley," the correspondent's account of his first action at Guadalcanal, indicating the show plans to mix up its program formats in good style.

Helen Parkhurst's "It's a Problem" continues its 10:30 to 11 a.m. Friday edition on WNBT, N. Y., as one of the more intelligent in all of video. Last week's poser was "Child of a Broken Home," with moderator Ben Grauer and opinion-givers Rev. George P. Jacoby, Hershal Alt and Louis Sobel. It was an absorbing half-hour and, for parents and others interested in the welfare of children, a distinguished must. The sectarian angle was incidental to the larger subject symbolized by the subtitle.

The back-and-forthing, with Grauer tossing most of the questions and setting up the problems, and Mrs. Parkhurst taking almost unobtrusive but vital participation by going right to the heart of matters, produced five main points:

1. Children should not be required to take sides on controversies or situations affecting their parents.

2. In the absence of a father, it is necessary to introduce a "father prototype" in the house in order that the child may identify himself with an older male therein (teacher, physician, Boy Scout leader, friend, uncle, etc.).

3. Reasons for parents' separation or estrangement must be given.

4. When the child reaches an "age of reason," the truth regarding separation must be given; the proper approach must be made; it must be revealed by a person in whom the child has faith and trust, whether a parent or otherwise.

5. It is important in many cases that help be sought from service bureaus and agencies so that the burden, the ordeal and the making of decisions may be shared by objective-neutral groups concerned with children's welfare.

Prizes are awarded to writers of best letters on each subject tackled. This is good promotion, as well as creating interest in universal subjects stemming from domestic problems.

Jack Carter, who's been without his own TV show for almost a year, took over as emcee for the vacationing Milton Berle on NBC-TV's "Texaco Star Theatre" Tuesday night (15) and evidenced that he is still a solid bet for TV. Maybe it was because he was only guesting, but the comic seemed considerably more relaxed than he did when he helmed his own Saturday night layout for NBC last year. Whatever the cause, his subdued technique paid off handsomely for him, from his opening monolog through his sketches to his short song stints.

He drew a big yock from the studio audience with his opening broadside, in which he kidded some of Berle's standard routines. Studio audience, incidentally, was with him all through the show, indicating he hasn't been forgotten. Constance Moore, guesting in the show's first half-hour, failed to impress with a brace of tunes, but came back to score with Carter in a hillbilly sketch. Bibi Osterwald showed well in the skits.

BMI's TV Refresher

Broadcast Music, Inc. field reps from the east, south and midwest regions are spending this week in Gotham for a complete television refresher course. The field men, including Lin Pattee, Dorsey Owings, Ken Sparnon and Burt Squire, plus members of BMI's station relations staff in N. Y., will visit the local tele outlets to study their operations and thus be in a better position to serve BMI stations in the field.

Stations which will be covered are WPIX, WABD, WNBT, WOR-TV, WJZ-TV and WCBS-TV. BMI recently held a similar video week on the Coast for its field reps out west.

LET'S LOOK IT OVER
With Dr. Joseph Rauch, Monsignor Felix Pitt, Dr. C. H. Parrish, Harry S. McAlpin; Ed Mills, moderator
Producer: Doris Ruthenburg
Director: Mike London
30 Mins.; Mon., 10 p.m.
Sustaining
WHAS-TV, Louisville

Town's outstanding TV panel discussion doesn't dodge controversial topics, and particularly those which have a strong local tinge. Such a one was the race relations discussion, which brought together in the studio Dr. Joseph Rauch, a local rabbi; Monsignor Felix Pitt, an educator; Dr. C. H. Parrish, U. of Louisville prof., and Harry S. McAlpin, assistant Commonwealth Attorney, latter two being Negroes.

Discussion brought out instances of racial discrimination, not only in this country, but in Korea, on the part of Army brass, according to McAlpin, who was over there. The topic was handled in an intelligent and calm manner by all participants, all agreeing that much progress had been made, and will be made toward assuring rights to all, regardless of race, color or creed. Agreement was also reached that in Kentucky, at least, what is needed is not more laws on the subject, but removal of a law now on the state statutes, called the "Day Law," which provides for equal educational opportunities for both races, but does not permit mixing.

Dr Rauch, rabbi of Temple Adath Israel, counselled against foo speedy changes. Speaking from knowledge of 2,000 years of discrimination toward the Jews, he said tremendous strides had been made in the last 50 years in race relations. Negro members of the panel expressed themselves as wanting barriers removed now.

While the intent of the "Let's Look It Over" panel show is to present panelists on the pro and con side, at show caught all members were identified with efforts to improve local race relations, hence the session didn't develop any heated moments. Considering the improved status of race relations in the Louisville area, it's a moot question if anyone of any standing in the community would risk taking the biased side of the race question in an open forum such as this TV show.

Ed Mills, WHAS-TV staffer, fills the moderator role satisfactorily. He gives participants full rein, and doesn't chime in unless the chatter starts to lag. Altogether, this is a stimulating half-hour and a session which should rate high with adult listeners. Wied.

TV DUDE RANCH
With Patsy Clay, Bill Shomette, Curley Williams, Lou Emerson, Pedro Gonzales, Ed Brinley, Mel Winters and orch
Producer-director: Dave Hubbard
30 mins.; Thurs., 7 p.m. CST
Participating
WOAI-TV, San Antonio

There is always a ready-made audience here for this sort of a program, either the native Texan or visitor finding it welcome. There are songs, music and a bit of comedy to make it a smartly-paced, 30-minute shindig.

Action takes place on the mythical TV Dude Ranch of which Bill Shomette is the bossman. He m.c.'s the show in an easy-going style, and is also heard in a song solo, as well as in a quartet made up of himself, Patsy Clay, Lou Emerson and Curley Williams. He also handles comedy situations well with Pedro Gonzales, Emerson and Ed Brinley as straightmen.

Williams is foreman of the outfit and turns in a neat performance. He is also heard in several songs to his own guitar accompaniment. He has a pleasing voice, easy on the ears. Miss Clay handles the femme situation very well, with some repartee, as well as being heard in several solo song spots and with the quartet.

Emerson is shaping up into a fine TV comedy find hereabouts. He shows his vaude background to good effect. Comedy relief and novelty are also handled by Gonzales. Mel Winters and his band, this time as the "TV Dude Rangers," lend their usual fine musical support to the singers.

There are several commercials cleverly interwoven into the script which are easy to take. There's one for Greyhound Bus, which is a film clip, and another for Studer's, local photo house, which was a studio shot. Andy.

THE PACE OF CHICAGO

With Harry Elders, Les Pederwell, Jean Mowry, George Cisar, Leslie Spears, Katherine Payne, Bill Duane, Lydia Pacinska, Sam Siegel; Evelyn Knight, Norm Joseph, guests; Richard Paige orch
Producer-director: Edward Franck
Writer: Gene Hurleigh
30 Mins.; Thurs., 9:30 p.m.
MARSHALL FIELD & CO.
WBKB, Chicago
(Calkins, Holden)

Touted as the highest budgeted package ever to hit the local video channels, "The Pace of Chicago" apparently is an attempt to capture the flavor of the city by a series of dramatized squibs depicting various aspects of life in this midwest metropolis. The attempt was only mildly successful on edition viewed (17). There was an obvious gap between the reported $5-10,000 per-show expenditure and the final product.

Besides too many technical errors, which, of course, may eventually be ironed out, there was a hoked up atmosphere about the overall treatment that suggests the need for a basic overhaul. The format itself is sound enough but somewhere along the line the strived-for realism lost out to something closer to melodrama.

This time the theme was the city at night. The continuity thread is supplied by a fictional columnist, Caleb, who intros the various vignettes. Caleb is played by Harry Elders who was surprisingly ill-at-ease on this installment, but it's a rugged assignment. The first Chi nightlife episode dealt with a cabbie who picked up a hood and was finally rescued by the cops whom he alerted by blowing his horn. The portrayal was a rank libel of Chi's thugs.

Somewhat more believable and effective, because it was a good plug for Travelers Aid, second sequence showed how the agency aided a Polish lady in finding her son when she arrived alone in the "big city." Also moderately successful was the dramatization of an actual rescue of an aged lady from a burning building by a fire laddie. This bit included a film clip of the fire engine dashing off to the blaze and switched to a live shot of the enacted rescue. It finaled with the real fireman coming on to receive a citation from his chief.

Probably one of the most costly single items in local TV annals was the brief appearance of singer Evelyn Knight. Supposedly working a night recording session she unloaded a single ditty, plugged her Empire Room date, and departed. It was just a teaser as the gal projected excellently.

The department store's single commercial, surprisingly, had the most sincere ring of the entire affair. With Eloise Kummer doing a fine offscreen selling job, attractive models displayed various articles for good impact. Dave.

THE KLOSES

With Woody and Virginia Klose
Director: Grover J. Allen
30 Mins.; Tues., 10:30 p.m.
Sustaining
WENR-TV, Chicago

This late-evening WENR-TV half-hour occupied by Woody and Virginia Klose seems to be another one of those "either-or" situations. The husband and wife duo, combining his slightly waspish off-the-cuff humor with her free-wheeling chatter, are formatted in another of a long list of local gab-interview shows. If the installment seen (15) was typical, the affair is long on gab and short on interviews. Burden, therefore, rests heavily on the personalities of the host and hostess. With such a personalized treatment, there's not much middle ground of acceptance. Viewers either cotton to the pair's vocal ramblings or they find it quite devoid of interest, depending on personal taste.

Idea apparently is to establish Woody Klose as something of a typical fumbling man-about-the-house whose ideas backfire. Distaffer, on the other hand, portrays the also typical efficient housewife, who's more than a little patronizing about hubby's efforts. The humor in the situation was pretty subtle on the edition seen, so it wasn't too clear whether the male's "household hints," such as using a rubber band to hold wrap-around sandwiches or a lighted light bulb as a sox darning "egg," were meant to be funny or legit suggestions.

This business, plus reams of chatter about the real life Klose family, took up about half the segment. Remainder was given over to an interview of a U. of Illinois physical education prof, who spieled on the benefits of exercise. This portion, angled at the middle-aged dialers, was interesting but overlong with the prof's exercise soap boxing. Dave.

BERT PARKS SHOW

With Betty Ann Grove, Bobby Sherwood, The Heatherstones, Murray Schlamm

Directors: Berni Gould, Paul Harrison
Writers: Gould, Harrison
30 Mins.; Mon.-Wed.-Fri., 3:30 p.m.
GENERAL FOODS
CBS-TV, from New York
(Young & Rubicam)

CBS-TV has gained a bright afternoon video show in the switchover of the Bert Parks show from the NBC-TV channels. The Louis Cowan package is a festive potpourri of comedy and song designed for easygoing viewing.

With affable emcee Bert Parks at the helm, the stanza moves at a breezy pace offering attractive bait for the mid-day dialers. Show is light on the eye and ear blending laughs and music for full impact. Parks deserves kudos for his song and comedy assignments which are completely winning.

On show caught (16) Parks dueted nicely with Betty Ann Grove on "Hey, Good Lookin'" and soloed effectively on "I'll Never Forget You." The Heathertones, three femmes, offered "These Foolish Things" in an interesting setting and Miss Grove had a single spot in which she offered a cute specialty "I Got a Cousin in Milwaukee."

The comedy spots were weak, however, and displayed need for expert hand in editing and scripting. Pantomime bit in which Parks essayed the role of multiple-thumbed butler stretched the gimmick too far, slowing up neat pace of the stanza. Parks is no Chaplin and his panto should be kept at a minimum.

General Foods, which picks up the tab on Wednesdays and Fridays, displays its wares with imagination and taste. Gros.

PEE WEE KING SHOW

With Redd Stewart, Bob Kay, Pee Wee King Band (9)
Producer-director: Burt Blackwell
30 Mins., Thurs. 7:30 p.m.
TAYLOR DRUG
WAVE-TV, Louisville

Co-writer of "Slow Poke" and "Tennessee Waltz," Pee Wee King has headquartered for a spell at WAVE, where he has a half-hour spot on Thursday with his band.

Format has a hitching post set, with the boys seated on rough furniture, togged in western gear. King divides the vocal chores with Redd Stewart. There's also a trio composed of Charlie Wigginton, King and Stewart.

Bob Kay, WAVE staff announcer, provides the comedy element with his sheriff character. On show caught, he simulated a bum, which failed to click. Boys are best in their straight guitaring and vocalling. Their dialog efforts are pretty stilted, and they don't act relaxed and natural in front of the cameras. King handles some of the commercials, while others are films.

Producer-director Burt Blackwell has given the boys considerable latitude on this show, but results seem to justify his judgment, as most viewers like the show and rate it highly among local TV regulars. Wied.

TELEVISION RECITAL HALL

Director: Kirk Browning
Producer: Charles Polachek
30 Mins.; Wed., 10:30 p.m.
Sustaining
NBC-TV, from N. Y.

The contention of some critics that video, as a mass medium, must pitch its program material to the lowest possible common denominator is partially refuted by this show. Inaugurated last summer and currently rescheduled as a regular series, "Television Recital Hall" is an uncompromising longhair offering that will appeal to a somewhat narrow audience segment who appreciate good music without any production sugar-coating. That's an okay feature of this show because video can only mature through an attempt to fulfill the needs of all popular levels.

Like the usual run of musical shorts shown in the film art houses, this show presents its programs with the focus exclusively on the performer. Settings have the austere air of a recital hall and the mi imum use of camera angles offers minimum interference to the projection tof the music. It's the type of show which doesn't require fixed visual attention just as a performance in a concert hall often can be encompassed by occasional roaming or shutting of the eyes.

The musical calibre of the show is topflight with the program material on as high a plane as the devotees can demand. On the preem of the new series, the guitarist Andres Segovia played selections by Bach, Scarlatti, and Villas Lobos with his usual delicacy of tone and did not patronize TV viewers. Herm.

Foreign TV Review

CURRENT RELEASE

With John Fitzgerald, Diana Fawcett, Harry Watt, John Hopkins
Producer: W. Farquarson-Small
45 Mins., alternate Thurs., 9:30 p.m.
BBC-TV, London

The first presentation of "Current Release" over the combined London - Midland - Northern networks of the British Broadcasting Corp. marks the end of negotiations, extending more than 18 months, between the British motion picture industry and the BBC. The idea of using TV to boost upcoming product first originated in the councils of the film industry's planning committee, which is the opposite number of the American COMPO.

Achieving a compromise between the BBC claim for the right of free criticsm and for the industry's viewpoint that trailers should be presented as they are without comment. W. Farquarson-Small has effected a program which, when running smoothly, will provide a good teaser type entertainment for the public and an unqualified boost for the box office. With an estimated TV audience running into millions, "Current Release" should whet the appetite of the picture-going public in a manner which cannot fail to hypo the industry.

For its first production, excerpts were chosen from six current offerings, four of which are British-made. In every case, the selection has been made with obvious care; not too much of the story is given away, but enough is screened to indicate the type of entertainment that is being offered. First batch included two Technicolor productions, and while the screenings, naturally, were in black and white, particular reference was made to the fact. The commentator, John Fitzgerald, introduced each excerpt, indicating type of subject and providing enough background material to make it understandable. The interjections by Diana Fawcett, presumably as his secretary, seem quite irrelevant. They had no bearing on the subject and were pointless.

As a special feature which will be done regularly, the program carried an interview with Harry Watt, director of "Where No Vultures Fly," in which he described some of the hazards of filming in the jungle. He was interviewed by John Hopkins in an easy and friendly style.

Other films used in the program were "The Magic Box," "Cyrano de Bergerac," "Encore," "I Want You" and "Lady Godiva Rides Again." It is recognized that most of these films have run their course in London and in other first-run situations, but once the program gets into its stride, the trailers shown will be just ahead of London release.

The program represents a major triumph for the British film industry. It has harnessed a potential rival and can claim to be the only industry which gets free advertising space for its product on the BBC networks. Myro.

SQUARE DANCE JAMBOREE

With Bob and Betty Brown, Roy Koerber, The Haymakers, Don Soelber, Paul Alexander Producer-director: Byron Openshaw
30 Mins., Wed. 9:30 p.m.
SEARS ROEBUCK
KSL-TV, Salt Lake City
(Featherstone)

As its name implies, this show is strictly on the homespun side, with cow-range entertainment and square dancing. But producer-director Byron Openshaw handles the session intelligently, and does a slick job of preventing it from slipping farther east to the corn belt.

Whole deal is treated casually, with no effort to make a big production out of it, which results in a smoothly-coordinated show that pleases. Bob and Betty Brown star with their songs and guitar accompaniment. Femme is cute as a button and warbles easily. Boy is good, too, but he'd do well to get rid of the black horn-rimmed glasses he wears. They just don't go with a cowpoke outfit.

Square dancing is tossed in a few times, with Roy Koerber taking care of the calling chores nicely. Show includes music by a four-piece combo, The Haymakers.

Emcee Don Soelberg fits into the pattern neatly. He doesn't work too hard for laughs, kids around easily, and does well for himself and the show.

Paul Alexander pitched the commercial for the new Sears Allstate car in a straightforward job, although copy is a little wordy. By skipping over the pitfall of trying to be pretentious, "Jamboree" succeeds in bringing viewers a pleasant half-hour of fun. Bert.

MR. I. MAGINATION

(Last of the Mohicans)
With Paul Tripp, Butch Cavell, Ruth Enders, Ted Tiller, Joe Silver
Producers: Norman & Irving Pincus
Director: Fred Rickey
Adapter: Tripp
30 Mins.; Sun., 6:30 p.m.
Sustaining
CBS-TV, from New York

When "Mr. I. Magination" went off the air last year following its commercial cancellation there were lots of squawks from viewers and the press, and CBS-TV's reprise of the series in cream time on a sustaining basis consequently has drawn trade plaudits. However, the preem Sunday (20) proved a disappointment. "Mr. I" will have to show improvement if it's to live up to its rep as one of the top moppet shows.

Fault was chiefly in the selection of the kickoff vehicle, James Fenimore Cooper's classic, "The Last of the Mohicans." Latter spotted juve actor Butch Cavell as Uncas, the last Mohican and a "good Indian." Uncas was the bosom pal of a frontier scout (played by Mr. I —Paul Tripp) attached to a British outpost at the time of the French and Indian war. In contrast with the "treacherous" Indians who were allied with the French and who massacred women and children, Uncas helped Tripp save the British commander's beautiful daughter from the Redmen. Plotwise the tale held interest, but it lacked full understanding of the history of the time and gave a semi-biased view of the original Americans. An airer designed for youngsters should exercise greater care in its presentation of other races.

Direction also robbed the telecast of full dramatic impact by lapsing into caricatured portrayals. The British commander was a semi-comic figure, the scout was able to outsmart his foe by transparent trickery, and the Indian villain was too obvious a heavy.

Butch Cavell did a sock job as the youthful guest who got his wish, the chance to be the Indian brave of 200 years ago. Tripp, as the train conductor who transports kids into any situation they desire, should appeal to the minors. Production was good, with effective sets, nice camerawork that made the forest scenes convincing, and mock-ups that came across realistically, as in the sacking of the fort.

The series' wish-granting format is flexible and with better scripts "Mr. I" should latch on to a sizable audience in the school set. Bril.

FUNNY PAPER THEATRE

With Art Linick
Director: Chuck Marquis
30 Mins.; Sun., 11 a.m.
NELSON BROS.
WGN-TV, Chicago
(Hartman)

Here's a neat little Sunday morning entry that looks likely to grab off a hefty kiddie audience slice. The idea is simple but effective. Art Linick, longtime radio personality, does a LaGuardia this time reading the Chicago Tribune Sunday comic strips.

To avoid a static effect, Linick is surrounded by a group of youngsters as he scans the funnies. This gives the cameras a good field of mobile young faces to shoot at for visual background and also gives Linick an opportunity to spice the session with some ad lib chinning with the guests.

Host displayed a nice fatherly mien on show seen (20) that quickly put the moppets at their ease. His reading of "Dick Tracy," "Little Orphan Annie," et al, was pleasantly unhoked.

The show, beamed as it is strictly at the young folk, seems a rather odd choice for its furniture store bankroller since the blurbs were aimed at homeowners. Theory apparently is that if it's something the kids demand, their parents have no choice but to turn it on. Dave.

VARIETY TIME

With Ernie Tetrault, Others
60 Mins.; Mon.-thru-Fri., 9:30 a.m.
Sustaining
WRGB-TV, Schenectady

Title of this was taken from another morning program on which WRGB-TV staffers rotated, but the new feature fits into a different format and approach. Ernie Tetrault combines filmed and recorded musical entertainment, community service, interviews, chatter and curiosa.

Tetrault threads the segments with an intimate, impromptu, sometimes kidding approach. The community and interview angles are the most significant, if not the most popular. A good women's program. Jaco.

METROPOLITAN OPERA AUDITIONS OF THE AIR

With Milton Cross, narrator; Patricia Bybell, Nino Luciano
Producer: William Marshall
Director: Herman Liveright
30 Mins.; Tues., 8:30 p.m.
Sustaining

Metropolitan Opera auditions, a longtime radio feature which has sprung several current topflight Met personalities into the bigtime, preemed with good results as a simulcast via ABC Tuesday night (15). While little has been done to dress the show visually, the cameras alone provide enough added interest to make the series on TV a welcome addition to the longhair roster. And, since it bucks both NBC-TV's Milton Berle show and CBS-TV's Frank Sinatra show, it stands a good chance of picking up whatever viewers don't go for the variety formats.

In making "Auditions" into a simulcast, ABC noted that the accent would still be on the radio side, with no concessions made to TV. That probably explains why narrator Milton Cross read his notes on the simulcast preem and why those huge bulky mikes were used, instead of the modern button types. ABC may have a point in not wishing to spoil the show's quality by over-producing for TV, but it seems that the producers could clear up a few minor points like those without harming enjoyment of the AM listeners. And it would certainly do a lot for the TV viewers. Otherwise, shots of the orch playing on a bare stage and of the auditioning singers merely standing before the orch provide enough visual interest.

Initial simulcast benefited by the presence of Patricia Bybell, a lyric soprano who was "trying out." Gal displayed a fine set of pipes in her renditions of some of the more popular arias but, besides that, showed terrif videogenic qualities, including a sensitively beauteous face and the physical attributes to match. Tenor Nino Luciano, the second tyro, had a similarly good voice, projecting his arias solidly. Fausto Cleva, as usual, batonned the orch for solid musical backing.

Cross, who's been narrating this series, as well as ABC's Saturday afternoon pickups from the Met, for a number of years, was too stiff and unrelaxed for TV. John Gutman, the Metopera's assistant general manager, on the other hand, evidenced a nice informality in an ad lib little speech at the 15-minute break. Stal.

TV TRADING POST

With Gordon Tuell, others
25 Mins.; Mon.-thru-Fri., 9:05 a.m.
Sustaining
WRGB-TV, Schenectady

New, simple program packages a fair exchange of entertainment at minute cost to the station. Gordon Tuell, best known as a producer, conducts the trading post, at which viewers, in person and by mail, offer to sell or swap various articles. He seeks those which are unusual or have a special story, although others are accepted. Items profferred or sought on the three initial blocks included an old style banjo, building blocks, a riding horse, dogs, a stein and glass paper weights.

Studio visitors screened surprisingly clear, as a group, and talked moderately well. Tuell, who rings a bell as guests enter, questions them in friendly fashion. At times, Tuell overspills the chatter dam, but this is largely due to program's length and the need for stretching time.

Feature could be built in production. The curiosa and public service angles make it palatable early morning fare, after the two-hour "Today." Jaco.

LET'S TALK IT OVER

With Rev. J. Edward Carothers, Dr. Zack Russ, Dr. Harry J. Linton, Mrs. Paul Boyce, Others
30 Mins.; Sun., 3:30 p.m.
WRGB-TV, Schenectady

New program presented by the Federations of Churches in Schenectady, Troy, Albany and Pittsfield features round-table discussions of common problems which can be clarified through analysis by persons in various walks of life. Ministers of churches in six cities participate. First telecast had the four-person panel considering four queries chosen from a 228-subject checklist submitted to unmarried persons in Rev. J. Edward Carothers' church, plus a hymn by the choir.

Teeoff had only a tinge of the denominational and, therefore, its appeal presumably would be broad for serious-minded viewers. Conducted on a high level, the videocast became talky in spots, but that is in the pattern and time length. Problems probed were those on personality adjustment, especially those of young people coming from smaller town to an industrial city. Jaco.

1952 Seen as FM's Rebirth Year; Sales Drives Set for Varied Areas

Washington, Jan. 22.

This year of 1952, in which television will be released from its long freeze, gives promise also of being the year of the rebirth of FM For the first time since "the finest aural service ever known" received its postwar blessing from the FCC, there's action on the FM front—real action. The manufacturers of sets, distributors, dealers and broadcasters are at last getting together, thanks to a more realistic approach to the problem by Harold Fellows, new prexy of the National Assn. of Radio and TV Broadcasters.

As pointed out here Friday (18) by the association's FM director, John Smith, Jr., at a meeting of the industry to plan an FM test campaign Washington during March, Fellows has changed the situation between broadcasters and manufacturers from war to truce. And, said Smith, "it's been a very active truce." There was unquestionable evidence at this meeting that NARTB and the manufacturing industry, under the leadership of the Radio-Television Manufacturers Assn., are working as a team to give FM its much-needed shot-in-the-arm.

James Secrest, general manager of RTMA, gave assurances that RTMA is "solidly behind" the FM campaign. "We believe there is a market for FM that hasn't been fully realized," said Secrest, pointing out that FM sales would be especially welcome at this time when TV set business isn't what it might be."

And a secondary reason for pushing TV, said Secrest, is to kill the idea that "some officials" in Washington have, that "there's a conspiracy among manufacturers to bury FM." The industry is just as anxious to sell FM sets as any other appliances, he added, and the test campaigns (in North Carolina, Wisconsi and D. C.) should prove that.

Further evidence of the manufacing industry's interest was shown in the presence at the meeting of Herb Guenin, of RCA; James Farley, of General Electric; Henry Onorati, of Crosley; Morgan Greenwood, of Philco, and Dave Grigsby, of Zenith. Representatives of Washington area distribu-

PHILLY TV STATIONS' 18G 'DIMES' PLEDGES

Philadelphia, Jan. 22.

Philadelphia television stations raised more than $18,000 in pledges during a series of three successive telecasts for the 1952 March of Dimes.

WFIL-TV kicked off the series ith a four-hour marathon (14), with Jimmy Blaine as emcee, which raised $11,215 in pledges. WPTZ devoted a film program to the March of Times (15) with Susan Peters heading the array of staffers to make the pitch. The station sought no pledges, however.

WCAU-TV wound up the series (16) with an all-day telethon climaxed by the appearances of World's Champion Jersey Joe Walcott and welterweight Gil Turner which drew $7,000 pledges. Roger W. Clipp, business manager of the WFIL stations and general chairman of the March of Dimes drive here, said he expected the total response from the three-day telecast to reach $20,000. Viewers were urged to send in returns to a special Postoffice Box 1952.

Pinza show, currently on a weekly basis, goes bi-weekly next month, with Dennis Day also picked up by RCA as the alternate week attraction, effective Feb. 8. Day's sh was kine auditioned last week on the Coast.

C. of C. Nixes Labor Debates As 'Hog-Calling'

Washington, Jan. 22.

When capital and labor get together on a radio debate, it becomes a "hog-calling contest." So declared the U. S. Chamber of Commerce last week, in reply to charges by the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations that C. of C. spokesmen take a "run-out powder" when invited to match wits with union officials on radio forums.

Asserting its policy on radio debates, of C. of C. said its spokesmen "will continue to appear in public debates with union officials or anyone else, when there is reasonable expectation that participants will stick to the subjects assigned, and that the debates will not degenerate into ranting and namecalling."

Chamber said it does draw a line on "certain radio programs where union officials have seized the chance to ride off in all directions from the subject, on the wings of rash, bellicose statements or meaningless and parroted slogans from which there is no quick, sensible reply. The Chamber does not believe there is much contribution to public thinking in a hog-calling contest."

Line will also be drawn, said the Chamber, on forum programs in which C. of C. spokesmen have been "hopelessly" outnumbered." Organization points out that in the CBS program, "Cross-Section USA," of Jan. 11, there were two spokesmen for labor, one for agriculture and one for business.

Basis for union charges was dropping by NBC of its "America United" show and substitution of "Viewpoint—USA" to be assigned to individual organizations in turn, including the Chamber.

CBS Was There

Editor, VARIETY:

VARIETY in its Jan. 16 issue asks a fair question: "Where Was Radio?" in the coverage of the Kurt Carlsen saga. But as for your statement that radio was not on the job, CBS Radio asks to be included out.

As the Flying Enterprise struggled toward Falmouth, Paul Niven of our London news staff reported its progress in numerous CBS Radio News broadcasts from that seaport. But the big job in that coverage was to do what radio always does—get the principals and put them on the air at once, to tell their own story. Captain Carlsen had scarcely touched land before Niven was on his trail, and on the 8 a. m. (EST) CBS Radio "World News Roundup" Jan. 10, Niven had Carlsen a little studio in Falmouth where he broadcast the story of his adventure direct to listeners in America. This exclusive interview was immediately picked up by news services. It was in demand for days by newspapers and magazi One hour after Carlsen's original broadcast, CBS Radio "News of America" repeated the story by recording and then gave Carlsen's own voice making his reply to the welcome by the mayor and the people of Falmouth. This was the high spot of the CBS radio coverage which had kept abreast of the event from

Mich. Tax on TV Receipts

Lansing, Jan. 22.

The levy will be 10% on non-title events and 5% on national or world championship matches.

Ted Mack 'Auditioning' D. C.'s Govt. Employees Today (Wed.) for B'casts

Ted Mack will preside over final talent auditions today (Wed.) for the Federal Recreation Committee in Washington, D. C. Committee, representing 250,000 employees of 75 government agencies has arranged a tie-in with "Original Amateur Hour" for winning performers to compete for spots on weekly program broadcasts. Plan was given impetus by Old Gold sponsorship.

FRC talent auditioning, an annual event among Washington's working personnel, has become a major feature of organized recreational project. For '51, Mack and "Amateur Hour" staff selected 12 acts which subsequently appeared on regular network shows.

Current tryouts, pre-judged in December by Washington newspaper and TV groups, covered auditioning of 400 Government employee contestants. Outstanding acts selected from this number will perform for Mack and "Amateur Hour" director Bob Reed today at Washington's Inter-departmental Auditorium. Event is FRC's main seasonal theatrical affair.

SINATRA IS NEWEST CASUALTY ON WDTV

Pittsburgh, Jan. 22.

Newest casualty on WDTV, city's only channel, is Frank Sinatra, who has just chalked up the shortest run on record on the DuMont-wned station. Only three or four of The Voice's programs were carried when management suddenly announced that it was being dropped.

Decision of WDTV to run the first half-hour of Sinatra along with "Keep Posted" on alternate weeks with Milton Berle kicked up quite a fuss with latter's sponsors, Texaco, who threatened to pull Berle altogether in he wasn't carried regularly. When DuMont people stuck by their guns, however, Texaco relented and agreed to let Berle come in every other Tuesday.

Pulling of Sinatra doesn't mean that Berle goes back on a weekly basis. Alan Young comes in on the alternate Tuesday 8-8:30 slot, with "Keep Posted" continuing on the same basis the half hour after that.

No reason was given by WDTV for dropping Sinatra although it's believed the fact that he was sponsorless for the half hour that came through here bi-weekly had a lot to do with it.

Electric Cos. Trim Radio Coin on 'Corliss Archer'

Electric Companies Advertising, which has recently expanded its ad budget into television, has decided to cut back its sponsorship of CBS Radio's "Meet Corliss Archer" from a weekly to an alternate week basis. New setup is effective immediately, meaning the Sunday ight show will be sustaining this week (27), with the bankroller coming in next on Feb. 4. Agency is N. W. Ayer.

For TV, the Electric Cos. has bought a new series of half-hour vidfilms, which preem in 35 markets Sunday under the title of "Electric Theatre." Films were produced at the Eagle Lion studios on the Coast by Screen Televideo Associates, with Gil Ralston as exec producer.

CBS will keep "Corliss" on a sustaining basis during the weeks skipped by Electric Companies, in hopes of lining up a new sponsor for the alternate Sundays. Sponsor's checkout, incidentally, opens up another hole this season in what had started as an SRO night for CBS.

Ill. B'casters Plan Legislative Fight Vs. University TV Station as Unfair

Chicago, Jan. 22.

The Illinois Broadcasters Assn. may carry its fight against a television station operated by the U. of Illinois to the state legislature, it was indicated after a meeting here last week between IBA members and university officials.

It was brought out that the school at present has no funds for the erection or operation of the proposed station. The broadcasters hinted that if all other efforts failed in their attempt to forestall the establishment of a university outlet, they would register their opposition at the state assembly when the state-supported institution applies for the necessary coin.

The IBA is attacking the proposed educational station on several grounds. First, the broadcasters' group argues the school is rushing into the video picture without adequate investigation of the economics involved, and without prior approval by the state lawmakers. Also, it's not fair to expect the taxpayers to shell out for an outlet at the Urbana campus, which would only serve a relatively limited number of citizens. The university could best fulfill its function by packaging film educational shows for use on the present and proposed commercial stations, its argued.

University to Go Ahead

However, it's obvious that the real nub of the issue is the fact that under the present FCC channel blueprint, the only VHF outlet for the East Central Illinois area has been set aside for educational use. That's Channel 12, for which the university has notified the FCC that it intends to formally apply. Three commercial stations are planned for the Champaign-Urbana region, but they are in the UHF spectrum.

Although nothing clear-cut came

CBS-TV's 'Big Hello'

New audience participation show, in which guests for the first time will be able to speak on the phone to friends in a different part of the country and see them while they talk, is being lined up by CBS-TV. Titled "The Big Hello," the show will be auditioned in early February for a projected weekly half-hour public service series.

Program is the brainchild of James Fonda, who is with CBS-TV on the Coast. Through use of the microwave channel to both coasts, the web believes it will be able to make possible the long-pending visual telephone service. It's presently planned to bring on as participants such persons as a GI landing on the Coast from Korea, who may want to talk to his family in N. Y.; a mother in N. Y. who may not have seen her son on the Coast for many years, etc.

Nielsen Pays 75G To Sindlinger In Suit Settlement

Suit involving A. C. Nielsen and C. E. Hooper, on one hand, and Albert E. Sindlinger on the other has been settled out of court with both sides claiming victory. Nielsen firm has paid Sindlinger $75,000, with Nielsen himself, Hooper and Henry Rahmel, Nielsen engineering v.p., paying $1 apiece.

Ending a 27-month-long hassle with confusing claims and counterclaims, Judge Ganey of U. S. District Court for eastern Pennsylvania signed an order dismissing the federal action and counterclaims.

One of the considerations on which the Nielsen-Sindlinger settlement was reached is an agreement solving the patent litigation, making it possible for Sindlinger to continue audience measurement with the Radox technique. Sindlinger said that he was forced to suspend biz in 1950 when it was impossible for him to settle the Radox-Nielsen patent-interference set-to by a cross-licensing arrangement which he had proposed. Nielsen's alleged refusal to cooperate with Sindlinger in a cross-licensing deal was one of the charges in the federal litigation. Sindlinger had charged Hooper and Nielsen with "monopolistic practices" to freeze him out of the nose-counting field.

"By waiving certain of our claims and legal right of appeal," Sindlinger said this week, "we permit

MGM MUSICAL COMEDY THEATRE
(It Happened in Brooklyn)
With Mimi Benzell, Russell Nype, Clifford Carpenter, Bill Smith, Ronnie Liss, others; Joel Herron orch
Producer: Raymond Katz
Director: Marx B. Loeb
Adapter: William Kendall Clarke
60 Mins.; Wed., 8 p.m.
Sustaining
Mutual, from New York

This shapes up as perhaps the most solid audience show in the lineup MGM Radio Attractions is producing for Mutual. Its blend of drama and tunes, with name talent and properties, some of which had success in their pic form, makes a listenable combination over the hour route.

On the show caught Wednesday (16) the vehicle was "It Happened in Brooklyn," adapted from the five-year-old Metro release that starred Frank Sinatra, Kathryn Grayson, Peter Lawford and Jimmy Durante. It was brought to radio with Mimi Benzell, and Russell Nype of Broadway's "Call Me Madam." The story is one of those obvious bits of fluff which usually form the basis for filmusicals. Nype played the young singer-composer who falls in love with another young hopeful, Miss Benzell. But she falls for Nype's best friend, and there's the added complication that she's giving up her chances for an operatic career to plug her pianist kid brother. Everything ends happily, however, with an assist from a friendly Italian janitor.

William Kendall Clarke, who has done better things, turned in a script that didn't avoid the cliches. The tunes, however, were appealing. Although not pop faves, they suited the story, had some cute lyrics and were nicely put over by the Benzell-Nype team, who also had good acting support. Joel Herron's WMGM (N. Y.) orch, which is working on the shows waxed in the east, provided a full-bodied backgrounding.

Airer included some familiar items, such as "Delia" and the "Waltz Song" from "Romeo and Juliet," both socked over by Miss Benzell. On the whole it made a pleasant stanza, which would have been a stronger entry with a larger helping of music. Bril.

WORLD FLIGHT REPORTER
With Dan Peterson
5 Mins.; Mon.-thru-Fri., 5:55 p.m.
Sustaining
ABC, from New York

ABC's new cross-the-boarder, "World Flight Reporter," is a clicko interview session that makes the most out of its five-minute running time. Format has Dan Peterson querying travelers as they arrive at New York's Idlewild Airport. The session's are breezy, informative bits which should click with the stay-at-home dialers.

On preem (21), Peterson interviewed Harvey Firestone, Jr., arriving from Liberia, and Princess Alice of Greece, coming in from England. Peterson handled the questions with ease, and both Firestone and Princess Alice sustained interest with their repartee. All in all series looms as a pleasing filler in ABC's lineup. Gros.

OUT OF THUNDER
With Leon Janney, Hester Sondergaard, Phil Tompkins, others; Charles Irving, narrator; Emerson Buckley, musical conductor
Writer-producer-director: Sherman S. Dryer
25 Mins.; Sun., 10 p.m.
Sustaining
Mutual, from New York

Mutual has come up with an interesting educational series in "Out of the Thunder," a 25-minute dramatic session accented "toward a fuller understanding of things scientific." Sunday's (20) preem subject was "The Beginning of the World," which proved a good springboard for other topics to come. (Subject next week is "Cortisone.")

Scripter Sherman S. Dryer, who also produced and directed, researched a collection of facts out of Collier's Encyclopedia that emerged as an entertainment and enlightening 25 minutes despite their basic dryness. Adding much to the presentation was Charles Irving's narration and the work of a cast which included Leon Janney and Hester Sondergaard, among others.

While Dryer's dramatization ably caught the power and significance of the astronomical discoveries of such savants as Aristotle, Copernicus, Galileo and Newton, the musical bridges were inclined to be too noisy to be genuinely effective. Newton's law of gravity, described by narrator Irving, was important enough in itself without stressing it with a deafening musical background.

But on the whole, "Out of the Thunder," is a meritorious public service program as a United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization official pointed out in a transcribed rebroadcast from Paris. However, 10 p.m. is a little too late to catch grade-school children. If the program were moved up an hour its audience obviously would be broader. Gilb.

YOUR INVESTMENT DOLLAR

UNITED BUSINESS SERVICE
WOR, from New York
(Frank-Guenther, Law)

WOR newscaster Henry Gladstone series on investment guidance shapes as interesting listening. Info on current market trends and spiels on stocks, bonds and securities should appeal to the financial page reader despite the Sunday noon spotting.

Gladstone makes the quarter hour a listenable entry by keeping the gab bright and terse. It's to his credit that the show moves at a pleasant pace with no dull spots to mar his chatter flow. Show should also appeal to those dialers who aren't hep to high finance because he maintains a laymen's level throughout the discussion.

United Business Service is picking up the tab and rates a kudo for keeping its tub-thumping at a high level. Gros.

MINER MIKE
With Garnett Marks
Writer: Jack Goodman
15 Mins.; Sun. 12:45 p.m.
UTAH MINING ASSN.
KALL, Salt Lake City
(Adamson & Buchman)

For a program that makes no effort to be pretentious, this session succeeds in presenting news with a novel angle. Aired to build good will for the mining industry, "Miner Mike" has nothing tangible to sell. So using an established fictional character, writer Jack Goodman has Garnett Marks limit himself to regional stories, mainly pointed towards the human interest side.

Writing is smooth and easy going, and dips into small personal details that give the program a definitely individualistic color. Marks plays his role straight, spins his yarns with sincerity, and strengthens the characterization by shying away from corny down-to-earth approach.

In stanza caught (20), stories included a nostalgic tale about the impending end of Plum Alley, Salt Lake's Chinatown; deal involving the U of Utah medical school which calls for nearby states paying for their students; use of TV in a U. S. Steel plant, and background on the man who opened uranium diggings near the Big Rock Candy Mountain.

There's nothing socko in these tales, but they all hold listener interest, and offer news that doesn't usually show up in the press.

Sandwiched in between a flood of Mutual mysteries, this leisurely quarter hour looks as if it should grab itself a nice slice of audience. Berl.

BREAKFAST IN PHOENIX
With Bill Lyman Pennell, Others
30 Mins.; Mon.-thru-Fri., 9:30 a.m.
Sustaining
WABY, Albany

Program from the Arizona resort follows in the path blazed by the late Tom Breneman with "Breakfast In Hollywood," Idea and format do not differ materially from that onetime top morning web feature, although there are minor changes. Bill Lyman Pennell moves around a Phoenix restaurant interviewing guests (some men are included), awards prizes to the oldest lady and to the one whose birthday is nearest a selected number, tries on hats, and generally exudes a genial air. Show draws from a wide area. Many of the guests are from the west, south and Canada.

Wisely, the emcee has recently been spending more time with visitors who have an unusual background or story. He could deepen and sharpen this. Some of the originations lack listener appeal because they crowd in names and towns but do not delineate or spotlight personalities. The block includes, a la Breneman, a heavily-accented restaurant employee used for comic touches—here, a German baker, who presents birthday cakes, etc. and plugs a baker line.

Pennell is a friendly, likeable chap, with a mildly kidding approach. He punches too hard in spots. Either the pickup is technically imperfect or the transmission is inferior. Pennell and others tend to display a blurred tone. The organ background, by Clyde Huntington, occasionally overbalances the speaking volume. Show needs tighter production and sharper timing. Jaco.

regular kine route, which means that each show would play on the Coast a week after its N. Y. origination.

Hot kine system is now being used by several shows beamed from N. Y. to L. A. by the various TV webs. Under the system, a show is transmitted live cross the country at the time it originates in N.Y. Instead of being aired on the Coast at the same time, however, it's kinescoped, with the kine being stored for three hours before taking the air. CBS-TV's "Burns and Allen" show, among others, follows an opposite route. It originates live on the Coast at 5:30 p. m. Thursdays, meaning it's aired live in N. Y. at 8:30 p. m. But, instead of being transmitted in L. A. at 5:30, when the available audience might be small, it's kinescoped at its point of origin for a playback three hours later.

That the experience encountered by "Talent Scouts" might spark a trend among other N. Y. to L. A. shows is based on the fact that the program has been consistently either in first or second place in the national ratings. Show was carried in Frisco via KPIX and in L. A. by KNXT, the CBS o.&o. outlet.

WJZ, Gotham flagship of ABC, has made a promotional deal with Grand Union supermarkets based on "Grand Union Caravan," new cross-the-board show which kicks off Feb. 18 at 12:30-1 p.m. Series will originate from a different GU store in the area every day.

Ted Oberfelder, WJZ general manager, said that the new stanza will offer participating sponsors a bonus of concentrated merchandising. Each of the five stores from which the program originates in any one week will promote products plugged on the airer for the full week, Oberfelder said. Stores will give the bankrollers' products feature displays, posters, redemption of coupons issued by sponsors and tub-thumping for the radio show in the chain's metropolitan and suburban newspaper ads.

Insertion of the new series involves shifting of the Herb Sheldon show to 2-2:30 p.m. In its new spot Sheldon stanza will add a three-minute newscast.

Using two devices to get an eyewitness account of life aboard th snowbound train at Emigrant Gap, Calif., WCCO, Twin Cities' CBS station, scooped other radio, TV and even newspapers locally.

Charles Sarjeant, WCCO assistant news director, hit upon the idea of contacting the Southern Pacific R.R. man in San Francisco and William Nietfeld, KCBS, Frisco, news head, and asking them to get a message to James Porterfield, Minneapolis-Honeywell Mfg. Co. public relations director, who was aboard the train with four other M.H. executives, enroute to a Frisco sales meeting.

The message, which was delivered to Porterfield, asked him to call WCCO as soon as possible. Porterfield's long distance telephone call came through ahead of any other direct newspaper, radio or TV contact with a Minnesotan passenger. From it the WCCO news bureau staff got a real earful of eye-witness information regarding four days of life aboard the snowbound train. It went on George Grim's 8:30 a.m. newscast.

Robert S. Greene, former staff scripter for ABC and WCBS, N. Y., has authored "Television Writing: Theory and Technique" which came off the Harper presses on Jan. 16 ($3.75). Volume includes a discussion of camera technique, script format, visual writing, dialog, music, structure, transitions, adaptations and non-dramatic programs, plus a glossary and bibliography.

The 13 jingles range from 23 to 72 seconds in length and were bought by the network from the Communication Materials Centre of Columbia U.

save considerable studio rehearsal time and also eliminate much of the fear of forgetting their scripts from the minds of actors and others who've been afraid to get into TV. He said one daytime cross-the-board show has saved $1,200 per week in studio rehearsal time through use of the Prompter. It's that basis that the company is currently pitching it to other networks and to local stations throughout the country.

Teleprompter idea was originated by actor Fred Barton, who played one of the sailors in the recent Broadway production of "Mr. Roberts." He took it to Kahn for promotion and financing; latter became interested in its potentialities and brought in Hubert J. Schlafly, 20th's director of TV research, to work out the many technical problems involved. Trio incorporated as equal partners last January. Before that, they had spotted the Prompter on CBS-TV's "First 100 Years," the first video soap opera strip, and it has since been used by such TV performers as Arthur Godfrey, Garry Moore, Steve Allen, Ed Sullivan, Milton Berle, Howdy Doody, Robert Montgomery and the Vivian Blaine-Pinky Lee combo, among others.

Company charges users $30 per hour to rent the device, with the price including four machines and a crew to service the equipment. In design, the Prompter consists of the entire script of the show (including music, where needed), which is typed on roll paper in characters nearly one inch high. Script is housed in a small cabinet, about the size of a Gladstone bag, in which it moves on its rollers at a speed controlled remotely by an operator. On the average show, three of these machines are spotted strategically around the studio, within sight of the actors but outside camera range. Speed of all three, plus the master unit, is electronically synchronized via remote control.

According to Kahn, tests have shown that it's impossible for viewers to spot an actor using the device. He revealed that President Truman has used it and that National Production Authority chief Charles E. Wilson and Secretary of State Dean Acheson have also utilized it for their speeches to the nation via TV. In Hollywood, Kahn said, it was recently tested at one of the major studios by handing a group of actors a script one hour before a scene was to be shot. First rushes of the film, according to Kahn, showed that studio execs could not discern on which scenes the Prompter was being used.

Device is handled on the Coast by Teleprompter of California, a franchise group, which comprises Richard Dorso, one-time talent agent and former exec veepee of United TV Programs; Stanley Myers, former National Theatres exec. and Lewis Blumberg, prez of United World Films and son of Universal prexy Nate J. Blumberg. In Washington, Teleprompter is repped by Mugs Richardson, former "girl Friday" to Godfrey.

They Know What's Watt
Down in WFIL-adelphia

Ad men who've taken a good look at the Philly radio market know one thing for sure—it's not just the power, it's the selling power that counts.

That's why more and more of them are turning to WFIL, Philly ABC net voice, whose 5,000 watts actually outpull 50,000 watts in 11 out of 14 counties in America's third largest Retail Trading Area.

And it's the whole Philly area—not the city alone—that is most significant to the sales-wise. Here are 4,400,000 men, women, and minors. Every year they soak up $4 billion worth of retail goods. Their effective buying income is valued at $6,638,759,000.

A plum ripe for the picking, plus a big bonus area . . . and the ladder to the top of the tree has "560" written all over it. It's an engineering fact that WFIL's 5,000 watts, operating at 560 kilocycles, give coverage equal to 100,000 watts at double the frequency . . . 1120 kilocycles. Schedule WFIL.

o.&o. stations—WABD, N. Y.; WTTG, Washington, and WDTV, Pittsburgh. With Pittsburgh a single-station area, both NBC and CBS have reportedly offered to pipe their coverage of the conventions into the station gratis, in order to get their sponsor's blurbs on the air.

Under terms of the DuMont-Life setup, Life will send 30 editors and reporters to Chicago to join DuMont's engineers and programming personnel in covering the meets. In addition, DuMont and Life will have access to direct wires to Washington and N. Y. Also available will be Life's complete morgue for background - formation, plus the March of Time files. DuMont plans to feed affiliates the complete pool coverage, plus four separate programs each day under the general direction of Life.

Young & Rubicam, representing Life, will participate in the setup as a programming and production counsellor. Agency is sending a task force of its personnel to Chi to help in covering the events.

ABC-TV, trying to line up as many stations as possible for Admiral's sponsorship of the Republican and Democratic national conventions and the Election Night coverage, is also expected to use a cooperative biz angle. Admiral is paying about $2,000,000 for the AM-TV spread.

Idea being proposed is to have local Admiral dealers participate locally in the sponsorship. This would have the effect of giving stations carrying the ABC-TV coverage of the conventions and election added coin. Not only would they get more revenue, but their take would be proportionately greater since outlets make a greater profit on their local accounts.

With the election deals turning into a free-for-all among three leading manufacturers of television sets and appliances—NBC has Philco and CBS has Westinghouse as bankrollers—the problem of station clearances in markets with a restricted number of channels has become intense.

So far ABC-TV has lined up 11 outlets. In addition to its owned-and-operated tele stations in New York, Detroit, Chi, 'Frisco and L. A., the web has WFIL-TV, Philly, WXEL, Cleveland, WCPO, Cincy, WTVN, Columbus, WAAM, Baltimore and WMAL-TV, Washington. Web is also making the pitch to other outlets. Skein is also going after those southern markets which will be joined to the cable setup in July.

Deal was placed through Erwin, Wasey agency. It doesn't include the full package which ABC had wrapped up, with pre-convention and post-convention programs. This part of the package is still available for other sponsorship.

ABC prexy Robert Kintner took a personal hand in the negotiations. He was in Chi last week to finalize the sale.

AM version will be aired on the full network of over 300 stations. Quarterbacking the ABC coverage will be newscaster John Daly, with assists from Elmer Davis, Drew Pearson, George Sokolsky, Erwin D. Canham, Bert Andrews, Paul Harvey, Martin Agronsky, Walter Kiernan, George Gallup, Mary Margaret McBride and Pauline Frederick.

Ventura

dubbing is in the closeups. In other scenes it is a comparatively simple matter, since lips of the players are too small to require perfect sync with the English words.

Ventura plans to take advantage of that fact. In addition, he'll avoid the necessity of expensive dubbing of closeups by using bilingual actors. Even if their accents are bad, a fact that they are speaking English makes it a simple matter to dub in other English voices. Expensive part of dubbing is the difficulty of matching up foreign words with their English equivalents.

French producer will make his initial experiment with "Mad Girl of Dublin," which he'll make in Dublin with a Gallic cast headed by Danielle Delorme. Pic is primarily intended for European theatrical distribution. If the experimental English TV version turns out well enough, it may also be given theatrical release in the U.S. prior to tele sale.

Ventura is experienced in bilingual pix, having just completed "Monte Carlo Baby" in complete French and English versions for the theatrical market. His next in the same style will be Ibsen's "A Doll's House." He's currently on a U. S. visit.

'52 Ford Dealer Debut Via Video

Atlantic City, Jan. 22.

A new use for television was demonstrated here Friday (18) by the Ford Motor Co. and RCA as they collaborated in bringing the 1952 Fords to an audience of 1,200 Ford dealers and salesmen seated in a large room in the Traymore Hotel.

The group watched a closed circuit telecast from a nearby showroom on a 15x20-foot screen of the 1952 Fords, which became the first automobiles in sales promotion history to make their dealer debut on television.

Projected and described with overall and closeup views were the new Ford's sales features. The stunt was accomplished by an eight-man crew of RCA engineers and TV production experts who set up a studio in Traymore garage and televised the new Ford to the dealer group.

The arrangement was made by the Chester, Pa., Ford district to solve the problem of presenting the car in a room which could not accommodate the automobile itself. While it is new to the auto industry and may be used in future by many conventions here the principle was first introduced by the American Medical Convention when doctors attending their last two resort conventions watched from Convention Hall operations performed in the Atlantic City Hospital.

C. Gordon Johnston, district sales manager, said the experiment proved more effective than the customary use of an on-the-scene automobile. "With TV, we gave everybody front seat closeup view," he declared.

Milwaukee — Bruce Wallace, manager of public service and promotion for WTMJ and WTMJ-TV, was one of three Milwaukeeans named winners of citations for outstanding service in the field of human relations during 1951 by the Milwaukee Council of B'nai B'rith. Wallace has been in radio, television and newspaper work for the last 26 years.

O'Neil-Macy Deal Gets FCC Okay

Washington, Jan. 22.

Federal Communications Commission gave its okay last week to the $3,265,000 plus deal for the sale of WOR and WOR-TV stations in New York to Thomas S. Lee Enterprises (Tom O'Neil) but conditioned the actual transfer of ownership on compliance by Lee with the agency's multiple ownership rules which limit licensees to seven AM outlets.

This means that R. H. Macy & Co. will continue to hold the stations until the Lee sale of WICC in Bridgeport, Conn., for $200,000 meets Commission requirements that the purchaser (Bridgeport Broadcasting Co.) dispose of its present outlet, WLIZ, in Bridgeport. Commission rules prevent a commercial licenses from having more than one station in the same area.

With approval of the WOR deal, Thomas Lee will have AM stations in New York, Boston, Providence, Hartford, Los Angeles, San Francisco and San Diego. The Lee company, which is owned by General Tire & Rubber, will also have TV stations in New York, Boston and L.A.

The WOR transaction involved payment to General Teleradio (Macy subsidiary) of $1,300,000 in cash, issuance to G-T of Lee stock worth approximately $238,000, transfer of assets estimated to be worth $527,000, a 25-year lease of WOR property at an annual rental of $315,000, and purchase from G-T of the WOR Program Service for $1,200,000 cash.

Ed Sullivan's Junket 'Merchandise Emcee'

Kenyon & Eckhardt agency has wrapped up an extensive sales promotion campaign for Lincoln-Mercury that will take Ed Sullivan, star of L-M's CBS-TV "Toast of the Town," on flying visits to over 100 department stores throughout the U. S.

Promotion is based on a tieup between L-M, the Drexel Furniture Co. and the department stores. Point of connection between the autos and the furniture is that both "represent the casual trend in living, and luxury without ostentation." The Lincolns will be shown with Drexel furniture, plus home accessory items and women's fashions, in the various stores, it's a way of getting the cars displayed outside of the usual dealer showrooms and Lincoln copy will be included in Drexel magazine ads. In return, the L-M dealers will exhibit Drexel items or photos in their showrooms and "Toast" programs will include mentions of the furniture themes.

Sullivan will hop around the country between his telecasts for one-day appearances at the stores, in some of which he'll emcee fashion shows. John Falkner Arndt is the agency for Drexel. Promotion kicks off with a store-wide feature at Strawbridge-Clothier, Philly, on Feb. 21.

The answer to the question, "Where Was Radio?" is that CBS Radio, at any rate, was on the job, as usual.

'So Were We'-NBC

New York.

Editor, VARIETY

I have read your story on radio coverage of Capt. Carlsen's ordeal at sea.

During the two-week period from the time the North Atlantic storms crippled the Flying Enterprise until Capt. Carlsen received a hero's welcome by New York, NBC radio originated 24 overseas pickups direct from the scene of rescue operations at Falmouth, Land's End and London. Edwin Newman, an NBC radio operator in London, was stationed at Falmouth during the trying days the Enterprise was in tow. He flew over the stricken vessel twice, broadcasting his observations to America. He gave Americans the first safe-on-shore interview with Carlsen exclusively on NBC. NBC climaxed its radio coverage of the Carlsen saga with a 15-minute special broadcast of New York's traditional tickertape welcome and the City Hall ceremonies.

Henry Cassidy

(Editor's Note: VARIETY still sticks by its guns that the webs missed the boat on the Carlsen sea saga in terms of failing to recapture the era in special events which would have found Ben Grauer or a contemporary hoisted atop ship mast with portable shortwave equipment or tape recorder for an on-the-spot blow-by-blow of the adventure.)

Nielsen

Nielsen to have his name on the Radox patent in exchange for a license of our choice, which fits in with our plans for use of the Radox technique." He said that the patent litigation involved manual and automatic methods of matching signals for identification, but did not involve other phases of the Radox technique, the instantaneous and automatic tabulating and calculating phases.

Nielsen stated that settlement talks were instituted by Sindlinger following a decision by the board of interference examiners in favor of Nielsen. Latter also declared that the license to Sindlinger does not include Nielsen's automatic-type audience measurement system, but only the manually operated matching system. Sindlinger will pay royalties for use of the Nielsen patent and has the right to grant sub-licenses under certain limited conditions, Nielsen said.

Radox differs from the audimeters used by Nielsen in that it is an instantaneous measurement device. Audimeters record dialing on tapes which are later mailed in to Nielsen. Radox transmits the dialing data immediately to a central office.

7 MORE AFFILIATES ADDED TO ABC RADIO

In the past fortnight ABC has added seven new affiliates, bringing the radio web's string to a high of 311. It's part of the drive for grass-roots coverage, which has brought ABC 21 outlets since last August.

Five of the latest additions belong to the Wyoming Cowboy Network: KSID, Sidney, Neb.; KODI, Cody; KWOR, Worland; KWRL, Riverton; and KGOS, Torrington. Latter four markets are all in Wyoming. Pacting of these outlets, all 250 watters, brings all eight of the Cowboy hookup into the ABC corral.

Also joining ABC is WINC, Winchester, Va., which is rejoining the web after having moved over to NBC a couple of months back. Station got protests from some listeners who missed the ABC shows, and as result the station decided to re-sign with ABC. Outlet is keeping its NBC affiliation, which has several months to run, and will be a dual affiliate until its NBC deal expires or it is released by NBC.

ABC also picked up WKVA, Lewiston, Pa., which is under the same management as WINC.

Scandinavian Airlines Sets WQXR Music Series

Scandinavian Airlines is picking up the tab for a 52-week series of musical shows on WQXR, N. Y., Sundays at 7:05-8 p.m. Programs will also be aired on 10 other stations throughout the U. S. at various times.

"Music in Scandinavia" will be produced under supervision of American Scandinavian Foundation, with David Hall handling commentary. Airer will feature recorded music, orchs and artists from Scandinavia.

FCC Grants Record Eight FM'ers To Wisc. Council, But as Non-Comm'ls

Washington, Jan. 22.

The Wisconsin State Radio Council last week became the licensee of the largest number of FM stations, when the FCC granted the system construction permits for two additional non-commercial educational outlets. This gives the state educational network eight owned and operated non-commercial FMs besides its two non-commercial AMs.

In allowing the Council to have more than the limit of six FM stations permitted commercial licensees, the FCC took the occasion to point out that its multiple ownership rules don't apply to non-commercial stations. Nor do the rules preclude a non-commercial licensee from having two or more such stations in the same area, the agency added.

One of the purposes of reserving a portion (88 to 92 megacycles) of the FM band for non-profit educational organizations, the FCC explained, "is to encourage the establishment of statewide plans for non-commercial educational FM broadcast service. A limit upon the number of stations which might be held under common control would be inconsistent with this purpose."

However, the Commission pointed out, there might still be a problem of diversification of control of non-commercial FM stations if there should be competitive applications by qualified educational applicants.

While such a situation is not likely to arise in PM, it is believed that it might well come up in television. Comments received by the Commission on its proposed set-aside of channels for educational TV, indicate that some privately-endowed universities may apply separately for channels sought by public school systems in the same area. If a contest should develop for an educational channel, and one of the applicants is the licensee of an educational AM, FM or TV station, the Commission's ruling would appear to indicate that this factor might be "pertinent" in deciding who gets the channel.

Development of Wisconsin's FM educational network, which is financed by appropriations of the state legislature, is credited to Harold B. McCarty, executive director of the Council and a pioneer in educational radio. In addition to the new stations authorized for Iowa County and Highland Township, both of which will be 50 kw operations, the network includes stations in Madison, Delafield, Chilton, Rib Mountain, Colfax and Holmen.

The Council also plans an extensive statewide TV educational network, and has asked the Commission to set aside 12 instead of six channels for non-commercial stations in Wisconsin. Properly spaced, the Council has informed FCC, 12 educational TV stations could be interconnected by microwave relay for economical statewide coverage.

WGN-TV reportedly paid the White Sox $75,000 last year. Because of the American League entry's rise in the standings and increased popularity, it's likely the front office may hike the figure for the upcoming season. However, any sizeable boost will meet great resistance from Schreiber on the argument that the overall package costs would be out of reach for sponsors.

set out to do." He added that if the change is brought about to his liking, he will probably rejoin the TV Playwrights group, meaning that other of his works would be made available to the Celanese series.

Discussions to date have centered around the change in policy. As a result, the question of actual casting of the show has not come up. It's believed possible, though, that if a reconciliation is reached, Betty Field, who's Rice's wife, may star in "Street Scene." She played the starring role in a presentation of the show on NBC-TV's "Philco Playhouse" several years ago.

See Vaude Circuit Type Booking Installed At NBC-TV by Piermont

The vaudeville circuit type of booking has been installed at NBC. Sid Piermont, former booker of the Loew chain, has now been put in charge of setting talent on all shows controlled by NBC. The NBC circuit now comprises the Kate Smith show (morning and evenings), "Royal Showcase" and the Ezio Pinza show.

Elevation of Piermont to NBC house booker will enable the chain to make combination deals. Piermont can now lay out a route of three shows. In the old vaude days, Piermont used to be able to giv an act as much as 20 weeks' work.

Use of the combined buying power will enable NBC to make better deals and to attract more talent. Although there is no open talk the matter, it's expected that the web will be able to get a degree of exclusivity in buying talent. It will be possible for Piermont to keep a top act off other nets until he has played out NBC commitments.

Elevation of Piermont to the top guest talent buying spot on the network provides a further indication that vaudeville has gone from the circuits to the networks.

Joe E. Brown's 'Break-In' As Godfrey Radio Sub

Joe E. Brown, with whom CBS Radio has been negotiating a long-term talent pact, is scheduled to break in on the web by taking over for Arthur Godfrey on the Monday night "Talent Scouts," during Godfrey's four-week vacation starting Feb. 11. Web execs reportedly feel that the "Scouts" spot will serve as a good showcasing for Brown before potential clients, if he gets his own radio program.

Godfrey, as he has done for the last several years during his vacations, will spend two weeks at the Navy Air Base in Pensacola, Fla. Robert Q. Lewis, who has subbed for him in recent years, will again take over the morning "Arthur Godfrey Time," including the new 15-minute simulcast segment. Frank Parker, now a regular cast member on CBS-TV's Wednesday night "Godfrey and Friends," will emcee that show during Godfrey's absence.

kid-slanted varieties, from 2.1% to 2.3%, as housewife-slanted variety irers slipped from 2.7% to 2.2%.

Both children's programs and sports shows take up proportionately less time on this year's program schedule, former going from 12.5% to 11.0% and sports down from 10.1% to 8.4%. An important reason for the relative losses of kid and sports shows is the expansion of broadcast time in daytime hours, which are directed to wom- Similarly, the decline in proportion of varieties can be attributed to the same trend.

The number of information, public issues, news and similar shows was up somewhat, from 12.5% to 13.5%, a trend for which the first NAEB study is given some credit. It's also significant that while there was but a single program identified with an educational institution last year (DuMont's "Johns Hopkins Science Review"), the recent analysis lists 13 (WATV had six, WPIX three, WABD two and one each on WCBS-TV and WJZ-TV, with none reported on WNBT or WOR-TV).

Informational airers dropped from 4.3% to 3.9%, while public issues discussion increased from 1.4% to 1.9% and public events coverage (including President Truman's address to Congress, the Winston Churchill visit and some United Nations shows) was upped from 0.9% to 1.4%. News stanzas were up from 5.5% to 5.9%, while weathercasts were stationary at 0.4%.

The amount of primary advertising showed a 14% increase in number of plugs, to 3.104 commercials during the week, accounting for 51 hours and 31 minutes on all stations. However, the ads took 7% less total time than a year ago, showing cut in length of commercials. The primary plugs occupied 8% of all time, with the possibility that after final checking the figure will be 9%. Figures on "secondary" plugs, NAEB term for straight commercial shows or when the bankroller's name is displayed on a backdrop or given other indirect display, have not yet been compiled. Interestingly, N. Y. tele, which had a smaller proportion of commercials last year (10% of total time) than Los Angeles (with 18%), trimmed its ratio of plugs still more this year.

While last year's study was conducted in a suite at the Waldorf-Astoria, latest monitoring project was conducted in more ascetic space provided by the Biblical Seminary. A team of 35 monitors, graduated students in psychology and sociology at Columbia U. and NYU. scanned the programs round the clock on seven TV sets, one for each channel, with two others used for double-checking. Monitors, who used stopwatches and Western Union clocks, were given intensive training and went through dry-runs for three days.

go along with it and chime in with an endorsement of the plan. It's for that reason that exec veepee Charles R. Denny, No. 1 in command of the Basic Economic Study, is stumping the country in a bid to win over affiliates that count.

NBC insists the plan will go through. From other sources come "don't be too sure" reports. Meanwhile, the factions that have been putting up a bitter fight to retain the status quo are doing an equally effective lobbying job on their own.

TV Goes Thataway

Philco and Goodyear splitting the Sunday night at 9 NBC-TV "Playhouse" dramatic tab, Johnson's Wax and Lucky Strike doubling up for the Robert Montgomery dramatic series, etc.

TV Habits Differ

Factor, too, in the inevitable turnover of programming is the awareness that TV shows, through the double sight-and-sound impact, don't "wear" as long as in the strictly audio AM medium. While many sponsors on TV have committed themselves through the balance of the present season, practically none can give any definite assurance that he'll be riding the same show when the '52-'53 curtain rises in September, no matter how successful the commercial payoff.

TV habits, so far as the viewer is concerned, differ radically from the days in radio when a Crosby or a Hope were the magnet that drew the listener. Today the video fan tunes in on a pattern, not for specific people—except, of course, in isolated instances. Even the entrepreneurs behind the Colgate-sponsored, comic-rotating Sunday night "Comedy Hour" on NBC-TV make no bones over the fact that nine out of 10 people dialing in, if pinned down an hour before show time, wouldn't know who was the star attraction that night. Similarly in the case of the "Toast of the Town," it's the program's pattern that commands its grip on the audience—not the personalities.

As on Sunday, Saturday night on NBC-TV has developed its own unique pattern which, over and above the personal draw of a Sid Caesar or an Imogene Coca, is a major compelling factor in attracting the viewer. And so through the other nights of the week, as on Monday with its multiple dramatic lineup of "Studio One," Robert Montgomery, "Lux Video Theatre," "Lights Out," etc.

Today a sponsor is finding out that the time spot he can command in TV is influenced by the kind of show he has.

production two series, "Dangerous Assignment" and "Texas Rangers."

While there are a number of factors leading to the switch to film, it's believed that the possibility of taking the cameras out of the confines of a TV studio and into the outdoors was the primary motivation on both "Big Town" and "Man Against Crime." In addition, of course, the package producers of both shows gain the advantage of residual rights, meaning the programs can be repeated from time to time for more profit. Also, a spokesman for Ruthrauff & Ryan, which handles the Lever Bros. account on "Big Town," said the agency believes it may be able to produce the shows cheaper on film than it can on a live basis.

R&R will film the series at the General Service studios on the Coast, where they'll be produced by Krasne, Gross and DeWitt. First has been completed, and the first of 25 more is set to roll within a few weeks. It's expected that the series will be able to make the transition to film about April 3 or 10. Pat McVey, who is star of the live series, will also do the vidpix, but Jane Nigh has been set to replace Julie Stevens in the lead femme role. McVey will virtually commute from N. Y. to L. A. during the next several months to appear in the films. If he remains on the Coast for more than a week at time, he'll be written out of the script during his absence.

Final details have not been set on the "Man Against Crime" series, but it's expected that Ralph Bellamy will continue as star. He'll probably head to the Coast at the end of the present season to begin work on the pix, so that a backlog will be ready for airing by next fall. "Crime" is sponsored by Camel cigarets, through the Esty agency.

tors of these companies were also in attendance.

Grigsby, who is chairman of the RTMA committee cooperating with the broadcasters, said the manufacturers are planning to increase their production, to meet whatever demands are made for FM sets as a result of the campaign. But the manufacturers hope, he asserted, that the drive will be so successful that they will be unable to meet the demand.

Meanwhile, various promotion aids have been prepared by RTMA for dealers for in-store use and newspaper and radio advertising. Transcribed spots are being made available to radio stations, which will offer special programs during the test campaigns.

Through arrangements made by Ben Strouse, general manager of WWDC and chairman of NARTB's FM Committee, the Washington Advertising Club will devote its first March Tuesday luncheon to FM, with Fellows and Glen McDaniel, prexy of RTMA, as speakers. The American Public Relations Assn. will also give over its March 10 meeting to FM.

Editor, VARIETY:

In VARIETY (Jan. 16, 1952) on page two, you published an article by Jim Carhartt and Nicky Winter entitled "Yanks' Perspective on Free (?) French Radio; Strictly Rue de la Payola.". In this rather amusing story, the authors repeatedly refer to commercials.

May I remind you that The French Broadcasting System (Radiodiffusion Francaise) is a Government-operated, non-commercial organization, over whose transmitters never a commercial is so much as whispered? It is, therefore, obvious that your correspondents were tuned-in to a French-speaking station located outside the territorial limits of the French Republic, which is in no way connected with what is usually referred to loosely as "French Radio."

inghouse video coverage of the conventions and election via CBS wouldn't be nearly as restricted as was first anticipated. On the basis of returns thus far, Westinghouse will have a minimum of 34 stations, including all the Columbia basics, with the number of outlets hitting 39 in the event—as anticipated—the interconnected link is extended to embrace more cities.

CBS says Westinghouse will penetrate 14 single station markets, with such cities as Pittsburgh, St. Louis, Kansas City, Milwaukee, Oklahoma City and Huntington, W. Va., still in the doubtful columns. On the "sure" list, says CBS, are Indianapolis; Greensboro, N. C.; Binghamton, N. Y.; Bloomington, Ind.; Erie; Ames, Ia.; Kalamazoo, Charlotte, Lansing, Toledo, San Diego, Jacksonville, Miami and Toledo.

CAN YOU HELP US FIND THIS GIRL?

Our lovely Prior Beer poster girl is "missing". For the past two months we've been making an intensive search for her—with no success.

Jocks, Jukes and Disks

By MIKE GROSS

Connee Boswell: "Believe It Beloved"-"Begin The Beguine" (Decca). Coupling of oldies comes through as an exciting wax parlay via Connee Boswell's spirited workover. Platter has enough impact to make Miss Boswell's wax comeback an important factor in the 1952 disk sweeps. The energetic, bouncy delivery of "Beloved" earmarks it as a jock-juke natural while her rendition of "Beguine" gives new life to the Cole Porter classic. Sy Oliver orch supports solidly.

Tony Martin: "At Last! At Last!"-"Make With The Magic" (Victor). Tony Martin's pash workover of "At Last! At Last!" a lush ballad entry, makes it an important contender for top juke plays. It's a big tune which should score in the current market. Lyrics and melody are in the commercial groove. The Victor flip is a pretentious item with doubtful potential.

Ray Anthony Orch: "Bermuda"-"Broken Hearted" (Capitol). "Bermuda" gets an impressive casing in the stylized staccato setting supplied by Ray Anthony's orch and the vocals of Tommy Mercer and Marcie Miller. The Anthony crew gives the tune a rich, colorful treatment which should pay off. It's got an ear-arresting beat and should give the RCA Victor etching by the Bell Sisters a run for top honors. Reverse is an okay ballad which Mercer enhances by his tender delivery.

Bobby Maxwell: "Chinatown, My Chinatown"-"Shuffle Off To Buffalo" (Mercury). Mercury's latest entry in the platter battle for new sounds preeminence is Bobby Maxwell's multiple etched harp renditions of two oldies. Maxwell's harping, superimposed 15 times, makes for the kind of new sound which appeals to the current market of platter buyers. Both "Chinatown" and "Buffalo" are good jock and juke fodder but Maxwell's excellent harp techniques are overshadowed by the intricacies of modern-day waxography.

Frances Wayne-Neal Hefti Orch: "Regular Man"-"You're The Only One I Love" (Coral). Frances Wayne has some sock material to work with in "Regular Man" and she gives it a firstrate interpretation. With a proper jock jolt, this side has a breakaway potential. Tune's pulsating beat and snappy lyric are aptly suited to Miss Wayne's styling. She delivers with zest getting able support from Neal Hefti's orch backing. Coral flipover is a weak ballad item which fails to come alive despite an enthusiastic rendition.

Barbara Ruick: "Retreat"-"You Couldn't Be Cuter" (M-G-M). Barbara Ruick, recent thrush addition to the M-G-M fold, is handicapped

'EXCLUSIVE' DEMANDS IRK PUBS

Looks Like Ballads Coming Back Into Own in Shift From Cornball

Coming up off the floor after suffering a kayo at the hands of folk and novelty tunes in 1951, the straight ballad entries have climbed back into the top spot during the opening few weeks of this year. Major New York publishing execs are fervently hoping that it's the beginning of a long pull towards solid songs which once were the bread-and-butter basis of the industry.

Among the new entries which have been showing strength, the great majority are in the straight-formatted sentimental category. Top current activity is centered around such ballads as "Tulips and Heather," "Please, Mister Sun," "I'll See You In My Dreams," "Until," "Never," "Garden In The Rain," "Come What May," "At Last, At Last," "Weaver of Dreams," "Be My Life's Companion," and "Unforgettable," among others. The novelty trend is hanging with the tune, "Snowflakes," which is showing remarkable strength a month after Christmas when such items usually die.

Although it's as tough to predict the variable trends in the pop tune market as it is in the stock market, trade pundits declare that new ballad cycle represents sharp reaction from the surfeit of cornball entries in the last couple of years. Whether this reaction can be nursed into a long-lasting trend is seen depending on the number of solid ballads offered in the next period.

If the current trend persists, it's expected that the publishing business will get back on a solid footing with New York, rather than Nashville, being reestablished as the center of the music biz. A string of big ballad clicks means more copy sales, more sensible plugging schedules and a greater endurance of catalog numbers.

By contrast, most of the recent novelty hits have been big on mechanicals but have proved to be weak sheet music sellers. For the publishers, the gravy is still in copy sales and most of them would prefer to handle a second-ranking ballad rather than a top novelty click.

Waring Prepping Longhair Unit

Fred Waring is to produce a longhair setup, comprising 30 people, for National Concert & Artists Corp. next season, to be known as "Festival of Song." Group will consist of 10 musicians and 20 singers, some of latter also being able to dance. It will be conducted by Lara Hoggard, head of Waring's present choral group. Unit will be sent out on a 15 to 18 week tour by NCAC, on its regular series and special Civic Concerts circuit.

Group's program, according to the concert bureau, will run "from Palestrina to Broadway," and comprise instrumental and choral works, including original operettas specially written for the outfit. NCAC also says the idea for the production was Waring's, who brought it to the bureau. Bookings are already being made for the 1952-53 concert season.

Howard Exits MCA

Chicago, Jan. 22.

Eddy Howard, whose "Sin" Mercury recording is riding the top disk polls, has dropped his Music Corp. of America contract. Howard now is doing a single, backed by vocal duo, at the Oriental theatre here.

Former maestro broke up his orchestra last summer with Norman Lee taking over the band, using the old stocks. Howard goes into the New York Paramount early in February and then is set for Flamingo, Las Vegas, date followed by Coconut Grove, Los Angeles.

Mildred Bailey Series On Col 'Golden-Era' Roster

Extending its "Golden Era" series of jazz classics reissues, Columbi Records is preparing a major wax study of Mildred Bailey, blues songstress who died recently. Like the preceding Louis Armstrong and Bessie Smith sets, the Bailey sides will probably be packaged on several 12-inch long-play platters.

Already prepared and ready for early Columbia release in the "Golden Era" series are the Duke Ellington and Bix Biederbecke albums. The Bailey set will follow after the latter two. George Avakian, Col's jazzicologist and international division chief, is laying out the albums from Columbia's old master files.

D. of J. Music Pub Probe Now Shifting To Pix Studio Ties

Washington, Jan. 22.

The Department of Justice investigation of the music publishing business, which has been proceeding quietly on a number of fronts for the past year, is now veering into an examination of the tieups between the major Hollywood film companies and their publishing subsids. It's known that Government Investigators have been questioning execs of one pic company publishing subsid recently in an effort to get data on the effect of the Hollywood studio hookup on publishing activities.

Trade execs feel it's too early to say whether the present probe will flower into an anti-trust suit against the pic companies similar to the one which led to the divorcement of production and exhibition activities. It's pointed out that several previous such investigations have been held with no change in the status quo. In any case, it'll be a long time before any Government move is made in any direction since the mills of the Department of Justice, in such cases, usually grind slowly.

Initially, the Justice Department indicated that its interest in the music biz, from viewpoint of uncovering any monopolistic practices, was focussed on alleged price-fixing and discriminatory sales practices. The Government's interest was aroused because of a major company refusing to sell a jobber who violated a fair trade code by cutting prices. This situation has since been straightened out.

DISK COS. WANT OUT FROM 'COLD HEART' SUIT

Several recording companies, which were named defendants in a copyright infringement suit involving the tune, "Cold, Cold Heart," filed answers in N. Y. Federal Court last week asking dismissal of the complaint insofar as they are concerned. Disk firms maintain that they paid royalties to Acuff-Rose Publications to wax the number and know nothing of the song's origin.

C. Van Ness Clark and the Dixie Music Publishing Co. charge that "Heart" infringes upon Dixie's "You'll Still Be In My Heart." Named defendants are Hank Williams, author of "Heart;" Acuff-Rose, "Heart's" publisher; Mildred Acuff, Fred Rose, Nat Tannen, Tannen Music, Keys Music, Music Dealers Service, Lang-Worth Feature Programs, Loew's, Inc. (M-G-M Records), Columbia, Decca, RCA, Mercury and Capitol.

ODDS TOO HEAVY VS. SOLO VERSIONS

Along with the recent launching of a flock of new tunes in the 1952 wax sweepstakes, publishing firm execs are once again squawking loudly against the insistent demand by some of the top disk companies for "exclusives." Novel ingredient in the current situation is that at least one of the major platter companies, notably RCA Victor, is joining the camp of the publishers against exclusive deals on songs.

Under such deals, publishers have been guaranteeing a competitive advantage to one label by giving it a tune while withholding it from the other platter companies until after the release date. Other disk companies may then cover the tune with other versions since, under the Copyright Act, the publishers must license at the statutory rate any tune that has already been recorded. In the current market, however, an advantage of a few days in disk jockey exploitation gives one label an important headstart over its rivals.

Although such deals have occasionally paid off in big hits, publishers intensely dislike "exclusives" because, more often than not, it has meant sudden death for their songs. If the exclusive rendition fails to break through, other platter companies won't touch it with a 10-foot pole and the song doesn't get another chance. Publishers particularly burn at a high fahrenheit when the "exclusive" lays a bomb because of a poor interpretation which buries a good number.

Publishers are currently show-

Judy's Longterm RCA Victor Pact

Latching on to Judy Garland's click vaude stand at the Palace Theatre, N. Y., RCA Victor has pacted the songstress to a longterm pact. It's understood that the deal will run for five years with no mi imum coin guarantee involved.

Miss Garland previously cut sides for Decca and M-G-M Records, the latter company having issued the soundtrack albums from her Metro musicals. In recent years, however, Miss Garland has been inactive on wax although both Decca and M-G-M recently issued albums of her past etchings to tie in with the songstress' Palace performance.

Johnnie Ray Gets Hot On Chicago Airlanes; Tapes 273 Programs

Chicago, Jan. 22.

Singer Johnny Ray is matching his fast rise to the top of the record lists with a whirlwind local selling campaign bankrolled by Tello-Tronics, Chi TV set retailer. Ray over the last weekend finished taping 273 quarter-hour radio shows which the retailer is spotting on three Windy City stations during the next 13 weeks.

The drive kicked off Monday (21) night with a special half-hour video display on WGN-TV built around the singer backed by the Four Lads and Ralph Marterie's band. Also on hand was warbler Delores Hawkins.

The radio bundle, emceed by d.j. Howard Miller, rides on WCFL, WIND and WJJD. Zenith Radio Corp. is co-oping the tab with Tello-Tronics.

Reelected for 17th Term

Hartford, Jan. 22.

Rocco D. Logozzo has been reelected prexy of the nearby Meriden Local of the American Federation of Musicians.

It's his 17th consecutive term.

AFM to Crack Down on Radio-TV Transcriptions as Aid to Jobless

Concerned over persistent unemployment situation among musicians, the American Federation of Musicians is planning to crack down on radio and video transcriptions which use the services of AFM members. Immediate objective are the commercial spot announcements which are repeatedly aired on both AM and TV.

It's known that AFM execs are currently considering ways and means of blocking the production of transcribed plugs. Reasoning behind the contemplated move is that the AFM is losing a vast number of man labor hours via the practice of paying musician for spot plug once and then using it several hundred times around th country.

In at least one case to date, the AFM has stepped into the spot production field with a ukase against musicians working thi territory. The ban was quietly imposed and then lifted recently because the AFM execs want to work out an airtight case for such a ban under their contractual setup with the broadcasters. While the individual locals have jurisdiction over the indie radio picture, the AFM has taken all questions pertaining to TV rates and conditions of work.

The projected AFM move, of which rumblings have been heard in the New York area, is expected to lead to a bitter fight with th broadcasters and the spot plug producers. Without the right to use these spots repeatedly without additional payments either to m sicians, actors, writers, etc., th cost of such plugs would be prohibitively high and would be a considerable damper n the sale of time on both AM and TV.

Connee Boswell Back To Disking Via Decca

After a long layoff on wax, Connee Boswell has been inked by Decca Records. She has agreed to do several sides and will not work under a regular longterm pact.

Her initial releases are "Begin the Beguine" and "Believe It, Beloved."

Philips Co. Seen In Int'l Spread; Col Tie for U.S.

London, Jan. 22.

The Philips Co. of Holland, one of the world's largest electronic outfits which recently inked a deal with Columbia Records in the U. S. for exchange and distribution of masters for England and the Continent, is soon expected to make a bid for the international disk market.

It's understood that the Philips outfit is planning to start operations in the western hemisphere shortly via Canada, where a new Philips label will be launched. A strong possibility exists that Philips will try an invasion of the U. S. market as well once it lines up a sufficiently imposing artists' roster in the pop and longhair fields. Columbia Records may be the channel for the Philips outfit's U. S. entry.

The Philips deal with Columbia, meantime, has caused Col's former English ally, EMI (Electrical & Musical Industries) to look for other hookups in the U. S. Most likely candidate for an EMI deal is Mercury Records, which up to now has been getting only haphazard distribution in the British market. With an imposing lineup comprising Patti Page, Vic Damone, Eddy Howard and a big catalog of old Frankie Laine masters made before the latter's shift to Columbia, Mercury is seen being in a good position to assume a major role in the British disk setup.

'GUYS & DOLLS' STARTS LATE ON WAX IN MPLS.

Minneapolis, Jan. 22.

A puzzle to the disk trade here is the length of time which it has taken for the "Guys and Dolls" album to catch on locally. But it finally has. The album just hit the local album bestseller list two weeks ago. This, too, despite the fact that the national "Guys and Dolls" company played 10 days here to recordbreaking turnaway business more than two months ago.

In contrast, the "South Pacific" album was on the Minneapolis best seller list shortly after it was brought out and long before the show's national company played Minneapolis last season. It was on the list for more than two years without a miss and still appears intermittently. Aside from "Kiss Me Kate," other original Broadway cast show albums haven't sold in sufficient quantities to qualify as best sellers. A number of Hollywood casts of film musicals' albums, however, have landed in the charmed circle.

Hines Setting Own Combo

Earl (Fatha) Hines, jazz pianist recently with the Louis Armstrong orch, is organizing a six-man combo. Group is skedded to debut at the Rendezvous, Philly, Jan. 31.

Already set for the group are Jonah Jones, trumpet; Benny Green, trombone; and Sol Yaged, clarinet.

Decca Heads For Record Jan. Biz

After a slack year during 1951, Decca Records is currently regaining its previous form in the pop market. Riding with a string of pop and country hits, the platter company is heading for a record January billing.

Like the rest of the platter companies, Decca has been spurred by a new vocal combo, the Four Aces, who are leading the company's roster with their slice of "Tell Me Why," their first for Decca. Side has gone over 500,000 since its release about six weeks ago, and is still going strong. The Four Aces incidentally, have been booked as topliners at the N. Y. Paramount Feb. 13 for a two-week stand.

Most of the current hits for Decca have been delivered by vet performers. Louis Armstrong's "A Kiss to Build a Dream On" has hit the 400,000 marker, followed by such sides as the Gordon Jenkins-Armstrong version of "Sleepy Time Down South," Guy Lombardo's "Crazy Heart" and "Whispering Shadows," Leroy Anderson's "Blue Tango," Bill Snyder's 'Flying Fingers," The Weavers "Old Paint" and "Wimoweh" and Mills Br "Be My Life's Companion."

In the country field, the Red Foley-Ernest Tubb slice of "Too Old to Cut the Mustard" has stepped out along with Decca's new folk singer, Webb Pierce, on "Wonderi ' '"

Burl Ives to Mercury

Chicago, Jan. 22.

Mercury Records last week signed Burl Ives, folk singer. Artist had been with Columbia Records but has not been active in the past few months.

For the kiddy division, he's cutting "Peter and the Wolf" and "Billygoat's Gruff" next week New York with Joe Carlton supervising the session.

Chicago Deejay Plugs To Get Sheet Credits

Chicago, Jan. 22.

Long time plaint of Chicago music contact men that home offices didn't pay enough attention to plugs on Windy City disk jockey shows, the major part of radio programing, is now taking a turn. Peatman sheet, which most offices depend on ratings, is now being serviced by the Radio Check-l ; Service for the first time with check on d.j. and transcribed irings.

Service, which has been in operation since 1930, however, will limit its logging to major outlet stations from 8 a.m. to 1 a.m. daily. Pluggers here point out, that WIND, 24 hour station, and and other local outlets are the heaviest users of platters, and they too should be listed as they are in other cities.

Tooters Lift Ban On Two Top L'ville Spots

Louisville, Jan. 22.

Brown and Kentucky Hotels, town's largest, which have been without union orchs and floor shows since May, 1951, will have American Federation of Musicians bands starting this week. Both spots have been removed from the unfair list by Musicians Local 11.

Hotels have been on the musician's unfair list since two other AFL unions went on strike and had pickets posted. The strike is still on, but picketing has been banned by court order.

Local 11 board decided that musicians had been out of the hotels long enough, according to Adam W. Steubling, secretary-treasurer. He estimated the AFM had lost $50,000 in wages through refusal to play at the two hotels. Brown's Bluegrass Room opens Monday (21) with Bob James orch, featuring vocalist Dick Hyde, and floor show.

Society of Interpretative Artists and Songs, chartered to conduct a music publishing business in New York. Capital stock is 20 shares, no par value.

BMI record report

EVERYONE RAVES ★ PLEASE, MR. SUN (Weiss & Barry)—Perry Como (Vic.), Johnnie Ray (Col.), Bill Kenny (Dec.) and Tommy Edwards (MGM) share the wealth of honors this new ballad has collected. "Como's best job in months," says Variety. Cash Box names the Como disc "Sleeper of the Week." Every version rates a Billboard "PICK" and Ray gets "Disk of the Week" from Cash Box. Variety believes the Edwards version "should catch on despite the Ray phenomenon." Not in months has a tune acquired such raves.

SURE FIRE ★ RETREAT (Cries My Heart) (Porgie) —Patti Page (Mer.) turns in another of her striking performances. Billboard predicts it will click and gives it "PICK" honors. Cash Box highlights it "Sleeper of the Week" and "a sure fire moneymaker."

TERRIFIC ★ OLD PAINT (Folkways)
★ WIMOWEH (Folkways)—Terrific is the word for The Weavers' (Dec.) newest release. Hailed by Billboard as "PICK" of the week. Gordon Jenkins' backing makes the disc a winning combination. Cash Box predicts both songs "may easily break."

WINS "AWARD" ★ GOOD LOVIN' (Savoy)
★ SLOWLY GOIN' CRAZY (Savoy) — Tops in Jazz 'n Blues are both decks of this "H" Bomb Ferguson (Savoy) disc which earns the "Award O' The Week" from Cash Box. "Forceful, exciting, effective, dynamic," are terms used to describe the platter. Billboard says "GOOD LOVIN' is one to watch."

WESTERN "PICK" ★ HEARTSICK SOLDIER ON HEARTBREAK RIDGE (Comet)—Wesley Tuttle (Cap.) has a Country and Western hit on his hands. Deejays name it a Billboard "Pick" for three consecutive weeks. Ernest Tubb (Dec.) also "picked." Releases by Gene Autry (Col.) and Ken Marvin (Mer.) will further hypo the ditty.

Jocks, Jukes

in her initialer by having to buck the Patti Page etching of "Retreat" on the Mercury label. She does, however, impress as a gal who could score on future assignments. Voice isn't too different from the flock of femmes waxing today but she possesses an appealing warmth and establishes a rapport with the listener that will add up to solid spins on the jock and juke level. She belts out "Retreat" in the standard grassroots groove and is completely winning on the reverse, a Jerome Kern oldie "You Couldn't Be Cuter."

Vera Lynn: "Tulips and Heather"-"Once I Loved You" (London). "Tulips and Heather" is a melodic ballad entry which gets a top drawer showcasing via Vera Lynn's rich rendition. Thrush projects tune's sentimental flavor with stylized wax savvy making it a promising item for jock and juke spins. The London flipover is a bit too slow and heavy to get off the ground.

Bobby Wayne: "Wheel of Fortune"-"Heart of a Clown" (Mercury). Bobby Wayne has a good chance of repeating his London label click of "Mother, At Your Feet Is Kneeling" with this Mercury coupling. Both tunes are in the plaintive groove with interesting melodic lines. Wayne's delivery is impressive. "Fortune" and "Clown" will vie for top honors on the jock and juke level.

Jane Turzy: "Allegheny Fiddler"-"Mountain Laurel" (Decca). The bounce and gaiety of "Allegheny Fiddler" comes through in top style on this Jane Turzy etching. Miss Turzy projects the happy mood of the jaunty lyric in the proper alfalfa styling. Should give Mindy Carson's RCA Victor platter a run for the money. "Mountain Laurel" is in the same corn genre but in a slow, sentimental tempo. Thrush injects enough charm here to give it a good juke ride.

Bill Hayes: "Tulips and Heather"-"We Won't Live in a Castle" (M-G-M). Although Bill Hayes gets a moderate spirited beat into the romantic "Tulips and Heather," he'll find it tough bucking the more sentimental workover given the tune by Perry Como on RCA Victor. M-G-M reverse gives Hayes a change of pace in a big dramatic ballad but even his effort doesn't bring the so-so material to life.

Gordon MacRae: "Baby Doll"-"Green Acres and Purple Mountains" (Capitol). Gordon MacRae's charming workover of "Baby Doll," from the forthcoming Metro filmusical "Belle of New York," is one of his best sides in some time. It's a good ballad entry and MacRae's etching makes it a solid commercial bet. "Green Acres and Purple Mountains" subordinates the melody for the lyric, an effective poem, giving it slim chances in current platter market.

Billy May Orch: "Unforgettable"-"Silver and Gold" (Capitol). Billy May orch continues to impress as one of the top waxing bands on tap. This coupling is a solid commercial bet with click potential on the jock and juke level. Workover of "Unforgettable" displays excellent blending of arrangement and rendition. Good for dancing and listening. Reverse is a spirited item in which the vocals of Liz Tilton and the ensemble enhance side's chances.

Platter Pointers

Ford Music Charges Discrimination, Files Antitrust Suit Against BMI

Broadcast Music, Inc., was put on the receiving end of another antitrust action last week when Ford Music, a publishing firm operated by Sam Wigler brought suit against BMI in N. Y. Federal District Court. Among charges of "monopoly" and 'restraint of trade," Ford Music contended in its brief that BMI discriminated in its payments to its various publishing affiliates to the detriment of the Ford firm.

The Ford complaint alleged that in 1943 it entered into an agreement with BMI under which the latter agreed to pay Ford at least $15,000 in performance royalties during the ensuing year. Ford charges that BMI paid it only $7,500 and has since refused to pay it the balance.

Ford further charges that it entered into another agreement in 1945 at a 2c. per performance rate, "which payment was and is inadequate, unfair and discriminatory"—against the plaintiff. The complaint said Ford was compelled to enter the 1945 agreement because it was necessary for the publishing firm to maintain contractual relations in order to get performances and remain in business. Ford contends that the 2c. rate is less than BMI is paying other publishers for a similar number of performances.

The complaint said $50,000 damages was caused to the Ford firm and asked treble damages and an injunction against the alleged "conspiracy in restraint of trade."

Symphs Find Operas In Concert Form Paying Off

The N. Y. Philharmonic is continuing to sked concert versions of grand operas, as result of hypo at the boxoffice. Conductor Dimitri Mitropoulos has skedded the 350-year-old Monteverdi "Orfeo" for Feb. 21-22-24, with Charles Kullman, Mack Harrell and Frances Greer as chief soloists. Guest batonist George Szell will do the second half of Strauss' "Salome," with Astrid Varnay, Margaret Harshaw and Set Svanholm, Feb. 28-29 and March 2.

Earlier this season, the Philharmonic presented Busoni's "Arlechino" and Schoenberg's monodrama, "Erwartung." Last season, Mitropoulos' concert version of Berg's "Wozzek" stirred a lot of interest, and other symphs have taken up operas in concert form.

Col. Sets Banner Sale Mark in Jan.

Columbia Records racked up the biggest sales week in the company's history between Jan. 7 and 11 when the company sold over 1,000,000 disks in its pop catalog. Over 600,000 of the platters were accounted for by 11 disclicks currently riding under the Columbia banner.

Maintaining the pace that accounted for four 1,000,000 disk sellers last year, Col is now hitting a solid pace with platters by Johnnie Ray, Arthur Godfrey, Tony Bennett, Jo Stafford, Frankie Laine, Rosemary Clooney and Champ Butler. Ray's "Cry" and "Little White Cloud That Cried" is still leading the company's pop roster.

Columbia execs revealed, meantime, that Col's brigade of newcomers, including Ray, Bennett, Guy Mitchell, Toni Arden, Butler and Miss Clooney, sold nearly 8,000,000 disks during 1951. All of the newcomers, incidentally, are under 26 years of age.

ing increasing reluctance to grant exclusives even to such hot platter companies as Columbi Records, one of the majors which has been accenting such deals on the basis of a long string of hits. The pubs now feel that a simultaneous showcasing of a tune on five or six major labels give it more spins and a better chance for one of the versions to step out of the pack. One of the current tunes, "Please, Mr. Sun," was launched with a solid potential because it was sliced by major artists on all labels with a simultaneous release.

Top disk execs at Victor agree with the publishers' viewpoint and stress that that exclusives are even detrimental to the platter companies in the long run. It's pointed out that a general release not only gives a tune a better chance for one version to hit, but that even the lesser slices share in the gravy of a click tune. Savannah Churchill's RCA cut of "Sin," for example, has topped the 200,000 marker even though the Eddy Howard slice for Mercury and the Four Aces version for the indie label, Victoria, were the standout sides on this number. Victor execs, moreover, believe that a general cultivation of hit songs lays the basis of healthy operation by the individual platter companies.

AGVA Revises Insurance Setup; Inks Short-Term Deal With Broker

National board of the American Guild of Variety Artists, which wound up a four-day meeting last week (16), has set its insurance program in shape. Union cancelled a 12-year agreement it had with insurance broker Matthew Adler and made a new deal with him which will run until Jan. 1, 1954, and beyond that will give him first refusal on any policy it can get for a three-year term.

Union also revamped the method of payment. It arranged with the Insurance Company of North America—the carrier—for a setup whereby 10% of the premiums paid in will go to the union to administer the costs of the program.

The changes were decided upon shortly after James Donovan, Adler's attorney, agreed to cancellation of the 12-year pact with his client. It was shown that an unauthorized letter was sent to the insurance company designating Adler as the exclusive broker. After a conference between union attorneys, Donovan, and Murray White, on the union's insurance committee, the new plan was adopted, and resolution was passed authorizing continuation of the risk setup.

Ends Bitter Hassle

The new agreement ends for the time being one of the most bitter intra-union fights ever waged in AGVA. There had been charges of fraud throughout the proceedings. It had been charged that union's personnel was being corrupted by monies paid to them as an incentive toward getting premiums. Charges of corruption had filtered through to the top. It was shown that Vic Connors, in charge of the insurance program, had received $600 for his help in setting up the policy. Regional secretaries were reported to have obtained sums of money. It known that Jimmy Lyons, eastern regional head, had sent back a $50 check to Adler.

One of the more damaging aspects was shown in a comparison of the original signed policy and the "conformed" copy which AGVA was operating under. The "conformed" policy had a clause stipulating that the union was responsible for collections.

Fortunately, with the settlement, charges are expected to die down. Applicable forward to 1954, the union is expected to shop for a new policy, one that will give increased coverage and perhaps provide for a lower premium. When a new policy satisfactory to the union is found, Adler will be asked to match it. If he can, he'll continue as the broker. Otherwise, the business will go elsewhere.

Westbrook Hurls 'Fraud' at AGVA Insurance, Quits

One result of the American Guild of Variety Artists' squabble over insurance is the resignation of Al Westbrook, assistant to the union's national administrative secretary. Westbrook leaves the union after next week.

Exit came last week when Westbrook hurled charges of "fraud" against those directing the insurance program.

Two major developments forced Westbrook to quit: failure of the union to oust Connors and of the national board to name him second in command to Jack Irving, who succeeded Henry Dunn as AGVA's national administrator. A new assistant administrator will be named at the next national board meeting who must have the approval of Irving. Westbrook felt that he could not do effective work with the union under these circumstances. Westbrook stated that under plan of filling that post, he would have to curry favor with Irving which he refused to do.

There is the possibility that Jackie Bright, a board member, will get the post.

The board several times during the meeting pleaded with Westbrook to stay put, but he would not budge from his position. Before his resignation he had formulated a plan calling for meetings under AGVA auspices of all performers in every entertainment media, in cities where AGVA maintains branches, in an effort to form a united front for a one-card union.

N.Y. Fairs to Mull Blue Laws at Gabs

Albany, Jan. 22.

Sunday "blue laws" are in line for o.o.ing here by managers of the 50 county fairs in New York State. Last season, Sabbath operation by several of the annuals was knocked for a loop when some sources unearthed the vintage statutes. As result, revenue from the important opening or closing Sunday (in some cases both) was affected.

Largely under attack in '51 were such attractions as auto racing, automotive thrill shows and other grandstand fare representing healthy b.o.

The digging up of old laws is considered more spite than morals. When the American Legion upstate was prevented from sponsoring a Sunday engagement of the Ringling Bros., Barnum & Bailey Circus, it threatened to make it tough for other Sunday operation, and made good that threat in several spots.

Subject comes up at the annual Albany powwow of the N. Y. State Assn. of Agricultural Fair Societies, Feb. 4-5, at the Ten Eyck. The U. S. admission tax also will come under surveillance. Nonprofit fairs are exempt under recent legislation, but not all pay gates at fairs come under that exemption.

N.Y.'s Blue Laws Probe

Albany, Jan. 22.

Creation of a joint legislative committee to study N. Y. State's blue laws—which Governor Thomas E. Dewey recommended recently—was voted last night (Mon.). Interim report would be filed Feb. 25 for final disposition in February, 1953. Resolution appropriated $10,000 for the work.

A number of bills liberalizing Sabbath laws have been introduced.

Neil House, Columbus, Asks $3,100,000 Vs. Hotel Union For Vandalism, Terrorism

Columbus, Jan. 22.

Charging vandalism, terrorism and intimidation, Harry Ludwig, owner-manager of the Neil House, last week (17) brought suit for $3,100,000 against the Hotel and Restaurant Employees and Bartenders International Union and its Local 505, which has been carrying on a strike against his hotel since Nov. 13.

Ludwig asked $100,000 for damages to the hotel and $3,000,000 punitive damages. Judge Joseph M. Clifford will hear the case and the hotel's request for a temporary court order against union activity tomorrow (Wed.).

Within a week of the strike, Ludwig claimed his hotel had been restaffed completely. Picketing has still gone on, but the services of the hotel and its entertainment facilities have not been impaired.

In a 17-page suit the hotel charged, among other things, that the union had blocked entrances, prevented delivery of fruit and supplies, terrorized employees and guests, set fires, and damaged, disrupted and destroyed heating, plumbing and other facilities. It accuses the union of putting chunks of concrete in its coal, loosening a valve in a 7,000-gallon water tank, thereby flooding four floors of the building, setting off an explosion, secreting a bomb in a telephone booth, spraying 18 pints of muriatic acid on carpets and walls, spraying kerosene on same, putting stench bombs in the lobby on New Year's eve and setting a fire in waste paper.

Mardy Polander, secretary-treasurer of the local, said, "The suit is definitely a strike-breaking action and designed to harrass the union and cause it to spend funds

N.Y. LQ Bans Its Acts From TV, et al., For Pact Span Plus 4-Wk. Fore & Aft

New York's Latin Quarter boniface Lou Walters threw a small bombshell at talent agencies last week and then took off for Europe. In a letter to major percenteries, Walters stated that in the future all acts booked into the L. Q. "will under no conditions be permitted to appear on television or in private places of entertainment, theatres and cafes in Greater New York for 30 days previous to their opening at our establishment, during their stay here, and for four weeks following the termination of contract."

Walters told the date-diggers that this move was made necessary because there have been comments by customers that many of the acts appearing there have previously been seen on video and elsewhere, with the result that customers have shied away from that spot because of the opinion that by seeing one act, they have seen the show.

Walters said that no exceptions will be made to that rule. "We have no desire to interfere with the money-making possibilities of the artists, but at the same time, we don't wish to bring in acts and give them long contracts only to build up opposition entertainment factors."

Several years ago, Walters announced that he would permit no acts at his cafe to appear on television. However, many exceptions have been made to that rule. This time, Walters apparently means not only to bar acts on video, but will not allow them to double at club dates. Walters wasn't around to explain further.

Walters came in from Miami Beach on Friday (18), wrote the letter and flew to London the following day, primarily for the purpose of holding conferences on "Peep Show" which is at the Palladium, London. Walters is importing that show for presentation in a legit house. Name of the display will have to be changed because Mike Todd produced an identically musical titled at the Winter Garden, N. Y., last season.

AMA in Big Push Of Cisco-Pancho Plus 6-Day Bikes

Arena Managers Assn. will again book rodeo dates and is planning to revive six-day bike races. Organization of arena operators is seeking attractions to supplant some sports events which haven't been pulling.

Group is inking a series of dates for a rodeo headed by Duncan Renaldo and Leo Carillo (Cisco Kid and Pancho). Stock will be supplied by Col. Jim Eskew.

Bike races will have AMA promoting the event. Organization will import teams from foreign countries and will package it for operator members. Individual members have made surveys on reception of six-day bike stands in their areas. Sports writers have been queried and it's felt that there will be a market for the marathon pedallers at this time.

OUT 3 DAYS, JUDY BIG 20½G IN N.Y. PALACE 5

Judy Garland who was out for three days last week because of illness, still did a comparatively strong $20,500 for only five shows at the Palace, N. Y. Miss Garland performed Tuesday, twice Wednesday and twice Sundays only. She had been ill the early part of the week but had been working. Medico ordered her to cancel shows starting Thursday (17). Week previous, the singer hit $39,000.

Another change in the Palace show is to be made early next month when the Cristianis leave for other commitments.

Nudist-Gorilla Act Banned in Mpls.

Minneapolis, Jan. 22.

Just on the advance advertising's strength, before the act opened and without even seeing it, Police Chief Charles Tierney banned Zorine with Ingagi, billed as "queen of nudists and her Hollywood gorilla," the day before its scheduled premiere at the St. Paul Flame nitery.

Tierney said the advance advertising was "misleading" and he had received several telephone calls objecting to it.

Chi Cops Continue to Ride Herd On Bistros; Curley's, Mpls., Raided

Chicago, Jan. 22.

Chicago police continued their crackdown tactics on near northside bistros, arresting the manager and five entertainers, mainly strippers, at McGovern's Liberty Inn. All were accused of soliciting drinks and trial was set for Friday (25).

Spot was without entertainment last week for failure to obtain an amusement license, but finally got a permit. Also hit was the Cocoanut Grove Club where a conventioneer claimed that he was fed doped drinks. North westside spot ran as nitery from 2 to 4 a.m.

Faces Loss of License

Minneapolis, Jan. 22.

Curly's, one of this town's leading niteries, faces the loss of its license after an early morning raid and police charges of serving liquor after hours.

The police morals squad allegedly found 22 persons being served in a rear room at 1:50 a.m. The legal closing hour here is 1 a.m., with a 15-minute "drinkup" period allowed.

Arrest also brought up the matter of the spot's ownership and the city council licensing committee is investigating. License is held in the name of a corporation fronted by the wife of Meyer (Makey) Gordon, reputedly a millionaire, whom the police arrested.

Gordon himself is ineligible to hold a liquor license following conviction on liquor charges in connection with another establishment, assault and battery, selling liquor without a license, disorderly conduct and employing minors in violation of labor laws.

When the morals squad made the arrest, members heard James E. Hegg, whom the city directory lists as manager, asking Gordon if he should admit the police. Gordon failed to appear in court when his trial was called and the judge ordered his bail forfeited and police to bring him in.

Police told reporters they made the raid after having received numerous complaints.

Spot has a non-name floorshow policy, but has played such acts as Ethel Waters, George Givot, etc., and two winters ago had a lavish femme impersonators' revue, which pulled capacity b.o. and continued for seven months until the police ordered its discontinuance.

20,000 Canners Hypo A.C. Spots

Atlantic City, Jan. 22.

The first big convention of the '52 season, the 45th session of National Canners Assn. and allied groups, is underway here this week, with the 20,000-odd delegates giving resort business a huge hypo.

Major niteries are splashing with newspaper advertising to lure their share of the delegates' cash. The 500 club is offering Ann Lamont and five acts; Paddock, Vic Earlson and six acts; Club 15, a newcomer, Nevarre Twins and 15 acts; the Hialeah, Bob O'Neill plus a six-act floorshow.

Even the hotel grills are back on summertime skeds. The Mayflower has an all-femme revue; the Traymore, ditto with acts; the President, a floorshow.

The canners had their own entertainment brought in Sunday night (20) when the Canning Machinery & Supplies Assn. gave an elaborate Victor Herbert show to SRO in the 4,200-seat Warner Theatre on the Boardwalk. A surprise starter was Fritzi Scheff, oldtime star of many a Herbert musical, who reprised the numbers which brought her fame decades ago.

Mont'l Innocents Suffer With Guilty on Tab Rap

Montreal, Jan. 22.

Montreal cafe operators in general, already suffering from heavy losses over early curfew and holiday closings, are irked about stories in a local tab charging that a few of the smaller stubes are defying the law.

Stories implied all clubs are breaking the law. Although this is not true, it is needling city officials into another "investigation" to cramp legit owners in their operations.

Saranac Lake

Saranac Lake, N. Y., Jan. 22.

Sophie Tucker saluted the Variety Clubs-Will Rogers Hospital over the ABC network from the Shamrock Hotel, Houston, last Saturday (12). A real standout was the direct greeting from Mrs. William "Mother" Morris and Eddie Vogt sent out from Camp Intermission here in Saranac Lake. (Reviewed in last week's VARIETY—vaude section.) On the local end, credit to WNBZ, and its prexy, Jacques Demattos, for production-direction.

William Joyner, owner-manager of Dixie and Gilmont Theatres, Mt. Gilead, N. C., registered for observation period.

Dr. George E. Wilson, medical director of the VC-WR Hospital, off for a two-week vacation.

Harry Nason, former patient here and now editor of the local Daily Adirondack Enterprise, handed the gang of up-patients an openhouse buffet party. It was fully enjoyed by Walter (CBS) Romanik, Otto Hayman, Genie (Legit) Reed, Ruth Burke, Henrietta Allan, Jeanne & Jeff Clark, Shirley Handler, Paul Hein, Rufus Weathers and George (Elephants) Powers.

E. G. Dodds, former manager of the Palace Theatre, Lake Placid, may resign as mayor of Lake Placid to enter business in Virginia. For the past 20 years he held open house at his showshop for all ailing performers.

RKO's Sol Schwartz Faces West to O.O. Judy Followup, Other Fare for Chain

Lining up talent for the Palace, N. Y., will be one of the major tasks confronting RKO Theatres prexy Sol A. Schwartz when he arrives on the Coast shortly. Theatre topper has gabs skedded with talent agencies and studio heads, and it's anticipated he'll return to New York with some names for the RKO showcase. Schwartz is also down for visits in Chicago and San Francisco to inspect theatre properties.

In addition to finding followups for Judy Garland at the Palace, Schwartz and his colleagues are actively on the prowl for occasional stage attractions for key RKO houses. Circuit is seeking stage fare that can stand on its own without too much backing from a feature pic. It already has lined up the touring "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes" for the RKO Palace, Columbus, and the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo for the chain's houses in Trenton, Providence, Syracuse, and Rochester. In addition, RKO Keith's, White Plains, N. Y., has been devoting one night weekly to concert attractions under auspices other than RKO, with the house getting a guarantee plus a percentage.

RKO's policy apparently is i keeping with the feeling of exhibs that there's nothing sacred about a straight picture presentation. Warner Theatre, N. Y. (ex-Strand), which dropped stage shows as adjuncts to feature pix, will abandon films for two weeks for the Sadler's Wells Theatre Ballet next month.

Chi Oriental Drops Acts In March for 2-Wk. 'Quo'

Chicago, Jan. 22.

The Oriental Theatre here will drop vaude for two weeks starting March 27. House has lined up Metro's "Quo Vadis" for that period. Running time of the pic precludes possibility of stageshows.

House had been considering dropping vaude for some time, but film deals that had been anticipated failed to jell and theatre was forced to stay with stagers.

TV Hex Ups Sex In Mpls. Bistros

Minneapolis, Jan. 22.

Television is becoming a big bad wolf to niteries here catering to the smaller groups. It is driving many of the establishments to radical types of entertainment and creating a large local market for "exotic" dancers and strippers who find their salaries booming.

Authority for this is Abe Perkins, owner of the Gay '90s, large Minneapolis bistro, who is trying to organize Twin Cities bonifaces into a group to study the situation with a view to its remedy.

As far as his own spot is concerned, Perkins says, he has about exhausted himself trying to figure out a solution to the problem of acts.

"By showing the finest acts obtainable, TV has spoiled our class of patrons and made them dissatisfied with what we're able to give them—young performers coming up who lack the top-drawer stars' talents, available on home screens free," says Perkins.

"Such stellar acts aren't available to clubs like ours, and if they were, we couldn't afford them because our patrons wouldn't stand for cover charges and higher beverage and food prices which would be essential to meet the show payroll. With its audiences of millions, television, of course, can pay performers fancy amounts for single appearances. This fact also is keeping them in New York and Hollywood and discouraging them from touring.

"Many popular priced clubs now are finding that their only lures are exotic dancers or stripteasers who can't be seen on TV. In my case, because of a large family trade which I don't dare jeopardize, I'm unable to present that type of offering."

Barstow's Circus Choreo

Dick Barstow has been signed to do the choreography of the Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Circus.

Barstow is set to leave shortly for Sarasota, Fla., to begin rehearsals.

The Skyliner Club, Fort Worth, will cease its floorshows Feb. 8 and feature only dance music. Curley Broyles band booked for Friday through Sunday nights.

Eve of Miami's 'Great Influx' Cues Muscle-Flexing Via Meaty Menus

By LARY SOLLOWAY

Miami, Jan. 20.

Alignment of policy and offerings to the heavy patronage due to hit this area in future weeks can be gauged from current presentations by the top spots in the glitter belt along the beachfront and mainland. Once again, the one-name draws and the novelty ideas will be competing with the big-name budgets offered. As per current week, it's a tossup as to the winners, with the opening of Hialeah track marking the expected influx of sun-seekers to prove which club has the idea that will bring in the dough.

Set up for current b.o. are Kay Thompson & Williams Bros., Arthur Blake and holdover Billy Daniels, at Copa City; Clover Club will have Lena Horne the 23d; Latin Quarter, the much publicized Egyptian bellyist Samia Gamal added to a lush production and new faces pattern; Five O'Clock Club, Martha Raye heading up shows in her own cafe with comics such as Myron Cohen being bid for; hotel cafes such as Saxony and Sans Souci and Casablanca offering fancy dough to marquee attractions as are Ciro's and Little Palm among others. This is the present stance despite fact that most of January — post-New Year's — was again an offish period although hotel parties and convention groups are supplying the save-the-night returns.

Currently, the run around town indicates the following pattern:

Copa City

Probably the best lineup of the season at Copa City is its current setup. The co-headliners, Kay Thompson & the Williams Bros. and Billy Daniels, get sock support from the Redcaps, with Damita Jo, and Arthur Blake, as well as the June Taylor-Benny Davis production featuring Walter Long.

The Thompson-Williams quintet makes for a solid topper to a rapidly building revue. Back after a two season hiatus, the slim, blonde Miss Thompson belts them with the material the group scored with here before, with added business to make for fresh twists. Rejoining with the Williams freres was, commercially and entertainment-wise, a brilliant idea. It brings back the original format which made them a click pre-breakup.

Open with their original "Hello, Hello," to intro act personnel, followed by their "Jubilee" involvement. Add impact with blending of "Suzette" and the men she loved for howls and mitting. Brief French bit leads into "Show Business' to wind with the Noel Coward satirization for additional build. Encore new short bit, "Hello Baby," for sock bowoff.

Daniels, in the holdover spot, smashes over again with his versions of the better pops and standards. The "Kinseyesque" approach is somewhat subdued, lending better effect. Works in a vocal style highly improved over that first heard here last year, to add to aud reaction. With Benny Payne's expert accomps on piano and harmony, he wraps up.

Arthur Blake is an able mimic whose delineations of Carmen Miranda, Charles Laughton, and Jose Ferrer (as Cyrano) are incisive and expert. Devastating are his lampoons of Tallulah Bankhead guiding Jimmy Stewart, Sidney Greenstreet and Ethel Barrymore in a radio show. Topper is his demanded Bette Davis and for the show-stop, his takeoff on an Eleanor Roosevelt address to a Campfire Girls meet.

The Redcaps (5), with Damita Jo, make for a zingy canto on the solo ideas. Their instrumental stuff is tops. Miss Jo, a slim, attractive lass, socks with her bebop and jump tunes. Production numbers are bright and sprightly. Walter Long is a standout with his hoofing and songology.

Clover Club

Jack Goldman has come up with a unit, that might well stay the season, in the Billy Gray, Ben Lessy, Patti Moore tripling. Gray, vet Coast comic-nitery operator, gets them all the way with his gags, stories, bits with femme or male ringsiders, and in routinings with Lessy & Moore.

The Lessy-Moore sequences are handled for maximum aud results. Their teaming in satires on the corn and the hep are risibility-raisers. When they join with Gray on a radio "giveway" takeoff, plus the finale on ballet, a hilarious and intelligent spoofing of the long-hair dance medium, they reach sock heights.

Supporting show works in niftily. The Cheerleaders make for a happy singing adjunct, with tableholder appreciation hearty for their harmony ideas. Visually and vocally, they set well. Production numbers staged by Arden-Fletcher are attractive and brisk, with line a handsome one and Joy Skylar featured in eye-appealing routines.

Golden Slipper

On the off-trail idea, this only Yiddish-American nitery offering around town looks to do okay via patronage available from the considerable segment of resorters here who go for the application.

Though the new operators (this was formerly Kitty Davis', then Old Roumanian) aren't budgeting their shows in as high a bracket as before, they've brought in a pleasant and, for the types attracted, appealing offering, enhanced by an authentic cuisine for additional lure.

Back again is Michel Rosenberg, who seems to have become identified with the room with his latter-day Yiddish turn. The vet in the field garners his usual solid proportion of laughs with his character tales, interped for the unhep in a fractured English that adds howls. Also emcees for added warmth engendered by struggle with the language — with Sascha Leonoff and his accordionistics setting well and Bella Smara's brief dance offering garnering fair returns.

Standout is Hy Sands. Lad is a comedian with a good sense of timing, plus a wealth of material that rates him a steady series of laughs. Some of the stuff is familiar, but most of it is fresh and delivered in a zingy style that marks him an upcomer among the newcomers.

Songs of Bernie Sloane are in the schmaltzy tone, loved by the aud attracted and earn him encore reaction, thanks to mixture of semi-classic, pop and Yiddish lieder.

Ciro's

Rebuilt and enlarged, with a plush Franklin Hughes decor, this swank-spot is now competing with Copa and others for the names. Late opening for season hurt chances for buying the big pulls. However, they've set Joe E. Lewis and a George Hale group for end of January.

Currently, there's a well balanced show on hand that can be rated with the better offerings around town for values. Nancy Donovan, the Irish thrush, is in the top spot and turns in a fine job with her blending of the better compositions, a special, and for topper, "Yiddishe Momma" plus a Donegal lyric. Handsome songstress works in easy style to win them all the way.

Larry Storch and his character comedics wrap up. One of the more incisive performers in the class to work the better rooms hereabouts, he gets them from walkon, with sock items his British sports announcer and the cocktail-hour interp.

Chandra Kaly Dancers (with two males added for a sextet) make for highly solid bracketeers. Tee off matters with a colorfully costumed and exotically styled Indo-Javanese idea that keeps the palms meeting. Groupings are brilliantly divided to feature the trio of femmes and the male continent. Steady build in music and terp keeps attention and applause mounting to make for resounding closer.

Beachcomber

This former frame for names has been a glorified strippery in recent seasons, with former operator Ned Schuyler shifting over to Copa City. Under sub-lease, the big spot cannot book names in the top-draw sense, obvious answer being the femme-form type of show. Where Harold Minsky held forth last year, the Jack Lynch group has come in with a switch in the format. Featured is Lili St, Cyr, working on her own stage at end of room where a balcony with some 90 seats was once available.

The glorifying of a routine that was seen here at the Colonial some seasons ago as well as on the same premises (on the main stage) last year by Dardy Orlando didn't help initial effect on the heavy aud at-

Hotel Plaza, N. Y.
(PERSIAN ROOM)

Jimmy Savo, Rolly Rolls, Dick LaSalle Orch, Mark Monte's Continental Orch; $2 cover after 9:30.

It might seem incongruous for a two-act bill to be made up of two single male comedians, but it doesn't play that way on the current Persian Room bill comprising Rolly Rolls and Jimmy Savo. Both are sock performers; moreover, the sharp contrast in their styles gives the pair individual character in their own niches.

Rolls, selling an urbane, dinner-jacketed type of humor in addition to some sock straight pianistics, is enhanced considerably by his Gallic charm in going over strongly not only for the femmes but the males as well. He has assorted bits of business at the 88s, at which he opens straight, then goes through a series of gags tied in with his pianology. He does a cute turn with a tiny concertina, and then the saga of different types of pianists. He winds up straight in a piano duet, with maestro Dick LaSalle, in which they go through the musicomedy faves.

It's a tough spot for any act to follow, but Savo comes through solidly as the closer. The little pantomimic is probably doing more talk than he ever has in his career, but there's no questioning his smash value to this or any bill. This audience gave him an ovation at his entrance, before he even did a thing. Then followed a performance of panto, whimsy, talk, songs, etc. Attired in evening misfits, he does such items as "Isn't Sex a Wonderful Thing?"; a "Be My Love" paraphrase.

Also, "Married a Stripteaser" (particularly smash); "Mr. Butterfly" (takeoff on "Madame Butterfly"); a satire on "Some Enchanted Evening" called "Some Contagious Evening" as done by "Safety" Pinza; Hindu rope trick; and then his standbys, "River Stay Away" and "One Meat Ball." The latter two are encores that were shouted for from the audience. If there is a weak spot in his routine, it's in the operatic number, which is a little incomprehensible at this point, but of the 45 minutes that Savo did opening night, there was otherwise hardly a slow moment.

Dick LaSalle, with the maestro at the piano, handles the straight customer dancing and the show music, and he does this neatly along with Mark Monte's continentals for the Latin terps. Kahn.

Baker Hotel, Dallas

Dallas, Jan. 16.

Dorothy Shay, with Russ Black; Pierson Thal Orch (8); $3 cover.

Dorothy Shay, only a disk name here since her first album (1947) skyrocketed her to fame, is proving that she isn't a "one-hoss shay" platter pull, but has the drawing power of a 20-mule team. In for a short week, thrush sold out the room in advance for her six nights, at triple the usual cover.

Smartly gowned chanteuse, with easy assurance and sly tongue-in-cheek asides, takes the crowd in hand at once with "Sagebrush Sadie" and "Papa." Easing into record reprisals, she offers her own compositions, "Agnes Clung," "Uncle Fud," and "Efficiency," the last-named employing three moppets from the packed room. Then goes into "Mountain Gal," "I'm in Love With a Married Man" and "Feudin' and Fightin'." Comic patter alone would suffice for an act. Introing "Agnes Clung," Miss Shay explains "this is a tune I sang in a picture I made with Abbott & Costello—that's Lou Costello, not Frank." After "It's the Little Things That Count," she hitches up her strapless gown with an aside, "I've got gloves to go with this dress; I just want you to know I've got things I ain't even showing."

Chanting comedienne sews up the mob with a begoff, "Saga of Jennie." Accompanist Russ Black expertly backs Miss Shay at the piano.

Pierson Thal orch. as usual, does a capable terping turn, with the maestro's pianistics highlighted. Bark.

Colony & Astor, London

London, Jan. 15.

Doodles & Spider, Felix King, Santiago Lopez Rhumba Band. Colony; $5 minimum; Astor; $3 minimum before 11 p.m., $3 cover thereafter.

Doodles & Spider are the latest Broadway importation to make their London nitery debut under the auspices of Harry Morris. Their engagement for a month to double at these two Berkeley Square spots began in auspicious fashion and they opened to a powerful reception.

With the accent constantly on the comedy side, the duo get a clicko reaction from their sock miming routine, achieving unfailing synchronization with the disks played offstage. Mainly duetting, they occasionally do solo numbers too, but each item gets the same customer reception.

A standout comedy hit is scored with their interp of "Baby, It's Cold Outside," but for tehcnical perfection, top rating goes to a specialty number designed to give the impression of a broken record. This involves the use of four disks, flipping from one to the other. And for particular British appeal, one of the disks was Danny Kaye singing "Lovely Bunch of Coconuts."

At the Colony, where show was seen on opening night, near-capacity biz was being recorded. A minor criticism concerns the sound, overpowering during part of the act but adjusted by the artists before end of the show.

The two resident house bands, maestroed by Felix King and Santiago Lopez, do their standard first-rate job providing the dance tunes. Myro.

Hotel New Yorker, N. Y.
(TERRACE ROOM)

Current layout in this large hotel room is a well-paced production grooved in a standard ice format. It's tough to come up with anything startlingly novel on this small-sized rink, but this room manages to get maximum eye appeal for the tourist trade out of these miniature blade spectacles.

The Rookies (Neil Rose and Meryl Baxter), a repeat turn here, topline with their broad comedy antics. It's a well-executed comedy routine, heavy on the slapstick and having considerable appeal for the large number of kids who are taken by their parents to the early show. Their cider jug number is okay, but they get maximum response out of their soldiering stint.

Nadine & Ray Schramm impress as a couple of goodlooking youngsters with a graceful terp style on ice. Boy and girl work together in one hoofing sequence and are also showcased in neat solo numbers, both being attractively costumed.

Manuel Del Toro handles the emcee chores in okay style, warbling unevenly but steadier in his fancy skating turns. Four lookers comprise the line for the production numbers, well staged by Dolores Pallet and framed around various alcoholic drinks.

Teddy Powell orch, also making a repeat stand here, cuts the show in fine style and dishes up an easy-to-take brand of dansapation rhythms for the customer hoofers. Herm.

Conrad Hilton, Chi
(BOULEVARD ROOM)

Chicago, Jan. 15.

Arnold Shoda, Romayne & Brent, Andrea Keksey, Three Reporters, Edward Brandsetter, Boulevar-Dears (8), Orrin Tucker Orch (12), with Scottee Marsh; $3.50 minimum, $1 cover.

This new edition of the ice shows in this inn marks the 11th revue. Although in many ways the best of the lot, it's not up to the standard set by some predecessors. All in all, however, it stacks up as above-par fare. The Hessie Smith score is the best she has done for this series. The costumes by Fred Wittop are worthy of Broadway showcasing. Dorthy Littlefield has staged the thin story about Olympic tryouts. It's enough of a thread for family audiences.

Arnold Shoda returns after a six-month hiatus and scores in one solo number with sensational backflips and leaps, ending in terrific spins. However, number is too short and there should be another in latter part of revue. Some of the gilt is also removed by having Shoda sing. In this department he reminds of a highschool freshman.

Romayne & Brent are holdovers who get a big mitt for their ballroom-type work, with lanky male lifting femme for some bright overhead spins and holds.

Three reporters (operating as Scarecrows in the last show) generally flood the rink and themselves as they dump pail after pail of aqua on each other in a laugh-loaded sketch. Edward Brandsetter does a country cousin hey-rube routine, with appropriate getup, bumping all over the ice while attempting to regain his derby. Andrea Keksey receives brisk pounding for solo free-style blading. Line is bright and proficient.

Orrin Tucker does well playing for the show and acting as emcee, with band singer Scottee Marsh sharing the production chores. Zabe.

Ambassador Hotel, L. A.
(COCOANUT GROVE)

Los Angeles, Jan. 18.

Occasionally a solo singer comes into this smart room to keep the leggy usherets on the move. Lena Horne did it; so did Tony Martin. The chances of Patti Page emulating their is brighter than most.

Aside from Harbers & Dale, a dance team, the floor is all Miss Page's. She fits well into this setting and ingratiates herself with the first number. Having springboarded into a dominant personality via her Mercury recording of "Tennessee Waltz," the chirper whetted their anticipation for this number but received what went before with the customary Grove acceptance.

It's not her fault that they didn't pound the paws with more violence on every number. She torched and husked with everything she had and it came off as gilt-edged vocalizing. If they didn't savvy the special material on "Standing Room Only For Me" it was because her voice faded away to what amounted to a soliloquy. Her choice of songs that have been identified with her recordings were wide and varied, with the accent, as it should be, on the hillbilly beat.

Bathed in a baby spot, she makes a glamorous appearance in a gold and black lace off-the-shoulder gown. Her grace and poise are impressively evident and for a finish she makes the rounds of the ringside tables to acknowledge the plaudits. Few singers before her have used this intimate device. It won her many new friends.

Harbers & Dale specialize in overhead whirls and it was a fast opener to warm up customers who've had their hands wrapped around cold highballs. In this room they don't warm up too fast. Eddie Bergman's crew keeps the floor alive with shuffling feet, and the vocals issue from Bob Lido and Patricia Murphy, of the usual bandstand variety. Bergman's backstopping of Miss Page was of high order when caught. Helm.

Orchid Room, London

London, Jan. 16.

Jay Howard, Len Hayes Orch; $2 cover.

Jay Howard brings his wide range of self-made masks to the Orchid Room to provide a cabaret stint of particular novelty appeal. It makes a welcome break from the more conventional booking of chirpers and comics.

The Howard masks are all modelled on the odd and fascinating characters he has seen during his various travels. He doesn't concentrate on the famous, and only two of the many subjects in his repertoire are of film characters.

For the opening part of his act, Howard endeavors to mirror a typical Broadway scene. His gallery spotlights all the more grotesque characters who are to be caught along the main stem. Each type is neatly introduced and each character is linked to the overall story thread.

The only two "live" copies in the show are the "Hunchback of Notre Dame" and the "Frankenstein Monster," both of which are done with almost over-realistic perfection.

The nature of the act may limit its appeal as a nitery attraction, but it should have more substance in vaudeville, where its sombre accent could be more effectively contrasted. Myro.

Ciro's, Hollywood

Hollywood, Jan. 18.

Will Mastin Trio, with Sammy Davis, Jr.; Dassie Bros. (2), Dick Stabile Orch (10), Bobby Ramos Orch (5); $2 cover.

This quick booking stacks up better than many a more costly bill at this site. What is lacking in marquee magnetism for the mob which frequents Sunset Strip haunts will be overcome by the glowing word-of-mouth buildup this bustling 35-minuter will receive.

The Will Mastin Trio is well established all over town having played about everywhere in the post-war years while Sammy Davis, Jr (Mastin is his uncle; the third member of act his dad), polished up his routines and grew up. Since the turn last was trotted out here it has become a national click.

Sammy, Jr., with his satiric impressions and flying hoofs, won a great personal ovation opening night. His uncannily accurate carbons of a string of toppers were joshed, but the takeoff on Sinatra was etched in acid. Around his core of the act, soft-shoeing by his uncle and taps by his dad are tracted via the publicity out of the Ciro's (Coast) engagement and resultant court shindig. Ringsider addicts who had paid for close up found themselves in the bleachers when Miss St. Cyr came on under new arrangement she had insisted on; result was boos instead of plaudits. Her special stage has since been raised for better viewing, and also, where she'd turned in a fashion parade winding into a too-concealed bubble bath, there's more of the flesh and gyrations expected.

Supporting show staged by Lee Sherman is fast and a far cry from burley. Production idea is a blending of one burley-revue scene featuring Irving Harmon, who works in Groucho Marx makeup on the old courtroom scene, with a smart lyric intro that doesn't jell with the broadisms of the actual sketch. Rest of proceedings also suffer from attempt at mixing the smart with the flesh. Most of it manages to come off in the dance sequences, with the Caribbeans walking off with the honors in that segment via some frenetic and brilliantly handled threesome terps in the hip-swing theme. Norma Parker's vocalistics are adequate.

Walkaway on mitt honors is Rudy Cardenas and his juggling. The lithe youngster works with balls and other implements of the trade and keeps the gasps coming. Reception builds into the wrapup.

The Sunnysiders are okay on the group song idea. Gal and her male aides handle their harmonies adeptly. Cardini is added attraction. The vet sleight-of-hander wins them with his card and ciggie disappearing - reappearing tricks. Stuff is as mystifying as ever, to earn him optimum returns.

Five O'Clock Club

Martha Raye returned here last week to turnaway crowds, again proving that this mid-Beach nitery seems to have been built just for her. In an interim appearance here during the holidays (while she was north for TV shot) Lou Holtz didn't draw one-third the audiences she normally does on a Monday or Tuesday night. She's back with her own unit idea and scoring again.

Offers up the standard routines and clowning for the first show, with climaxer her bit with Ben Yost Royal Guards. In second show, works with the Novelites for a resounding session of special material, straight ballads and aud-spelling bebop to keep them happy and wanting more.

The Novelites are solid with their rhythms in instrumental, vocal and comedy. Best of their stuff is a new straight version of Italian songs; another newie, spoof of opera, and takeoff on a mixed-up TV set projecting the Lone Ranger.

Medley singing of the Royal Guards is okay, with new voices (two tenors) aiding for better aud reception. Johnny Morgan is in the comedy slot. The guy is a pleasant comic, but not for this type of hep room which is used to a Billy Vine, Buddy Lester or Lenny Kent. Morgan would be fine in one of the hotel cafes hereabouts or on a TV slot looking for a Herb Shriner type.

Sans Souci Hotel

Lenny Kent can make a hotel spot forget about the heavy club competition via sock biz, thanks to big local following and a well-rounded stint of howlraisers.

Returning to this one-show-nightly cafe, he's kept the place packed since opening night, with returnees the added factor nightly to overall build. Has a sesh that includes plenty of new oneliners, plussed by a demanded Texan routine and Billy Daniels takeoff. Walks off to handy reaction.

Stuart Harris is the other soloer here. The young lad, production singer at Copa City last season, wins them all the way with an intelligently balanced blending of standard and current pops.

gracefully arranged. The youngster hits a warm note in his intro and tribute to the elders.

Considering the versatility of the closers, only type of opening act which could easily fit in is something like the Dassie Bros. The two Frenchmen, with seven minutes of comedic acro-tumbling, nicely dress the stage for what follows. Dick Stabile batons a good show, deftly handling the multiplicity of cues. The Stabile squad, 'tween shows, serves up the foxtrots and waltzes for the dansapations. Between such sets, Bobby Ramos' combo takes 'em south of the border. Bert.

Thunderbird, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, Jan. 17.

Henny Youngman, Martha Stewart, Landre & Verna, Kathryn Duffy Dansations (7), Johnny O'Brien, Jimmy Sisco, Normandie Boys (3), Al Jahns Orch (11); no cover or minimum.

Topped off by the sardonic wit of Henny Youngman, this new three-frame casement at the Thunderbird is product of extra care and attention. Chirp Martha Stewart comes in for kudosing, plus ballroom tricksters Landre & Verna, plus brightly turned choreos by Kathryn Duffy Dansations.

Youngman's humor pulls in yock after yock. Tablers respond to most sallies slapped over by the comedian's standup manner of delivery—and good. Timing is still great as ever. Humor spans honeys of his well-stocked files, through various and assorted gags, timely or otherwise. Uses violin in bit with musician commandeered from orch for telling effect. As attested by his solid click, room and Youngman fit like a glove.

Martha Stewart animates deuce with extra window dressing provided for her preem into nitery cubicles as single. First three tunes aren't right for her bright, blonde personality. Opener, "Why," suffices only insofar as tempo is concerned. "Give Me an Old-Fashioned" is too moody, and her "Old Soft Shoe" lacks depth.

She picks up noticeably with "Adelaide's Lament," reprised from recent Stem sesh in "Guys and Dolls." In same vein is "Take Back Your Mink," contrived with excellent effect and using Dansations for some peeling. Song bit with Henny tossing in questions to "Man I Love" conjures chuckles and plentiful mitting.

Landre & Verna impress with lifts and overhead spins, femme being whirled and tossed about for great sight effect. Actual terping is confined to minimum, with paid cannily developing thrillers. They indulge in plenty of these throughout to receive resounding desserts.

Kathryn Duffy Dansations continue their "Piccadilly, Paree," opener from previous frames in okay prancing. Cavort into patterns for Johnny O'Brien's warbling of "Sit Down You're Rocking the Boat," and look fetching in the "Take Back Your Mink" setup with Miss Stewart. Finale, "Luck Be a Lady," is enhanced by outstanding terps and elevations by tyro Jimmy Sisco, aided by Christina Carson and line. Normandie Boys aid production chants, and O'Brien doubles warbling chores with skippering. Will.

Mt. Royal Hotel, Mont'l
(NORMANDIE ROOM)

Montreal, Jan. 17.

Margaret Phelan, Mario & Floria, Max Chamitov Orch (8), with Norma Hutton, Hal White Trio; $1.50 cover Sat. only.

Breeziest chirper to shake up this lofty spot in recent months is Margaret Phelan, playing the Normandie Room for the first time in four years. Carrying the tag as one of best-dressed dolls in America as well as best looking, Miss Phelan completes the triangle with a varied set of pipes and a sophisticated songalog that picks up solid mitting.

Teeing off with a special to an excerpt from "Manhattan Towers," she starts to roll them with her "Business Man" routine and follows with a well handled but slightly frayed Calypso which pleases. Straight cleffing of "Can't Help Loving That Man" establishes her with the ballad lovers, and then she moves into a rowdy "Can't Take It With You" with socko lyrics and intonations that score neatly. Encoring with an out-of-the-book "Lover," she dips into an Irish item that isn't exactly subtle and is punched too hard for obvious yocks. In this room on any night but Saturday, this is strictly a raised-eyebrow number.

Next to closing, Miss Phelan brings back the level with a more polished "Hussy For a Husband" and clinches with a round-the-room tour of oldies to wrap up a standout 35 minutes.

Show starters are Mario & Floria who break fast and maintain a hot pace through four solid terp efforts. A brace of regular ballroom sessions gets offering underway. Then duo change tempo nicely and solidify attention with their interp of the "Turkey Trot" plus a group of requests. Begoff is the "Merry Widow" waltz which garners plaudits and makes a nifty exit sans bows, refreshing change from the usual milkers.

Max Chamitov and orch play the fast score for Mario & Floria and the trick Phelan arrangements with style. Band thrush Norma Hutton is okay in both song and emcee departments, with the Hal White Trio spelling Chamitov for costumer gyrations. Newt.

Copley Plaza, Boston
(OVAL ROOM)

Boston, Jan. 19.

Guy Guarino, Burt Hilber, Larry Green Orch (8); $2.50 minimum, $3.50 Fri.-Sat.

The Oval Room, operating this season with "informal" entertainment provided by bandsmen, band vocalists and an occasional standard act, is beginning to lean more towards the more familiar cafe format recently by booking in outside acts. Currently, vocalist Guy Guarino and cowpoke Burt Hilber are showcased, with ballerina Nanci Crompton skedded immediately ahead, followed by a four-week frame of Jo Barnum and her "Silhouettes on Ice."

Guarino, a handsome six-footer, is a local product who's been spending the past few months in Manhattan acquiring veneer under the aegis of Jack Cathcart. His initialer here affords him a nifty stepping stone into the higher brackets. Baritone has pleasing voice which, parlayed with his sock appearance and easy stage manner, pegs him as a natural for plush rooms.

For his stint here, Guarino sticks mostly to familiar ballads such as "Hello, Young Lovers" and "We Kiss in the Shadow" from "King and I"; the nostalgic "September Song" and a slick arrangement of "Autumn Leaves" sung in English to foxtrot tempo, switching to waltz beat for French version. Winds with the up-tempoed "Zing, Went Strings" with strong reaction down the line.

Burt Hilber, togged out in cowpoke regalia, vocalizes such items as "Down Yonder," "Loaded Pistols and Loaded Dice" and "San Antonio Rose" while accompanying himself on guitar for oke results. Switching from a straight vocal stanza, Hilber, aided by a couple, bandsmen and a svelto blonde model, corrals several ringsiders and leads them through a sesh of square dances. While the dances are of the uncomplicated variety, mostly skipping around to hillbilly tempo with Hilber giving out with the calls, the diners warm nicely to the gimmick, a strange sight in this swank room.

Bill tees off with maestro Larry Green showcasing his pianoistic agility via "Malaguena" accompanied by the band. Elie.

Paramount, N. Y.

Erskine Hawkins Orch (15), Harold "Rhythm" King, Sarah Vaughan, Stump & Stumpy, Ink Spots (4); "Scandal Sheet" (Col), reviewed in VARIETY Jan. 9, '52.

Back at the Paramount for the first time in six years, the Ink Spots are co-headlining with Sarah Vaughan in a fast paced all-sepia sesh which clicks in all departments. Although the bill's accent is on song, the Ink Spots and Miss Vaughan complement the offerings with sock renditions of a varied songalog.

In the closing niche, the Spots, headed by Bill Kenny, display the kind of savvy in song projection and showmanship that's kept them up front in the vocal combo sweepstakes. That they're still faves in this house, despite the six-year hiatus, was evidenced by the warm reception received opening day.

Group opens with "Into Each Each Life Some Rain Must Fall," works into "Everybody Loves My Baby" and closes first set with a wallop on "Please, Mr. Sun." Back for "I'm Lucky To Have You" and close to strong mitt with their identifying oldie, "If I Didn't Care." Kenny sparks the group through the set for top results.

Miss Vaughan offers a sparkling songalog in the third spotting. Tastefully garbed and lissome-looking, she wins house from the "I Get A Kick Out Of You" bow to "Toredo" closer. Gal fills gap with "After Hours," a so-so entry, "Out Of Breath" and "I Ran All the Way Home," both top mitt-grabbers. She's a highly stylized thrush and gets the most out of each lyric, projecting the blues or gay mood with impact.

Harold "Rhythm" King opens the bill with his speedy terps on roller skates. It's a click novelty turn which he builds by such capers as roller-tapping blindfold and dittoing on a table. Stump & Stumpy fill the comedy spot with plenty of zest. Boys virtually knock themselves out, but their efforts aren't wasted. They intersperse their comedics with wry carbons of James Cagney, Barry Fitzgerald, Louis Armstrong and Nat (King) Cole, and some zany terpsichore. Act runs a little too long but it's a laughgetter all of the way.

Erskine Hawkins orch — three rhythm, five reed and six brass — do little more than get the show off with a brassy jive number. They cut the rest of the bill neatly.

Gros.

Capitol, Wash.

Washington, Jan. 17.

Kyle MacDonnell, George DeWitt, Four Aces, Howard & Wanda Bell; "I'll Never Forget You" (20th).

Capitol's current layout proves there's no set formula to a sock vaude show, provided the individual acts can sell themselves. Despite being overweight in the vocalizing department, with three acts pitching tunes, show is fast, well paced and sock throughout.

Headliner Kyle MacDonnell is a refreshing change from the self-consciously sultry type of chantoosey with which the jukeboxes abound these days. Trim, well groomed and lady-like and, at the same time, whistle bait, she offers style, good showmanship and a musical set of pipes. Worthy of mention are her arrangements, which are clean cut and appealing.

Singing in a natural, clear soprano, gal tees off on a bright note with "It's a Most Unusual Day," then tackles a medley of show tunes, including "All of a Sudden My Heart Stops," "Why Was I Born" and "My Heart Sings." Strikes a touch of the novel in "I Love a Piano," and walks off to a fine mitt action after "Be My Love." Returns with "You Made Me Love You" and "When Day Is Done."

Not only is it a pleasure to welcome a performer so easy on the eyes and ears, but Miss MacDonnell rates kudos for her extensive routine and for the unstinting way in which she responded, even at the slow dinner show, to customer enthusiasm.

George De Witt, has another fresh, bright act. Though his takeoffs run the usual gamut, his technique is refreshingly different and ribtickling. He shows a promising versatility, intertwining some terping and singing in his routine. His voice measures up to the demands of such toppers as Como, Torme, Monroe, Eckstine and Daniels, all of whom he carbons convincingly to the steady accompaniment of gallery giggles.

Comic has the right kind of modest, appealing personality for b.o., his material clicks, and he works hard at putting himself across.

Four Aces do okay with a series of pop tunes, most of which they have waxed for Decca. Their stylized, highly special treatment lacks universal appeal, though obviously their fans were well represented at show caught. Their harmonizing changes little from song to song, and impressed as monotonous after initial tunes. Routine includes such hit tunes as "Winter Wonderland," "Garden in the Rain" and "Begin the Beguine." Walk off to nice mitt action.

Howard & Wanda Bell have a fast, varied type of acro act which does well as pacesetter.

Lowe.

Olympia, Miami

Miami, Jan. 20.

George Arnold Ice Show, Jan August, Jerome Courtland, Don Cummings, Victor Charles, Les Rhode House Orch; "Highly Dangerous" (Lip).

Return of vaude to this house after several weeks' hiatus due to a union hassle had the crowds out, thanks to a solid marquee setup.

Triple topliner idea set well with the regulars who returned in goodly numbers. George Arnold's "Rhythm on Ice" revue looks better here than on the Casablanca Hotel floor where they debuted to unhappy returns three weeks ago. In the stage setting they make for a colorful and lively group of blades with Arnold and his spins and whirls the standout, plus the eight members of his cast who team in duos and spell out solos to make for continuing effect on the palm-rousing.

Jerome Courtland, who recently in-personed here for pic version of "Barefoot Mailman," garners healthy reaction with his baritonings, plussed by simple approach that won them from walkon. Mixture of pops kept them mitting for a solid overall effect. However, he needs a bit more experience for the assured approach.

Jan August's pianistics is the wrapup stint. His 88 work, abetted by a commercial and highly entertaining manner and projection, keeps sustaining hand-to-hand payoff.

Don Cummings emcees in highly capable fashion and in own spot garners large amount of laughs with his pleasant waggery. His topper is a switch on the Skelton "Guzzler's Gin" idea for the best mitt.

Victor Charles tees off matters with a fast paced session of puppeteer manipulations that are well versed technically and visually pleasing. Les Rhode orch adds spirit to the proceedings with showbacks.

Lary.

Apollo, N. Y.

Roy Milton Orch (7), with Lillie Greenwood; Johnny Hodges All Stars (7); Bill Cook, Roll & Tapp, Spo-Dee-O-Dee, Ruby Ring, Jimmy Nelson; "Johnny Allegro" (Col).

Two-band tandem at the Apollo this sesh pays off in a music-filled bill that holds interest all the way. Parlay of Roy Milton's orch and the Johnny Hodges All Stars provides enough instrumental variety to keep show's pace breezy and festive. "The Battle of the Bands," as the house bills it, is refereed adequately by emcee Bill Cook.

The Hodges combo opens show with bouncy version of "Bean Bag Boogie," while Milton's band challenges effectively in the next number with a jivey "Roy Rides." The battle ends there since the bands are spotted in separate sets at the latter half of the bill, but it's still an exciting musical setup for the pewholders.

In tenor saxman Hodges' set, he leads his crew through "Berry Well," "Gentle Breeze" and the pop fave, "Castle Rock." Assisted by three rhythm, two brass and another reed, Hodges works each number into top listening. Hodges' saxwork is sweet and rhythmic on "Breeze," while Al Sears baritone-saxing of "Castle Rock" sparks the number nicely.

Roy Milton band, comprised of three rhythm, two reed and one brass with the maestro on drums, offers "Junior Jumps," "Best Wishes" and "Can't Help But Love You." Latter tune is belted out with exaggeration by vocalist Lillie Greenwood. Milton vocals pleasantly on "Best Wishes," while the set opener shows off the orch at its driving best.

Roll & Tapp click with their brisk tap-terps. Their version of bebop in taps is a solid mitt-grabber. Ruby Ring, white acro-dancer, scores with some striking body contortions. Although a few of her acro twists aren't particularly eye-appealing, the difficult movements of her rubber-like torso, legs and arms win the house.

Spo-Dee-O-Dee fails to register in his two comedy assignments. Works in weak patter assignments with emcee Cook, with too few laughs to warrant the lengthy dialog. Cook interpserses his emcee chores with a comic rendition of a blues song and changes pace in a poetic plea for tolerance titled "Because My Skin Is Brown," Jimmy Nelson, blues singer, is listed under New Acts.

Gros.

Fifth Avenue, Seattle

Seattle, Jan. 17.

Joan Caulfield, Harry Reed; "The Lady Said No" (UA).

Joan Caulfield, making personals here in connection with "The Lady Said No," in which she co-stars with David Niven, makes a nice appearance on the stage; is obviously sincere and is a looker, but her material doesn't help any.

On for a 25-minute stint, preceded by an organ concert by Harry Reed, Miss Caulfield is introed via a recording made by Niven, and first of her three-part act is that of two star-struck teenagers at a Hollywood premiere. Cliche-ridden, the bit isn't in the best of taste and is flat and humorless.

Second part is a dramatic piece in verse about a smalltown gal waiting for a train in Grand Central station to take her home from an unsuccessful attempt to crack show biz in the big city.

Third part has Miss Caulfield impersonating Judy Holliday, as Billie Dawn in a radio show interviewing Katharine Hepburn. Humor is forced and cold, although takeoff on Hepburn is adequate in a familiar vein.

Reed.

Henie-less Wirtz Icer Nowhere Near Penniless With Barbara Scott, Etc.

The "Hollywood Ice Revue," which for the past 16 years has tenanted Madison Square Garden, N. Y., with Sonja Henie as the major lure, has come into this stand without its usual headliner. To compensate, producer Arthur Wirtz has put extra emphasis on skaters worthy of solo work. The results, entertainment-wise, reveal this is as one of the best icers to play the Garden in some years.

Barbara Ann Scott, the Canadian lass who won the 1948 Olympic crown, is headlining and she brings a note of freshness to the professional ice here. However, the Henie mantle seems more likely to fall on Andra McLaughlin, a youthful blader who is doing routines that have been standard in the Henie catalog for many years. Miss McLaughlin is a looker with sparkle and an awareness of her impact on the audience.

Hollywood Ice Revue
(MADISON SQUARE GARDEN)

An Arthur M. Wirtz and William H. Burke ice production, choreographed and staged by Catherine Littlefield (deceased); costumes, Grace Houston; musical director, Paul Van Loan; musical arrangements, Paul Sumney, Norman Paulus; assistant choreographer, Dorothie Littlefield; sets, Becker Bros.; Stars Barbara Ann Scott; features Carol Lynne, Skippy Baxter, Andra McLaughlin, Freddie Trenkler, The Bruises, Michael Kirby, John Walsh, Jean & Calvin Cook, Line. Opened Jan. 17, '52, at Madison Square Garden, N. Y., at $6 top.

As a matter of fact, the three femme leads in the show have been cast for diverse reasons. Carol Lynne, one of the perfectionists in the field, is a superb skating ballerina, and her routines are dazzlers. With Miss McLaughlin to provide pertness and Miss Scott for freshness, the trio provide a combination which should effectively fill the Henie void.

Comedy has similarly been taken care of with Freddie Trenkler and the Bruises (3). Trenkler is one of the more accomplished skating buffoons. His routines haven't changed too much and the reaction is the same as in former years. Meaning that he's a major hit in this show. The scrubwomen routine by the Bruises has become an ice classic. It's laugh-loaded and gets a maximum effect on the crowd.

The show runs along in a manner that leaves no room for lags. The production numbers are well conceived and executed, and the costumes are lush. A good deal of imagination has been shown with the "Hansel and Gretel" number which marks the first half's finale. This immortal tale, utilizing much of the Humperdinck score, is socko juve bait. The costumes are fine and there's much charm in the staging. Barbara Ann Scott performs Gretel well and George Wagner is okay in the Hansel role.

The trio of male skaters also have ample opportunity to get their share of plaudits. John Walsh and Michael Kirby, both former Henie partners, display some flashy routines in tandem with the femmes and on their own. Skippy Baxter, who glides Mercury to Miss Lynne's Diane, also is one of the important soloists in the show. Another tandem is Jean & Calvin Cook, doing a stilt-skating routine for a good reception.

In short, there is more talent here than has ever hit the Garden in "Hollywood Ice Revue." It's a plush and lush show with enough spectacle and individual and group skill to satisfy the high Garden standards.

This edition shapes up as probably the best staged and choreographed of all. Catherine Littlefield, who did these chores, died three days after the show opened. This session provided a climatic finale to a distinguished career. Grace Houston let imagination and budget run wild in her costume designs.

Future editions will probably have Miss Scott emerge as a superb ballerina. The Olympic champ isn't far removed from amateur status. There are still a lot of pro tricks that she has to latch onto. But it's evident that she has a firm foundation. Her Garden routines are filled with accomplishments best appreciated by skaters. There's a lot of subtlety in her approach. With a few more seasons on professional ice, she'll undoubtedly acquire a bolder outlook, more showmanship and an awareness of what brings on the applause. It's likely that she'll skate her way into a boxoffice figure.

The show is plugging the fact that there will be no telecasts of this shindig and boxoffice is being fortified by one of the widest advertising and billing campaigns ever to be given a Garden icer. Advertising radius is figured to be more than 100 miles in order to assure a healthy run before its Feb. 6 finale. There's a three-day hiatus starting Jan. 25 because of previous commitments at the Garden.

JUNE ROSELLE
Songs
23 Mins.
Hotel St. Regis, N. Y.

There is considerable vocal training behind June Roselle, young lyric soprano who has a fullbodied voice that indicates promise. Miss Roselle's problem at the moment, obviously, is not a vocal deficiency; it lies in a much-needed experience.

It's tough to take a young singer and put her into a showcase like the Maisonette of the St. Regis, where she can so conveniently be seen by the show biz hepsters. In showing that lack of experience Miss Roselle leans towards ballads and the more serious music, which can be pretty deadly in a cafe, though there is no special criticism as to the way Miss Roselle actually sings the numbers. But with those choices and the routining Miss Roselle must be equipped in projection and overall salesmanship, which are items that she must yet acquire. Right now she has the basic and more important equipment — a voice and looks.

Blonde youngster is wholesome-looking and the kind who could be developed for films in much the same manner used in fostering Deanna Durbin or a Jane Powell, though she is somewhat older than when the above were discovered. In addition to a fine voice, she does have that all-American-girl appearance that can be brought out before the cameras.

Miss Roselle does such numbers as "Falling Leaves," in French and English; a favorite Grace Moore medley including "Butterfly," and a couple of other ballads, all notable for their lack of talk. Miss Roselle handles one or two brief intros and needs to brush up in that department.

Milt Shaw's orch does a neat job on the accomp.

JIMMY NELSON
Songs
9 Mins.
Apollo, N. Y.

Jimmy Nelson, colored singer who clicked strongly in the rhythm and blues disk field with "Mr. T 99," projects the same type of vocal excitement on stage as he does on wax. He's an emotional bawler who knows how to belt out a lyric for full impact.

Nelson wins from start with dramatic version of "Chains of Love," works into a tender "Little Boy" and closes with the sock "Mr. T." It's a brief but high powered turn which leaves the pewholders asking for more. He's a good bet for similar vaude spots.

DARVAS & JULIA
Dance
10 Mins.
Latin Quarter, Miami

In Darvas and Julia, who arrived here for their U. S. debut with a big European rep, the cafe, video and vaude circuits will find one of the finest additions to the "new faces" idea in years. Presented in a show that concentrates on big production and solo dances in the main at this plush Miami nitery, they walk off with the palm-pounding plaudits with ease.

Theirs is an act that blends the standard twists and spins into something startlingly different. Typical are the male's one-arm balance of the femme, with latter's stance bringing her almost ceiling high, and the followup torso wraparound in an aud-rousing spin around the big stage. Darvas' easy flips send his lissome partner into slide splits from aloft to make for strictly socko. To top matters, there's the finale, in which he tosses his mate from a platform to a 15-foot drop, into another slide-split, for a gasp and begoff.

Added factor in duo's potency is their handsome appearance. Approach and manner are on the smooth class side, with none of the flamboyancy this type of adagio-dance duo usually showcases. They're a bet for any of the class mediums.

SAMIA GAMAL
Dance
5 Mins.
Latin Quarter, Miami

Here's proof of a publicity break providing a pull. This plush spot with a lavish and handsome production has been doing sock biz at dinner, but as per all cafes in the area recently, falling off for the late show. With advent of Samia Gamal, the pickup for the midnight affair (she works one late show nightly) is a startling one. Her talents add up to a paraphrase of "they toil not, neither do they spin"; Miss Gamal spins not, neither does she dance.

Hers is a five-minute stint of glides, minor mid-section contortions and a certain amount of graceful undulations for the followup along the ringside sector. Briefly clad (though not as flesh-revealing as many a lass in the Quarter's femme extravaganza), she comes, moves around the big stage, and offs to a nice mitt.

Musical background is properly Oriental in arrangement. Personality is a pleasant one. And reaction is also pleasant, with all waiting to give her another chance. She didn't attempt one at show caught.

If the publicity holds up, she's a novelty attraction for the curiosity crowds.

Campus Bookings

was under the influence of the older G.I. element, which under the aegis of the Government's G.I. Bill of Rights, accented studies more than extra-curricular activities.

Many of the World War II veteran-students played down the importance of proms and the bands were gradually pushed out of an important revenue source. However, the younger undergraduate on the campus today have forced a re-emphasis on proms, and college authorities have given in by booking orchs at top figures.

Universities such as Notre Dame, which for the past years had a specified money allotment for bands, have increased their prom budgets so that they can buy the firstrate orchs. The colleges are now spending between $2,000 to $3,000 for a prom date. Such orchs as Ray Anthony, Ralph Flanagan, Elliot Lawrence, Les Brown, and Tex Beneke are cleaning up via campus bookings. The newly-formed Billy May orch also looms as a contender in the 1952 campus sweepstakes with plenty of advanced bookings currently being lined up. Student interest in May orch is being drummed up via his Capitol Records etchings.

On the ballroom level it's already been evidenced that the college dances have hypoed b.o. Proms have revived the dancing habit and the students have been flocking to neighboring dancehalls as part of their weekend entertainment. In the ballrooms the college crowd gets a chance to see and hear an orch that has already played on their campus or to size up a new band for a future prom booking.

Swire Due to Head Equity's Coast Office; O'Brien Gets N.Y. Hearing

Pending appointment of a permanent representative, Willard Swire, assistant exec-secretary of Actors Equity, is expected to remain in charge of the union's Coast office. Decision to that effect was due to be made yesterday (Tues.) by the Equity council, despite a scheduled appearance by Christopher O'Brien, recently ousted Coast rep, to demand reinstatement. Swire was sent to take over the L. A. office two weeks ago, on short notice, after O'Brien's exit.

It's expected that, contrary to Swire's wishes, he may have to continue as the union's Coast rep for some time, as there is likely to be difficulty obtaining a satisfactory man to handle the spot permanently. Not only does the assignment require specialized knowledge and ability, but because of the prospect of merger of eastern-headquartered performer unions, the job of Coast rep for Equity has a uncertain future. So Swire, who only a few months ago was able to return to full-time duties in the Equity homeoffice after doubling as temporary exec-secretar, of Chorus Equity, is again farmed out indefinitely on a trouble-shooting stint.

According to Equity council members, there was little chance that the union's ruling group would accept O'Brien's reinstatement bid yesterday. On the basis of numerous complaints over a period of many months, there was growing dissatisfaction with O'Brien's operation of the Coast office. Among the serious infractions of basic Equity policy was the failure to obtain a bond covering actor salaries for Gene Mann's stock season at the Greek Theatre there last season, plus repeated waivers, all unauthorized by council or home-office officials, of standard Equity rules. Many of these involved concessions favorable to the management in the case of individual-actor contracts.

It is revealed by one council member that on several occasions, when instances of lax operation of the Coast office got back to the homeoffice, the unions top officials remonstrated with O'Brien, but matters were not corrected. Finally, the council voted last month not to renew O'Brien's contract, which was due to expire Dec. 31. At the same time, it instructed Louis M. Simon, executive-secretary, to go to the Coast and straigthen out affairs.

According to Simon's reports to the governing group, O'Brien first accepted his removal amicably, agreeing to submit a face-saving letter of resignation next day. However, he subsequently decided to fight the ouster, demanding a hearing of charges against him. On orders from the council in New York, Simon refused to discuss publicly the reasons O'Brien was dropped after a two-year tenure as Coast rep.

ATLANTA PENTHOUSE BOWS THIRD SEASON

Atlanta, Jan. 22.

Ruth Gordon's "Years Ago" was the kickoff play when Atlanta's Penthouse Theatre, Greek-type showcase, opened its third season Thursday (17), with Mary Foskett, Carl Low and Helen Mayon in the leading roles. Penthouse, a 450-seater, is located atop Atlanta's downtown Ansley Hotel what was formerly the hostelry' Rainbow Roof. "Years Ago" opened to a capacity house.

Policy heretofore at Penthouse centered on star stock, but new management, headed up by J. Lee Friedman and Gerard Appy (listed as producers), has decided on a straight stock policy for this season.

Second play on the Penthouse program is "Black Chiffon," which will open tonight (Tues.) with Pat Donovan in the lead. "Hay Fever" is scheduled to open Jan. 29; "Come Back, Little Sheba," Feb. 5; "The Male Animal," Feb. 12; "The Corn Is Green," Feb. 19; "The Happy Time," Feb. 26, and "Edward My Son," March 4.

Camp to Quit as L'ville Muny Mgr.; Settle Subs

Louisville, Jan. 22.

Effective July 1, William H. Camp, manager of Louisville Memorial Auditorium, will retire. Camp has managed the municipal hall since the early '30s, and has handled all bookings with UBO, both concert and legit managements using the facilities of the 2,470-seat house. Road shows, and many concert attractions, have been booked into the house by J. H. Thuman, Cincinnati impresario, and the hall is in demand for local groups, dance recitals and concerts. Camp inherited a theatrical background from his father, James B. Camp, who was onetime manager of the old Auditorium, showhouse which preceded the present.

Maurice Settle, Iroquois Amphitheatre business manager, will take over the Camp post, assuming his new duties July 1. In the interim he will act as Camp's aide in looking after management details.

Four Top Choreogs Prep Preems for N.Y.C. Ballet In Unique Sked Setup

The N. Y. City Ballet will offer a mid-winter season of five weeks in N. Y., starting Feb. 12, with an unusual schedule. Five world premieres are promised, with a quartet of the world's top choreographers lined up for the chores. It's the biggest, most unusual collection of dance stagers for one season since Ballet Theatre's advent in 1940, the choreographers coming from Broadway, ballet and abroad.

George Balanchine, troupe's artistic director and a legit musical stager, will choreograph "Bayou," set to Virgil Thomson music. Jerome Robbins, assistant artistic director and another legit stalwart, will present his "Ballade," to a Debussy score. Anthony Tudor is composing a work called "La Gloire," to music of Beethoven. Frederick Ashton, Sadler's Wells Ballet of London co-director and chief choreographer, is doing "Iseult at Tintagel," to Arnold Bax music, and with a Cecil Beaton set and costumes.

Fifth work was to be one by Agnes de Mille, if she could get it ready. Time was too short, so Balanchine is doing another new ballet, to Mozart music. Ashton has just returned from conferences in Hollywood, and as soon as his work is staged, returns to the Coast to prep dances for Moira Shearer's Metro pic.

Following the N. Y. season, the N. Y. City Ballet is off to Europe for a five-month tour. On its return, it will prep a fall Gotham season, to be followed by its first American tour, a 10 to 12-week jaunt under management of Sol Hurok.

Oakland, Cal., Aroused At Roadshow Bypass

Oakland, Cal., Jan. 22.

Considerable civic furore is now rising in this marsh land (steady rains have hit here for a month) over the by-passing of Oakland by road shows in favor of Berkeley, six miles north, and Richmond, 18 miles north. Both are equipped with new top-drawer theatres with better than 3,000 capacity, as against 1,962 (many of which seats are worthless due to lack of visibility of stage) at Oakland Auditorium.

Norman Ogilvie, local real estate man, is beginning a campaign for a new theatre to restore Oakland to the theatrical map. Chamber of Commerce is also in tizzy and set up a special meeting this week to discuss the problem. Local critic Wood Soanes has been sounding off for years, most of his advice being to (a) clean up the Auditorium, (b) heat it properly, (c) install an adequate sound system, (d) make some arrangements for parking.

Green's 'Fathers' Likely For 3d Summer in D.C.

Washington, Jan. 22.

Probability is that "Faith of Our Fathers," the D. C. Sesquicentennial pageant written by Paul Green, will get the okay to go ahead for a third summer in the Carter T. Barron Amphitheatre in Rock Creek Park here.

Sesqui Commisison [illegible] week called at the White House with a plan to shelve the pageant and turn the stadium over to the Public Parks Administration. Both President Truman and House Speaker Sam Rayburn, of Texas, opposed this. They feel that the pageant has a strong patriotic message, and that it should be carried on for another summer. "Faith of Our Fathers" broke a little better than even last summer.

'Hell' to Run As Long as It's Hot

The return N. Y. engagement of "Don Juan in Hell," advertised as limited to four weeks, has already been extended to 12 and will probably continue as long as business warrants. Although it is set for a 45th Street theatre, the exact identity of the house isn't revealed, as another show has a previous booking there. The latter offering would presumably be moved elsewhere if necessary.

With Charles Boyer, Charles Laughton, Cedric Hardwicke and Agnes Moorehead continuing as stars, "Don Juan" returns March 30. Pending announcement of the theatre, mail orders are being received at the New York office of Paul Gregory, the show's producer. The offering, a lecture-style edition of a scene from Shaw's "Man and Superman," recently played a four-and-a-half-week engagement to standee attendance at the Century, N. Y., grossing about $200,000 for the stand. It could not continue, however, as the four stars had film commitments.

For the return run, Gregory has made arrangements to continue as long as business is profitable. With an advance sale of about $60,000 already on hand, it's expected that the engagement will probably run the balance of the season and may span the summer. Because of the simplified production setup and the fact that Boyer and Laughton are on percentage, the show could get by at a relatively modest gross.

BOOKING SETUP SNARL RILES PLACID PHILLY

Philadelphia, Jan. 22.

A scrambled and generally cockeyed booking setup has Philly's legit situation in a constant state of uncertainty.

Case in point is "Venus Observed," Christopher Fry play with Rex Harrison and Lilli Palmer which, as of now, is skedded to open at the Shubert next Monday (28). This Theatre Guild production, which is inaugurating a second or supplementary subscription season here, was first listed for last night (21), then put off until Friday (25) because its director, Laurence Olivier, was reported as wanting more local rehearsal time. Next change was to lop off show's final two performances (matinee and evening of Feb. 9) so that production could get more time for its N. Y. preem. Then came the announcement that scenery had been held up on the high seas and local opening was set back to Jan. 28.

Now it is apparently set that "Venus Observed" will play the two full weeks, with an extra matinee on Friday, Feb. 8. Topsy-turvy situation has b.o. men and Guild ATS subscription force in a dither for last week.

Now it's just been announced that "Jane," sixth and last of the Guild's regular subscription offerings of 1951-52, which was to have closed its regular two weeks' stay this Saturday at the Walnut, will play three extra performances, first three days of next week, instead of moving to Hartford. Extra shows here will not be on subscription, of course.

Met to Bow New 'Carmen' At Hiked Prices; Stager Bow for Another Legiter

The Metropolitan Opera's fourth special work of the season, "Carmen," the first new production of the Bizet opus since 1923-24, will have upped tariffs. Presented Jan. 31 under Opera Guild sponsorship as a benefit to aid the Met's Production Fund, prices will range from $15 and $10 in orchestra and $5 in dress circle, to $3.50 and $2.25 in the balconies.

The Met has taken or will take several opportunities this season to hike admissions (normally a $7.50 top). In addition to opening night's "Aida" ($25 top), New Year's eve's "Fledermaus" was also hiked. The Met's other new productions already presented, such as "Cosi fan Tutte" and "Rigoletto," were at regular prices, however. The Met has another novelty upcoming, in March, in Gluck's "Alceste," with Kirsten Flagstad, when prices will be upped. The Easter "Parsifal" will also be hiked, as usual.

The new "Carmen" will have other unusual factors, with Fritz Reiner conducting the work for the first time at the Met, and Tyrone Guthrie, director of London's Old Vic, doing his first operatic directing assignment in this country. Guthrie's staging stint is in line with general manager Rudolf Bing's policy of bringing in legit directors to make his opera presentations more theatrical, other such legiters used this season having been Alfred Lunt and Margaret Webster, with Miss Webster and Garson Kanin having served similarly last season.

O'DANIEL SETS EQUITY ARENA IN DET. HOTEL

An Equity stock company, with a resident company and a non-star policy, will be opened Feb. 4 in the Teller Hotel, Detroit, by Barrie O'Daniel, who formerly operated the Detroit Civic Light Opera. It will be an arena-style theatre and will play a 10-week season.

The opening bill will be "Voice of the Turtle," with the subsequent schedule calling for "Glass Menagerie," "Design for Living," "Harvey," "Pursuit of Happiness," "Light Up the Sky," "Love or Money," "There's Always Juliet," "Primrose Path" and "Taming of the Shrew." O'Daniel and Marshall Yokelson, the latter a former associate of Margo Jones at Dallas, will direct.

At a $2 top (plus tax), the 400-seat spot will have a capacity of about $6,000 and a break-even nut of $3,000.

O'Sullivan's Albany Post

Albany, Jan. 22.

Eugene O'Sullivan has joined Malcolm Atterbury's Playhouse as director. He succeeds Atwood Levensaler, who bowed out during the opening week of "Lady in the Dark." Atterbury took over the musical and redirected it, as well as staging the current "Hasty Heart."

O'Sullivan came here from the Baltimore Arena theatre. He previously directed stock at Chevy Chase, outside Chicago.

Metop Equity 'Fledermaus' to Fold At $140G Loss; Col Records Pays Half

The Metropolitan Opera's special Equity touring company of "Fledermaus," which has been on the road since Sept. 24, will wind up in Minneapolis Feb. 2, at a loss estimated at $140,000. Of this $70,000 represents production cost. Other 70G represents tour losses. Troupe has had some profitable weeks, as in Philadelphia, Washington and Boston, and break-even stanzas in such spots as Chicago, but has had heavy losing weeks elsewhere, especially in split-week stands. Troupe had been skedded to tour through late spring, but will curtail its trek because, according to Met announcement, the Met "is unable to sustain financial loss."

The Met, however will have to sustain the 70G red into which it went on tour. The other 70G, it's reliably reported, will be assumed by Columbia Records, which lent the sum originally to the Met to put on this special production. Although it was originally rumored that Columbia made the loan contingent on being paid back from royalties on the "official" Met album of "Fledermaus" issued last fall, it's now reported that no strings were attached, Columbia merely hoping to gain on sale of albums hypoed by the "Fledermaus" tour. The Met, in announcing the tour fold, stated that general manager Rudolf Bing "emphasized that the Metropolitan is grateful to Columbia Records for their generous loan which made the production possible."

Tax Exemption

Another unusual feature of the tour was the fact that this Equity "Fledermaus," although booked into legit houses under regular commercial sponsorship, had received a Government exemption from the 20% federal amusement tax. This, of course, helped increase grosses, and the Met sent out photostatic copies of the exemption ruling to hypo bookings. Exemption surprised the trade, as local managers aren't in the nonprofit category called for by the tax rule. Exemption surprised the Met, too; it hasn't had a similar ruling yet on its own regular spring opera tour.

Operating nut for "Fledermaus," excluding transportation, is estimated at around $30,000. Bad weather, long hops, general biz and entertainment world slumps have hurt the production, as well as the fact that the Met had its own "Fledermaus" in many cities last spring.

New Plan Mulled for Road Productions Financed By Key-City Legit Managers

Production of plays for the road, to be financed cooperatively by managers of key-city theatres and selected by a subcommittee of the Committee of Theatrical Producers, is being considered for next season. This would be in addition to the production setup of Shepard Traube, whose edition of "Bell, Book and Candle" is currently touring successfully.

Possibilities of the plan were discussed last week at a luncheon given by the League of N. Y. Theatres and the Council for the Living Theatre, in honor of Paul Beisman, manager of the American Theatre, St. Louis. During the session, Beisman also outlined the operation of the St. Louis Playgoers, a subscription setup which it is hoped can be copied in other cities.

Present at the luncheon were Arthur Schwartz, Kermit Bloomgarden, Peter Davis, James F. Reilly, Gerald Goode, Lawrence Langner, Warren Caro, Sara Greenspan, Elias Weinstock, Vinton Freedley, Augustus Pitou, and representing out-of-town theatres, Ben Segal of the Shubert, New Haven, and Gabe Rubin of the Nixon, Pittsburgh.

Gersten's London Legiter

Berta Gersten, Yiddish legit star, sails today (Wed.) on the Queen Mary to start work on "Mirele Effros," Jacob Gordin's Yiddish stage classic, which opens in London late next month.

Following her London engagement, Miss Gersten will tour England and the Continent in three Gordin plays.

Miller Maps Same 'Gigi' Production for London

Gilbert Miller is considering taking his production of "Gigi," with Audrey Hepburn as star, to London immediately after its current Broadway run. However, a more likely prospect is that he will send the Anita Loos adaptation of the Colette novel on tour before transferring it to the West End.

With business continuing at nearly-capacity pace at the Fulton, N. Y., it's figured the play is a cinch to stay through the balance of the season. After that it will be a question whether to lay off for the summer or try to play through into next fall. In the former case, Miss Hepburn would presumably go to the Coast for a picture under her Paramount contract, but the option of continuing or shuttering for the summer is Miller's. His deal with the actress extends to May, 1953.

'Dolls' Pays 458G Profits Thus Far

Distribution of $118,000 profits on "Guys and Dolls," covering operations during November, was made recently by producers Cy Feuer and Ernest H. Martin. That brought the net return on the show to $458,191 thus far. Another dividend covering operations during December will be made next week. The show represents a $250,000 investment.

According to the latest accountant's statement, profits for the three weeks ended Dec. 1 were $26,739 from the Broadway company and $51,656 from the touring edition, for a total of $78,395. The statement confirms recent reports from out of town about the unusually advantageous sharing terms being obtained for the road troupe.

For instance, for the week ending Dec. 1, the gross from a split between St. Paul and Minneapolis was $50,799, of which the theatre share was only $12,699.75, or a straight 25%. Moreover, the attraction's share for newspaper advertising, billposting, etc., was only $1,406, while its end was only $935 for musicians and $136 for stagehands. Finally, the show's share for transfer and hauling on the two-theatre week was a mere $868. The musical had a $13,030 profit on the week.

Following its engagement in Toronto this week and next, "Guys" goes to Cleveland for two weeks, starting Feb. 4, splits the week of Feb. 18 between Canton and Columbus and then goes to Chicago for a run. The present plan is to brush up and rehearse the show in Chicago the first part of the week of Feb. 25 and open at the Shubert there Thursday night, Feb. 28. The second company of "South Pacific" will close a 14-month run at the house the previous Saturday, Feb. 23.

Monty Shaff, general manager for Feuer & Martin, goes to Chicago late this week to huddle with local Shubert representatives on plans for the "Guys" engagement.

Hylton to Confab in N.Y. On London 'Madam' Cast

London, Jan. 22.

Jack Hylton planed to New York last ight (Mon.) for confabs with Irving Berlin on the casting of "Call Me Madam," which is due to open under his management in London in April.

Accompanying Hylton was Richard Byrd, who is going over to see "Remains To be Seen," which Hylton recently acquired, in order that the production may be re-staged on identical lines.

During his quickie trip, Hylton will also set final details for the Broadway premiere of "Women of Twilight," for which an entire British company is being shipped to New York. Only original member of the West End cast will be Miriam Karlin.

Hartford Legiter Preps Tie With Westport Barn

Hartford, Jan. 20.

New Parsons here is understood to be mulling running art pictures in between legit shows. Definite policy is not yet set.

House will also bicycle plays from the Westport Theatre (strawhatter) during the summer months. Plays would open for one week at Westport and then play a second week at New Parsons. Philip Langner is associated in the management of both spots.

Jennifer to Dare Chicago in 'Joan' Despite Critics

Despite the caustic critical notices dished out to Olivia de Havilland in Chicago recently, Jennifer Jones is expected to include that city in her forthcoming tour in the Theatre Guild revival of "Saint Joan." Actress, who had some stage experience before becoming a Hollywood star, will take over the title part in the Shaw classic being played on Broadway by Uta Hagen.

Miss Jones, her husband-film producer David O. Selznick, and her advisers were reluctant to have the actress risk the kind of savage reviews that Miss de Havilland received in Chicago in her current touring edition of "Candida." Particularly since the critical reaction seemed to have such a personal slant, which has also been apparent toward other femme picture stars there, notably Katharine Hepburn.

Rather than give the impression that she was unwilling to face criticism, however, Miss Jones will probably include Chicago in the "Joan" tour, which opens Feb. 14 in Syracuse and will include such key stands as Cleveland, Detroit, Toronto, etc. The Guild has also been insisting on the Chicago stand, since it involves the potential second-biggest grosses in the country.

A factor in the "Joan" situation in Chicago is that the show will not be on Guild subscription there, as "Candida" has been. Despite the severe pans, Miss de Havilland has played to boff business, getting $19,900 on the first week, $21,100 last week and thus far doing even better for the current-week finale. Moreover, audi-

'Flahooley' Trio Working On Musical Revise; Still See Okay Comedy in Idea

E. Y. Harburg is working with Fred Saidy and Sammy Fain, his collaborators on last season's "Flahooley," on a new musical with the same basic idea and principal characters. It may even have one or two songs from the former show, but will mostly involve entirely new plot and musical material. The piece being tentatively called "The Genie and the Doll."

Convinced that "Flahooley" had merits that were lost in the disappointing premiere performance, or were missed by the critics, Harburg figures that there is still a successful musical comedy in the situation and characters of a genie and doll. So he and Saidy are working on the book of a similar show and, when that is ready, he will write the lyrics for Fain's tunes.

"Flahooley," produced by Cheryl Crawford, had a 40-performance run on Broadway last spring, involving a loss of $160,000, after receiving rave reviews and doing turnaway business during its Philly tryout.

Bobby Clark and Ralph Bellamy will be co-collies of The Lambs' first 1952 gambol Feb. 10, at its New York headquarters. It's to be a combination Installation-Valentine dinner-show.

Mike Abbott and Jack Mann will be assistant collies.

Only 17.7% of Equity Acted in Legit In '50-'51; Average Gross Income $790

More actors made less money in legit last season than during the 1949-50 semester. But both number of employed actors and average earnings were higher than two seasons ago. On the other hand, only 902 of the 5,111 professional actors employed during the season had gross earnings of $3,500, which Actors Equity figures an average reasonable living wage, considering such necessary expenses as stage wardrobe, makeup, photographs, phone calls, agent commissions, etc.

According to the results of survey published in the February issue of Equity magazine, out this week, the average gross income of actors from legit employment during the last season was $790. That compares with $840 for the previous stanza and $760 for the 1948-49 period. One-quarter of the employed actors made $340 or less during the 1950-51 season. The same segment of those who worked during the preceding semester made $335 or less, and $305 during 1948-49.

An equal proportion of the working players had gross earnings of $2,445 during 1950-51, as against $2,670 in 1949-50 and $2,540 in 1948-49. Compared to the 5,111 actors employed last season, 4,569 worked during 1949-50 and 4,692 in 1948-49. Equity's figures do not go back beyond three seasons ago.

10 Weeks' Work Average

A mere 224 actors, 4% of the union's 5,335 paid-up members, were not employed at all during 1950-51. The average legit employment of those who worked was 10 weeks. In the average week, only 17.7% of the union's total membership of 6,235 were employed in the theatre. The survey does not cover

Rosen Preps Barn Setup At Maplewood, N. J., House

Albert H. Rosen, Broadway producer and company manager, plans to reopen the Maplewood (N.J.) Theatre next summer as a strawhat. Deal for such a setup is reportedly about to be signed, with the owners of the property agreeing to install an air-conditioning plant in the building. Opening is tentatively slated for July 4 and a guest-star policy is contemplated.

Besides being partnered earlier this season with Lester Meyer in the production of "Never Say Never," Rosen presented "High Ground" last season and was coproducer with Herbert Jay Freezer several semesters ago in the revival of the Mae West starrer, "Diamond Lil." He was associated in the operation of the Montclair (N.J.) Playhouse several years ago.

Merman May Do 'Madam' in D.C.

"Call Me Madam" may curtail its Broadway run to play a short engagement in Washington with Ethel Merman. Idea is that the Irving Berlin-Howard Lindsay-Russel Crouse musical, with its strong political angle, would be a natural for the capital in this election year. It's noted that the proposed date in late May would be shortly before the scheduled national political conventions.

The plan involves several uncertain factors, including the question of whether Miss Merman would agree and whether the National Theatre could be obtained before Marcus Heiman's lease expires May 31. The date would presumably have to be before that, as Miss Merman is due on the Coast early in June to star in the film version of the musical. The National is now slated to become available for legit when Aldrich & Myers take over under a new lease June 1. It has been operating as a film house for the last several years, because Heiman refused the Actors Equity demand to abandon the racial discrimination policy ther

Mitzi Green is being considered for the Miss Merman part in "Call Me Madam" on the road next season. However, the situation is said to be wide open, with Miss Green by no means certain and various other femme singer-comediennes under consideration. Joan Blondell and Betty Garrett were reportedly approached about the assignment, but after thinking it over, withdrew from the running.

With Miss Merman withdrawing next May 31 at the expiration of her contract, the long-running musical is due to lay off for the summer.

Revised lyrics of "They Like Ike," bringing the song up to date with Gen. Eisenhower's presumed candidacy for the Republican nomination for the Presidency, are be-

Another 10% to Harmon Conn. Strawhat Backers

Backers of the Clinton (Conn.) Playhouse have received a 10% payment on their investment, bringing the total return thus far to 40%. The divvy represents profits on last summer's operation. Angle on the situation is that it's the first season that the spot has made money.

Clinton is operated by Lewis and Charlotte Harmon, who moved there last year after five seasons of managing the smaller Chapel Playhouse at nearby Guilford. They sold the latter spot at a profit last spring and acquired the Clinton location, which had incurred losses under previous managements.

The Harmons, who started strawhat operations at Guilford in 1946 wth an investment of $6,500, later increased the capitalization to $7,500. They paid off 30% of the coin during the five years at Guilford.

Havoc's Having a Baby, To Cause 'State' Bowout; Stoddard Seen for Tour

With June Havoc due to withdraw from the starring role in "Affairs of State" sometime this spring, Halla Stoddard, who has been her standby, will probably take over the part for the road. The Louis Verneuil comedy, produced by Richard Krakeur and Fred Finklehoffe, is tentatively due to continue through February at the Music Box, N. Y., but must vacate the house by March 9, as Irene M. Selznick's presentation of "Flight Into Egypt" is slated to open ther March 13.

Although Miss Havoc's contract reportedly calls for her to play Boston and Chicago, she may not be able to do so, as she is due for motherhood early next fall. In private life, she is the wife of radio-tele producer William Spier. Miss Stoddard, who will succeed her i "Affairs," is the wife of legit producer Harald Bromley, and recently closed in his presentation of "Glad Tidings."

With business improving the last couple of weeks, an attempt may be made to continue "Affairs" on Broadway more or less indefinitely. The switch to Sunday performances was figured to have helped business last week and two-for-ones may be tried as additional hypo. Other factors in the possible continuance might be the availability of another desirable Broadway house and the openings for road bookings, including guaranteed dates through Texas.

LaMure May Get Back 'Moulin' From Ferrer

Following several weeks of disagreement between Jose Ferrer and author Pierre LaMure on the production of the latter's play, "Moulin Rouge," which Ferrer was to have produced, the play may revert to its author this week.

LaMure has sought to get the play back from Ferrer, but the latter is returning it only on the condition that LaMure won't balk the film production of "Moulin," which John Huston is expected to produce in Europe this summer with Ferrer as the star. "Moulin" was originally written by LaMure as a novel and was a Random House bestseller.

The significance of "The Shrike" is Jose Ferrer. This is getting to be a serial on Broadway, which is just as well. A few more such dynamic triple-threat talents might invigorate the theatre, which has been steadily drying up for the last quarter-century. Anyway, "The Shrike" looks like a hit, and Ferrer continues a streak in which he apparently can't miss.

As in the case of Ferrer's revivals of "Cyrano de Bergerac" and "Twentieth Century" and his still-current production of "Stalag 17," this new play by Joseph Kramm is a property that was available to all the other Broadway managements. And in this instance, too, the success of the show not only has a distinctly personal quality, but appears to be something that Ferrer alone could have brought off. Despite its various other valuable elements, "Shrike" is Ferrer's show.

In the production approach, direction and above all in his own performance, Ferrer makes this combination "Snake Pit" and "Men in White" enthralling, terrifying drama. In a locale that might be taken for New York's Bellevue Hospital, the Kramm story shows how a neurotically possessive wife (the predatory bird of the play's title) poisons the minds of the doctors and staff against her estranged husband, who has tried to commit suicide.

Since it is a municipal institution and he has been taken there by a police emergency squad, he cannot leave until the authorities release him, or his wife insists. Moreover, when he is discharged, it must be in her custody. If such a situation can actually happen, and the author and Ferrer make an unwilling playgoer believe it can, it is a monstrous comment on the legal-medical conditions of what we call civilization.

At any rate, beginning with ominous quiet as the near-dead hero is wheeled into the hospital ward, the play moves through a succession of numerous short scenes, with the trapped victim slowly realizing, with growing horror and panic, the virtual hopelessness of his predicament. His wife has poisoned the minds of the smug, ritual-happy psychiatrists against him, and she will not authorize his release unless he agrees to return to her on her terms. Finally, in utter desperation as his self-control is near collapse, he gains a grim mockery of freedom as his wife's helpless, presumably permanent prisoner.

Besides supplying the expressively multi-colored, lithe direction, Ferrer gives a sternly-disciplined, affecting performance as the tortured hero. Judith Evelyn is believable in a persuasively-warped characterization as the lethal but plausible wife. Although they lack the suggestion of sympathy that a psychiatrist should display, Kendall Clark and Somer Alberg have the proper manner of self-satisfied professional self-satisfaction, as the hero's inquisitors. Isabel Bonner (the author's wife, incidentally), Will Kuluva, Philip Huston, Leigh Whipper, Will Lee, Tom Reynolds, Stephen Elliott, William Bush, Mary Bell, Edward Platt and Phyllis Hill (Mrs. Ferrer) are notable in the large supporting cast.

Howard Bay's setting, including single wall with a row of tall, screened windows, plus a few tables, chairs and props to indicate the various wards, offices and rooms, provides an ominous background for the action, and the Edith Lutyens costumes offer an assist.

Although the morbid quality of "The Shrike" will limit its mass popularity, the play's suspense, sympathetic appeal and the intensely personal impact (which strikes at an almost universal secret terror) should give it a healthy run. Also, it's a prospect for picturization. Hobe.

Desire Under the Elms

American National Theatre & Academy presentation of drama revival in three acts (12 scenes) by Eugene O'Neill. Features Karl Malden, Carol Stone, Douglas Watson, Lou Polan, George Mitchell. Directed by Harold Clurman; setting and lighting, Mordecai Gorelik; costumes, Ben Edwards. At ANTA Playhouse, N. Y., Jan. 16, '52, as first of five-play, limited-performance series; $20 top for series.

Another Man	John McLiam
Old Farmer	Howard H. Fischer
Woman	Minette Barrett

Neighbors: Elwyn Dearborn, Colleen Dewhurst, Don Elson, Norma Hayes, George Hoxie, Barbara Schultz, Jutta Wolfe.

After a 28-year absence, Eugene O'Neill's "Desire Under the Elms" is being given a smash revival under the auspices of the American National Theatre & Academy. "Desire" is the first of five limited-performance productions on ANTA's annual production schedule, and the initialer is an overpowering presentation that will be difficult to surpass in the series. There's no questioning its b.o. strength beyond the subscription backing.

"Desire" O'Neill at his best, and the passage of years has failed to dim his taut drama of lust and passion on a New England farm. ANTA, with Harold Clurman directing, has peopled the play with such excellent performers as Karl Malden, Douglas Watson and Carol Stone, and they distinguish a drama that has long since emerged as a classic in American playwriting.

"Desire" will be recalled as the story of the old farmer who brings home a young wife, and the complications that ensue with the resentment toward her by his three grown sons. Two of the sons storm out of the house, but the third remains to become enmeshed with his stepmother in a love triangle that finds her parenting the youth's child, while the father believes that the child is his own.

Other Folks: Albert Brush, Hume Derr, Donald Oenslager, Alama O'Neill, Lucy Shreve, Mary True, Ruza Wenclawska

It is drama within drama, as is pointed up by the subsequent tragedy that finds the young mother smothering the infant when the child threatens to become the focal point of the lovers' breakup. It is here that O'Neill rises to his peak with some of his tensest moments. It is all memorable theatre.

If there has been any questioning the starring potentialities to date of Watson, this must certainly be dispelled with his performance as Eben Cabot, the youngest son. Watson projects all the youthful passion that must certainly have been intended by the author. Malden is no less powerful as the father, in a characterization far different than anything he has yet played. It is a performance that is always full of vitality. Miss Stone gives the third in this trio of fine performances. Supporting players who go over are Lou Polan and George Mitchell, as the older brothers.

Mordecai Gorelik has designed an interesting two-level set in this one-set play, the interior of the farmhouse, and Clurman has staged his characters for pace following the initial 15 minutes of comparative inertia. But then the opening moments of any O'Neill play are inclined to be subdued theatre, until he gets rolling. When he does in "Desire" there is no doubt why he has become America's most-imitated playwright. Kahn.

Play Out of Town

Come of Age

Hartford, Jan. 16.

N. Y. City Center Theatre presentation of Guthrie McClintic production of drama in prolog and two acts (five scenes) by Clemence Dane and Richard Addinsell. Stars Judith Anderson; features Robert Brown, Melville Ruick, Robert Harrison, Muriel Rahn. Directed by McClintic. Settings by Raymond Sovey, from designs by James Reynolds; orchestra conducted by Macklin Marrow. At New Parsons, Hartford, Jan. 15, '52; $4.20 top.

Boy	Robert Brown
Shadow of Death	Robert Harrison
Woman	Judith Anderson
Man	Melville Ruick

Friends of the Woman: Jacqueline deWit, Phoebe Mackay, James Noble, Richard Barbee, Barbara Torrance, June Jollie, Marian Seldes, Peter Brandon, Gerry Jedd, James Bronson, Stephen Reese, Ethel Colt, Lita Del Porto, Bill Krach

Entertainer	Muriel Rahn
Orchestra Leader	Macklin Marrow
Duo Pianists	George Bauer, Jack Eisenberg
River Music	Beverly Hosier
Singer for	Thomas Motta

"Come of Age," last seen in New York in 1934, seems likely to again go under wraps after its City Center, N. Y., presentation next week (23). On opening night Tuesday (15) a defective sound system forced the temporary abandonment of a 16-piece orchestra. Instead, a duo of pianists in the wings subbed. One of the players was composer Richard Addinsell. With a house of the smallness and intimacy of the New Parsons, it seems the orchestra could have fulfilled its part without amplification, instead of being stilled.

Although "Age" is labelled "a play in music and words," it is a mixture of pretension and poetry. Addinsell has lent it a score that is thoroughly integrated with the plot. Music, opening night, was played too loudly by the piano duo and was reminiscent of a cocktail lounge offering.

In this recreated plot, playwright Clemence Dane chose as her literary liberty and pretension the suicide of the young 18th-century English poet, Thomas Chatterton. Her prolog has him at his suicide bedside, at the age of 17, bargaining with Death for a return to life until 21, so that he can learn life, its pangs and pleasures. Play shows his return to life in the current century and how he finds love, eventually loathing life and returning to Death.

From the time of his return to and departure from life, the poet is the lover of a middleaged woman in modern, cocktail-imbibing London. As the frustrated woman, Judith Anderson (who also had the lead in the 1934 presentation) turns in her usual artistic thesping. Her drunken scene at the cocktail party, and later her plea at the door of her youthful lover, are standouts. Her role is brief but brilliant.

Robert Brown, as the young poet, also turns a stirring performance. Murial Rahn and Thomas Motta sell high-quality vocal efforts with minimum effort as the singers for the woman and the boy, respectively. Melville Ruick, as another lover, turns in an okay performance as do remaining cast-members. Direction by Guthrie McClintic is fast-moving and well-balanced. Raymond Sovey settings, from designs by James Reynolds, are lavish and lush. Eck.

Springfield Playgoers In Dissolve to Ready New Legit Road Setup

Springfield, Mass., Jan. 22.

The Playgoers of Springfield, a non-profit organization of 100 charter members, formed 11 years ago to bring legit back to this city, was formally dissolved last week (16), to make way for a commercial enterprise, The Court Square Co., Inc., which will take over operation of the Court Square Theatre March 1.

Officers and directors of the new company, including president Harvey Preston and executive director Elihu Glass have been enlisted from The Playgoers.

First major attraction under the new management will be "Member of the Wedding," April 21, when the Court Square will be reopened after a major cleanup job. House has been operating on second run and vaude, with legit spaced in whenever it didn't interfere with other operations. Legit stymie by this part-time policy is one of the reasons local interests took over. Lease of E. M. Lowe's of Boston, from the Gilmore Associates, expires Feb. 28.

Local organization hopes the city will eventually become a part of the New Haven, Hartford, Worcester, Providence wheel for touring shows.

Inside Stuff—Legit

Mixup in the shipment of the scenery for "Venus Observed" from England has required a switch in the schedule for the play's tryout in Philly and the previews before the Broadway opening. The Philly engagement, originally slated to preem Friday night (25) and continue through Feb. 1, skipping the final two performances Saturday, Feb. 2, is now set to open next Monday (28) and run the full two weeks through Feb. 9. Instead of a week of previews at the Century, N.Y., the Theatre Guild production will have two paid previews Feb. 11-12 and its originally scheduled premiere Feb. 13. Altered plans mean that Laurence Olivier, doubling as stager from his co-starring appearance with Vivien Leigh in the "Caesar and Cleopatra" and "Antony and Cleopatra" repertory at the Ziegfeld, N.Y., will have to commute to and from Philly a few additional days. Situation occurred through a misunderstanding, when the scenery used in the original London production was put on the wrong vessel for shipment to the U.S., arriving 10 days later than intended.

Backers of "Gertie," Herman Shumlin production of the Enid Bagnold comedy due Jan. 30 at the Plymouth, N.Y., include Phyllis Perlman, the show's pressagent, $300; playwright S. N. Behrman and his brothers H. J. and M. H. Behrman, $650 each; former publisher George Backer, $650; lighting company exec Edward F. Kook, $1,300; St. Louis theatre owner John G. Cella, $1,300; theatre executive and manager, Louis A. Lotito, $1,300; television producer Max Liebman, $1,300; Shumlin himself, $2,600; San Francisco realtor and financier Louis R. Lurie, $2,600;; Herman Bernstein, general manager for producer Leland Hayward, representing the latter, $2,925; producer-theatre owner Anthony Brady Farrell, $5,000, and John F. Waters, representing theatre owner Lee Shubert, $21,667. The venture is capitalized at $65,000, with provision for 12½% overcall.

Julie Harris, recently upped to stardom "I Am a Camera," has verbally assured producers Gertrude Macy and Walter Starcke that she will continue with the John van Druten play next fall, either on Broadway or the road. She told them that she will probably accept producer Stanley Kramer's offer to re-enact her original role in the film edition of "Member of the Wedding," to star Ethel Waters, provided shooting is done during the summer, when "Camera" would presumably lay off. Miss Harris has a run-of-the-play contract for "Camera," expiring May 31, and a verbal agreement with Kramer for "Wedding."

Corporate name of Thomas Hammond's touring production of "Candida," starring Olivia de Havilland, has been changed from De Havilland Co. to Candida Co. Reason for the switch is that the former tag was already being used by the airplane firm owned by Sir Geoffrey de Havilland, who incidentally is the actress' uncle. No other switch was involved in the renaming of production, Hammond remaining as sole general partner and the same backers continuing as limited partners.

Negotiations for a resuscitation of the Coast production of "My L.A." by Wallace R. Parnell have been called off because of "insurmountable difficulties," and virtually all hope has been abandoned for the revue, which folded in L.A. after three days with a loss of around $300,000, of which $173,000 was raised through the public sale of stock. An emergency committee of stockholders now is trying to round up enough coin for an audit of the books. An additional $500 is needed to complete the task of refunding tickets.

ence comment has been favorable, both on the show and the star's performance, and there has been considerable mail to the management expressing disagreement with the notices.

The Cassidy Gauntlet

The outstanding critic in Chicago, both prestige and in severity of opinions, is Claudia Cassidy, of the Tribune. She has acquired a rep in trade circles for her rough pans of touring productions and scathing raps of stars, especially Hollywood players. Moreover, the other local reviewers are apparently following Miss Cassidy's lead is writing more critical notices. Evidence of such a trend was especially evident in the case of "Candida," but was noted in the cases of "Anne of the Thousand Days" and "Lost in the Stars," both of which abruptly ended their tours in Chicago after poor notices there.

Odd angle of the "Joan" situation is that it's understood that one of the reasons Miss Hagen declined to go on the road with the show; was the possibility that Miss Cassidy is supposed in some quarters to be predisposed against shows staged by Margaret Webster. However, the Chi Trib critic saw the revival on a visit to New York a month or more ago, and wrote a piece in her paper praising it generally, and approving Miss Webster's direction and the star's performance specifically.

Although Miss Cassidy was thus presumably committed in advance to give "Joan" a favorable notice in Chicago with Miss Hagen in the title part, the situation is obviously wide open when the production gets there with Miss Jones as star. The latter is not actually signed for the stint, but she's figured set and is due to start rehearsals in a few days. Eduardo Ciannelli is replacing Alexander Scourby as Cauchon for the road.

Fritz Reiner doubled between the Metropolitan Opera and Carnegie Hall, N. Y., Saturday (19), conducting Strauss' "Salome" at the Met in the afternoon and the NBC Symphony less than an hour after the curtain fall on the matinee performance.

N.Y. City Opera to Preem Modern Trio; 'Amahl' Set for Cleve. as Well

Karamu Players, semi-pro Negro legit group in Cleveland, has received right to do the Gian-Carlo Menotti TV operatic drama, "Amahl and the Night Visitors," which had a sock telecast Xmas Eve. Group is producing it early March for reportedly the preem stage presentation. Opus will also be done by the N. Y. City Opera Co., April 9, in a double-bill with Menotti's "Old Maid and the Thief."

N. Y. City Opera Co. will present three new productions during its six-week spring season at City Center, N. Y., March 20-April 27. Three are "Amahl"; the late Kurt Weill's "The Beggar's Opera," in a new translation and adaptation by Marc Blitzstein, and Alban Berg's controversial "Wozzek."

Trio of preems is not only as much as the N. Y. opera troupe has presented in one season, but it reportedly heralds a strong move on the part of the organization towards the modern wing of opera. Instead of concentrating on European novelties (like "Ariadne") to supplement the classics (like "Aida," "Traviata"), N. Y. troupes tendency seems now to be to do living composers' material or contemporary themes where possible, doing work of the current period. Berg died only a few years ago, and Weill more recently, while Menotti and Blitzstein are busily current.

"The Beggar's Opera" was produced originally in Germany in 1928 and had over 2,000 performances there alone. Original music is unchanged, Blitzstein adding some tunes and transferring locale to the N. Y. of 1870. "Wozzek" preemed in Berlin in 1925. Members of the Philadelphia Grand Opera Assn. performed it at the N. Y. Met, under Leopold Stokowski, in 1931, but it's never been in the repertoire of a regular U. S. opera company.

Mpls. Expects One of Best Seasons in Legit With 20 Attractions for Lyceum

Minneapolis, Jan. 22.

This promises to be the most active season for the Lyceum here, since the Nederlanders, of Detroit, took over four years ago, judging by the number of attractions that already have played the house and the one underlined.

Theatre already has had 10 attractions, compared to a total of 13 for all of last season. The lineup has comprised "Springtime for Henry" (two weeks), "Guys and Dolls" (10 days), "Mister Roberts," "Autumn Garden," "Candida" and "Cocktail Party" for a week each; the first Drama Quartet and Ballet Theatre three days each, and the London Opera Co. in "Carmen" for two days. House also had the film "Tales of Hoffmann" for three weeks on a roadshow basis.

Definitely set for the next several months are "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes" for eight days, and "Oklahoma," "Member of the Wedding" and Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo for a week each. Tentative bookings for the late winter also include "Darkness at Noon," "The Rose Tattoo," "Bell, Book and Candle," "The Moon Is Blue," Lewis & Young's "The Happy Time" and "The Student Prince." If everything comes through, the house will wind up with 20 attractions to its credit.

Up to the present, seven of the 10 attractions have done well.

SADLER'S FINE $48,700 IN SEVEN-STAND SPLIT

Sadler's Wells Theatre Ballet had another fine week of split stands, rolling up $48,700 in seven performances last week. Troupe garnered a hugh $8,800 in Shreveport Monday (14); $7,700 in Little Rock, Tuesday; $6,600 in Springfield, Mo., Wednesday, and $25,600 in four shows at Kansas City Thursday through Saturday.

Troupe is in Chicago all this week.

'Cocktail' 8G In 4, K.C.

Kansas City, Jan. 22.

Legit followers had a choice of two shows here last weekend, "The Cocktail Party," playing a three-day stand in the Orpheum Theatre, while Sadler's Wells Theatre Ballet played a three-day stand in the Music Hall. Both attractions played Thursday through Saturday, with matinee Saturday (19).

Ballet, brought in by impresario Walter Fritschy, was virtually a sellout at each performance. Four shows topped $25,600, with a $4.88 top. The T. S. Eliot play at the Orpheum drew an unfavorable review, and never got going. Its four shows, with a $3.66 top, figured $8,000.

"Oklahoma" opened a week's engagement Sunday (20) in the Orpheum, being brought in by John Antonello and playing at a $4.27 top.

'Garden' OK $12,400 In Strike-Bound Toronto

Toronto, Jan. 22.

Despite a city-wide streetcar and bus strike, Fredric March and Florence Eldridge in "Autumn Garden" grossed a fair $12,400, with the Royal Alexandra (1,525-seater) scaled at a $3 top.

Current fortnight's engagement of "Guys and Dolls" had an advance sale of nearly $90,000, mostly mail orders, with a heavy return list of these. Royal Alexandra is sold out for all performances except matinees to date. At $6 top, capacity for the two weeks will be $96,000.

Greco $21,600, D.C.

Washington, Jan. 22.

The Jose Greco Spanish Ballet built steadily during its two-week run at the Gayety Theatre, winding up the second week with $21,600 in the till, $4,000 better than the opening chukker.

Shubert's hardy evergreen, "Student Prince," opened at the Gayety last night (21) for its umpteenth D. C. appearance. Business started fairly strong.

'BLONDES' SOCK $71,700 IN ST. LOUIS STANZA

St. Louis, Jan. 22.

"Gentlemen Prefer Blondes," ($4.88; 4,000) shifted to the 4,000-seater Municipal Auditorium, had SRO biz throughout its stand last week, the eight performances grabbing a whammo $71,700 at a $4.88 top. Adding a take of $9,400 for the Sunday night (20) opening of the musical at KRNT Theatre, Des Moines, gave it a total of $81,125 for the eight performance week, the best stanza it has ever had. "Clutterbuck," at the Empress, at $2 top this midtown 1,450-seat house, wound up with an estimated fair $8,000.

American Theatre, dark five weeks, reopened last night (Mon.) with "The Cocktail Party," with Dennis King, Estelle Winwood and Julie Haydon. "Over 21," with Ilka Chase, begins a week's run at the Empress tonight (Tues.).

'Sundays' 16G in 6, 'Jane' 15½G, Philly

Philadelphia, Jan. 22.

Philly has only two legit attractions currently showing this week, because holdup on high seas of scenery of "Venus Observed" has set that show's American preem back until next Monday (28) at the Shubert. With this house and the Locust dark, city's only activity is centered around the Forrest and Walnut which have "A Month of Sundays" and "Jane," respectively.

Estimates for Last Week

"A Month of Sundays," Forrest (1st week) ($4.55; 1,760). Opened Wednesday night (16) to bad notices. Got scant $16,000 in six performances (matinee Thursday). Show closes for repairs Saturday. House dark until Feb. 14, when "Curtain Going Up" preems.

"Student Prince," Shubert (2nd week) ($3.25; 1,870). Terrific trade for this oldie, with absolute capacity at end of week; $26,500—very big for this scale. "Venus Observed" next Monday.

"Jane," Walnut (1st week) ($3.90; 1,340). Got fair $15,500 in first of two weeks on ATS subscription. Notices were not too good. Management has decided to hold show here for three extra days, instead of moving to Hartford as planned. Theatre's next offering is on Feb. 4, "Dear Barbarians."

'TATTOO' FINE $18,400 IN CLEVELAND STANZA

Cleveland, Jan. 22.

Fortified by an extra-good advance sale, "Rose Tattoo" punched out a fine $18,400 at a $3.70 top at the Hanna last week.

Rosalind Russell and Dennis Price came in Wednesday (21) in "Bell, Book and Candle." Hanna opened mail order sale of "Guys and Dolls" Sunday (20), and was almost buried under a flood of requests. Due Feb. 4 for two weeks, tuneshow already has had half of its tickets grabbed off by theatre's regular subscribers, who have first choice on best seats.

'Bell, Book' Sock $30,800 In Week at Pittsburgh

Pittsburgh, Jan. 22.

"Bell, Book and Candle," with Rosalind Russell and Dennis Price co-starred, was a boxoffice bonfire last week at the Nixon here, grossover $30,800. That was only a trifle under the house record set last season by Henry Fonda in "Mister Roberts."

Efforts are being made to bring the Shepard Traube production back for a repeat stand later in the season.

Raymond-'Voice' $3,400 In Baltimore Arena

Baltimore, Jan. 22.

Gene Raymond, in "Voice of the Turtle," attracted fairish trade to Don Swann's season of theatre-in-the-round at the Sheraton Belvedere Hotel, winding up with $3,400.

Joan Blondell, in "Come Back, Little Sheba," is current.

'Roberts' $37,300 Split

Sacramento, Jan. 22.

Not even disastrous flood conditions throughout the region could stop "Mister Roberts" last week.

The Thomas Heggen-Joshua Logan play, with Tod Andrews starred, grossed a huge $37,300 in eight performances over five stands, all first appearances for the show in those towns.

B'way B.O. Zooms; 'Christie' $36,200, 'S.P.' OK $46,300, 'Wagon' Up to $44,200, 'Poster,' 'Camera,' 'Gigi' to New Highs

Broadway took a big jump last week. Following the seasonal boxoffice pattern, business spurted to the top average of recent years, with all shows participating in the improved conditions.

The total gross for all 23 shows was $720,900, or 89% of capacity (for the corresponding week last year the total gross for all 27 current shows was $718,100, or 82% of capacity, a rise of 4% from the week before).

Week before last the total for all 25 shows was $695,700, or 79%, a rise of 1%.

Of the new entries, "The Shrike" got a seven-out-of-eight break from the first-string critics and started briskly, while the limited-run "Desire Under the Elms" also got a seven-to-one favorable reception and has been extended an extra two weeks. "Fancy Meeting You Again" was panned and folded Saturday night (19).

There is only a single opening this week, a revival of "Come of Age" arriving tonight (Wed.) for a limited run at the City Center.

'Paris' $28,000, 'Gertie' 14G, Hub

Boston, Jan. 22.

Only one legit entry this stanza —the new comedy "Gertie," which winds a two-week stint at the Plymouth this week. Three newcomers are skedded for next week (28), "The Autumn Garden" bowing into the Colonial for two weeks; "Merry Widow" into the Shubert for a two-weeker, and Emlyn Williams presenting a series of Dickens' readings at the Plymouth for one week.

Estimates for Last Week

"Gertie," Plymouth (1st wk) (1,200; $3.60).—Not too much reaction, near $14,000. Final week current.

"Paris '90," Shubert one wk) (1,700; $3.60)—Nifty $28,000. House currently dark.

'DOLLS' SOCK $53,500; 'NOON' $16,000, DETROIT

Detroit, Jan. 22.

A phenomenal $203,000 was grossed by "Guys and Dolls" in a four-week run at the Shubert. It was a record-breaker from every standpoint and probably could have continued at a $50,000-a-week clip for several more weeks, judging from the number of persons unable to get tickets. The fourth week gross was $53,500. Shubert now has a week of Jose Greco's Spanish Ballet. Then comes "Bell, Book and Candle."

The second week of "Darkness at Noon" at the Cass grossed $16,000, a drop of $4,000 from the first week take. Current presentation is "Rose Tattoo," in for a fortnight.

'Wedding' $19,200, S.F.

San Francisco, Jan. 22.

"Member of the Wedding," with Ethel Waters and Betty Lou Holland, concluded its fourth and final stanza at the 1,775-seat Geary, Saturday (19), chalking up a big $19,200, despite flood conditions hereabouts.

'Gents' Mgr.'s New Peripatetic Office Seen Answer to Old Roadshow Need

St. Louis, Jan. 22.

In recent years, with conditions on the road erratic at best, one of the great questions facing company managers is often: "Where's my desk?" Now that many big musical comedies are booking nonlegit houses, playing auditoriums and amphitheatres, company managers have found themselves making out payrolls in closets, furnace rooms and lavatories.

Joe Grossman, with "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes," believes he has solved the problem, and is considering filing for a U. S. patent. He has invented what he calls "the company manager's mobile office."

This is a huge traveling box, about twice the size of the usual wardrobe trunk, on casters, the top and front of which open and reveal a complete manager's office: desk top, metal safe box under lock, side racks for letter files and stationery equipment, compartment for, and including, adding machine and portable typewriter, metal drawers for statements, and the multiple business ledgers and sheets.

Grossman's 300-pound portable office includes 12 brackets for holding rubber stamps, and, perhaps most important of all, a pencil-sharpener neatly screwed to the inside of the frame. He also carries shaving equipment in a special compartment.

Grossman's peripatetic office is a handsome affair painted battleship-grey and standing 52 inches, with 20-inch depth and 36-inch front. It represents about $500 worth of equipment and building cost and is now on its maiden voyage, having been constructed in Chicago while the Carol Channing show was there. Grossman said labor was $125, adding machine $120, typewriter $109, with $43 for machinists theft-proof metal cabinet and the rest of the cost in hardware and lumber.

Grossman's ambulatory office also includes electric connections sunk into the rear panel, and he is prepared for any kind of light equipment. No matter where he sets up office, Grossman claims, he is ready in five minutes to go to work, and they haven't invented a problem he can't handle, including his own illumination.

Kungsholm Puppet Opera Back at Chi Stand After 4-Year Gap, 467G Fixup

Chicago, Jan. 22.

Kungsholm Puppet Opera, dormant for the last four years, reopened last week. The most elaborate permanent puppet installation in the country, it cost $467,000 and took 18 months to rebuild after a disastrous fire.

Boasting a complete stage with a $15,000 lighting system, the building, adjunct of the swank Kungsholm eatery, seats 208, about double its previous capacity. It was build by Frederik Chramer, and is under the management of Karl Lanfcotter, former Metopera, N. Y., tenor, who will have 10 opera students under his wing to operate the 3,000 figurines.

Past sked called for 300 performances a year. When the theatre closed in 1947, requests for seats were taken four months in advance. House is patterned after the Royal Opera House in Copenhagen. "Madam Butterfly" was the open-

Twin Cities' RKO Houses See Snub; Ran Trailers On 'Gents' But Lyceum Got It

Minneapolis, Jan. 22.

When "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes" inaugurated a legitimate roadshow policy at the RKO Palace in Chicago, both local RKO filmhouses, the Orpheum and Pan, as well as the St. Paul Orpheum and other RKO theatres, ran long screen trailers plugging the attraction, urging those going to Chicago to see it, and offering to obtain seat reservations. These trailers were run during the show's entire Chicago engagement. They were attractive and included shots of scantily-clad beautiful gals, along with descriptions calculated to arouse a desire to witness the musical.

It now develops that the two RKO theatres here, and the one in St. Paul, actually were helping to create business for a local, opposition theatre, the Lyceum. "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes" is coming to Minneapolis Saturday (26) for eight days, but instead of being housed at the Twin Cities RKO theatres, the Lyceum gets it. Local show circles feel sure that the trailers helped to create an audience here for the show.

ing written by Irving Berlin. They will be inserted into "Call Me Madam" in place of the present version, as soon as Berlin completes them. He's currently working on them at Nassau, Bahamas.

Fact that Berlin, and Howard Lindsay and Russel Crouse, coauthors of the "Madam" book, as well as stager George Abbott and producer Leland Hayward, are all members of the Citizens Committee for Eisenhower, removes any prospect of protest over substitution of the new lyrics. The song is sung in the show by Pat Harrington, Ralph Chambers and Jay Velie.

Another rewrite of the same song, retitled "I Like Ike," has been prepared by Berlin for performance at a "Draft Eisenhower for President" rally Feb. 8 at Madison Square Garden, N. Y. Joshua Logan will stage the show, which will be televised and broadcast.

European Scrapbook
(LENOX HILL PL'H'SE, N. Y.)

Two out of three selections score in the "European Scrapbook," at the Lenox Hill Playhouse, second in the Equity Library Theatre's series designed as one-hour programs for high schools, and aimed at attracting young audiences to legit with these professional samples of the classics.

Unlike the heavy-handed ELT "Shakespeare Scrapbook" (reviewed in VARIETY, May 30), the scenes from "Anatole" and from "The Importance of Being Earnest" both emerge with considerable style, charm and comedy, thanks to their direction.

Director Mary Hunter gives a brittle, buoyant interpretation of "The Farewell Supper" scene from the Schnitzler play, with James Lanphier best of the cast of three as the mercurial Anatole. James Costigan is fidgety but adequate as the confidant, Max, and Betty Morrissey has pertness and good looks as the girl whose cheating caps Anatole's, but her labored drunk scene spoils the play's spirit of high comedy.

Ernestine Perrie, whose "The Enchanted" direction was an ELT topnotcher last season, directed "The Importance of Being Earnest" selection from Act II with a crisp stylization which brings out the sharp wit in the lines and the satire in the plot. The quartet of actors carries out this design very well: Elizabeth Parrish as Gwendolen, James Lanphier as Earnest, Betty Morrissey as Cecily and James Costigan as Algernon.

Most unfortunate in its choice and interpretation is the "balcony scene" from Act III of "Cyrano de Bergerac." Lacking action, this loquacious Rostand scene requires lyrical powers of delivery which are lacking in John Lormer's Cyrano. Elizabeth Parrish is not credible as the spell-bound Roxanne and Porter van Zandt's inarticulate Christian is not much better.

Though designed for the N. Y. city public schools, the "Scrapbook" productions have been finding their best customers in N. Y. State and N. J. private schools, because funds to cover the presentation in the city's public schools ($75 per showing) are not available, since teachers nixed extra-curricular activities which raise money for such purposes. "Scrapbook" is unable to charge admission, condition set by the Fact Finding Committee when it granted union concessions to the project.

employment or earnings in television, radio, films or other fields.

Only 1,469 members had gross earnings of $2,000 or more during 1950-51, compared with 1,455 the preceding year and 1,400 in 1948-49. Fewer than one in eight made $5,000 or more, less than one in 20 earned more than $10,000 and, in the higher brackets, only 24 individuals hit the $50,000 level, while six topped $100,000 and two reached the $150,000 mark.

As always since the growth of strawhat theatres, actor employment reached an annual peak in mid-July, when 1,991 players, or 32.3% of the total Equity membership, had jobs. Of this number, 1,491 were playing in stock and the balance on Broadway and the road. There were 2,545 actors who appeared in at least one show on Broadway or the road and 3,058 in at least one barn production. There were also 826 players who worked in winter stock during 1950-51. Paid-up membership in the union hit a peak of 5,733 last October out of a total membership of 6,689 at the time.

The annual employment survey was conducted again under the direction of Alan Hewitt, a featured player in "Call Me Madam" and a former member of the union's council.

Theatre '52 in its sixth Dallas season, cancelled a performance for the first time last Tuesday (15) when actor Peter Donat was stricken with food poisoning just before the curtain, and was rushed to Parkland Hospital. Young Donat, nephew of English filmite Robert Donat, had been playing Lysander in "Midsummer Night's Dream" for three weeks when stricken. He returned to the cast for two performances Wednesday (16).

Thieves' Carnival

London, Jan. 8.

London Arts Theatre Committee production of play in three acts; translated by Lucienne Hill from Jean Anouilh's "Le Bal des Voleurs." Directed by Roy Rich. At Arts Theatre Club, London.

Peterbono	John Laurie
Hector	Harold Lang
Gustave	Robin Bailey
Lord Edgard	Wyndham Goldie
Lady Hurf	Judith Furse
Eva	Maxine Audley
Juliette	lizabeth Henson
Dupont-Dufort Sr.	David Bird
Dupont-Dufort Jr.	Gerald Harper
The Musician	Tutte Lemkow
Policeman	Derek Rosen

Nursemaid	Sara Luzita
Little Girl	Alicia Holt

This 10-year-old Anouilh comedy is gayer and more whimsical than his recent cynical offerings. It has a haunting artistry, with delicate backgrounds and a flute-like running accompaniment that enhance its ethereal quality. However, it lacks the stamina of "Ring Round the Moon," which was one of London's biggest successes. Its production outside this small club would be a big gamble, and it will not likely appeal in the U. S. unless in a very small house.

Story is unfolded to miming antics and piping by an "invisible" Pan, who occasionally acts as prop supplier in the Chinese tradition. Three thieves rob each other at a French coast resort until their disguise is penetrated revealing master and two student pickpockets. Posing as Spanish Grandees, they get invited to a wealthy home by a lonely peeress. The party set out in costume for a carnival, during which the youngest crook cleans out the treasures. He has fallen in love with a niece of the household who surprises him in the act. She is so infatuated with him that she insists on going with him. But when she falls asleep in his car, he carries her home and returns the stolen property. The second of the trio relentlessly pursues the other heiress niece, who finally succumbs to his charm. When the family discover the looted home the police are sent for, but the stately hostess refuses to prosecute. She has known all along that her guests were imposters and has entertained them from sheer boredom.

John Laurie, Harold Lang and Robin Bailey make a likeable assortment of rogues while Maxine Audley and Elizabeth Henson are an attractive pair of marriageable femmes. Judith Furse plays the sanest character in the play with a sweeping air of logical indifference, that of the aging aunt seeking for adventure before she is too old. Wyndham Goldie has little to do but tag along after the others and look the characteristic English Milord abroad. David Bird and Gerald Harper enact a tiresome father and son who hover round hoping to marry some of the available millions. Tutte Lemkow, provides by expression and movement alone a sympathetic, and musical type of hovering Harlequin.

Some neat and picturesque ballet work is supplied by Derek Rosen, Derek Westlake, Sara Luzita, Alicia Holt, with the whole presentation artistically directed by Roy Rich.

La Main de Cesar
(The Hand of Caesar)

Paris, Jan. 8.

Marcel Karsenty and Pierre Dux production of three-act play by Andre Roussin. Stars Pierre Blanchar, Pierre Dux. Directed by Andre Roussin. Sets by Philippe Tallien. At Theatre de Paris.

Madame Chantemoutarde	Annie Monnier
Mireille	Antoinette Moya
Pedalugue	Georges Dany
Cernacci	Louis Faure

The play is not the thing this time. This Andre (petite Hutee) Roussin comedy in the big Theatre de Paris will cover the huge cast expense due to Roussin's name because of the fine production given the play by operators Pierre Dux and Marcel Karsenty and the fact that both Pierre Blanchar and Dux himself are matinee idols. Added assets are comedienne Milly Mathis and femme impersonator Charpini, both being very popular with the masses here. But apart from a few yocks which Roussin could not fail to insert in the lines, the script is below par and there is nothing in it for either Broadway or Hollywood.

The first act is an imitation of the Marcel Pagnol style of Marseillaise comedies. The second stands on an imitation of the funny scene in Jacques Deval's "Rayon de Jouets" take-off of classical tragedy. The third one is a chaser.

The story concerns an apothecary of a French southern village, Roman-tragedy minded, having penned a play, "The Hand of Caesar." This is to be produced by a village cast supporting one professional comedie Francaise actor who is to act Nero. The play is meant to establish the village as an important resort. When this act is unable to appear recruited amateurs muddle the play, but the druggist attracts attention at least to the village.

Pierre Blanchar, as the druggist, manages to remain blind to what is going on with a sock performance. Pierre Dux in the part of the friend, who tries to open his eyes, also scores. Charpini in a minor role gets plenty of laughs, as does Milly Mathis as a peasant woman. Others an the cast including Jacqueline Gauthier, as the guilty woman, give creditable performances.

The Roussin direction is fair. The producers have given the play nice mounting. On the Roussin's and Blanchar names, it may tempt a French film producer to make a quickie. Otherwise, nothing.

Dinner for her will be emceed by Bennett Cerf, of Random House, who's rapidly becoming known as "The George Jessel of the publishing business." Cerf, who with his wife, Phyllis, is on his way to La Quinta for a month's vacation, will lecture in Evanston, Tulsa and Los Angeles.

During his absence, his "Trade Winds" column in the Saturday Review will be taken over by Laura Hobson. Substituting for him on the "What's My Line" tele show will be Arthur Schwartz, Joseph Mankiewicz and Howard Dietz.

Because Robert Sherwood, chief contributor to Collier's "War We Did Not Want" symposium, backed out after checking with D. C. officials, the issue wont be put out in book form (by Simon & Schuster) as originally planned. Sherwood admitted the mag's motives had been misinterpreted, and would be further misunderstood in book form, with possible repercussions abroad. Hence the nix.

Legit Suburbia

ity of the theatre is rapidly becoming the local skidrow.

This trend of many cities to move away from themselves is well known to department store and hotel men, and the result is that in these more successfully organized business fields the issue is being met. Big new hotels for Pittsburgh and Cleveland, now planned or under construction, are being built nearer the city limits than to the old financial district. Department stores, such as J. L. Hudson of Detroit, are following the population tide. Hudson has plans for three monster new community shopping centres, with a branch of their store located in the heart of all three in a radius of eight miles from the Cass Theatre.

This emptying of the great cities at the close of the day's work is not new, and occurs in New York as elsewhere, but with a vast difference when studied in relation to road cities and theatregoing.

Cities such as New York, Boston and even Philadelphia have extensive rapid transit facilities. This is not true of Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Detroit and St. Louis. Traveling at night is slow and tedious.

Moreover, even more than the east, people in the midwest all have motorcars and they go where they can go in comfort their cars.

In addition to the great old theatres being located in areas now abandoned after dark, many of these theatres are on narrow downtown streets with severe parking restrictions, limited parking facilities and other hazards which make going to the theatre in an automobile costly and problematical.

Parking Importance

As an example of how important parking is considered by department store executives, J. L. Hudson is providing parking facilities for 3,500 automobiles in its Northland development in Detroit, and has actually purchased land for expanding this, if necessary. The parking will be free, of course.

In St. Louis recently, management made a curtain speech at Kiel Auditorium during a symphony concert saying that the parking problem was now being studied, and that a system of buses was being inaugurated to bring people in from the suburbs. It was hoped this move would facilitate attendance, and restore subscriptions to a former level.

Milton Krantz, manager of the Hanna Theatre in Cleveland, has developed a deal with an indoor garage for inexpensive parking for Hanna theatregoers. Krantz feels the theatre should not only provide parking, but most carriage trade likes to enter a warm car after leaving the theatre—thus the indoor parking rather than an outside lot.

Another bit of evidence which seems to point up this great shift in gravity is that the various successful community playhouses in these cities are all located halfway or completely in the suburbs. The Pittsburgh Playhouse is three miles from downtown; Cleveland's four miles, and both do a husky winter-long trade.

Real Estate Problem

Many road managers are fully aware of the problem, but solution seems out-of-sight. Decline of the road has placed many theatres in the red; some of them are owned by trust companies for estates, and in general, building or moving money doesn't exist. Banks are reluctant to lend money for building either motion picture or legit theatres. They are as stranded as Robinson Crusoe.

The one practical solution would be to pick up shop and follow the customers to the suburbs, building new legit houses into these modernistic and attractive shopping centres now under plan or construction. Department store people admit they would like to include every shopping facility in their new centres, and might welcome a theatre. They have already been approached by motion picture interests.

The ideal solution, as discussed with several theatre managers along the road, would be to take the theatre out of the real estate business entirely.

There is great likelihood that the day of prosperous operation of the road theatre is a thing of the past. The road theatre of tomorrow may have to become a civic or culturally endowed theatre, built by public subscription, and maintained for multiple uses, including concert, lecture, ballet and special events.

New Shopping Centres

If such theatres could be built as part of these new suburban shopping centres—such as the great new one on Shaker Heights in Cleveland—many factors might contribute to reduce the overhead and lighten the ultimate financial load for the touring attraction. First item is that these new centres are in low tax areas, sometimes out of the city tax limits altogether. Second item is that if municipally or civicly subscribed, they might be available on cost-plus rentals rather than percentages of the gross, which would reduce the touring nut by as much as 25%.

Actually, the means with which these theatres could be moved do exist. Some of the road theatres occupy valuable property as potential office building sites. One estate was recently offered a handsome price for its theatre to be converted into a garage and parking motel. Sentiment plays a big role in this stalemate—for the wealthy estates controlling these theatres rather cling to the thought of keeping their family name on the marquee. However, if the downtown theatre in the city was moved into a more desirable suburban location—with name, tradition, and community sentiment—perhaps this block would be overcome.

One plan recently proposed calls for a new kind of legit theatre entirely—a sort of indoor drive-in theatre, a vast area for parking in the centre of which is the modern, legitimate theatre. Cars can be driven under protecting winter roofs and patrons walk under shed to the theatre entrance. Same plans call for a theatre with an audience built out from both back and front of the stage—one house seating 3,000 and the other house seating 600 or 800 persons, with two asbestos curtains for blocking off whichever house is not used for a particular attraction.

The advantage of this two-way theatre would be adaptability to various community needs, main objective of the suburban theatre being to keep the building constantly in use, a focal point of nighttime rural-city activity with people coming and going constantly. There is nothing worse than the dark week, which has become the nightmare of every road manager from Philadelphia to Los Angeles. The effect on the morale of the managers is almost as bad as the effect on the boxoffice.

These new suburban shopping centres may be the new cities of tomorrow, in this kind of cell-like sub-dividing which is going on in municipal inland America. If this is so, and the legitimate theatre finds a way to follow its patrons, the day could come when a city like Detroit would have three or four suburban theatres and a road show would play a circuit around the city, doing two-night stands in each theatre. In Cleveland, for instance, the east and west halves of the city are 25 miles apart.

The residential emptying of these great road cities with its consequence of social change everywhere may be responsible for a mystery of contemporary show business—loss of matinee and balcony trade. A department store survey of merchandising trend recently disclosed that half the housewives never shop downtown these days. Even the musical comedy giant hits on tour have under-capacity matinees, and feel a big drag on the balcony.

Strangely enough, what this seems to indicate is not that the road is gone. There is now two or three times as much road, but the route has changed. Many of these road theatres may be like a little hamlet bypassed by a new dual highway—more traffic than ever, but it's all gone somewhere else.

SCULLY'S SCRAPBOOK

By Frank Scully

Hollywood, Jan. 17.

Years ago I was importuned to ask a $5,000-a-week actor if he would help a worthy charity. Before doing so I consulted a famous personage whom the actor had portrayed most convincingly on the screen. I asked if he thought the actor's heart was as big as his part. The original of the biopic smiled and said ever so softly, "He's a very good actor."

In time it became evident to all, even me, that the actor's head was as big as his parts but not his heart. The discovery that this was a frequent discrepancy in the private lives of actors loused up my perspective for years. Even today it is hard for me to see an actor play a person I knew and liked. I find that chewing soda mint tablets all through his performances doesn't really help much.

But with women it's different. The emotions they portray are more likely to be real—at least as real as the emotions of the originals. In addition they are usually far more beautiful than the originals, and I'm still a sucker for a looker.

With Women It's Different

The latest in this long and alluring line is Betsy Drake, playing the role of Anna Perrot Rose, author of "Room For One More," and as gay a family picture as the Warner dynasty has ever produced. Cary Grant plays the husband of Betsy Drake, which shouldn't be hard, but whether he really portrays the husband of the author to the letter I wouldn't know because I never met him, and can't now, more's the pity, because Pappy Rose has been dead for some time.

But the author is still very much alive. I met her last October at the national convention of the Society for Crippled Children in Chicago. She addressed several hundred delegates and had them in stitches. She looked more like Marjorie Main than Betsy Drake, and had a voice that jumped around among three octaves. The chairman, a victim himself of cerebral palsy, let off some funny cracks himself, but nothing I'd heard in years could quite top Miss Rose's case-history of the brat they took in who had polio.

She and her husband had three children of their own when she began developing an ear for children. They had lost a fourth baby and she sort of felt they were owed another anyway. She didn't want to adopt them because then they couldn't turn them back if they proved beyond her powers to improve them. Besides, she hankered for "disturbed adolescents," as the social workers call those kids who are too old to be babies and too young to be dating. She's still in the business, because in addition to her own three and three she took from welfare homes on lend-lease, she picked up two more which are neither in her book nor the picture.

The Brat In Braces

But her proudest byproduct was with polio problem-child called Jimmy-John and played by Clifford Tatum, Jr. Broadway may remember Junior. He played with the late Mady Christians in "I Remember Mama" and Ethel Merman in "Annie Get Your Gun." He worked with Fred Allen and Henry Morgan in radio, too, but he never got a part quite like this brat in iron braces. Even social workers rated the original as mean as a rattlesnake.

I remember Miss Rose telling us she planned to take him only for two weeks. She and her husband were taking the family to the beach and she figured that a ducking now and then couldn't hurt the crippled kid and might do him some good. He fought like a mad man against going into the water but before they left the beach for their home in Montclair, N. J., he had conquered this fear at least. But he was still far from housebroken.

Nevertheless she kept him from week-to-week. He tried to ride her oldest boy's bike and, failing, kicked the spokes out with his iron braces. In fact, he became such a pest that it was decided to return him as hopelessly anti-social. The parents let the other kids decide whether to keep him. It was decided by an overwhelming majority to heave him back to where he came from. But Tim, whose bike the brat smashed, moved for a reconsideration and it was decided to give him one more try.

A Ham At Heart

He once tried to walk downstairs without holding on to the bannister. He fell the whole flight. Everybody rushed to pick up the pieces but he apparently had come through unharmed. Tim praised him for this, whereupon the mad moppet wanted to try it again. In fact, he became a showoff, wanting to do the trick every time they had company.

Though 13, he still couldn't read and Miss Rose started him on the Adventures of Bunny Rabbit. After a while this drivel drove him nuts and he ripped the book to pieces, an act I could applaud, but I'm afraid if he had done the same to Blessed Mother Goose ($7.50 net) I'd have booted him right out of his braces. Miss Rose, feeling for all authors and destined to become one herself, spanked him for ruining the book.

Ten Miles Wearing Braces!

With that he decided to walk. This time she had to catch up with him and bring him home. He got hold of a Boy Scout handbook and she had to read that to him from cover to cover. After that he wanted more than anything else to win a Boy Scout's merit badge. This required the completion of a 10-mile hike, which in time he did.

Miss Rose wrote "Room For One More," she explained, under her maiden name because she didn't want to bring notoriety on her own legitimate children. But when the book became a success they went around bragging that the book was all about them. "I was appalled," she said. "It made them out a lot of little so-and-so's."

Her married name is Anna Perrot Rose Wright. Her children, both legit and borrowed, are all grown now and doing fine. Just how well these mergers of one's own and other people's problem children would work out on a wider scale is hard to say. It would depend, of course, on a mother's (and father's) capacity to absorb punishment. But anybody flirting with the idea of taking on a brood of displaced persons should see this picture before making the plunge.

Good For Tim!

Asked if the foster children effected any of her children directly, Miss Rose thought that Jimmy-John had directly influenced the career of her boy Tim.

"He studied medicine," she said, "and has decided to specialize i the treatment of polio."

During her talk in Chicago I sat next to Fanny Butcher, who for years has acted as a sort of refined oil to be poured on the Tribune's troubled waters. We both agreed that here was a great woman, a rich and rare soul, full of humor and mother-love, and that her husband must have been a wonderful guy, too.

Born in Bloomington, Ind., East first worked with local dance orchestras as a pianist. After World War I he formed a partnership in vaudeville with Ralph Dumke. This was a standard No. 2 act for years, in the $350 class, using special material of East's. He penned such numbers as "Swing Waltz," "When Mama's Gone," "Sing Good Morning," "Keep on Smiling" and "The Day Will Come." First via WGN, Chicago, and later at NBC under the Niles Trammell regime, East and Dumke, jumped to $1,250 in three months. At their radio peak, as "Sisters of the Skillet," the pair earned as high as $3,000 weekly.

After the team split up and Dumke went into musical comedy, East formed a professional partnership with his wife. As Ed East and Polly they originated "Ladies Be Seated" WJZ, N. Y. For some five years, through the last war, the man and wife team, one of the first in that vogue, were heard at 7 a.m. over WEAF. In 1948 East moved to Hollywood and continued there as a radio emcee, also making a number of film appearances. He and his wife returned to Manhattan a year ago.

Former Commie

viously named at former committee sessions, as participants in Commie meetings he attended:—Larry Parks, Gordon Kahn, Leo Townsend, Morris Carnovsky, Sandra Gorney and Paul Jarrico. He also stated that William Blowitz and George Thomas, Jr., SPG members, had approached him to attend "strike fraction" meetings at the home of Ben Margolis, then attorney for the Guild, and later for many "unfriendly" witnesses.

Attendance at these meetings, particularly the "three or four" at Margolis' home, convinced him, Daggett said, that the studio strike was "the wrong kind of a strike" and was "not for the betterment of the workers or for salary increases."

Daggett said two factors caused his final break from the group. First, his business dispute with Glass became "a larger concern than the strike." Secondly, Sandra Gorney, wife of the songwriter, objected to picketing the Warner Theatre in Hollywood because the feature film then current had been written by Albert Maltz, whom she called a "friend of the people." He then realized the bias of the Commie viewpoint. He has not been affiliated with the party si then, he said, adding "I again shall be."

Other highlights of the Daggett testimony:

1. James Roosevelt, for whom he wrote radio scripts after leaving the party, never had any Communist sympathies.

2. He could not identify either CSU prexy Herbert Sorrell or actor Lionel Stander as Communists.

3. He believes the Communist Party should be "legally outlawed" in the U. S., since it is a revolutionary movement affiliated with the Soviet Union.

He urged the committee to "concentrate on present Communists, since they are the real menace," and to turn its attention to "completely right wing groups now capitalizing on the Communist scare." He included groups "which picket theatres saying the film is Communist," adding that these "motion pictures actually have no Communist content or slant." He named as one such group, the Wage Earners' Committee, which is currently being sued by Stanley Kramer for $1,000,000 libel on a Red rap.

Glass, top publicist for Kramer, reiterated former testimony on the efforts of the Communists to control SPG, but denied the close association with the Communist Party described by his former partner.

"I had no intention of joining the party," said Glass, "I never did join, and I never paid dues." He admitted attending the initial meeting at Lardner's home, but stated he had been approached to join only once and then by Janet Stevenson at a much later date, when his interest had already begun to wane. Glass admitted he attended the Lardner party, understanding it was to discuss "meetings of the Communist Political Association," the group which briefly replaced the Communist Party in this country. He agreed that he had attended about "six meetings," but insisted there had been only a single meeting at the Margolis home in which he participated.

Glass gave the opinion Daggett was confusing "other guild meetings" with further ones at Margolis' home. He attended the single one, he said, because it seemed natural, since the attorney was then representing SPG. The meeting, he declared, was a "great eye-opener" and had a "conspiratorial feel." He added: "It smelled fishy. It didn't fit in with the peaceful tone of the dinner at Lardner's house."

Glass stated he subsequently supported the strike "because the guild did," and it didn't "dawn on me until later" that it was Communism on a democratic platter." He implied his main reason for going to meetings was his personal relationship with Daggett, saying "My personal differences with him meant there was no longer any social reason to go" so he stopped.

Committee adjourned until tomorrow (Wed.), when Communist activity in Los Angeles legal circles will be tackled. Producer Sidney Buchman is skedded to testify on Thursday (24).

A grateful salute for the pleasure of working with all these wonderful people over the past two years:

Presidential Candidates Seek to Buy Choice TV Time (Just Like Sponsors)

Reversal by the television networks of their long-standing policy, which now restricts allocating of network time to election candidates prior to the national conventions on a "pay as you talk" basis, is already beginning to establish new precedents.

Major candidates already thinking in terms of grabbing up choice time segments of their own, similar to regular program sponsors, on the basis of term deals. It's known, for example, that Harold E. Stassen, who is seeking the Republican nomination for President, has been making overtures toward pacting a TV time segment over a 13-week period. Thus television is taking shape as the major stumping medium for the national candidates.

Stassen inaugurated his pre-convention TV campaigning on the DuMont facilities last Saturday night (25), going into the 11 to 11:15 period and pre-empting the web's skating program. For an 18-station hookup, it cost him $5,300 on the basis of DuMont's regular rate card charges. (Along with DuMont, ABC has already put into effect its pre-convention sponsorship policy, with NBC scheduled to officially make its announcement this week. CBS is expected to follow suit, but the matter is still in the laps of the William S. Paley-Frank Stanton high command).

Just how the webs will be able to resolve such signaturing of pacts and remain within the "equal-time-

Cornell-McClintic Set Own Mark at $89,400 For Week of 3 B'way Hits

With three hits pulling top grosses last week, the Katharine Cornell-Guthrie McClintic legit office had the biggest stanza in its approximately quarter-century history. The total take for "Constant Wife," "I Am a Camera" and "Come of Age" topped $89,400. The only other time that the office had three top draws on the boards simultaneously was in the 1936-37 season, with "Wingless Victory," "High Tor" and the John Gielgud "Hamlet." However, the total gross was considerably less in that case, principally because the prevailing top price was $3.30 at that time.

Biggest money draw of the current trio is McClintic's revival of "Come of Age," presented by the N. Y. City Center, with Judith Anderson in her original starring role. The Clemence Dane-Richard Addinsell revival was produced by McClintic out of his and Miss Cornell's office, and he staged it. In the 3,090-seat City Center, the verse drama-with-music grossed almost $36,500 and has been extended a week beyond its originally scheduled fortnight run.

Miss Cornell's own revival of Carradine's Culture Spiel, With N.Y. Cafe as 1st Date

Legit actor John Carradine will enter the nitery circuit Feb. 5 at the Village Vanguard, N. Y., where he'll put on a reading series a la Charles Laughton.

Carradine will declaim from the Bible, Shakespeare, "Madwoman of Chaillot," the play in which he appeared a couple of seasons ago, and poet Rupert Brooke.

Jennifer a 'Pawn' In 'St. Joan' Deal; Selznick Says Nix

Ostensibly because insufficient time remains for rehearsal, plans for a spring tour of Jennifer Jones in "Saint Joan" have been abandoned. It's officially announced that the project is still under consideration for next fall, but the actress' husband, film producer David O. Selznick, says she would prefer to do a new play then.

Selznick's assertion that cancellation of the prospective tour was caused by the Theatre Guild's repeated failure to meet his deadlines for completion of business details and start of rehearsals, is disputed by representatives of the legit firm. The latter claim that the actress' husband kept changing terms of the proposed agreement, and finally refused to accept a long enough tour to earn back the cost of sending out the revival.

According to Selznick, his wife was being "used as a pawn" in negotiations between the Guild and the Shuberts. He explains that the tour was to have been underwritten by the Shuberts, including payment of losses on the revival's Broadway run, in return for a share of the road profits. "While they bickered over terms, with

Old Mex Law Reveals Stage Names Liable To Criminal Prosecution

Mexico City, Jan. 29.

DICTATE PLUGS OF OWN TUNES

Vet music execs are currently doing a burn at a growing trade phenomenon which has taken the place of the payola as the industry's No. 1 evil. Their latest bugaboo is the activity of disk jockeys and artists in the publishing end of the business.

The emergence of the jockey-publishers is an especially sore point, particularly when such deejays also play the role of song critics on their programs. These jocks are in a position to boost and plug their own catalog numbers, while brushing off the competition's tunes with some negative cracks on the air. Any jockey-publisher, moreover, is able to cop as many wax versions of his tunes as he wants, since the disk companies have to play ball in order to get spins for their other releases.

One prominent deejay with an active publishing firm has been the target for heavy attack, all of it sotto voce because of the jockey's alleged power to make or break songs. This jockey has been - cused of flagrantly pushing his own tunes and any artist who has waxed them, either in the U.S. or abroad. Publishers feel that this jockey can no longer have an objective viewpoint on disks, since he has a partisan interest in his own wax entries.

More or less the same criticism is being made of the flock of artists who have been operating publishing firms. These artists are tempted to record their own tunes where they have power to determine their own wax repertory. There have also been complaints that artists are trading tunes with an "I'll wax your tune if you wax my tune" pitch.

Result of this condition has been the appearance of a lot of unimportant tunes on the market which have been artificially hypoed by the jockeys or artists. Legitimate publishers thus are having less opportunity to place their own songs with the disk companies.

Equipment Wrought of Scrap Metal Is Story of Israel's Radio Network

By BERT BRILLER

Saga of the creation of a radio network in the new state of Israel, with equipment wrought by hand out of scraps of metal from the debris of a wartorn land, is told by Dan Enright, who just returned from a seven-week assignment to reorganize the Voice of Israel.

Enright, partner in (Jack) Barry & Enright Productions, indie package outfit, and former production exec at WOR, N.Y., had spent some 10 years in the Near East before World War II. He said that the situation of Israeli radio is typified by a list of items the Jewish technicians requested: pliers, tweezers, screw drivers, slide rules and even the simplest kinds of meters. The transmitter at Jerusalem, he reported, is operating at only half efficiency for lack of a transformer that costs $30.

Reason behind the new government's need for radio equipment is not the lack of engineering skill, but the fact that Israel's leaders have to make the choice of importing electrical tools and devices or items that are needed to support life, such as seeds. The engineers, many of them graduates of Europe's top universities, have the knowhow to make equipment from old iron fence posts, to wind coils

Irving Berlin's number, "I Like Ike," from his current Broadway legit musical, "Call Me Madam," is virtually cinched to wind up as the theme song for Gen. Eisenhower boosters for the Republican Presidential nomination. Tune has already been cleared for use at Eisenhower rallies.

Although the tune's reference in the musical show is clear, Berlin is currently at work drafting a new lyric with a more pointed political impact.

Witnesses Who Aid Probers Get House Job Help

Washinton, Jan. 29.

House Un-American Activities Committee is preparing to take positive action to urge all segments of the entertainment industry to take a sympathetic attitude towards "friendly" witnesses who have testified before the committee.

Individual committee members have been disturbed by reports that some cooperative witnesses, who admitted onetime Communist membership but who have now renounced all Red ties, are still being refused employment in show business. It's understood that this is particularly true in radio and television.

On that basis, the committee's projected action is regarded as an indirect slap at Red Channels, publication which purports to list the names of all radio-TV personalities with Communist leanings. It has

If the film industry is granted the theatre television channels it is seeking, it will tell the Federal Communications Commission it is prepared to establish as soon as practicable a relay system to transmit shows by air between New York and Washington. That was disclosed to VARIETY this week by James Lawrence Fly, former FCC chairman, who is serving as counsel on the channel applications for the Motion Picture Assn. of America.

The New York-to-Washington point-to-point relay system would only be the first link, of course, in a nationwide grid of transmitters and booster stations that the industry is prepared to set up eventually to carry shows to every theatre equipped with large-screen TV, Fly said.

He also disclosed that the entire transmitting-relay setup would be owned and operated by a private corporation in which the exhibition, distribution and production companies using its services would—in the foreseeable future, anyway—own all the stock.

Those points are major ones to be presented at FCC hearings on the TV channel applications. They'll start Feb. 25. Fly estimated that they'll take at least three to four weeks, if held continuously.

It's possible, he added, that the Commission may call a number of adjournments, so that the hearings could be spread over months. Counsel for the filmites will object to

Veteran Disk Names Continue Big Despite Newcomers' Impact

Despite the heavy impact of new names in the disk market for the past year, many of the vet wax stars are holding their own in the platter sweeps with a steady stream of etchings that click on the retail level. Without the razzle dazzle promotion techniques applied to the newcomers, many of the vets are coming through with enough consistent sellers to warrant their high diskery guarantees.

Diskery execs claim that the young group of recording artists haven't won away the fans developed by the vets during their waxing years. Most of the vets have a pre-sold audience who latch on to their releases at a relatively high sales figure. The newcomers, however, have been coming up on the spectacular hits which have been making the noise.

In the RCA Victor stable, such perennials as Perry Como, Dinah Shore and Tony Martin can be counted on to rack up hefty platter sales. Como's etchings of "If" and "You're Just In Love" were on top in the 1951 sales finals and Victor teed off '52 with a big push of his coupling of "Tulips and Heather" and "Please, Mr. Sun." Martin had a winner in '51 i

Berkeley Gives Red Probers 40 New Names; Cite Buchman for Contempt

Washington, Jan. 29.

Screenwriter Martin Berkeley, who provided the House Un-American Activities Committee with the names of many alleged Hollywood Communists last September in Los Angeles, reportedly added 40 additional names to that list in a closed session with committee members here today (Tues.).

Committee session yesterday was highlighted by a unanimous vote among committee members to cite scripter-producer Sidney Buchman for contempt of Congress for failure to appear for questioning in defiance of a subpoena. It's expected that the committee will present its citation resolution to the House next week. Remaining committee hearings following the Buchman citation will reportedly not be focussed on Hollywood.

The House is almost certain to give the green light for the contempt citation, conviction for which carries a maximum penalty of $1,000 fine and a year's imprisonment. Thus, by yesterday's action, the former studio exec was launched on the long road which ultimately sent the "Hollywood 10" to prison. The resolution to cite Buchman, passed at a closed session of the committee, followed a tense succession of steps which originally terminated in an order by acting chairman Francis A. Walter (D, Pa.) to have the House sergeant-at-arms "place Mr. Buchman under arrest and incarcerate him wherever convenient to insure his appearance before this committee."

The order for immediate arrest was later deferred when a question of procedure arose. Committee Counsel Frank S. Tavenner stated he thought such action would require formal approval by the House. The contempt vote was then substituted.

Committee's action came after failure of a second attempt by Buchman's lawyers to have his appearance halted by court action. Morton Pepper, New York attorney, teed off the morning's session by announcing that new court proceedings had been initiated for a temporary injunction to stay the committee's questioning of Buchman. He asked the legislators to "wait a few more days," until the question of the new motion could be settled.

Rep. Walter angrily responded by accusing Buchman and his counsel of engaging in "a deliberate attempt to deceive this committee." He then demanded to know where Buchman was. "He is in the vicinity of Washington," Pepper replied.

At one point, when Pepper was arguing for a delay, Walter snapped, "we have been waiting for several days already. We won't permit your Communist client to make a fool of this committee. Your first application to stay this mmittee was denied before you even told us about it. No court in the land is going to interfere with the orderly process of government."

Orders Buchman's Arrest

It was at this point that Walter ordered Buchman's arrest and started the wheels in motion by having Tavenner read into the record the steps leading to this decision.

In the midst of Tavenner's recital, word arrived that the new

Same Old Faces Give Miami Cafes Case of Jitters

Lack of new headliners is catching up with Miami Beach bonifaces. Resort cafe operators are finding that majority of toppers are too weak for extended runs. Business peters down after one week with a headliner and there aren't enough attractions to buy new ones weekly.

The nitery owners have been getting agencies to prowl the Coast in an effort to get some fresh faces on the agenda. Situation was better last year when there was a concentration of TV headliners headquartering in New York. Several made quick trips to Florida between monthly video shots.

The bistros are complaining that the entertainment diet has gotten stale. The old axiom that you can't play the same faces year-in-year-out has become all too evident.

Dearth or staleness of headliners has resulted in the virtual disappearance of supper trade in the Beach niteries. Cafes, fortunately, are getting a healthy dinner trade, which apparently is strong enough to keep the operation in the black for this season.

The hotels are also giving the Beach cafes plenty competition. The inns do not have the high nut of the cafes and can stand a loss on the nitery operation.

Miami Beach nitery biz hasn't reached a desperate stage as yet, but it's fairly apparent that fancy profits won't be realized by most spots this season.

Harpo & Chico's Vegas 'Audition'

Two of the Marx Bros. will unite for the first time in several years for a nitery engagement. Harpo & Chico Marx (billed in that order) will play the Last Frontier, Las Vegas, for two weeks, starting Feb. 8. Other dates will depend on their reception there.

The Three Marx Bros. have gone their separate ways for many years. Groucho, major component of the famed trio, is now in radio and video, and does an occasional film. Harpo and Chico have been playing vaude, nitery and occasional TV engagements during the past few years. About three seasons ago, Harpo and Chico combined for a stand at the Palladium, London.

The trio reunited for a Lester Cowan pic, "Love Happy," a few years ago, and haven't worked together since.

B'way in Corn King Role Via Astor Hotel's Yen For 'Grand Ole Opry'

The hillbilly craze seems likely to spread to the centre of New York. The Astor Hotel Roof is ready to jettison the name band policy during the summer and install the WSM, Nashville, "Grand Ole Op'ry," an NBC network show which has played arenas and auditoriums throughout the country.

Should the deal be consummated, hillbilly and folk music will get the most cosmopolitan showcase they've ever had, and it's conceivable that the folkways craze will hit even greater proportions than it has at this point.

Theatre operators, music publishers and talent agencies admit that there's considerable b.o. in barnyard ballads. As a matter of fact, because of the growing importance of hillbilly music, many music pubs must maintain branches in Nashville, which is regarded as an important rival of Tin Pan Alley.

The music hold by hillbillyites is tremendous. Eddy Arnold, Lefty Fritzell, Hank Williams and Pee Wee King disks are regarded among the top-selling platters. Perry Como is booking the folk-balladeers on his video show. He has played King; has Williams set for Feb. 27, and Fritzell for March 19. This will be Williams' second date on this show, his first one in November bringing such response that the new booking was made.

Further proof of the hillbilly b.o. potential is seen by the fact that top tunes such as "Cold, Cold Heart," "Little White Cloud," "Slow Poke" and "Down Yonder," among others, have strong hillbilly characteristics.

Country-style entertainment has been spreading to the cities for the past decade. World War II gave the sticks songs tremendous impetus, when many deserted farm work for more lucrative jobs in war plants.

The Astor Hotel is still mulling the hillbilly step. Hotel topper Robert Christenberry is reported as favoring this radical departure for the hospice. Preliminary talks have already been held with station execs.

However, Music Corp. of America, which booked most of the name bands into the Astor for the past few years, is still making a pitch to retain the spot. It's submitting counter proposals which include name and name band packages. It's believed that the expense of such groupings will be too high for the Astor Roof, and the inn may have to go along with the hillbilly experiment.

Somerset Maugham' "Constant Wife," in which she's costarring with Brian Aherne and Grace George, had its best week to date, grossing over $28,200 at the 1,172-seat National, N. Y., at the $4.80 top ($6 Friday and Saturday nights). This production, too, was directed by McClintic, Miss Cornell's husband.

The third show out of the office, the Gertrude Macy-Walter Starcke production of "I Am a Camera," John van Druten's dramatization of the Christopher Isherwood "Berlin Stories," also had a new high for the run, grossing over $24,700 in the 1,082-seat Empire, N. Y., at a $4.80 top ($6 Friday and Saturday nights). This was new house record for the 59-year-old theatre at a regular scale, having been topped only by "Life with Mother," which hit $25,500 for a sellout Christmas-New Year week (including the extra-price New Year's Eve performance) in the 1948-49 season. Miss Macy, co-producer of "Camera," is Miss Cornell's personal manager.

Biggest single-week gross for any one Cornell-McClintic show is believed to have been the $49,800 registered by a revival of "Barretts of Wimpole Street" at the Boston Opera House in February, 1945, prior to the New York run. The profit on that stanza alone repaid the production cost on the show.

Incidentally, "Constant Wife," the actress-manager's current hicle, this week repays the backers the second half of their $40,000 investment. The revival is now in its eighth week on Broadway.

Amus. Shares' Slide

Total market value of amusement shares listed on the N.Y. Stock Exchange eased off to $1,198,446,790 as of Dec. 31, according to figures released by the Big Board this week. Tally for the month previous was about $13,000,000 higher while the 1951 high was racked up at the end of September. At that time the aggregate came to $1,225,273,711.

Although the year-end figure indicated a downward trend may have been in the offing for amusements, the total nevertheless is well ahead of the total recorded as of Dec. 30, 1950. Overall sum then amounted to $1,010,074,335, with an average price per share of $21.22. Current per-share average is $19.59.

Trading in RKO Stock Soars With Report of Backlog Sale to Video

Wall St. sensitivity to potential TV values in the film libraries of old established pic-companies was perfectly illustrated by the quick response last week to reports of a deal for a $12,000,000 sale of RKO's backlog to tele. Day the story appeared in VARIETY, trading in RKO mounted to 50,300 shares as against 1,500 for the previous day.

It is this watchfulness on the Street for moves indicating a break in the majors' iron front against opening backlogs to tele that has kept the film shares very stable in the past year. Aside from the possibility of a quick killing, the picture stocks have few friends among the pro traders.

How much the deal would mean in the way of rapid-fire profits is evident in that the cash payment involved would amount to more than $3 on each RKO share outstanding. It was selling last Wednesday for $4.25.

Price reaction on the shares was in keeping with the Wall St. attitude. Despite the huge volume, quotation went up only 25c. This indicated that the downtowners wanted in on the act if there was a chance for a quick take, but they weren't going to pay much more than the then market price unless the TV deal was confirmed.

Although it was officially denied, some Wall St. insiders claim to have reason to believe the reports were correct and that a deal may yet be consummated. There has been considerable buying, despite the denials, although nothing like the volume of last Wednesday. Quotation has dropped back only to about where it was.

Various Wall St. analysts have long been totting up the estimated per-share values of the vast film libraries owned by the major companies. They've felt certain that the dam would break some day and have advised clients to watch carefully for the indicators.

Prospects of cashing in via TV have kept the prices of film shares very steady. Wall Streeters see them as highly unlikely for normal growth or even for certain continuation of their generally good rate of dividend return. However, no one wants to part with the shares for fear of losing out on a hefty capital divvy if the dike should suddenly open.

Howard Hughes, RKO's principal stockholder, has himself been buying up shares in recent months to add to his original 929,020-share hoard. Reason for his buying created considerable speculation in financial circles. It is one of the reasons that certain Wall Streeters cling to the belief that unloading of the library to TV may be imminent.

Betty Hutton to Korea

Hollywood, Jan. 29.

Next Hollywood star to entertain troops on the Korean war front will be Betty Hutton, who leaves within two weeks on a tour arranged by the Hollywood Coordinating Committee.

Accompanying the actress will be five Skylarks, Donna Fowler, Gilda Maiken, Joe Pryor, George Becker and Tom Kenny.

Pix Tip Mitt In Ken Murray Bid For 'Movietime'

Extent to which each of the major film companies is now willing to cooperate with television, even if that cooperation may be for its own benefit, was underscored this week by Ken Murray, who's devoting his CBS-TV show Saturday night (2) to a "history of the movies." With the blessings of the Council of Motion Picture Organizations, who view the project as a welcome addition to their "Movietime, U. S. A." tours, Murray has been trying to line up clips from the majors' film libraries for the show.

As of now, he has received flat refusals from Metro, RKO, Universal and Warner Bros. Columbia and Walt Disney are both providing him with the footage he wants, and 20th-Fox is granting him some clips from its 1951 newsreel roundup, "Farewell to Yesterday." Paramount board chairman Adolph Zukor, as the film industry's elder statesman, will appear personally on the show and Par is also considering the advisability of giving Murray a clip from an old Clara Bow picture.

Fullest cooperation was offered by United Artists, through indie producer Stanley Kramer. UA not only okayed clips from any of its releases which could be cleared through its producers, but granted Murray some lengthy footage from Kramer's "High Noon," which won't be released until later this year. According to Murray, UA execs recognized the exploitation aspects of the show not only for its product but for the entire industry and were eager to cooperate in any way possible.

Murray, noting that the program has been worked out in cooperation with COMPO exec veepee Arthur L. Mayer and "Movietime" chief Robert J. O'Donnell, emphasized that "this is not just a cheap way of trying to get some stars for my show." He's undertaken the project, he said, to "make the people aware of the good entertainment and the fine work being done by an industry which has had too much bad publicity. No matter what anyone tells you or what you read in the papers, I'm convinced that movies will live. I'm going to try to show on my program why the industry cannot die."

It's noted that RKO and U, among the four majors which turned down Murray's request for film clips, have been among those experimenting with TV trailers from time to time. Those two, plus Metro and WB, gave him generally the same answer i ixing his requests. They were "sorry" that they couldn't cooperate, but explained that they had established precedents by turning down similar requests by other TV producers in that with which a person is baptized or christened. This makes use of stage or pen names a felony punishable by fine or imprisonment, or both.

The court ruled definitely that no exceptions can be made to this rule because the law doesn't allow any. However, the Tribunal allowed stage or pen name users might be pardoned if they go before a court and swear the name they use is the one and only name.

Since this is a ruling of the highest court in Mexico, stage and pen name users here are in an uproar.

Ruling directly hits "Cantinflas" (Mario Moreno), stage-pic comic, who is much better known by his stage than by his real name. Many performers and writers in all phases of amusements are likewise affected.

Rank's John Davis 'Neutral' on U's Decca Tie; His Merger Aid Sought

John Davis, attending a Universal board meeting last week, took a "neutral" attitude in discussions of a proposed merger of U with Decca Records. Davis is operating chief of the J. Arthur Rank empire, which controls the second largest single block of U shares.

Davis has been reported "hostile" to the idea of a merger since it was first broached with the disclosure that Decca was acquiring a 30% interest in U. He is understood to have felt that Rank, then largest single stockholder, should have been kept better informed of details of negotiation for purchase by Decca of the interests of prez Nate J. Blumberg, production chiefs Leo Spitz and William Goetz and others.

Actually, Davis' attitude at the board meeting and at sessions with a special committee of directors going into the problems of merger was not "hostile" at all. Rather, his attitude was one of "wait-and-see."

Davis had come over from London for the talks. He was in New York only about three days. He will return in about a month or six weeks, it is expected, for a further look-see.

By that time, the exploratory committee headed by director Preston Davie hopes to be able to give Davis a better answer on whether a merger is feasible and, if it is, on what basis. Davis expects at that time, with something more definite to go on, to be able to take a more definite stance.

Committee of Decca board members is likewise exploring merger advantages and problems. And

20th's Nat'l Theatres Books 'Latuko' Despite Nix by Breen Office

Another of the blows that have struck at the potency of the industry's self-regulatory Production Code in the past few years was delivered last week with booking by National Theatres, 20th-Fox subsid, of "Latuko." Jungle pic has been nixed by the Joe Breen office, which administers the Code, and has been placed in the "Condemned" category by the Legion of Decency.

Surprisingly smash biz the pic rang up at the Hollywood Paramount resulted in the NT booking. The 20th chain is slated to play the pic as top feature on percentage in first-runs on all four of its subsid circuits, Fox West Coast, Fox Midwest, Fox Intermountain and Fox-Wisconsin.

Until threatened with antitrust action some years ago, the industry made its Code bans stick by a voluntary agreement among the producers, distributors, major theatre chains and many smaller circuits. This called for a $25,000 "fine" for anyone playing a pic without a Code seal.

With elimination of the penalty provision and a slackening of biz,

Ailing Korda to Curb U.S. Visit Activities

His business activities will be kept to a minimum when Sir Alexander Korda arrives in New York next Tuesday (5). British film producer has been recuping slowly in London from a long hospital siege and is forced to limit his activity. He's coming in on the Queen Mary and is expected to remain about three weeks.

Arriving about the same time, but by air, will be Carol Reed, who produced "Outcast of the Islands" under Korda's banner. His visit is for publicity prior to the opening.

Korda will huddle on his U. S. distribution with Ilya Lopert and Robert W. Dowling, toppers of Lopert Films, which handles the product.

O'Donnell Abroad

Robert J. O'Donnell, head of the Interstate chain in Texas, sails from New York Feb. 8 for a 90-day Mediterranean cruise.

This will keep him from the sessions of the Council of Motion Picture Organizations in New York Feb. 19-20. He is general chairman of COMPO's "Movietime" promotional activities.

Coyne's Former TOA Post Snarls Job With COMPO

Choice of exec v.p. for the Council of Motion Picture Organizations is still in the air as the result of reported opposition by Allied States Assn. of Motion Picture Exhibitors to Robert Coyne. There's no personal feeling against Coyne, now COMPO counsel, but objection is based on the fact that he was formerly exec director of Theatre Owners of America.

Committee headed by Jack Alicoate is charged with lining up successors to Arthur L. Mayer, exec v.p., and Ned E. Depinet, prez, before COMPO's membership meet, Feb. 20. Nominating committee's choice would be voted into office at that time.

Mayer has made definite his intention to leave the COMPO post and has booked passage for Europe March 11. COMPO board is still hopeful that Depinet can be persuaded to remain in the presidency another year, so the pressure to find another chief exec is not so pressing as that of getting a successor to Mayer.

Coyne has been with COMPO from its inception and is held in high regard for his organizational ability. In addition to his TOA experience, he was national field director for the Treasury Dept. during the war.

He has been felt by most of the

JOHNSTON TO COAST FOR STUDIO CONFABS

Eric Johnston planes to Hollywood today (Wed.), Motion Picture Assn. of America prexy to spend two weeks in confabs with studio chieftains. Move will be similar to that in New York recently, when Johnston visited all the homeoffices in an endeavor to better acquaint himself with steps that might make the MPAA of greater service to the industry.

MPAA topper was in New York yesterday (Tues.) for a huddle with company presidents and James L. Fly, MPAA's special TV counsel, on high policy in regard to Feb. 25 hearings before the Federal Communications Commission. Industry will plead at that time for special theatre television channels.

Benjamin Staying East; Krim, Youngstein West

Robert Benjamin, United Artists official, has cancelled his planned trip to the Coast, where he was to work on product deals, to give full time to homeoffice affairs. His pard, prexy Arthur B. Krim, currently is Hollywood resuming negotiations for product which were begun some time ago and working on one new releasing deal.

Ad-pub v.p. Max E. Youngstein intends a trek west to see pix already slated for UA handling but doesn't have a definite departure date as yet.

$37,272,000 IN 9-CO. '51 INCOME

After several lean years, the film industry appears likely to show a gain in earnings when complete figures for 1951 are in. Returns to date show that costs and income have been brought into better balance to make for an improved outlook.

Statements covering all or a major part of fiscal 1951 disclose combined total earnings of $37,272,000 for Columbia, Loew's, Paramount, RKO Pictures, RKO Theatres, 20th-Fox, United Paramount Theatres, Universal and Warners. That compares with $37,115,000 for the previous year.

Here's how they shaped up on the money-making front, with the figures covering the full year of operations unless otherwise shown:

British Threaten U.S. Pic Coin Cut

London, Jan. 29.

A warning of impending cuts in Britain's dollar expenditure for films was made in the House of Commons tonight (Tues.) by Chancellor of the Exchequer Richard A. Butler. But in announcing a major austerity policy, Butler said that immediate action could not be taken on dollar remittances to Hollywood inasmuch as the government is bound by an agreement which runs through September. This deal permits American film companies to withdraw $25,200,000 annually.

Although unable to act now, Butler warned the House that the

Loew's Wins Some Unique Points—And Loses a Few—In Final Decree

Washington, Jan. 29.

Initial study of the Loew's divorcement decree discloses that the outfit submitted to plenty tough provisions on unloading theatres but, in turn, won unique concessions from the corporate homewreckers of the Department of Justice.

Consent judgment, which means the bowout of the final major defendant from the 14-year-old industry antitrust suit, calls for outright divestiture by Loew's of a minimum of 24 theatres. Additionally, upward of 40 others may have to be lopped off the chain unless it's established that competitive conditions exist in each market zone. In the event such competition is not established in periods up to five years, the circuit may, at its option, continue operation of these houses but could not license more than 60% of features released by the distribs, excepting such product which is not desired by competitors.

Loew's chain now comprises 67 houses in N. Y. and 64 so-called out-of-town spots. Decree's dictates could force cutting the circuit to less than 100 houses, and reducing the important N. Y. owner-

Exhibs Safe

Washington, Jan. 29.

Theatremen who run bank nights, gift nights and other b.o. hypos that hinge on chance should be relieved to know that they are "officially" not gamblers.

Internal Revenue Dept. has ruled that such giveaways do not constitute gambling and thus exhibs are not required to purchase the new $50 tax stamps demanded of bookies and others of similar ilk.

TV Exhibs Would Rent Theatres To Election Rallies

Theatre television exhibitors, wrapping up plans for the national political conventions in Chicago this summer, are expected to bypass most of the pickups from the floor on the assumption that such material will receive full and complete coverage from the network broadcasters. Exhibs, instead, hope to rent their houses in non-boxoffice hours to both major parties for special "get-out-the-vote" rallies, in which it's expected that some of the leading candidates would speak.

Big-screen exhibs, of course, hope to be able to bring their regular patrons the top convention events, such as the acceptance speeches by the winning candidates of each party. But, they pointed out, they not only have no time for the run-of-the-mill coverage, but the fact that such coverage will be available to home viewers for free indicates it would have little boxoffice value. As for the acceptance speeches and other outstanding events from the floor of Chi's International Amphitheatre, the exhibs hope they can work a deal to take a feed from the networks' pooled pickups.

For special shows, however, the big-screen operators believe they are in a good position to compete with the networks on selling time

Some Exhibs Unimpressed By 20th's Optimism After Chas. Skouras' Sour View

While 20th-Fox drew plaudits for its series of merchandising meetings which began last week, some exhibs this week said it's difficult to reconcile the company's expressions of optimism with Charles P. Skouras' still widely-circulated downbeat comments on the trade.

Skouras, head of 20th's National Theatres subsid, predicted some time ago that television eventually will kill off about 50% of the nation's theatres. The quote appeared originally in Life and was picked

National Boxoffice Survey

Top Pix Continue Strong; 'Quo Vadis' No. 1, 'Dreams' 2d, 'Model' 3d, 'Poison' 4th

Milder weather for a brief period but few new entries is spelling a generally moderate week currently. Such key cities as N. Y. and Philadelphia had to contend with rain and colder weather near the end of the session while Minneapolis had a resumption of below-zero temperatures.

"Quo Vadis" (M-G) still is leading the field with nearly $260,000, grossed in key cities covered by VARIETY this week. Still in second position is "See You In Dreams" (WB) although total gross necessarily is considerably less since playing normal scales.

"Model and Marriage Broker" (20th), a bit uneven this stanza, again is finishing third. "Another Man's Poison" (UA) still is holding onto fourth place while "Room For One More" (WB) is capturing fifth spot. Latter indicates it will climb higher with added bookings.

"I Want You" (RKO) moves up to sixth position. "Pandora" (M-G) is landing seventh money, with "Westward the Women" (M-G) in eighth.

"Wild Blue Yonder" (Rep) is finishing ninth while "Hong Kong" (Par), new this week, rounds out the Big 10 list. "Decision Before Dawn" (20th) and "Boots Malone" (Col) are week's two runner-up films.

Chief interest the Pacific northwest was in unveiling of "Bend in River" (U), with principal preems in Portland, Ore., and Seattle. It is terrific in Portland to pace city and great in the latter key where also leading other pix currently. In these two spots as well as other northwest cities "Bend" is on pre-release, with early reports indicating it will equal or beat "Egg and I," top Universal grosser.

Trade watched closely the launching of the two sailor comedies, "Sailor Beware" (Par) and "Girl in Every Port" (RKO). Former is sock in Boston, smash in Buffalo and strong in L.A. "Port" is mild in K.C. and Cincy, slow in Pittsburgh but rated good in Cleveland to pace city.

"Cry Beloved Country" (Indie) teed off with a great opening week in N. Y. "Cimarron Kid" (U), also new, ranges from good to brisk currently.

"Death of Salesman" (Col) is doing mild to sock trade this frame but in only three keys. "Callaway Went Thataway" (M-G), though in some four cities, is only fair to light.

"Distant Drums" (WB) shapes big in Toronto. "Aladdin" (Mono), paired with vaude, is neat in Philly.

More and More Film Theatres Using Occasional Stage Shows (Sans Pix)

More and more pix theatres throughout the country are seeking occasional attractions outside of films for b.o. stimulants. With the touring company of "Mr. Roberts" set to play the Interstate Theatre Circuit's Majestic Theatre, Dallas, Feb. 27 and 28 and other Interstate theatres throughout Texas, circuit's bookers are on the prowl for other presentations. Although circuit has played legit shows before it's reportedly seeking more stage fare to vary with its pix policy.

Circuit is negotiating with Blackstone, the Magician, to appear possibly late in February or early March. There is also a possibility that the Hilo Hatti Hawaiian revue might also play the circuit.

Film theatres got big play from several recent touring attractions which usually seek only legit houses or municipal auditoriums. "Fledermaus" troupes sent out by both Sol Hurok and the Met, The Sadler's Wells Theatre Ballet and the "Don Juan in Hell" offering frequently replaced pix. "Don Juan" was particularly suitable for presentation in film houses which had no stage facilities. Since Charles Laughton, Charles Boyer, Sir Cedric Hardwicke and Agnes Moorehead read the Shaw opus, no props or sets were necessary.

RKO circuit is also active in lining up stage fare that can stand on its own without backing from a feature pic. Touring "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes" is set for the RKO Palace, Columbus, O., and the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo for the chain's houses in Trenton, Providence, Syracuse and Rochester.

Warner Theatre, N. Y., will abandon pix for two weeks next month for the Sadler's Wells Theatre Co., parent of the above Sadler's company. It's the first time in the history of the house that stage presentations will be offered without a feature picture.

SIMONELLI SETS UP BOWIE TURF BUY

Deal in which a syndicate headed by Larry MacPhail gained control of the Bowie racetrack in Maryland for an estimated $2,000,000 was entirely conceived and negotiated by Charles F. Simonelli, Universal pub-ad exec.

As a result of his efforts in bringing the interested parties together and working out the details of the deal, Simonelli will receive a stock interest in the track. However, he pointed out that he will be associated with the MacPhail syndicate in a non-active capacity and might be available on occasions as a consultant on public relations matters, but he otherwise intends to devote full time to his job at Universal.

Simonelli stressed that his connection with Bowie would in no way interfere with his position at Universal.

Simonelli said he looked into the deal in his spare time and carried on negotiations with the principals on weekends. He said he first conceived the idea last June and negotiated "right down the line" until the final contracts were signed.

Its Cairo Theatre Only Damaged in Riot—Loew's

While preliminary reports indicated that Loew's Metro Theatre, Cairo, had been completely destroyed in the rioting which swept the Egyptian capital Saturday (26), a homeoffice spokesman stated this week that damage is principally confined to the interior of the house and undoubtedly is covered by insurance. The 2,000-seater is considered a city showplace and will be repaired "when things cool down."

Press dispatches reaching the U. S. also said that equipment owned by 20th-Fox at the Palace Theatre, Cairo, had also been burned or damaged. A company homeoffice exec disclosed that the firm has a controlling interest in the house, but as yet no word has been received as to what has been damaged. Reportedly, no American company personnel has been injured.

20th Execs Returning To Foreign Posts

Albert Cornfield, 20th-Fox director of Europe and the Middle East, heads back to his Paris headquarters today (Wed.) after attending the outfit's convention at the N. Y. homeoffice.

Also heading home this week is Edward Ugast, 20th's Far East supervisor, who headquarters in Tokyo.

Skiatron Nix By WB, U Makes It Almost Unanimous

Warner Bros. and Universal, which had been hedging on their replies to Skiatron's request for use of their product in its projected Subscriber-Vision test, this week sent Skiatron prez Arthur Levey a definite refusal. As a result, Levey now has okays from only Paramount and RKO, and these two are "conditional."

Skiatron chief declared that negotiations with the other companies, presumably in an attempt to get them to reconsider, are in progress. But he added he would seek help of the Dept. of Justice if the others didn't come through. Skiatron, he said, "would prefer to approach the Department only as a last resort." Levey hopes to gain permission of the Federal Communications Commission to stage the "pay-as-you-see" tests in New York this spring, but claims he must be able to provide the FCC with a lineup of the pictures he'll show before it can okay the project.

Answer from WB was signed by veepee Samuel Schneider, who advised Levey that "we do not wish to permit the use of our features by your corporation in the experiment for which you are seeking authorization." U veepee John J. O'Connor wrote Levey that "we have given careful consideration to your communication and the request therein contained, and we have concluded that it would not be to the best interests of our company to make available our pictures for the tests."

ONE CREDITOR SETTLES ON 'TREASON' SHARE

Financial aftermath of the two-year-old indie production, "Guilty of Treason," last week found one creditor settling for part of a $1,600 producer's share to the film still held by Eagle Lion Classics. He was Harry S. Klepper, who brought suit in N. Y. Supreme court in an effort to satisfy a $10,000 judgment previously won against Edward A. Golden, father of Robert Golden, who co-produced the picture with Jack Wrather.

Out of Klepper's $10,000 Edward Golden assertedly acquired the book, "As We See Russia," which was the story basis for "Treason." Loan was a personal note. When Golden defaulted Klepper sued and was granted judgment. Unable to collect, the creditor proceeded against Golden Productions, which was assignee of the book's film rights.

Also brought in as defendants were Freedom Productions, Wrather, ELC and the Chemical Bank & Trust Co., among others. Settlement reached during a two-day trial before Justice Aaron Steuer provided that the $1,600 which the defunct ELC had in escrow should be split among Klepper and two other minor creditors. But for the balance of his $10,000, it was ruled, Klepper must get in line with others who have coin coming.

"Treason," a story of Cardinal Mindzenty's trial in Communist Hungary, costarred Charles Bickford and Bonita Granville. Latter is Wrather's wife. Emmet Lavery wrote the screenplay. "As We See Russia" was authored by various members of the Overseas Press Club. Chemical Bank provided part of the film's financing, as did Wrather.

Lana's Glam Role

Hollywood, Jan. 29.

First picture to star Lana Turner under her new Metro contract will be "Tribute to a Bad Man," in which she will play a glamorous film femme. Two other films lined up for Miss Turner are "Interrupted Melody" and "Latin Lovers."

Metro is negotiating with Kirk Douglas to costar in "Tribute," which will be produced by John Houseman.

Occasional Live Shows Help Build His Chain In England—Bernstein

RKO and Warner Circuits' current experiments in occasionally eliminating films in favor of a week or more of other attractions is an old—and successful—practice in England. Sidney L. Bernstein, chairman of Britain's Granada chain, said in New York last week that 18 of his houses—all that were equipped with stages—used occasional live entertainment.

"We find it a very profitable practice," he declared, "in that it builds up a house, as any good attraction will. In reverse it is also advantageous in that it enables us to avoid running poor pictures that have a permanently deteriorating effect on the boxoffice."

Bernstein said that Granada avoids, however, having more than 12 one-week live shows without films in any theatre. That's important, he pointed out, to avoid a house's losing its character as primarily a filmery.

Bernstein said his experience had shown that it was essential to maintain this identification with film if films were to be the principal attraction through the year. However, he explained, his general viewpoint was that a theatre should be a place of entertainment, and whether the entertainment was on film or live with really immaterial.

Bernstein left New York for the Coast at the end of last week. He is partnered with Alfred Hitchcock in Transatlantic Productions, indie unit which releases through Warner Bros. They are about to start preparation for their next film.

Resume Zenith Inquiry Into Finnegan Bribe

St. Louis, Jan. 29.

The local U. S. grand jury last week resumed its inquiry into the alleged payment of $50,000 by the Zenith Radio Corp., Chicago, to James P. Finnegan, resigned Collector of Internal Revenue of the St. Louis District, for assistance in obtaining motion picture films for the company's Phonevision tests after such requests had been refused.

Eugene F. McDonald, Jr., prez of the TV company, and Irving Herriott, counsel for Zenith, are reported to have been asked what services, if any, were given by Finnegan to obtain the films, after major film producers refused to furnish them.

McDonald refused to comment prior to his p.a. before the g.j. although Herriott said the films were forthcoming after Finnegan had been hired. Officials of the pic companies have denied that Finnegan had ever approached them or had anything to do with obtaining films from them.

Finnegan goes to trial March 3 to face indictments charging bribery and accepting illegal fees during his tenure in office. United States District Judge Ruby M. Huelen will sit on the bench.

RKO to Test Reissue Of Wanger-Bergman 'Joan'

"Joan of Arc," Ingrid Bergman-starrer made by Walter Wanger for RKO release, is being reissued by the distrib on an experimental basis. Company has set up a string of more than 20 art and offbeat pic houses in the New York territory for a day-date test run.

If this proves successful, RKO's plan is to give the film a similar whirl in arties and specialized houses on a national basis, following the pattern with which it had great success on "Kon-Tiki." "Joan" was originally released in 1948 at upped admissions. It was brought back a year and a half later on regular release, but never caught on with any vigor.

Uruguay Fete, With Relaxed P.A. Sked, Better Run Than in '51; Closes Jan. 31

Montevideo, Jan. 29.

The second Punta del Este Film Festival, which teed off Jan. 10 under a sweltering temperature of 98 degrees, winds up this week. Hot weather tempered after a few days, so no visitors suffered. There have been plenty of changes in the composition of the various delegations as first announced. The Hollywood group planed in on Jan. 17. This was a victory for the organizers because predictions were that Hollywood would give this fest the gate. Yvonne de Carlo, of the U.S. delegation, is the center of attraction.

This time the organizers have made a sincere effort at organization, and are trying to prevent the visitors from being overly feted and driven from one event to another as they were last time. They are also carefully trying to avoid charges of nepotism in the awarding of prizes or distribution of passes to the film shows. Admission to the shows for crix is by pass and each one has been assigned his special stall, but there was a snafu at the start with several commentators being given the same pass number.

Hollywood has entered "The Blue Veil" (RKO), "I Want You" (RKO) and "Gypsy Blood." The organizers have not succeeded in "delivering the goods" in their pledge to the Punta del Este hotelkeepers that the Festival would bring a big influx of tourists. These were notably absent at the start although good number poured in later from across the Brazilian border, but the usual flow of Argentine tourists is re-

He's participating in labor negotiations in Havana. Problems in Peru, Brazil and Argentina involve quotas and currency restrictions.

FCC Now Ready To Tackle Issues Of Par as Trust

Washington, Jan. 29.

With the Paramount-DuMont issues at least temporarily out of the way, the Federal Communications Commission is now ready to tackle the crucial phases of its important one-package proceedings involving Par and the heir, by consent decree, of its once-owned theatres, United Paramount Theatres.

Testimony on these phases, which begins Monday (Feb. 4) before Examiner Leo Resnick, will doubtless furnish the basis for the most far-reaching question that has faced the agency since the advent of TV: whether motion picture producers, particularly antitrust violators, may enter the TV field as station owners.

The Par antitrust issues, it's recognized, go beyond the question of Par's eligibility as a broadcast licensee (its license for KTLA-TV in Los Angeles is on temporary status pending the outcome of the proceedings). Although the Commission has decided that the TV eligibility of each antitrust offender shall be determined separately (when license renewal time comes around), it's generally expected that the decision on Par will set the pattern for policy respecting other major film producers also.

In its more immediate impact,

LAST WEEK AT LA VIE

"THE MIRACLE ON 54TH STREET" is the only way to describe what's happened over on East 54th street where La Vie En Rose has 'caught on' overnight, sparked by the electrifying Dorothy Dandridge, ignited by the super-song salesman, Carl Ravazza, and kindled into a blaze by the torrid mash notes of the Gentlemen of the Press.

Our "formula" has made La Vie the most exciting room on the East Side in a decade . . . A Guy and a Doll . . . Carl Ravazza, whose "hold-hands" torch sessions have the dolls too limp to swoon and Dorothy Dandridge, whose sexy spine-tingling delivery has the guys of the town goggle eyed.

With a low bow to the critics—"THE MIRACLE ON 54TH STREET" presents a Nightly Double that has become a Daily Double for cafe regulars . . . "The Toast of the Town," crystal-balled Leonard Lyons about La Dandridge . . . "A Rising Song Star," knighted the Journal-American's Gene Knight . . "A Singing Sexation," quipped Earl Wilson . . . "One of the most refreshing and beautiful newcomers in years," raved the News' Bob Sylvester . . . "Makes audiences Look and Listen" said Danton Walker . . . "Most beautiful Negro singer since Lena Horne," LIFE magazine captioned in a spread . . . Louis Sobol summed up: "Slick Singing Chick."

And if the Gentlemen have been kind to Dorothy their colleagues, the sob-sisters on the gazettes, have been delving into dictionaries to swoon in print for Carl Ravazza.

Bert Lahr, Eddie Cantor, Milton Berle, Dane Clark, Dolores Gray, John Carradine, Jan Murray, Frank Leahy, Jackie Robinson, Cab Calloway, Jackie Miles, Mitzi Green, Edmund O'Brien, Olga San Juan, Dan Topping, George White, Mike Todd, etcetera, etcetera and etcetera as Yul Brynner says in "The King & I." That's not a "Who's Who." It's a "Who's Here." They've all been in time and again to help make "THE MIRACLE ON 54TH STREET."

It's become the rendezvous for Hollywood, Park Avenue, and Broadway . . . They all agree—THE PLACE TO BE—IS NOW LA VIE! ! !

DISTRIBUTION'S BIG OVERHAUL

Gotta Read This Slowly

Columbus, O., Jan. 29.

Picture (from the bulletin of the Independent Theatre Owners of Ohio) of a man trying to be on two sides of a fence at the same time:

"While it is nothing to compare with the lush days of old, nevertheless in the past two weeks business has been good. . . . As soon as the public learns that a theatre is crowded they'll bust the doors down trying to get in. On these occasions, however few they may be, when business is good, let's crow about it. Our newspaper friends will doubtlessly cooperate with us on a Monday roundup story to the effect that business was good over the weekend.

"Of course, there are certain 'calculated risks'. If there is action pending to eliminate tax or to resist labor's demand for an crease, you'll have to convince those parties that these stories are simply put out for the purpose intended—to stimulate more business."

Bitter RKO Theatres Proxy Fight May Be in for Repeat in Spring

Long-drawn-out and bitter proxy fight through which RKO Theatres just went may be reprised on a lesser scale within a couple of months. Next stockholders' session is slated for May, and strong possibility is hinted that the minority group headed by David J. Greene will press for one or two more members of the board.

Greene just a few weeks ago won partial victory in a battle that started at the last annual stockholders meeting, Dec. 6. He succeeded in getting two places on the six-man board. His ultimate aim, of course, is to win a majority on the directorate, which would enable him to exercise management control of the chain.

Possible quick repetition of the proxy fight results from the fact that RKO's last annual stockholders' conclave was held in December, instead of May, which is the normal time. Session was the first since RKO Theatres Corp. was formed, following divorcement at the beginning of 1951 from RKO Pictures.

In order not to make the meeting come too quickly after the new company was organized, initial stockholders gathering was set for December. Future sessions were set for spring, which was the regular time before RKO underwent divorcement.

Greene and his associates are understood to be buying up additional shares of RKO. Thus, if he gets the same support from other stockholders that he got during the recent proxy hassle, he might easily get at least one mor place on the directorate.

Amiable Relationship?

Although Greene's relationship with the management since he and his associate, A. Louis Oresman, took their places on the board Jan.

High Court Nixes Dipson Review Of Suit Vs. Majors

Washington, Jan. 29.

Dipson Theatres of Buffalo lost its antitrust suit against Loew's, et al., when the Supreme Court yesterday (Mon.) denied review of a lower court decision dismissing the charge.

Dipson had contended that the second Circuit Court of Appeals, in holding that agreement by three of the majors to limit first and second-run exhibition of their films did not violate the antitrust laws, had ruled contrary to the Supreme Court decision in Paramount divorcement cases.

Department of Justice had filed a memorandum, as amicus curiae, in support of Dipson's position. It had asked for a ruling "on the issues presented here as to the meaning and effect of the Paramount decision" to provide authoritative guidance to the lower courts on similar cases.

A refusal to grant a review, Justice Dept. had asserted, may affect many private antitrust actions brought by private claimants against some or all Paramount case defendants. A number of the cases, said the agency, involved claims for damages alleged to have result-

N.Y. Group Heartened By Publicity Campaign In Push to Win B.O.

Reviewing nine months' work of the Organization of the Motion Picture Industry of the City of New York, Fred. J. Schwartz, group's topper, in a report to exhibs, indicates that the committee feels "that the community is conscious of a motion picture industry in a more friendly and understanding way."

Other accomplishments, according to Schwartz, since the group launched its public relations campaign on May 1, 1951, include: improvement of relations with newspapers, school children, women, church groups and organized audiences in a move "toward changing the public attitude about pictures to a concrete expression of enjoyment."

The report, a voluminous document, describes in detail the work done with newspapers, institutional and commercial promotions, the community service program, and the cooperative ventures with the Council of Motion Picture Organizations.

Lynn Farnol office is handling the public relations campaign for the group.

SWG BLACKLIST SUIT PUSHED OFF TO APRIL

Originally scheduled to go to trial this month in N. Y. Federal Court, a "blacklist" suit brought by the Screen Writers Guild and the Authors League of America against the Motion Picture Assn. of America and the Society of Independent Motion Picture Producers will now be tried April 7. Switch in date reportedly was made by arrangement between the litigants. Pre-trial hearings are expected to be held at the end of February.

SWG and ALA instituted the action in January, 1949, to challenge a decision by the MPAA and SIMPP that allegedly is aimed at governing political views of persons employed in the motion picture industry. Ruling was adopted at a meeting of company heads in New York in November, 1947, after the House Un-American Ac-

PUSH ON FOR UPPED INCOME

Large number of changes in major company sales organizations recently reflects the iron-fisted insistence of top-echelon officialdom that greater income be produced by distribution departments. Sales chiefs, virtually with knives in their own backs, have been fine-tooth-combing their staffs, from division managers right down to bookers, to get rid of weaker elements and replace them with men who'll slug for the very last dollar.

The resignations, promotions, territorial switches and other shifts that have marked the sales organizations recently tie in with the regional and home office meetings of distribution forces that almost all companies have been holding. The aim is the same—to drive the men to bringing in more coi

The exhibitor, of course, is going to bear the brunt of all this pressure. Company prexies, their production chiefs and boards of directors feel, however, that it is an absolute must if the industry is to go on. Studying figures, they conclude that only more coin out of distribution can solve their problems.

Production costs have been brought down considerably in the past three years. It appears questionable whether they can be reduced much more—and particularly if it is desirable to reduce them any further. Since it has become obvious that the big payoff is in the big pix, putting clamps on creators of such product is not seen as good business.

There will continue, of course, to be pressure to get maximum values on the screen for each dollar spent. Perhaps there is some

Arbitration Tops Allied Bd. Agenda

Washington, Jan. 29.

Increasing film rentals will be number one problem at the midwinter board meeting here of Allied States Assn. next Tuesday (5) and Wednesday (6). Question of film rentals will tie in with talks on arbitration in the hope of devising a method of relief for hard-pressed exhibitors.

In addition, attempt will be made to develop a formula for the pricing of pictures which Allied hopes will be fair to everybody. Abram F. Myers, general counsel of Allied, declared: "Plans for an intense aggressive campaign against present pricing policies will be adopted for use unless and until relief is forthcoming by more orderly means."

Prior to the session of the full board, a committee consisting of reps of the arbitration committee, the national film committee and the "Caravan" committee, which supervises Allied's cooperative system for exchange of information

Mid-South Allied Blasts Withholding Subsequents

Practice of "pre-releasing" films and then withholding the product from subsequent-runs has been blasted by Allied Independent Theatre Owners of the Mid-South. Outfit sent a copy of a resolution attacking the policy to distribs this week.

Allied unit complained that the specially labeled pix should be licensed on the same basis of availability as other product. Theatre outfit asserts that the "roadshowing" system is a violation of court decrees enjoining the companies from price-fixing and discrimination in offering pix to exhibs.

TOA's 'Stand' on Arbitration Seen Tightrope Walk Aimed at Keeping Allied, Distribs Both in the Act

Hollywood, Jan. 29.

Theatre Owners of America board members, in session here, walked down the middle in their proposals for an industry arbitration system. They have endorsed a plan so worded that it could be interpreted as consistent with the programs favored by both Allied States Assn. and the distributors.

It's apparent that TOA's idea is to leave the door open to recommendations by the other groups, rather than formulate a specific arbitration policy which would possibly lead to conflict and the end of all hopes for the entir trade's getting together on a plan.

It's generally conceded that th unending flow of intra-trade actions on antitrust counts represents one of the industry's biggest problems. Certainly, the legalistics and the desire to resolve differences via arbitration have been copping the spotlight at trade get-togethers, such as TOA's board session here, for the past couple of years.

Important rub which has developed so far is Allied's demand for inclusion of rental disputes on any arbitration program. Allied theory is that all distrib-exhib business practices should be subject to attempts at conciliation if any over-all plan is to work. On the other hand, the distribs feel that the cost of licensing pix is a private matter between buyer and seller and not a proper subject for arbitration.

TOA plan, as announced, would cover "any matters arising out of or in connection with film contracts, or any matters involving clearance and runs, or any controversy over or concerning competitive bidding." That is the theatre org's proposed system as approved by the board yesterday (Mon.) and disclosed by exec director Gael Sullivan. As for tthe mechanics, a national arbitration administration would be set up along with the selection of individual arbiters.

Observers noted that whether or not rental differences would be subject to arbitration under the broadly-stated plan was not specifically set forth.

TOA, it seemed clear, was careful to avoid stepping on any toes via taking part in the controversial rentals issue right at the outset. Also suggesting the outfit's con-

Dialog by 20th-Fox?

Scene in "Anything Can Happen," Perlberg-Seaton production for Paramount, has group of bewildered immigrants seeking accommodations at a N. Y. hotel, but with little success because of language barriers.

An irate member of the group blasts the room clerk in Greek, capping his tirade with the clincher, as he stormed out. The irate one's words: "Spyros Skouras!"

4 N.Y. First-Runs Do the Unusual: Their B.O.'s Build

Four pix currently in New York engagements at first-run houses are displaying an unusual b.o. reaction, with grosses approaching the first week's top after dipping for several weeks. In one case, the 12th week's gross topped the first week's by $6,000.

Pix not following the usual pattern—big first week and a gradual decrease until the end of the run—include "Pandora and the Flying Dutchman" at the Normandie, "Rashomon," the Japanese import at the Little Carnegie, "Quo Vadis" at the Astor and "The Greatest Show on Earth" at Radio City Music Hall.

"Pandora," for example, opened to $10,800, dipped to $5,200 in the second week, and has climbed to $7,000 in its eighth week. Similarly, "Rashomon" opened at $14,127, ran at about $10,500 for three weeks, and this week climbed to almost $12,000. Paramount's "Greatest Show" teed off with a big $146,000, jumped to $148,000 the second week, and returned to the opening $146,000 for the third week. However, latter figure, it's estimated, would have been greater than the second stanza had it not been for the snow and rain encountered during the period.

Most unusual fluctuation was displayed by Metro's "Quo Vadis," which opened to a capacity $25,000 on a two-a-day policy at the Astor. After holding at $25,000 for three weeks, pic began a steady decline until it reached $18,000 in the seventh week and jumped to $22,000 during the Xmas-New Year week. At that point, with closing of the day-date grind run at the Capitol, two-a-day policy was abandoned at the Astor and receipts climbed to $38,000. Under the continuous run policy, "Vadis" consistenly grossed over $30,000. Now in its 12th week, film ended the period at $31,000, $6,000 over the opening week.

Filmites feel the strong comebacks of these films result from strong word of mouth boosts. All the pictures involved are of the type that serve as conversation pieces in social gabfests.

Tax Relief Sought By TOA at Four-Day Bd. Meet on Coast

Hollywood, Jan. 29.

Immediate relief from "discriminatory" Federal, state and local taxation will be militantly sought by the Theatre Owners of America, it was revealed as TOA's board of directors launched a four-day midwinter session here yesterday (Mon.).

Exec director Gael Sullivan declared that "many smaller theatres around the country are paying taxes on losses," and he added that the TOA is taking up cudgels to bring about reform.

Discussing arbitration, Charles P. Skouras, board chairman; prexy Mitchell Wolfson and Sullivan stressed the system delegates will seek will be flexible and subject to modifications which may be suggested by other exhib organizations and distributors. TOA toppers say they are anxious to get th ball rolling towards adoption of an all-industry plan.

Delegates will present to production and studio execs their views on film cycles, pix titles, TV, etc.

Distrib reps are huddling Thursday (31) with a group to discuss "Movietime, U.S.A." pix censorship, etc. Theatre TV and FCC hearings are on agenda. Convention winds up Thursday nite with Skouras hosting a party.

This Woman Is Dangerous

Excellent Joan Crawford starrer of femme crook reformed by love. Good b.o. possibilities.

Hollywood, Jan. 24.

Warner release of Robert Sisk production. Stars Joan Crawford, Dennis Morgan, David Brian; features Richard Webb, Mari Aldon, Philip Carey, Ian MacDonald, Katherine Warren. Directed by Felix Feist. Screenplay, Geoffrey Homes, George Worthington Yates; from story by Bernard Girard; camera, Ted McCord; editor, James C. Moore; music, David Buttolph. Tradeshown Jan. 22, '52. Running time, 97 MINS.

Joan Crawford is back on the wrong side of the law in "This Woman Is Dangerous" and the result is entertainment cut to the order of her substantial following. It is a slick dramatic entry, furbished with the kind of values that register well in general release, and it has a pulp fiction plot, excellently put together, that can be sold for good returns.

As the mastermind of a holdup gang, and the sweetheart of David Brian, a violent killer-type, Miss Crawford turns in the type of character and performance that especially suits her sophisticated appearance. Her costuming is in keeping, modishly designed to further the Crawford flare for clothing style. While interest is primarily on the actress, her masculine costars, Dennis Morgan and Brian, are not neglected in the story-telling.

Plot is purely make-believe, but the Felix Feist direction of the Geoffrey Homes-George Worthington Yates script, and the playing, lend an air of credence. Dialog is good and, while the situations can be anticipated, pace holds up to sustain interest. Story by Bernard Girard deals with a woman who, after the holdup of a New Orleans gambling house, goes off to the hospital for a dangerous operation to restore her failing sight. She leaves behind a violent, jealous lover, plus a slight clue that tips the FBI she might have been in on the robbery.

Her medico is Morgan and the forced association with him leads to an unwilling romance. Suspicious of her overlong hospital stay, Brian puts a private eye on her trail to protect his romantic interest when he cannot contact her. When the femme mastermind realizes what is happening she renounces her doctor love, hoping to reach Brian in time to prevent a murder, but the climax finds principals all in the hospital where Brian takes a stand in the observation room over the operating-theatre ready to shoot down his rival. The FBI moves in, fortunately in time and, with promised leniency, Miss Crawford can expect to start a life with Morgan after a short prison term.

Brian supplies a vigorous performance and Morgan is entirely likeable in his role as the eye specialist. Richard Webb is good as the FBI man. Mari Aldon shows up excellently as the girl married to Philip Carey, Brian's more cautious criminally-inclined brother. Ian MacDonald, the private eye; Katherine Warren, Morgan's nurse, and the others are capable.

Robert Sisk's production supervision does very well by the story and casting detail. On the technical end, film benefits from the lensing by Ted McCord, the David Buttolph music score and other assists. Sheila O'Brien did the costuming. Brog.

The Green Glove

Glenn Ford as ex-paratrooper in routine cops-and-robbers meller set in Monte Carlo; for secondary markets.

UA release of Benagoss (Georges Maurer) production. Stars Glenn Ford, Geraldine Brooks, Sir Cedric Hardwicke; features George Macready. Directed by Rudolph Mate. Original story and screenplay, Charles Bennett; camera, Claude Renoir; editor, Lola Barache; music, Joseph Kosma. Previewed in N. Y. Jan. 24, '52. Running time, 88 MINS.

Michael Blake	Glenn Ford
Chris Kenneth	Geraldine Brooks
Father Goron	Sir Cedric Hardwicke
Count Paul Rona	George Macready

Countess	Jany Holt
Inspector Faubert	Roger Treville
Jacques Piotet	Georges Tabet
Madame Piotet	Meg Lemonnier
Inspector	Paul Bonifas
Singer	Juliette G[illegible]
Singer	Jean Bretonnier

"The Green Glove" is a stock cops-and-robbers melodrama, with no particularly distinguishing angles in casting, scripting or production. Filmed in France, its Monte Carlo and rural mountain locales give it some fresh interest. This and the lure of the chase will make it acceptable fare for secondary markets, where it should recoup its modest budget.

The Small Back Room

"The Small Back Room," Michael Powell-Emeric Pressburger production scheduled to open at the Trans-Lux 72nd St. Theatre, N. Y., Friday (1), was reviewed in VARIETY from London Jan. 26, 1949. Picture revolves around a British scientist who fears responsibility but later shakes off his phobia by courageously dismantling an enemy bomb.

Myro opined that the film is a "craftsmanlike job with a ready-made public in Britain and likely to earn more than modest returns for U. S. exhibitors." David Farrar won the critic's praise for his performance as the scientist while Kathleen Byron turns in a "moving characterization" as a sympathetic girl. Snader Productions is releasing in the U. S.

The green glove is a priceless bejeweled medieval relic which has reposed for years in a rural French church, until stolen by a jewel thief (also a collaborator) during the recent war. Glenn Ford, as a paratrooper dropped behind enemy lines, had almost apprehended the thief at the time; had grabbed the briefcase containing the prized gauntlet, but had lost it immediately thereafter when his shelter was bombed. Now, after the war and down on his luck, Ford is back in rural France, hunting for the lost relic with the prosaic, unethical purpose of selling it to make his fortune.

The original thief (George Macready), however, head of an international ring, has also been ceaselessly searching for the glove, and suspecting that Ford eventually would return to lead him to its hiding place. Thereafter ensues a series of chases, harrowing experiences and murders, as thieves pursue Ford and gendarmes follow both.

Plot is further complicated by a half-mad countess who has originally befriended the paratrooper; by an American girl (Geraldine Brooks) serving as tourist guide in Paris who falls for Ford, and gets involved in his escapades, and by the simple country priest (Sir Cedric Hardwicke) who has steadfastly assured his flock that the glove would someday be restored to its proper shrine, and that the long-silent church bells would ring again. And under the proddings of love, Ford does find the glove and return it to the church. But not before a wild chase up and down impassible hills that would unnerve a mountain goat.

Ford's smooth acting lends some credence to the fantastic events, but Miss Brooks is unconvincing (though quite attractive) as his helpmate. Macready plays the heavy with his usual suavity, while Hardwicke brings dignity and a touch of real drama to his brief appearances in the priest role. Jany Holt is also striking as the half-mad countess, and Roger Treville acceptable as a police inspector. Other cast-members, due either to direction or scripting, sometimes act like caricatures.

Claude Renoir's photography is one of the film's better points, with some unusual outdoor camera shots. Bron.

Something to Live For

Drama of Alcoholics Anonymous reformation of femme drunk. For distaffers.

Hollywood, Jan. 28.

Paramount release of George Stevens production. Stars Joan Fontaine, Ray Milland, Teresa Wright; features Richard Derr, Douglas Dick, Herbert Heyes, Harry Bellaver, Paul Valentine. Directed by Stevens. Written by Dwight Taylor; camera, George Barnes; editor, William Hornbeck, Tom McAdoo; music, Victor Young. Tradeshown Jan. 22, '52. Running time, 89 MINS.

Jenny Carey	Joan Fontaine
Alan Miller	Ray Milland
Edna Miller	Teresa Wright
Tony Collins	Richard Derr
Baker	Douglas Dick
Mr. Crawley	Herbert Heyes
Billy	Harry Bellaver
Albert	Paul Valentine
Walter	Frank Orth
Young Man	Bob Cornthwaite
Mrs. Crawley	Helen Spring
Chris Miller	Rudy Lee
Johnny Miller	Patric Mitchell

This is a smoothly-fashioned drama with romantic overtones, slanted for distaff favor. Obvious exploitation values, attached to such dramatic devices as a femme drunk who is reformed through love and a marital triangle, will help carry it along, although big boxoffice generally is not indicated.

An added factor that may aid is fact film serves somewhat in the nature of a followup to Ray Milland's successful "Lost Weekend." In this he is a reformed drunk, saved through Alcoholics Anonymous, but interest is thrown to Joan Fontaine, legit actress with a weakness for the bottle, whom Milland, a married man, helps on the right road and in so doing a romance is born. Teresa Wright, as Milland's understanding wife, sees the problem through with an understanding that saves the marriage.

George Stevens' production and direction put the dramatic devices together with his usual meticulous touch, dealing as realistically as possible with what is, basically, a soap-opera formula along tear-jerker lines. Dwight Taylor's writing supplies freshness in handling as an added indication of the taste with which the subject has been approached.

Milland meets Miss Fontaine when he gets an AA call to help a drunk. He pulls her through and an attraction is formed. Further meetings generate an emotional stress that is not helped by Milland's dissatisfaction with the way his advertising work is going nor by the guilt complex by unacknowledged attraction is causing between them.

Stevens sends the principals through the involvements smoothly as events work up to the point where Milland again pulls Miss Fontaine from a drunken stupor, caused by her fear of opening in a Broadway play. They admit the attachment for each, the admission giving them strength to go their separate ways, secure that the knowledge will keep them strong enough to resist escapism of the bottle.

Milland and Miss Fontaine fulfill demands of their roles with a commendable restraint, as does Miss Wright in her understanding-wife part. Several supporting roles stand out excellently. Among them are Harry Bellaver, as the kind elevator boy in the hotel where Miss Fontaine resides; Douglas Dick, ambitious ad agency man after Milland's assignments Richard Derr, egotistical stage director who has figured in Miss Fontaine's romantic past, and Herbert Heyes, ad agency head.

New York locale of the story furnishes a modern background to which the camera of George Barnes and the process work do justice. Victor Young has contributed a good music score to back up the dramatics. Brog.

The First Time

Amusing domestic comedy of young couple who become parents for first time. For regular dual bills.

Hollywood, Jan. 25.

Columbia release of Norma (Harold Hecht) production. Stars Robert Cummings, Barbara Hale; features Bill Goodwin, Jeff Donnell, Carl Benton Reid, Mona Barrie, Kathleen Comegys, Paul Harvey, Cora Witherspoon. Directed by Frank Tashlin. Screenplay, Jean Rouverol, Hugo Butler, Frank Tashlin, Dane Lussier; based on story by Jean Rouverol and Hugo Butler; camera, Ernest Laszlo; editor, Viola Lawrence; music, Frederick Hollander. Previewed in Hollywood, Jan. 21, '52. Running time, 89 MINS.

Joe Bennet	Robert Cummings
Betsey Bennet	Barbara Hale
Mel Gilbert	Bill Goodwin
Donna Gilbert	Jeff Donnell
Andrew Bennet	Carl Benton Reid
Cassie Mayhew	Mona Barrie
Florence Bennet	Kathleen Comegys
Leeming	Paul Harvey
Miss Salisbury	Cora Witherspoon
Mrs. Potter	Bea Benaderet

A fairly good round of chuckles is supplied by "The First Time," rating it average prospects in the more general dual bill market. Best response will come from the family trade, to which the trials and tribulations of a young couple with the first baby will have a familiar ring.

Robert Cummings and Barbara Hale brightly sell what merit there is to be found in the light, snappy dialog and homey situations, giving the comedy a substance it would not have had with less facile performances. While the fun comes through with a number of excellent touches, production, direction and writing are inclined to string the footage out too long.

Good device of having the narration that bridges the action seemingly done by the new offspring, both on the eve of birth and afterwards, helps the amusement. The young couple first finds that babies cost a lot more than any original estimate, then go through the nightmare of bills, daily job struggles, the neglected husband routine, outside complications, quarrels and reconciliations. Film ends with a new offspring on the way, event being acknowledged by the wife's unnatural craving for banana sandwiches, a complex that introduced the first kid.

Good support to the antics is given by Bill Goodwin and Jeff Donnell, as next-door neighbors, Carl Benton Reid, Mona Barrie and Kathleen Comegys, the grandparents, Cora Witherspoon, nurse, and Paul Harvey.

St. Matthew Passion

"St. Matthew Passion," Austrian import which preemed at the Park Ave. Theatre, N. Y., Monday (28), was reviewed from Vienna by VARIETY in the issue of Nov. 30, 1949. Maas rated the film as a documentary that has good chances in art houses.

Critic described the entry as "a film, but not a moving picture. Raoul Aslan of the State Burgtheatre recites passages of Christ's life and death, opera stars sing and Herbert Karajah directs the Philharmonic Orchestra. But there is no action."

Edited by the late Robert J. Flaherty, the picture is being distributed in the U. S. by Academy productions.

Frank Tashlin directed the Harold Hecht production at an okay pace, although he permits some story holes to show and allows too much repetition. Tashlin, along with Hugo Butler, Jean Rouverol and Dane Lussier, contributed the script, based on a Rouverol-Butler story.

Physical values of the production catch the flavor of the young couple's middle-class circumstances, and Ernest Laszlo uses his cameras to advantage. Brog.

Cloudburst

Melodrama starring Robert Preston adds up to good supporting fare for secondary situations.

United Artists release of Alexander Paal production. Stars Robert Preston, Elizabeth Sellars; features Colin Tapley, Sheila Burrell, Harold Lang, Thomas Heathcote, Marie Germaine, Edward Lexy. Directed by Francis Searle. Screenplay, Searle and Leo Marks, from latter's play, "Cloudburst"; camera, Jimmy Harvey; editor, John Ferris; music, Frank Spencer. Tradeshown N. ., Jan. 25, '52. Running time, 83 MINS.

Made in Britain by producer Alexander Paal, "Cloudburst" shapes up as palatable celluloid for filmgoers with a leaning toward mellers. Picture, however, calls for some intensive selling, for aside from Robert Preston the cast is composed of British players - known to American audiences.

Yarn is based upon Leo Marks' play, "Cloudburst," which Marks and director Francis Searle screenplayed. It unreels a story of how a vengeful man took the law into his own hands. Theme is a familiar one but this version has sufficient variations to help balance off the triteness of the basic plot.

An ex-commando, Preston plays a chief cryptographer for the British foreign office and happily wed to Elizabeth Sellars, his wartime intelligence associate. At the moment when their future appears brightest a speeding car looms out of the darkness, kills Miss Sellars and disappears in the gloom.

Preston dedicates himself to retaliation and grimly hunts down the occupants of the death car. He kills both but leaves a cryptogram behind which the Scotland Yard inspector (Colin Tapley) employs to crack the case. Preston's use of commando-type methods also gives him away to the sleuth.

Story is slow in getting underway, but once the groundwork is established the script develops ample suspense. Preston's portrayal of the avenger is a finely restrained one. His characterization tends to accent the cold and methodical calculation of a man who has lost everything dear to him.

Miss Sellars is fairly good as the wife, although she's on the screen for only the first few reels. Tapley scores as the inspector and Harold Lang, Sheila Burrell and Thomas Heathcote, among others, provide capable support under Searle's direction. Jimmy Harvey's lensing is good as is Frank Spencer's musical score played by the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra.

Picture originally was to have been distributed in the U. S. by Eagle Lion Classics and is included in the block of films that UA took over from ELC last year. Entry is a joint presentation of producer Paal and Rudolph Monter in association with James Carreras' Exclusive Films, Ltd. Gilb.

Navajo

Unusual art house subject dealing with Indian boy's rebellion against white man's civilization.

Hollywood, Jan. 28.

Lippert Picture release of Hall Bartlett production. Directed by Norman Foster. Narration written by Foster; spoken by Sammy Ogg; camera, Virgil E. Miller; editor, Lloyd Nosler; music, Leith Stevens. Previewed Jan. 25, '52. Running time, 70 MINS.

Son of the Hunter	Francis Kee Teller
Grey Singer	John Mitchell
Mother	Mrs. Teller
Ute Guide	Billy Draper
Indian School Counsel	Hall Bartlett

"Navajo" is an unusual subject to be going out under the banner of Lippert Pictures, a releasing organization better known for straight commercial, exploitation pictures. However, film may open a new market for the company since the plan is to sell it along the art-house circuit, it being a subject particularly suited for the sureseaters.

Film is an independent venture by Hall Bartlett, erstwhile actor who formed a company to take cameras into the Navajo Indian Reservation in Arizona. With the forethought to get a story that could be told through a child's eyes as the basis, Hall has come up with an offbeat film that ranks right along with, if not topping, most of the foreign art imports that have previously impressed cosmopolitan critics.

Certainly the camera work by Virgil E. Miller, a Hollywood veteran, is much more impressive than that in any of the art imports and it plays a very major part in giving this film fine visual qualities as well as mood interpretation. Another boosting effect comes from the Leith Stevens music score, adapting original Indian music to counterpoint the simple story.

Norman Foster both directed and wrote the narration that is spoken by young Sammy Ogg. His handling is entirely natural after the simple people he is using to act out the plot become accustomed to the camera. Story centers on Francis Kee Teller, a seven-year-old Navajo who speaks no English. Lad is leading a happy, though materially-barren life with his mother, sisters and an old grand dad on the reservation when the authorities take him off for forced schooling.

True to his Indian blood, he wants nothing from the whites and resists all efforts of Hall Bartlett, playing a school instructor, and Billy Draper, interpreter and guide, to give him an education. One night he flees the Indian school and takes off through the gaunt, weathered canyons of Arizona, with Bartlett and Draper i pursuit. Redskin guile enables him to entrap Draper, but an essential goodness, in turn, makes him save those he was fleeing.

Performers, with the exception of Bartlett, are all unschooled recruits right from the reservation and give the film the impact of complete naturalness that only occasionally succumbs to self-consciousness. Picture is an excellent, unusual first venture and an entirely acceptable entry for bookings on the art circuit. Brog.

Buffalo Bill in Tomahawk Territory

Low-budget frontier saga, for Saturday matinee trade.

United Artists release of Jack Schwarz (Edward Finney-B. B. Ray) production. Stars Clayton Moore. Directed by B. B. Ray. Screenplay, Sam Neuman and Nat Tanchuck; camera, Elmer Dyer; editor, Norman Cerf. Previewed in N. Y., Jan. 23, '52. Running time, 66 MINS.

Buffalo Bill	Clayton Moore
Cactus	Slim Andrews
Chief White Cloud	Rod Redwing
Janet	Sharon Dexter
Lt. Bryan	Eddie Phillips
Stokey	Tom Hubbard

Frontier saga is a low-budget quickie destined for the Saturday matinee kiddie trade. Story and production lack imagination, depicting the Indian-settler conflicts in the familiar stereotyped manner. Obvious attempt of the producers to go easy on the coin is displayed in the poor use of ancient footage for the Indian uprising and Buffalo hunting scenes.

Story revolves around Buffalo Bill's attempt to deliver a herd of cattle to White Cloud, chief of the Sioux, as U. S. Government's contribution to a peace pact. However, group of townsfolk, led by Tom Hubbard, find it to their advantage to continue war with the Indians in order to drive the Indians from the territory, since they have discovered gold in Sioux land. Disguised as Indians, they attack wagon trains and harass the settlers. Believing the Sioux on the warpath, the settlers call in the Army to drive the Indians from the territory. Buffalo Bill discovers the plot, unmasks the heavies

20TH-FOX RACE FOR STORY BUYS

Bd. of Review 'Encouraged' by 1st Move to Make It Self-Sustaining

First effort by the National Board of Review to make the organization self-sustaining via subscriptions to its monthly magazine and weekly guide was described by Henry Hart, board's topper, as "encouraging." Board teed off with an ad in the Saturday Review of Literature and, according to Hart, the ad paid for itself. Convinced that there is an appeal among those seriously interested in films, the Board will soon follow with a two-column by 60-line ad in the Sunday New York Times.

Financial plight of the Board, which operates on a yearly budget of about $25,000, was caused by the withdrawal of three major film companies during 1951. Companies still supporting the Board include Warners, Metro, 20th-Fox, United Artists, Monogram and several indie producers and foreign film importers.

With its income cut in half, the Board is in serious difficulty, and should any of the remaining companies pull out the NBR may have to close down operations unless it can obtain coin from another source. First "source" to be tapped is the general public, and the Board is awaiting the outcome of its subscription campaign before approaching other groups.

It already peddles its mag via newsstand sales at 35c. per copy and these sales have been averaging about 600 to 800 copies per month. All in all, the mag has a total circulation of about 1,500, and the Board expects a substantial increase as a result of its subscription drive, but it's still problematical whether even a healthy circulation boost would put the Board on a self-sustaining basis.

'Economy' Reason Discounted

"Economy" reason offered by the companies that withdrew support was discounted by Hart. Contribution of each major was about $2,000 or $3,000 annually, a sum which Hart believes would not affect to any degree the economic structure of the film companies. He said he

Ask $2,642,240 From Loew's in Distribution Of 9 Enterprise Films

Loew's International Corp. failed to devote its best efforts in releasing nine Enterprise pictures in the foreign market, the Bank of America, National Trust & Savings Assn., Enterprise Productions, Inc., and Sunset Securities Co. charged last week in a $2,642,240 damage suit brought against the distrib in N. Y. Federal Court. Action claims that in many areas Metro pictures were favored by the defendant over Enterprise pix by outright "discrimination."

Films involved in the case assertedly represent a total production cost in excess of $16,000,000. They include "Arch of Triumph," "The Other Love," "Ramrod," "Force of Evil," "No Minor Vices," "Caught," "They Passed This Way," "Body and Soul" and "So This Is New York."

Bank of America and its fellow plaintiffs, through attorneys Schwartz & Frohlich, contend that a Jan. 16, 1947, distribution agreement was violated by Loew's, which allegedly made "improper" deductions from gross b.o. receipts before a 75% rental for the nine films was applied. Amounts purporting to represent theatre overhead and certain operating expenses were said to have been deducted, although not allowed under terms of the release pact.

Discriminatory sales methods of Loew's, according to the complaint, especially in the British and Italian markets, prevented the plaintiffs from obtaining "revenue and profit" of $1,500,000. While the distrib handled Metro product in Britain in a "diligent and businesslike manner," it didn't obtain as many bookings for the Enterprise

Order Composer Trial In 'Bystander' Suit

Composer Gail Kubik last week was ordered by N. Y. Supreme Court Justice Samuel Hofstadter to file notice of trial of her $10,000 suit against Laurel Films by March or face dismissal of the complaint for failure to prosecute.

Miss Kubik's action is based upon the claim that Laurel hired her to write the score of its 1950 production, "Guilty Bystander," but later brushed her off in favor of someone else, thus violating a 1949 employment agreement.

N.Y. Flacks Map Demonstration In Pact Fight

With New York pub-ad staffers associated with District 65 making little progress in negotiations with five film companies for a new contract, union this week set in motion plans for its first demonstration. Publicists have set Friday (1) as the deadline for the receipt of concrete proposals from management.

First demonstration, in all probability, will consist of picketing and the distribution of leaflets in front of a Broadway theatre showing a product of one of the companies involved in the talks. Companies negotiating with the District 65 Screen Publicists Guild include Warner Bros., Columbia, United Artists, 20th-Fox and Universal. Some advancement in the talks is reportedly being made at Warners, Col and UA while activities at 20th and U are more or less at a standstill.

Although the theatre and pic to be hit has not been decided, it's likely that the union will aim its initial demonstrations at the company it considers most recalcitrant.

Union is said to have dropped its demands for a minimum basic crew and a pension plan, but are adamantly insisting on certain basic security clauses. These include the arbitration of all layoffs and a union shop. Agreement on wages appears likely, with the union accepting the approximate 10% which appears to have become the pattern for the industry. Other snags include agreement on double severance pay for layoffs and the question of retroactivity on wage hikes to Oct. 31, 1951, expiration date of the former pact.

Meanwhile, pub-ad staffers at Loew's associated with Local 230, Sign, Pictorial and Display Union, AFL, are weighing a wage offer from the company. Since Loew's granted a voluntary cost-of-living increase several months ago, company has offered a wage hike that would bring the total up to $10. Loew's is apparently following the pattern of $10 across-the-board obtained by Local 230 for staffers at RKO Pictures. The AFL union is also negotiating for the publicists at RKO Theatres and expects to open talks with Major Leslie E. Thompson, company's labor negotiator, on Friday (1).

H-63, Motion Picture Home Office Employees Union, IATSE, reps the flacks at Paramount and plans to open talks with company officials next week.

Blank's UPT Gift

A. H. Blank, head of the Des Moines circuit subsidiary of United Paramount Theatres, has gifted 1,000 shares of UPT's common stock, reducing his direct ownership to 2,595 shares.

The A. H. Blank "A" Trust unloaded another 500 shares as a gift, leaving a balance of 500 shares.

SEEKS BOOST IN PIC OUTPUT

Acquisition by 20th-Fox during the past week of screen rights to "Man on a Tight Rope," British novelette, climaxes one of the most active periods of story-buying in the company's history. It also marks 20th as by far the most active of all studios in going afield for story properties.

20th's heavy buying results primarily from its plans to increase its pic output. That naturally requires more stories. To increase production, studio has built up its staff to 23 producers, and with all these men mulling stories, company has been pushed into more buys.

Since Jan. 1, 20th has closed deals for seven properties. They include three books, a long mag story, novelette, a play and an original. Total cost to the studio was $160,000.

With the exception of "Man on a Tightrope" (which also bears the label "International Incident"), prices have been "reasonable." They do reflect, however, willingness of all the Hollywood lots to pay more for desirable yarns than during the heavy economy stanzas that prevailed from 1947 until late last year.

Figure of $50,000 is considered in the trade exceptional for a foreign novelette, although there's agreement that "Tight Rope," written by Neil Patterson, is a highly unusual story. Published in Britannia mag and set to come out in book form in England, it concerns a Czechoslovak circus that escapes through the Iron Curtain into Western Germany.

37½G for 'Number'

Next highest sum laid out by 20th recently was for the legiter, "The Number," by Arthur Carter, which closed recently after an 11-week run on Broadway. Price was $37,500.

An original by Edmund Love, an occasional writer for The New Yorker, brought $25,000. Subsidiary pact also calls for his services on the screenplay at an additional fee. Story is called "90 Saddles for Kengtu," and concerns a U. S. Army weather outfit stationed in Tibet during the war. The weather outfit ordered 90 saddles just to get in some sporting horseback riding to pass time. However, as a result of having the saddles, an important battle was won. It's said to be a true incident.

Judge Orders Trial Of Kimbrough-Vs.-U

A $50,000 damage suit brought in 1949 in N. Y. Federal Court by author Emily Kimbrough against Universal Pictures and Dodd, Mead & Co. must be settled by trial, Federal Judge Sylvester Ryan ruled last week. Court's decision was made in the course of a denial of motions made by all three litigants for summary judgment.

Case stems from an April, 1948, agreement in which Miss Kimbrough sold Universal worldwide film rights to three of her stories under the overall title of "It Gives Me Great Pleasure." Company paid a $10,000 advance on a total purchase price of $60,000.

Action claims after the deal was made U backed out. Miss Kimbrough seeks to hold U to the original deal. Film company counterclaimed with the charge that the writer failed to preserve the copyright abroad, thus her stories are not marketable overseas due to a cloudy title. It asks that the pact be rescinded.

Judge Ryan held that the U. S. copyright to the works is valid but did not rule on its validity abroad since Miss Kimbrough is "silent on what steps she has taken to secure copyright protection in foreign countries." Authoress, in naming publisher Dodd, Mead a defendant, contended it was up to them to protect the property.

More Advance Notice on Product Seen in '52; More Pix Uncertain

Whether exhibs will have more choice of product in 1952 than they had last year still is unclear. It does appear certain, however, that they'll have notice farther in advance than normal of what is coming up, and can lay booking and exploitation plans accordingly.

While production schedules have been climbing during the past couple years, release slates of the eight majors show no definite trend as to quantity of pix going into distribution. Current, preliminary estimates by the various distribs show three so far having scheduled more pix for '52 than '51, four fewer and one the same.

While a few companies have made up schedules that carry them all the way into September, there seems to be no doubt that they are still "playing by ear." The rosters admittedly open to change the year develops.

As always, if biz slows up, runs are shortened and there's exhib demand for more changes per week and thus, of course, for more product. If the b.o. brightens, the reverse is true. So only the economic year, as it unfolds, will dictate the number of releases.

Distrib execs customarily try to hold off submitting to exhib demands for more product. Naturally, with shorter runs, it means less money per pic. That's obviously not good business for producers.

However, when the pressure gets real strong, distribs generally find discretion is the better part of valor. Exhibs, if biz isn't too hot, become determined to get more changes and so move away from regular sources of supply if necessary. Thus the distrib discovers that he is losing a theatre's playing time—time which he might get by making more films available. When one distrib gives in on this basis, most of the others are forced to follow and there's an inevitable increase in the number of pix that wind up on the release schedule.

Won't Run Wild

Distribs at this particular moment are actually more determined than ever not to run wild on the number of releases. Their statistics clearly show them that it is the big pix that are making money for them, and the medium and little ones that are the heavy losers. Since an increase in number of releases merely means less playing time for these secondary films, hoisting release slates is a

Too Much Dancing

Too much flesh-and-blood is deterring sale of screen rights to "Dance to the Piper," new autobiog by choreographer Agnes DeMille (Cecil B.'s niece).

At least four studios are interested in the yarn, but state they'll probably pass it up because they figure at least 90% of the hundreds of people mentioned by Miss DeMille are still alive. That means a back-breaking and expensive — if not impossible — job of getting a clearance from each one pictured or alluded to in the film.

Supreme Court Refuses Review Of CSU's IA Rap

Washington, Jan. 29.

The Supreme Court yesterday (Mon.) refused to review a decision of the California Court of Appeals dismissing antitrust charges brought by the Conference of Studio Unions against the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and major producers. Appeal was sought by CSU after it failed to obtain damages it claimed its members suffered as a result of the studio strike some years ago.

CSU claimed that thousands of wage-earners were adversely affected by an alleged conspiracy between the majors and IATSE, that many persons were thrown out of jobs and that some are still out of employment in the only work they know.

In opposing review by the high tribunal, the majors contended that the action of CSU was "nothing more than an attempt by one labor organization, which was defeated in a jurisdictional struggle with its ancient rival, to utilize the Federal courts to avenge itself upon the victorious rival union and upon the employers." The majors said a charge of conspiracy had been rejected by the National Labor Relations Board.

Claim of CSU that the lower court decision was in conflict with other decisions by the appeals courts was held by the majors to be without merit. IATSE, in opposing the appeal, asserted that CSU, "having been defeated in the open market of labor competition," was trying to impose on IATSE punitive measures of antitrust laws for which there was no basis for action.

Schine Gets Extension On 25-Theatre Disposal

Buffalo, Jan. 29.

Schine Theatres, Inc., has been granted an extension of dates and terms for the disposal of 25 of its theatres by Judge John Knight in Federal Court here.

Schine, according to the terms of a consent decree following the Government's antitrust suit in 1949, was directed to sell 39 theatres in three years. To date, only 14 have been sold, Schine attorneys told the court. The amended order directs that Schine accept bids which, added to profits since last June, would be considered reasonable, and further directs that one-third of the remaining theatres be sold by July 24 and two-thirds by Dec. 24, 1953.

Robert P. Patterson, former Secretary of War, who appeared as counsel for Schine in the present proceeding, was killed in the American Airlines Buffalo-Newark plane crash returning to New York from court here last week.

Film Industry Starts 150G Drive for NCCJ; Geo. Skouras Picks Aides

Film industry this week launched a drive to raise $150,000 for the National Conference of Christians and Jews. Goal is to realize $75,000 from personnel of the homeoffice producing and distrib companies, $50,000 from theatres in the Greater New York area and throughout the country, and $25,000 from distrib branch offices.

To spark the campaign, George P. Skouras, national chairman of the amusement division, has named top industryites for key jobs in the NCCJ drive. J. Robert Rubin, Loew's veepee, is general chairman; Fred J. Schwartz, Century Circuit prexy, heads the metropolitan N. Y. committee; Major Leslie E. Thompson, RKO Theatres exec, tops the planning committee; William P. Gehring, 20th-Fox sales exec, leads the distribution committee, and Henry A. (Hank) Linet, Universal's sales promotion topper, chairmans the publicity group.

Major Thompson will help map the industry's participation in Brotherhood Week, Feb. 17-24, which will be highlighted by an industry dinner Feb. 28. Gehring's specific duty is to direct the raising of the $25,000 from the personnel of branch offices of the distrib companies operating out of New York.

Los Angeles, Jan. 29.

Although there are five new bills this frame, only one is providing real boxoffice action. "Sailor Beware," playing two theatres, shapes strong $30,000. It may go higher since the pic is doing the only real upbeat trade.

"Red Skies Montana" is very disappointing at $19,000 in four houses. A slow $23,000 is seen for "On Dangerous Ground," two sites. "Callaway Went Thataway" is getting only a slight $16,000, also in two. "Wild Blue Yonder" looms medium $17,000 in three locations.

Heavy rains over weekend sloughed biz generally, cutting heavily into tentatively budding grosses, but a couple of top pix managed to hang on. "Room for One More" shapes up as best thing Warner has had in some time and "Decision Before Dawn" is also delivering at the Fulton. They're both certain holdovers. H.O.'s, Bad Weather Hit B'way Biz; 'Show' Still Greatest at 146G, 3d, 'Country' Big 14G, 'Vadis' 31G, 4th

With only one new bill launched during the past week, Broadway first-run business is slipping this session. Many big houses were down sharply until a brisk weekend upbeat came to the rescue. Even with this help, several theatres are limping boxoffice-wise. Part of this slack is being taken up by a number of strong holdovers and extended-run pix.

"Cry Beloved Country" is finishing its first week today at the Bijou with a great $14,000 or close. "Invitation" teed off yesterday (Tues.) at the State, while "Japanese War Bride" opened yesterday at the Trans-Lux 52d St. "St Matthew Passion" went into the Park Avenue Monday (28).

"Greatest Show on Earth" is still pacing the field, holding unusually big with $146,000 in third week at the Music Hall. Current session ending today promised to equal the second week's total of $148,000 until the rain and snow Monday (28) cut in deeply. Indicative of the remarkably steady pace is the fact that the present stanza will be the same as opening week.

Continuing as top straight-film is "Quo Vadis," smash $31,000 for 12th frame at the Astor, or fourth under present continuous-run policy. This is almost the same as the preceding week. "Scandal Sheet" with the Ink Spots, Sarah Vaughan and Erskine Hawkins band topping the stageshow held big with $73,000 in second session at the Paramount. "Las Vegas Story," with Denise Darcel, Jack Carter and Blue Barron orch onstage, supplant this combo today (Wed.).

"Model and Marriage Broker" with stage bill headed by Alan Dale and Beatrice Kraft Dancers looks to wind third week at the Roxy with okay $60,000, making an unusually successful run. "Death of a Salesman" still is socko with $15,000 or close in sixth week at the Victoria. "Submarine Command" is holding nicely with $15,000 in second frame at the Globe.

But elsewhere, excepting for "Detective Story" at the Mayfair and some of the arty theatres, biz ranges from mild to near bottom. Mayfair brings in "Sailor Beware" tomorrow (Thurs.).

Estimates for This Week

Astor (City Inv.) (1,300; $1.25-$1.80)—"Quo Vadis" (M-G) (13th wk). Present stanza started here yesterday (Tues.). The 12th round pushed ahead of preceding week to smash $31,000, after $30,000 for 11th week (third week under current continuous-run setup here).

Mayfair (Brandt) (1,736; 50-$1.80)—"Sailor Beware" (Par). Opens tomorrow (Thurs.). In ahead, "Detective Story" (Par) (12th wk-9 days), looks fine $18,000 after $19,000 for 11th week.

Normandie (Normandie Theatres) (592; 95-$1.80)—"Pandora and Flying Dutchman" (M-G) (8th wk). Present session ending tomorrow (Thurs.) likely will hold as strong as previous week with big $7,000, over hopes.

Palace (RKO) (1,700; $1.20-$4.80)—All-vaude, two-a-day policy headed by Judy Garland (16th wk). This stanza started yesterday (Tues.). The 15th week was held to only six shows because house dropped matinees on Wednesday, Thursday, Saturday and Sunday. Shows were cancelled by Miss Garland's absence, medico ordering her to quit matinees until fully recovered from recent illness. Big $28,500 for 15th round after $20,500 for 14th week, five shows, house being closed three days of week also because of Miss Garland's sickness.

London's Legit at Good B. O. Level Despite 2 Important Foldos Due

London, Jan. 29.

The impending demise of two West End productions, both of which were expected to continue for some time, gave rise to rumors of a legit theatre slump. Checkup during the past week indicates that business, while not at the boom level of the 1946-47 era, is about average for this time of the year.

Announcement of the two folderoos came quick succession. Firstly, Jack Hylton announced that he was withdrawing "Kiss Me, Kate" from the Coliseum on Feb. 23 after a run of just over 11 months. Then, two days later, came the news that "The Day's Mischief," which opened in December at the Duke of York's to rave critical notices, is scheduled to shutter next Saturday (2). This was presented jointly by Alec P. Rea, E. P. Clift and Roy Limbert.

Although both closings surprised the trade here, there are logical explanations which are not indicative of a slump. In the case of "Kate," the production had undergone two major cast changes, and this undoubtedly hurt grosses. For the first eight months it was a capacity attraction, and even today is still doing steady biz. But the take is not big enough to justify prolongation of the run at this big house.

"Mischief" failed to reach its target by around $500 a week and goes down in history as another artistic success. Its failure is attributed by many to the sombre nature of its theme which frightened off many would-be theatregoers. The venture will cost its sponsors around $3,000 each.

Several other plays recently folded or are about to be withdrawn. "To Dorothy A Son," which winds its Garrick run next month, has played for more than a year to substantial profits. "The Winter's Tale" had a healthy season at the Phoenix and was still in the chips when pulled out to make room for the new Gielgud production, "Much Ado About Nothing."

"The Biggest Thief in Town" had a chequered career with three major cast changes and three moves in its five-month life. Under the circumstances, it did exceptionally well.

Among the recent flops can be numbered "Indian Summer," which checked in and out of the Criterion in a few weeks, and Peter Ustinov's "Moment of Truth," knocked by the critics and getting a short life at the Adelphi. "Rainbow Square" also took a knock from the reviewers. Although kept in at the off-the-beaten-track Stoll Theatre for more than four months, never attracted sufficient biz, and was pulled last weekend.

Apart from the pantos, ice shows and circuses which have been playing to big money, the percentage of West End hits is still substantial. "Knights of Madness," "Seagulls Over Sorrento," "Reluctant He-," "Waters of the Moon," "Love of Four Colonels," Lyric Revue," "The Hollow" and "Gay's the Word" are among the long-run attractions still playing to ightly capacity business. Newer offerings which are also drawing capacity trade of course are headed by "South Pacific," and include "Zip Goes a Million," "And So To Bed" and "Figure of Fun."

Bernstein's Newsreel Folding After 1 Year

London, Jan. 22.

The International Newsreel, started by Sidney L. Bernstein about a year ago, is to wind up next month. Produced in cooperation with Telenews of America, it was launched for the Granada circuit when the Bernsteins cancelled their newsreel contracts, an action which was followed by lawsuits taken to the House of Lords.

One of the main reasons, it is understood, for termination of production, has been the inability of the Granada group to win adequate support from independent exhibitors. It was hoped originally that the International reel would be widely supported by exhibs who had objected to newsreel prices and conditions. Reported that less than 100 theatres contracted for the reel, mainly because coverage of local events was considered inadequate by some exhibs.

No Pay for BFPA Veepee

London, Jan. 22.

Under a change in its constitution which will come into effect later this year, the British Film Producers Assn. is creating a new office, that of vice-prexy. This is being done to relieve the president of the burden of taking the chair at all meetings. Until recently, the BFPA had a paid vice-president elected from outside the industry. The last one to hold this office was Hugh Gaitskell, who later became Chancellor of the Exchequer. The present intention is to appoint someone from within the industry to this unpaid job.

The BFPA also is seeking opinions from producers on revision of its constitution to limit members of its executive council. At present each member company automatically has a council seat, but with the increase in membership, this body is becoming unwieldy.

Tennent Readies 3 London Legits

London, Jan. 29.

With the launching last week of Tennessee Williams' "Summer & Smoke" at the Duchess, H. M. Tennent's organization is introducing one of its biggest programs, which will include a new vehicle for Alec Guinness, a Katharine Hepburn starrer and a new Terence Rattigan play. On Thursday (31), a new Yvonne Mitchell play, "The Same Sky," opens at the Lyric, Hammersmith. This will be followed by a revival in early March of Noel Coward's "The Vortex," with Dirk Bogarde and Isabel Jeans starred.

The new Rattigan piece, "Deep Blue Sea," for which the author is currently negotiating in N. Y., opens out of town at Brighton Feb. 4, with Peggy Ashcroft in the main role.

Sam Spewack has authored the play for which Guinness has been inked. It is as yet untitled. With the star will be Diana Churchill, Ernest Thesiger and Daphne Anderson. The Hepburn entry will not reach the West End until May. It will be the preem here of Shaw's "The Millionairess."

Another Tennent production will be Eric Linklater's "The Mortimer Touch," which begins a tour March 18 at Brighton. Pamela Brown and Mervyn Johns head the cast.

Arg. '51 Legit Grosses $555,613 Ahead of '50; Authors Grab $761,938

Buenos Aires, Jan. 22.

The legit boom in Argentina the first nine months of this year brought plenty of dough into the coffers of local playwrights, there being 115 productions featuring plays by the local writers and only 24 translations from foreign authors. Local authors' society (Argentores) collected $761,938 in royalties from all fields. Argentine legit grosses for the year totalled $3,705,748 and $555,613 more than the $3,150,135 peak registered in 1950. Of this total, legit plays staged here in 25 theatres accounted for $2,557,947. Grosses from suburban theatres came to $138,886. Vaudeville shows grossed $716,180 while recitals and concerts yielded $92,739.

Although nearly all plays ran well over 100 performances, there were no spectacularly long-runs as in the two previous years. Alejandro Casona's play, "Key to the Maze," took second place in 1951 as a grosser, going to 233 performances before closed for the summer. "Hipocampo," translated by Escobar and Romeo from the play by Italian author Sergio Pugliese, and produced by Faust Rocha at the tiny Ariel Theatre, was the record long-run of the year. A film version of "Hipocampo" is to be made by comedian Luis Sandrini for Cinematografica Interamericana.

Probably the most outstanding legit production of 1951 was "F.B." by Enrique Suarez de Deza. When shuttered for the summer, it had run 187 performances, with producer-actor Narciso Ibanez Menta planning to bring it back next season. Translation and production rights may go to a U. S. producer soon.

There were few translations by North American or British authors. The Esteban Serrador Production Co. revived "The Heiress" after the Paramount film brought new interest, but it had only a short run. Andre Roussin's "Nina," translated by Francisco J. Bolla, was a hit, running 103 performances.

Total number of legit theatres increased from 1,690 to 2,190, with seating capacity rising from 945,000 to 957,209. The new houses were all located in nabe districts or in provincial cities.

Buffalo Bill In Tomahawk Territory

and renews the peace treaty with White Cloud.

Clayton Moore makes an acceptable Buffalo Bill, and Slim Andrews handles the comedy relief as his sidekick. Sharon Dexter and Eddie Phillips are okay as the romantic duo. Stock script by Sam Neuman and Nat Tanchuck is filled with dialog cliches. Technical values are stock for the low-budget expenditure.

Man Bait
(BRITISH)

Okay program melodrama for secondary bookings.

Hollywood, Jan. 25.

Lippert Pictures release of Anthony Hinds production. Stars George Brent, Marguerite Chapman; features Raymond Huntley, Peter Reynolds, Diana Dors. Directed by Terence Fisher. Screenplay, Frederick Knott; from original story by James Hadley Chase; camera, Walter Harvey; editor, Maurice Rootes. At Vogue, Hollywood, Jan. 24, '52. Running time, 78 MINS.

Harman	George Brent
Stella	Marguerite Chapman
Clive	Raymond Huntley
Jeff	Peter Reynolds
Ruby	Diana Dors
Vi	leanor Summerfield
Dale	Meredith Edwards
Joe	Harry Fowler

British import taken over by Lippert Pictures for domestic distribution rates as an okay secondary melodrama for lowercasing in the general situation. While a bit overlength for this classification at 78 minutes, story handling has interest and names of George Brent and Marguerite Chapman are familiar enough to help its market chances.

First half of the footage is marked by a leisurely British tempo as director Terence Fisher rather methodically establishes the characters. However, latter half is better paced as plot becomes more melodramatic and general feeling gotten across is on the plus side. London locale also is on the favorable side.

The Frederick Knott script deals with Brent, manager of a London book store, who becomes involved in blackmail and murder and is saved by his secretary, Miss Chapman, from having to pay for crimes he didn't commit. An impulsive embrace with Diana Dors, store clerk, leads to blackmail when she is persuaded by Peter Reynolds, a thief, to demand money from Brent. Blackmailers tell of the incident in a letter to Brent's invalid wife, causing her death. In a state of shock, he pays off Miss Dors and she is killed by Reynolds. Miss Chapman's commonsense, however, prevents Brent from facing charges for the killing and leads the way to trap Reynolds.

Performances are uniformly good, with Miss Dors, being introduced in the picture, presenting an s.a. personality. Raymond Huntley, another book store employe, Reynolds, Eleanor Summerfield, Meredith Edwards and Harry Fowler ably support Brent and Miss Chapman.

Film is the first to be produced by Anthony Hinds under a deal with Lippert which requires latter to furnish familiar Hollywood bit overlong for this classification rights. Technical support is acceptable. Brog.

Les Miserables
(ITALIAN)

Lux Film release of Carlo Ponti production. Stars Gino Cervi, Valentina Cortesa. Directed by Riccardo Freda. Screenplay, Freda, Mario Monicelli, Stefano Vanzina, Nino Novarese; camera, Rodolfo Lombardi; editor, Otello Colangeli; music, Alessandro Cicognini. Tradeshown in N. Y., Jan. 24, '52. Running time, 140 MINS.

Fantine Cosette	Valentina Cortesa
Jean Valjean	Gino Cervi
Inspector Javert	John Hinrich
Marius	Aldo Nicodemi
Cosette the child	Duccia Giraldi
Therardier, the innkeeper	Luigi Pavese
Mme. Thenardier	Jone Romano
Sister Simplicia	Andreina Pagnani
Minister of Police Barone Gillenormand	Joopván Hulzen

(Originally in Italian; now dubbed in English)

American and foreign film companies have been making this Victor Hugo story since early silent days. This Italian production of France in the late 18th and early 19th centuries is a neat version, with the dubbing into English highly successful for the most part. Pic has the added assets for the U. S. market of having Gino Cervi and Valentina Cortesa in the starring roles. Picture is a strong bet for arty houses and sure-seaters and might do on some circuit bookings if judiciously trimmed. Present running time of two hours and 20 minutes militates against dual booking in the latter category.

Cervi contributes greatly to the smooth development of this production. His is a superb portrayal of Valjean, who was able to come from 18 years of imprisonment to become a successful businessman and mayor of a French community. Miss Cortesa is not quite as creditable, either as Fantine, the husbandless mother, or Cosette, the grown daughter of this wedlock. But she adds comeliness to the roles.

John Hinrich is expertly willainous as Inspector Javert while Aldo Nicodemi serves okay as the hot-headed revolutionary in love with Cosette. Duccia Giraldi, as Cosette the child, makes a sad-eyed, much-abused youngster amount to something.

Lux Film may have had "Fabola" in mind when it decided to use English dubbing on "Les Miserables." And it is a better-done job than on the former, result being that, aside from several too-British accents, this picture runs nearly as smoothly on the dialog if originally done in English.

Riccardo Freda's direction is expert most of the way although he appears to have been handicapped sometimes with an overly long script. The success he has had in maintaining maximum interest is all to his credit. The lens job of Rodolfo Lombardi is firstrate while Otello Colangeli has edited with skill if at times not sharply enough. Alessandro Cicognini's original score is a highlight. Wear.

John Davis

both committees have employed Ebasco Services, consultant outfit, to survey the situation from tax and business standpoints.

Davis probably will not be back in time for the next board meet, slated for mid-February. It has been moved up from the last Thursday of the month because of intention of some directors to be on the Coast on the former date.

Davis' support is desired in the event of a merger, since under some plans two-thirds approval of stockholders of both companies is required. Thus the 134,000-share Rank block would be an important factor.

While in New York, Davis huddled principally with Rank's U. S. rep, Robert S. Benjamin, who serves on the U board, and the special committee looking into the merger idea.

films as it could have, although the latter pix had "equal or better b.o. drawing power."

Papers disclose that so meagre were "Ramrod" earnings in France that the take failed to pay off dubbing costs of $4,478. In the case of "No Minor Vices," it's alleged, the defendant charged Enterprise with $5,566 French dubbing and synchronizing costs, although the picture wasn't even released France.

When Enterprise defaulted on several loans made to it by the Bank of America, the institution recently foreclosed a lien on seven of the films and obtained full title. Bank subsequently assigned Sunset all monies that would accrue to it from Loew's distribution of this block. Bank of America, however, retains its original interests in the other two pictures, "Body and Soul" and "Force of Evil."

ciliatory mood was Sullivan's comment that the organization doesn't consider its proposals as perfect. He added, in effect, that suggestions for improvement would be welcome from others.

TOA also seemed bending over backwards so as not to create the impression that it was taking th initiative, over Allied, in getting an all-industry plan underway. The board on Monday first voted to keep the proposed system under wraps until conferences were held with other exhib groups and the film companies. However, differences with reporters at a press meeting cropped up and these led to the limited announcement. Sullivan admitted the board took two hours to phrase the press release.

Cops Beat Up Students Protesting Against Harlan's 2d Postwar Film

By GEORGE F. GAAL

Frankfurt, Jan. 22.

An excited crowd yelled "Jew's mercenaries" and German police used billy clubs to beat up a crowd of 200 university students in Freiburg last Wednesday (16) when it tried to demonstrate against the screening of "Case of Hanna Amon," second postwar film of Veit Harlan, Nazi Germany's No. 1 film director.

The riot was the most serious incident to date in Germany in the bitter controversy about the comeback of Harlan, who directed the anti-Semitic film, "The Jew Suess," for Nazi propaganda minister Josef Goebbels. There was only one similar large-scale fracas last year in Salzburg, Austria, where an anti-Semitic crowd severely beat up (with police aid) some 100 Jews who tried to demonstrate against the first postwar Harlan pic, "Undying Lover."

The Freiburg incident, and police brutality employed therein, is expected to result in high-level political repercussions, likely to come from Bonn, the federal capital. Like in "Lover," Harlan's wife, Swedish-born actress Kristina Soederbaum, is also starred in "Hanna Amon." She was one of the top pic stars during the Nazi times.

Unprecedented Police Action

Following the riot, South Baden premier Leo Wohleb went to the scene and ordered the film banned. The same day, the state government confirmed this action. Interior minister Dr. Alfred Schuehly announced he will launch an investigation concerning the unprecedented police action. The university faculty rallied as one behind the students, and rector Professor Johannes Vincke announced he will file charges against Freiburg's police chief.

'Samson' Pacing Italo Film Biz Early in '52; 'Keeps,' 'Born' Also Big

Genoa, Jan. 22.

"Samson and Delilah" (Par) has taken the lead in early 1951-52 box-office derby, with grosses, after first-run dates, placing it well ahead of "This Time For Keeps" (M-G) for top honors.

Other top grossers, in order of their b.o., are "Kim" (M-G), "Born Yesterday" (Col), "Signori in Carozza" (Lux), "Only the Valiant" (WB), "Toto Terzo Uomo" (Italian), "Father's Little Dividend" (M-G), "Billy the Kid" (M-G) and "Halls of Montezuma" (20th). Two other Italian pix follow in 11th and 12th places.

Christmas holdovers and a series of strong Italian films recently released, including "Anna" and "Cops and Robbers," both Lux releases, may reshuffle this classification in the next few weeks.

Macgregor Scott Upped To AB-Pathe Sales Head

London, Jan. 29.

Macgregor Scott, overseas sales manager for Associated British-Pathe, has been upped to the post of sales manager, vacated last week by H. E. (Chick) Ellis.

Overseas sales chief spot is taken over by Tony Morris, who had been Scott's assistant for some years.

Scott, who has been with the organization for 12 years, became overseas sales chief in 1948.

Patrons Fail to Back Director on Pic Cuts

Vienna, Jan. 22.

People attending the preem of "Wonders Still Happen," directed and produced by Willi Forst, were surprised to receive free tickets for another showing of the same film on the following day at the Forum Theatre.

Forst had protested against the Austrian distributors cutting out parts of his picture, contending that it made "the whole story uninteresting and almost non-understandable."

Invited guests were asked to vote on which version they liked. It was 50-50 decision.

Where Small Population Would Help Scot Exhib

Moffat, Scotland, Jan. 22.

If it can be proved that this small South Scotland town has only 2,000 residents, D. C. Adamson, indie exhib who screens pix there, will regain exemption from the entertainments tax. Recent census revealed the town to have 2,114 people. Under British law, cinemas in centres with no more than 2,000 population are clear of tax.

Customs duty authorities have nixed the exhib's plea for exemption. Claimed by some that the extra 114 could be accounted for by visitors and 150 boarding-school pupils at the time census was taken. Matter is being investigated by Cinematograph Exhibitors Assn.

Strong Pix Beat Arg. Hot Weather

Buenos Aires, Jan. 22.

"Hamlet," which opened at the Opera Theatre here this month, so far is doing better business than "Red Shoes" did in its opening days. Patrons stand in line under the broiling sun to get advance reservations. Despite the language snag and the fact that captions in Spanish do not always make the Shakespearian drama clear, this pic has caught on solidly.

The French film, "La Justice est Faite" (Difa), released at the Libertador, Biarritiz and Capitol day-date, is another smash hit.

This new product and pictures like "Father of Bride" and "Born Yesterday" are highlighting the point that warmer weather will not keep patrons from the film houses here when the product is topnotch. "Bride" already is past its eighth week at the Premier, having grossed $70,260 the first five weeks, way ahead of the average for this time of year. "Born" held for seven weeks in a first-run house and grossed $33,465 in the first five sessions.

LONDON 'SUMMER' LOOKS OK DUE TO M. JOHNSTON

London, Jan. 29.

Tennessee Williams' "Summer and Smoke," which opened at the Duchess last Thursday (24), is noteworthy for Margaret Johnston's performance in a neurotic role which tops the play's intrinsic appeal. However, the production was warmly received, and will probably attract on the star's performance.

Tennent Productions, Ltd., presented "Summer and Smoke" at the Duchess after a tryout season at the Lyric, Hammersmith. In addition to Miss Johnston, who is starred, the cast includes Megs Jenkins, William Sylvester, Allan Jeayes, Peter Sallis, Barbara Graley, Joan Young, Maria Britnieva, Reginald Dyson, Ingeborg Wells, Sheila Shand Gibbs and Sheldon Allan. Play was directed by Peter Glenville and has original music by Paul Bowles.

The London Mask Theatre staged "Sunset in Knightsbridge" at the Westminster Theatre Jan. 23 for a four-week season. It's an adaptation by Ireland Wood of the novel, "An Avenue of Stone," by Pamela Hansford Johnson. Olga Lindo scores as aging actress battening on her youthful companions to retain her grip on life. Anthony Ireland, Marian Spencer and John Wood share equal honors in supporting roles, and play is ably directed by Charles Hickman.

Mex Censors Ban 'Fox'

Mexico City, Jan. 22.

"Fox of the Desert" (20th) was banned from Mexico exhibition by the pix censors who considered the production a laudation of the late chief of the Nazi Afrika Korps.

"Fox" had been inked by the Cine Alameda, top local first-run cinema. It is distributed in the U. S. as "The Desert Fox."

Radio Tribute to Bridie

Glasgow, Jan. 29.

Leading British actors and theatre personalities will join in a radio tribute to the late James Bridie, noted British playwright. Production is set for airing from the Scottish British Broadcasting Corp. this week. Dame Edith Evans, Ivor Brown, Walter Elliot, Alastair Sim, Sir Lewis Casson and Tyrone Guthrie are taking part.

Broadcast will include excerpts from Bridie plays and a speech from his last piece, "The Queen's Comedy," produced at the Edinburgh International Festival.

Annual Row On British Quota Tees Off Feb. 28

London, Jan. 29.

The annual tussle to determine the British film quota for 1952 takes place at the end of next month. Special meeting of the Films Council has been convened for Feb. 28 to make recommendations to the Board of Trade prexy.

For the past two years the British film quota has been fixed at 30%, and the then Board of Trade prez, Harold Wilson, intimated his desire to keep the figure for at least three years to give some stability to the production industry. The forecast, therefore, is that any major change is unlikely.

Nonetheless, rival industry factions will be pressing for quota revisions. On the one hand certain labor interests are pledged to campaign for a substantially higher figure while exhibitors are known to favor a cut to around 25%.

Leading the agitation on the labor side will be the Assn. of Cine Technicians rep on the Council, George H. Elvin, who will once again urge that the quota be set at the 1948 peak figure of 45%. It is likely he will be supported by Rosamund John, the Equity member on the panel.

The two National Assn. of Theatrical & Kine Employees members of the Council will vote against their labor colleagues as they have done for some years past. Their view has been that the current percentage is a realistic one and any attempt to hike it to 40% or higher would lead to mass exhibitor defaults because sufficient product could not be made available.

The exhibitor viewpoint was cued earlier in the month when concern was expressed at the inadequacy of British product to fulfill the second half of the quota year.

Aussie Govt. Nixes Use Of Pets for Exploitation

Sydney, Jan. 29.

Australian government chiefs have given the thumbs down treatment covering the export to America of local fauna for any pic publicity. Action follows the death in N. Y. of a baby kangaroo taken there on behalf of 20th-Fox, producers of the pic "Kangaroo," by Loretta North, winner of a "Miss Kangaroo" competition, as an exploitation idea.

Government spokesman said it was "a cruel thing" to use Aussie fauna abroad for boosting any type of film, irrespective of whether it had been made in Australia or carried an Australian theme. It would not be tolerated in the future, the spokesman added.

Paramount recently was given the greenlight to export to Hollywood two koala bears for use in "Botany Bay." Bears are being cared for at the San Diego Zoo and will not be permitted to appear "in person" anywhere else in the U. S., returning to their homeland after pic's completion.

Life Begins at 90

London, Jan. 29.

Fred Russell, now 90, father of the Palladium impresario, Val Parnell, made his debut on TV recently.

He did a ventriloquial act in Richard Afton's production of "Music Hall," one of the regular British Broadcasting Corp. vaudeo features.

Click of Brit. TV Showing Latest Pix May Get Par, WB, M-G Into Act

London, Jan. 29.

Three American distributing companies which refused to allow their product to be included in the new TV fortnightly feature, "Current Release," are being urged to reconsider their attitude in the light of the successful reaction to the first edition aired. Fayette W. Allport, European rep for the Motion Picture Assn. of America, who is currently in N. Y., may confer with the companies concerned.

The three distribs which have held back are Metro, Warners and Paramount. Metro, it is understood, refused to cooperate unless the TV program featured the trailer normally used for theatrical purposes. The other two companies reportedly have contract bars which prohibit the of TV.

The cooperation received from all distributors was discussed at an industry meeting with British Broadcasting Corp. execs when the contents of the second edition of the "Current Release" were agreed on. It was reported that, in view of the widespread support for the first issue, Metro now likely will revise its earlier embargo.

In the next edition of "Release," which will be telecast Thursday (31), only five pictures are included as against the original six. Of these, two are of Hollywood origin, two British and one French. Inclusion of the French film, "La Ronde" (GCT) has caused some industry surprise, as its countrywide release here will be on a limited scale. The picture has, however, been an outstanding hit at the Curzon where it has run for more than nine months and is still playing to exceptional business.

The two Hollywood films in the program are "Weekend with Father" (U) and "Day the Earth Stood Still" (20th). British product will be represented by "Mr. Denning Drives North" (BL) and "Reluctant Heroes" (ABFD). Program is again being produced by W. Farquarson-Small.

Ex-RCA Exec Forms L-P Diskery in Arg.

Buenos Aires, Jan. 1.

Armando Gandolfo, former sales manager of RCA Victor Argentina, has launched a new recording company here, in partnership with Juan B. Monglia, an importer, Nestor N. Selasco of the Argentine Photographic Industry, and film tycoons Luis and Angel Mentasti, of the Argentina Sono Film pic company. The new outfit is to use the Sono Film studios for recording on tape, sending this up to a company in the U. S. for processing and possible distribution, all platters being of the long-playing type.

The new firm, which will be known as Sicamericana, will endeavor to distribute long-playing records in other countries and is trying to attract local talent to its roster on this basis, claiming that this distribution will publicize talent in other countries and assure it international personal appearance bookings. To begin with, for foreign distribution the Sica platters will carry 40% international tunes and 60% Argentine, including tangos, baions, rhumbas, zambas and porros. Carlos Di Sarli's tango combo has been the first to sign up with SICA, while Italian warbler Giacomo Rondinella has also been inked.

Telecast of Legit In London Scores

London, Jan. 29.

The first telecast of a current production from a West End theatre under the agreement, recently made between the British Broadcasting Corp. and the Society of West End Theatre Managers, has proved a stimulant to the boxoffice. Last Tuesday (22), a 40-minute excerpt of "Cinderella" was screened direct from the Princess Theatre, and the following day, the boxoffice was inundated with inquiries. After ticket sales had jumped, Bertram Montague, who presents this panto, declared the experiment was so successful he would be willing to repeat it as often as invited.

This experience confirms the findings of other managements who have tried TV as a means of hypoing attendances. For some years the Empress Hall, at Earls Court, has provided facilities for the telecasting of excerpts from their ice shows, being reflected in increased biz. In more recent times other arena shows, including Wembley and the two London circuses, have also used TV to advantage.

Because of the safeguards provided in the agreement limiting the TV excerpt to a maximum of 40 minutes and excluding the finale, it is now expected that other managements will try out its potentialities if adequate arrangements can be made to install the TV equipment.

Another important theatrical TV development is the growing practice of using Provincial houses for direct telecasts with a limited non-paying invited audience.

FRENCH GOVT. BUYING FILM STUDIO FOR TV

Paris, Jan. 22.

The French government is purchasing the Butte Chaumont studio, formerly owned by Gaumont and since 1941 by Radiocinema, television activities. Estimated that the property is valued at about $200,000. Jean Tardas, head of the administrative branch of French air communications, says the deal is nearly set but has not yet been consummated.

Precisely what use the French government will make of it is not yet clear. Toppers admit they have a yen to produce TV films in coproduction with private interests a a new departure. The property includes film printing machines besides the studios proper, which remain from the days when Gaumont was active in production and lab work.

Mex. City Tele Station Wins First Round In TV Bout Over Matches

Mexico City, Jan. 22.

Emilio Azcarraga thus far has won a TV bout with the local city government which threatened to knock out his Televicentro (Television Center), swanky plant for station XEWTV, just when its inauguration Jan. 12 was going great guns. A capacity crowd was yelling as ace Mexican and U. S. matmen were slamming each other around the ring, especially built to end the hassel with grunt-groan impresarios here over telecasting the main bout mat shows, when city inspectors halted the whole thing.

XEWTV telecasts these shows from its own ring, but the city government officials stopped the preem show on the ground that the city only permits wrestling performances open to the public with admission charged (just as Azcarraga was doing at Televicentro), in arenas that it authorizes. Crackdown was considered very odd because the Ministry of Communications and Public Works, which rules air affairs down here, had okayed Televicentro, wrestling and telecasting.

On the strength of this ministry permit, the second district court here quickly granted Azcarraga a temporary injunction, to run until March 20, against the municipal government's ban.

Sir Philip Warter, chairman of Associated British Picture Corp. sails on the Nieuw Amsterdam tomorrow (Wed.), on a routine visit to New York. During his visit he will eye latest technical developments in TV, including its appeal as a home entertainment and the effect of special programs on film theatre attendances.

The ABPC topper will spend five weeks in the U. S., including short visit in Washington.

There's No Business Like 20 CENTURY-FOX Business!

Inside Stuff—Pictures

It didn't take Bob Wile, until very recently on Universal's homeoffice exploitation staff, long to change his point of view. He's now secretary of the Independent Theatre Owners of Ohio. In his first bulletin to the membership, he takes a slam at a U exploitation tieup.

Wile points out that U is now releasing "Here Come the Nelsons," starring Ozzie and Harriet Nelson and their sons. Nelsons are sponsored on radio by the H. J. Heinz Co. In exchange for a tieup with Heinz, Wile discloses, U has a line in all its ads: "57 Varieties of Fun." "We suggest that irrespective of whether your theatre is big town, small town, first-run, neighborhood or last-run," Wile states, "that you write the H. J. Heinz Co. and see how they will help you, if and when you play the picture. If you don't get a satisfactory reply, change the figure in the ads to 54 or 62 or what have you."

Wile, who succeeded to the post long held by the late Pete Wood, also took the occasion of his first bulletin to slam (a) Cecil B. DeMille, (b) Skiatron, (c) Gene Autry, (d) newsreels and (e) Edward Small. DeMille gets it for "nailing the lid on the coffins of his customers" by appearing in a Saturday Evening Post ad showing him enjoying a Magnavox television set in his home. Skiatron's mistake is in stating it will appeal to the Dept. of Justice to get pix from the majors for its Subscribervision tests.

Autry wins a burred wreath for a tradepaper ad showing how he plugs films on his radio show. Autry's script ends with "keep thinking of us," to which Wile adds: "Yes, Gene, we'll be thinking of you, particularly since you're maki ' those television pictures which people see for free." The newsreels' mistake is that they are not always new, and Small gets his come-uppance for selling his old pix to TV.

British apparently prefer Bob Hope and Bing Crosby as entertainers, not as golfers. A London newspaper bluntly told the boys to stay home, that is, if they were coming to England to take part in the 1952 British amateur golf championship. Crosby played in the 1950 British mateur at St. Andrews, Scotland; Hope played in the 1951 tournament at Portcawl, Wales. Both were beaten in the first round.

London News Chronicle, wondering if they were coming, asked them by cable. It printed this answer from Hope: "Certainly I hope I can work out my schedule so I can again be a big threat in the British amateur. Bing is coming, too, if he can get enough adrenalin. Best regards."

Chronicle played Hope's answer straight, but its allied evening paper, The Star, took a more definite stand. Said the Star: "However much cinema fans may rejoice, golfers will feel only dismay at the probability of Bing Crosby and Bobe Hope playing in our amateur. . . . Two years ago Crosby gave the impression that he was a genuine competitor. Last year Hope never looked like a serious contender. His first match was a nightmare of gagging and tomfoolery. He departed leaving behind many sighs of relief.

"It is up to the U.S. Golf Assn. to refuse to sponsor players who do not conform to our handicap limit and who are not regarded as serious competitors."

Booklet honoring Nate Blumberg, Universal prexy, for his 40 years in show biz, has been published by his friends and associates. Foreword explains that booklet is not intended "as an eulogy, a compendium of praise or an evaluation of his substantial contributions to motion pictures. We wish simply to present, as appropriate to this occasion, a modest and necessarily incomplete outline of Nate Blumberg's career over the past 40 years."

It describes his early beginnings in show biz in Milwaukee, his entry into the distrib end of films, his experience as an exhibitor and as general manager of the RKO chain, and his eventual appointment as head of Universal.

Hollywoodites are miffed at the approach being used by the Reserve Officers Assn. of the U.S. for contributions to the organization for the marking of National Defense Week, Feb. 12-22. Filmites point out that they are more than willing to take part in the Defense Week program, but are burned at the intimation that they must come through in order to prove their patriotism.

Letter from the L.A. headquarters of the Reserve Officers group says that a great deal has been said about the lack of patriotism in Hollywood and that it is particularly important to show that although there are some dissident elements in the Hollywood community they are of little importance, and that Hollywood yields to no one in patriotism.

FCC Ready For Par

the Par antitrust issues could well be determinative of the other questions in the current proceedings. At least one commissioner (Robert Jones) was opposed to wrapping up the Par antitrust with the other issues on the grounds there might be no need for going into the Par-DuMont and the ABC-UPT merger questions if Par should be disqualified as a licensee.

Par's Antitrust Record

If it should be found, for example, that Par has no standing as a licensee because of its antitrust record, then obviously DuMont, which the Commission contends is controlled by Par, would be ineligible to own TV stations, and the control question would be moot, at least until Par disposed of its 25% interest in the company. Similarly, if Par has no standing, the Commission cannot even consider Par's still-pending application to transfer its formerly owned (but still owned, as far as FCC is concerned) Chicago TV station, WBKB, to UPT. Thus, in effect, a disqualification of Par could be a disqualification of UPT and consequently a denial of the ABC-UPT merger.

On the other hand, if the agency should find that Par is eligible for broadcast licenses but controls DuMont only one more station could be owned jointly by the two companies, since DuMont has three stations and Par one. However, since Paul Raibourn, Par veepee, testified last week that Par would apply for the limit of five stations if the control question is settled in its favor, it would be likely that the control question would be settled between the companies to enable each to have five TV licenses.

And if the Commission is persuaded that Par has the qualifications required for a TV licensee—Par has reportedly prepared a strong case to that end—consideration of the ABC-UPT merger will be in order and approval likely.

Because of the tieup between the issues, it is not believed likely the Commission will act favorably on a motion to be filed soon by DuMont to sever the testimony given on the Par-DuMont relationship from the rest of the proceedings and pass on DuMont renewal of licenses. William Roberts, DuMont counsel, gave notice last week he will file such a motion, but the indications are that Frederick Ford, Commission counsel, will strongly oppose it.

It's expected that Raibourn, who testified for two days last week, will be again on the stand during the next phase of the hearings. Among others who will testify will be Stanton Griffis, chairman of Par's executive committee.

Gets Italo 16m Rights

Rights for distribution in 16m of a group of Italian imports controlled by Joseph Burstyn have been obtained by Brandon Film, Inc. Films include "Open City," "Paisan" and "The Bicycle Thief."

Also included in the group is the documentary, "The Forgotten Village," written by John Steinbeck and filmed in Mexico with an English narration by Burgess Meredith.

Private Corp.'s Setup

Pattern for the film industry cooperative which would own and operate the nationwide web of TV transmission and relay circuits to be set up if the Federal Communications Commission allocates theatre tele channels, James L. Fly said this week, is Aeronautical Radio, Inc. It owns and operates all the airline radio channels.

ARI, explained the former FCC chief, who is serving as special TV counsel for the Motion Picture Assn. of America, is a private corporation in which all the stock is owned by the nation's airlines.

FCC TV Hearings May Be Delayed; Witnesses Listed

Washington, Jan. 29.

Federal Communications Commission hearings on picture industry bids for exclusive theatre TV channels are scheduled to begin Feb. 25 but it now appears extremely doubtful they will start at that time. The full membership of the Commission, which is to sit at the proceedings, is presently engaged in daily deliberations in preparation for lifting the TV freeze and is not expected to finish its work until around March 1. A two-week delay of the theatre video sessions is therefore likely.

An incomplete list of witnesses submitted to the agency by the industry includes most of the toppers in the producer and exhibitor fields. Among them are Barney Balaban, Paramount prexy; Spyros Skouras, 20th-Fox prexy; Herbert J. Yates, Republic prexy; Jack Cohn, Columbia exec veepee; Jack Warner, Warner Bros. veepee in charge of production; Ned Depinet, RKO prexy; Alfred Daff, Universal exec veepee; Abe Schneider, Col veepee and treasurer; R. H. McCullough, asst. to Charles Skouras, prexy of National Theatres; Earl Sponable, technical director, 20th-Fox; Mitchell Wolfson, board chairman of Theatre Owners of America; Trueman Rembusch, Allied States Exhibitors prexy; Si Fabian, prexy of Fabian Theatres; Frank Walker, board chairman of National Exhibitors Theatre TV Committee; Harry Brandt, prexy of Brandt Theatres; Nathan Halpern, prexy of Theatre Network Television, Inc.; Paul Raibourn, Par veepee in charge of TV operations; Eric Johnston, head of Motion Picture Assn. of America.

Others who will testify are Terry Ramsaye, former tradepaper editor; John Eberson, theatre architect; Francis Harmon, ex-veepee, MPAA; John Wolfberg, Denver theatre operator; Robert Chamber, film historian; Nate Golden, chairman of Variety Clubs Heart Committee; Theresa Helburn, Theatre Guild exec; Brooks Atkinson, New York Times drama critic; William Morris, Jr., agency head; Allen McCarroll, deputy director, Air Force Motion Picture Service; R. V. Harvey, theatre operator; Fred Schwartz and Emanuel Frisch, representing Metropolitan Motion Picture Theatre Assn.; Sidney Schreiber, chief counsel, MPAA; Asa Bushnell, secretary, National Collegiate Athletic Assn.; John De Chante, representing Federal Civil Defense Administration; Jerry Stagg and Richard Condon.

List of witnesses, which will be supplemented before the commencement of the hearings, was submitted by attorneys Marcus Cohn, for NETTCO, and Vincent Welch and James L. Fly, for MPAA.

United Paramount Theatres will not participate in the hearings because its attorneys will be occupied with Commission proceedings on the proposed ABC-UPT hearings and Paramount antitrust issues.

A petition to appear has just been filed by Jerome Marks, head of the Fair Television Practices Committee, which has been fighting theatre exclusives of prize fights. Entrance in the proceedings at this late date is certain to be fought by motion picture industry organizations.

N. Y.-D. C. Relay Link

that, however, Fly said, because of the great cost of transporting witnesses from Hollywood and New York to Washington and housing them there, as well as because of the value of their time.

Only a Starter

The 43 witnesses in various categories announced in Washington over the weekend only a starter, Fly said. There will be many additions and many will be called several times to give testimony in various categories of the case to be presented. Former FCC topper said he was now trying to get a schedule from the Commission in order to plan appearance of the witnesses.

Witnesses will include, he pointed out, many top industry names, such as Cecil B. DeMille, Jack Warner and Darryl F. Zanuck. Aim will be to indicate to the Commission th vast backlog of showmanship and experience in the industry in order to make clear that the channels, if granted, will be used to advantage.

Eric Johnston, prez of the MPAA, will be either the leadoff or near the leadoff witness, Fly said. He will talk generally on the place of the industry in American life and the importance to the industry and to the nation of the theatre channels being approved. Fly said Johnston would be followed by the other witnesses, who would discuss specific categories of subject matter.

Fly said he is working closely with Marcus Cohen, counsel for Theatre Owners of America, in coordinating their presentations. Same engineering consultants are working for both MPAA and TOA, so just a single set of engineering data will be presented.

While Fly professed ignorance of the case being prepared by Allied States Assn. of Motion Picture Theatre Owners, a TOA rival organization, he expressed the belief that the industry's channel requests will be unified.

Being sought, he said, is a band in the very top range of the ultra-high-frequency spectrum which would be wide enough to carry six signals simultaneously. That would mean six different shows could be carried at once, so that patrons of theatres in any one city could have plenty of choice of entertainment.

The area of the spectrum being sought is so high it is not now practical for broadcasting, Fly said, but is perfect for point-to-point transmission—which is the aiming of a very narrow beam from one antenna to the next. Fly declared that radio science has progressed so fast that he wouldn't venture a guess on whether the ultra-ultra high frequency channels might not be useable for broadcasting in the future.

'Good Chance'

"I think we have a very good chance of winning the channels," Fly declared. He refused to be more specific, stating it would be up to the Commission after it saw the very strong case the industry could make.

One of the reasons for so many witnesses, Fly explained, was to impress the Commission with the importance of the industry to the social and political history of the U. S. "When you look at your neighborhood theatre," he said, "you hardly realize the tremendous influence it has had in shaping our American democracy. There is no more important medium for the presentation of ideas, and the film industry has done a very effective job in furthering our form of government."

All the engineering exhibits and specifics of the case to be presented will be based on relaying shows from New York to Washington, Fly said. After the signals get to Washington, they will be distributed to theatres via a local point-to-point air system, according to the proposals to be presented.

As to how quickly the industry will be ready to undertake the tremendously costly job of extending the relay web beyond N. Y.-to-Washington, Fly declared, can only be determined by events.

"We have no intention of fooling the Commission into thinking we're going right ahead with such a scheme. The industry is not ready for that yet. But neither is anyone else, who might oppose our application any closer to setting up a nationwide web."

Fly's reference was to the American Telegraph & Telephone Co. which reportedly will object to the application on the basis that as a common carrier it can handle the theatre biz.

Clarifies Pix Use

Front-page report in Saturday's (26) New York Times that theatre tele channels, if granted by the Federal Communications Commission, would be used for transmission of feature films to theatres is "misleading," said James L. Fly, special TV counsel to the Motion Picture Assn. of America. Films would be a secondary item, and as far as anyone could see into the future now, Fly declared, features would continue to be delivered in cans.

Such films as are contemplated, former FCC chairman explained, would be of special events which would be "stored" on celluloid for a matter of hours so that they could be transmitted at hours convenient to theatres because of their picture schedules or because of differences in time zones.

ed from discrimination by exhibitor-distributor defendants in favor of jointly owned theatres, some of which were also operated under pooling ararngements.

Dipson's suit was filed in 1946 against eight distributors and three exhibitors, charging conspiracy against the Century and Bailey Theatres, Buffalo; Ridge, Lackawanna, N. Y., and Riviera, North Tonawanda, N. Y.

Fly on TV Cost to Public

"The idea generally held that the public is getting television programs 'free' is misleading and dangerous," James L. Fly, former Federal Communications Commission chairman, declared in New York this week. Observation was made in pointing up his lack of fear that the FCC might hesitate to grant theatre television channels because some of the public construes large-screen TV as depriving it of special events that might otherwise be seen "for free" in the living room.

"The promoter of a fight or producer of a stage extravaganza has a property interest, and no one can tell him what he can or can't do with it," Fly asserted. "He has a perfect right to allow it to be transmitted to homes exclusively, theatres exclusively or to refuse to let it be televised at all. The idea that a theatre in charging the public to see an event on large-screen is depriving it of seeing the event 'free' at home is utter nonsense. Theatre television will actually broaden the scope of televised events available to the average man.

"Attempts to deprive theatres of events for which they wish to contract exclusively are based on the absurd assumption that home television is 'free.' It is not. Obviously someone pays for it and obviously that someone is the consumer. Each time he buys an item that is advertised on the air he is contributing toward the cost of the program he thinks he is getting 'free'."

Fly is representing the Motion Picture Assn. of America in hearings before the FCC next month on the film industry's applicati for theatre tele channels.

sure route to greater losses on the shady A's and the B's.

Distribs—particularly 20th-Fox—have been making a major effort to get release rosters worked out farther in advance. Their theory—and obviously a good one—is that by knowing well ahead of time what will be available, an exhib do a better job of booking to give his theatre a well-rounded sequence of films. In addition, he has plenty of time to work on exploitation and publicity ideas.

The distrib outfit itself likewise can do a better job with plenty of advance warning of what's coming up. With that in mind, 20th has its release slate worked out—subject to change, of course, as indicated above—into September. Equally farsighted are Universal and Warner Bros. RKO is set through July and Paramount through June.

20th's sked, as presently lined up, calls for 27 releases between Jan. 1 and Sept. 30, as compared with 34 for the same period last year. WB will have 18 as contrasted with 22 for the first nine months of '51. Universal will have 27—same as last season—for the 39 weeks.

Aside from 20th and WB, decreased slates are indicated by Paramount, which will have 11 from January to June in contrast to 14 last year, and Columbia, which is releasing nine in January and February, compared with '51's 11.

On the upbeat side are Metro with 15 as compared with 12 for the January-April period; RKO with 27 as contrasted to 20 for January through July; and United Artists with 13 in comparison with 11 for the January-March quarter.

been charged that some agencies, networks and local stations refer constantly to Red Channels in "clearing" performers for their programs.

Though radio and TV have not yet been investigated such, many film personalities are said to have lost acting opportunities, and even had their contracts for radio-TV shows cancelled, because of their stints before the committee. It was pointed out by some of the legislators that this not only creates great personal hardship but defeats the purpose of the probe.

They feel that many potentially valuable witnesses are reluctant to appear because they might lose their means of livelihood. It was stated that the committee will take a constructive approach to the problem by pointing out that many cooperative witnesses have performed a "patriotic duty" and rate reward, rather than penalty.

'Quo Vadis' Wins Raves From London Reviewers

London, Jan. 29.

The unveiling of "Quo Vadis" with dual preems last Friday (25) at the Carlton and the Ritz rated rave reviews in the morning and evening press the following day although most Saturday papers are restricted to six pages. Critical reaction unanimously pointed up the magnificence of the spectacle, but many knocked the story and script and the individual performances of some leading members of the cast.

Reg Whitley, in the Daily Mirror, warned his readers not to expect an artistic masterpiece, but believed it should run in London for months. He described it as "diamond studded hokum, with everything in it except the kitchen stove —at times—good taste!"

On the other hand, Campbell Dixon, the Daily Telegraph scribe, thought the picture "richly earned" its censor's rating of X—barring children.

Paul Holt began his review in the Daily Herald by referring to the "grossly over-publicized and over-talked film," and went on: "The nicest thing about it is that after three years in the making and $6,500,000 in the spending, it turns out to be just a nice, friendly piece of entertainment."

The Times review, per custom unsigned, asserted there is no mistaking the gusto with which the producers have entered into the spirit of the thing. "Like children with unlimited time, a huge nursery floor and an army of soldiers to match it, they have become absorbed in their play, sending thousands of extras, those storm troops of the studios, into action for the sheer fun of it, creating, destroying, burning on a colossal scale and with the greatest goodwill."

$1,300,000 Profit For Pathe in '51, 1st Since '45; Big Loss in 1950

Hollywood, Jan. 29.

Pathe Industries made a profit of between $1,300,000 and $1,500,000 in 1951 as against a $1,300,000 loss in 1950, prexy William C. MacMillen, Jr., said yesterday (Mon.). It's the first time since 1945 the company has been out of the red, he added.

MacMillen attributes the upturn to operations of subsidiaries owned by the firm. Pathe Laboratories chalked up its biggest year in history; V. D. Anderson Co., did one of the largest grosses; Pathe Realty,operator of Eagle Lion Studios, cut losses to profits through fullscale operation of studio stages and offices; the old EL studios trimmed amortization to smaller figure.

Pix Earnings

greater importance in view of the recent period's heavier tax bite and the reduced capitalization effected by various of the outfits.

While it's noted that 20th lost plenty of ground in the first nine months of 1951, the final quarter is expected to show ice improvement over the corresponding period of 1950. Company operates on the calendar year.

Figures given for the nine months of 1950 for the two RKO outfits are estimates taken from previously-released pro forma statements. The official tally did not provide a ine-month breakdown.

WB was especially impressive with its payoff via the capitalization shrinkage policy. While the overall profit was down, per-share earnings were up from $1.46 in 1950 to $1.67 in 1951. Within the year's span WB reduced its outstanding stock from 6,997,300 to 5,619,785 shares.

Periods covered were notable for the new boxoffice ups and downs they produced. Brought into clear focus was the fact that, despite all downbeat general economic factors and the competition of television, some films were capable of racking up smash income. While there were big b.o. winners, other films of somewhat lesser entertainment merit suffered a commercial collapse across the country. Pix seemed to score very hefty grosses or proved b.o. duds; there were few in-betweeners.

For the second consecutive year, the b.o. charts reflected, theatre business began mounting around July 1, following about two to three months of sluggishness. The income has been leveling off around early December.

IA in Drive for Label Credit on All Pix

Hollywood, Jan. 29.

Drive has been started by IATSE studio unions to demand that the insignia of that organization be carried on the main title of every picture, whether it be filmed for theatre or television, not only in Hollywood but in other parts of the U. S. and foreign countries where there are no governmental restrictions on the importation of American crews.

One of the objects is to obtain IATSE union control of the TV film filed. Another is to compel the hiring of IA union members by producers who lead production junkets outside the U. S. border.

Uruguay Fete

duced to a mere trickle this year because of the adverse rate of exchange.

The British delegation, composed of Evelyn Keyes, Helen Cherry, the Czech actress Paula Valewska; John Sutro, Trevor Howard, George Minter and Peter Serjeant, was one of the first to arrive. This is a second visit for some of them.

Again this year, the Italian delegation is lavish in its hospitality to the Uruguayan officials. The femme contingent, which includes Silvana Pampanini, Lia Amanda and Lucia Bose, has been voted among the gayest of the visitors. The U. S. delegation includes Miss de Carlo, Irene Dunne, Merle Oberon, Robert Cummings, Donna Reed, Barbara Britton, John Barrymore, Jr., with RKO's Phil Reisman and Eddy Cohen in charge, Miss Oberon and Cummings have made few public appearances, but young Barrymore is easily picked out from the crowds because of his youth and western costumes he wears.

Maria Felix has disappointed by her absence, but Mexico is represented by Katy Jurado and Chula Prieto. The Japanese are repped by actresses Miki Sanjeo and Kasuko Fusimi, with producers Hideo Matuyama and Takechico Kinura, all hampered by language difficulties. Japan has entered two pictures, "Yukiwariso" and "Rashomon." Swedish and German films also have been viewed.

The organizers have thought up some cultural entertainment for the visitors, but frolics on the beach are usually more acceptable.

There have been snags in the arrival of some pictures entered here, requiring changes in the order of programming. So far the Japanese, Swedish and British entries have been exhibited, as well as the German film, "Charlotte and Louise," as well as the Italian "Humberto D." and "Bellisima," which stars Anna Magnani.

The festival proper winds up this week (31) with a big party at the Cantegril Country Club. Over in Argentina, the press has ignored the Uruguayan festival completely. The grapes are very sour.

to the candidates. In past years, the nets granted time gratis to the politicos, stipulating only that each party be given an equal amount of time as the rival party. This year, though, the nets are charging full rates for all time. Theatres, as a result, think they can offer the parties just as good a deal as can the networks.

Besides pitching the idea of the parties renting a string of big-screen houses on a four-wall deal to present their leading candidates to the voters, exhibs also envision the politicos renting their theatres for special training courses for party workers. Regional or even local party groups, they point out, could round up all their workers for a get-together in the morning or late-evening hours and the party leaders, by speaking from a central point, could reach all the workers simultaneously.

While the theatres would charge the parties for such "shows," they believe such programming also represents another version of the public service aspects of big-screen video. That public service pitch is one of the major pegs on which exhibs will hang their plea for special channels at the hearings before the Federal Communications Commission, which tee off Feb. 25.

H'wood Commitments Force Stars to Forego Pic Festival in India

Current commitments of stars are presenting an obstacle to the Motion Picture Assn. of America in getting together some glamor to represent Hollywood at the Festival of India. Film fest opened in Bombay last week, moves to Madras Feb. 6 and will also be observed in New Delhi and Calcutta before winding up Feb. 27.

Gene Tierney had to pull out of a promise to go to Bombay because of additional work on 20th-Fox's "Way of a Gaucho." Paul Douglas and Jan Sterling likewise were unable to go due to deals coming up in Hollywood. They left New York yesterday (Tues.) for the Coast.

Meantime, as far as could be learned, producer-director Frank Capra is Hollywood's only Festival rep. He's also there in behalf of the U. S. State Dept. Five American features and eight shorts have been entered in the event.

Full-length pix include "An American in Paris" (M-G), "Alice in Wonderland" (RKO-Disney), "Magnificent Yankee" (M-G), "Greatest Show on Earth" (Par) and "No Highway" (20th). "The River," produced in India by Ken McEldowney's Oriental - International Films, is entered in a special category.

Canadian Film Prod. Boosted Over 1949-50

Ottawa, Jan. 22.

Production of 187 films in Canada for the 1950-51 fiscal year was 10 better than in the previous 12-month period, it was revealed in the annual report of the National Film Board. Of that number, 130 were termed major productions. There were 18 newsclips and 37 newsreel stories. NFB's production staff was down five to 84 people. Of the total film productions, 34 were rated theatrical and 96 non-theatrical.

NFB showed a surplus, revenue totalling $3,051,178 while expenditures, including $855,998 for film production, amounted to $3,013,552.

Figures on distribution showed NFB bookings in Canada amounted to 13,186 playing days compared to 9,724 in the previous year. U. S. bookings dropped from previous year's 9,975 to 4,345. Television bookings of NFB films almost tripled in 1950-51 to a total of 1,523.

RKO Proxy Fight

15, has been amiable, a minority position in a corporation is always a disadvantageous one. Thus, if there is any hope of bettering his position, Greene will undoubtedly do so.

Unless there's a decision to postpone the May stockholders meeting, proxies will have to be started in preparation within about six weeks. These ballots for mailing to stockholders carry a list of candidates for the board.

For the December meeting the management, headed by prexy Sol A. Schwartz, put out one list and Greene another. For the next session they could either consolidate their lists, keeping the proportion the same as now, or could start the fight all over again. Management could issue a roster with no Greene candidates on it and Greene could issue one with no management names. Both would then again appeal for stockholder support.

Aside from the huge block of Howard Hughes stock voted by Irving Trust Co. as trustee, Greene group got more votes than the management in the December-January count. Dissidents had 1,341,058 shares in their favor, as against 1,085,124 for the Schwartz contingent. Hughes holds 929,020, which were voted for the management slate.

Unless there's a good chance of winning at least one more director and possibly two, Greene group undoubtedly will avoid a battle. One reason is that it takes a tremendous amount of money. Secondly, it takes the attention of the management away from normal duties, so the stockholders are in the position of harming their own interests unless they're pretty sure of winning.

Loew's Final Decree

ships by eight or possibly more theatres. RKO Theatres, in its decree, lost relatively few properties and these were via breaking up with partners rather than outright divestiture.

On the other hand, legalistic analysts point out, Loew's did right favorably on other counts, in comparison with the other outfits which exited the case earlier.

Example is that Loew's will be permitted to license its own product as it sees fit to its own houses for a full year from Feb. 6, when the decree is to be entered in N. Y. Federal Court. In contrast, Warners already has begun selling its own pix on a competitive basis to all houses, including its own, although divorcement has yet to be accomplished. All 20th-Fox product must be sold to its affiliated houses on the same competitive basis by next June.

D. of J. also showed sympathy for Loew's problems relating to corporate indebtedness, permitting an additional three years to straighten out the financial complexities, if necessary, following the initial two-year divorcement period.

While the divorcement deadline is Feb. 6, 1954, chances are Loew's may elect to complete the separation by Aug. 31, 1953. That's the date ending the corporation's fiscal year and reorganization at that time would be simpler than in the middle of a fiscal year, it's figured.

Terms of the decree were released here yesterday. They call for divestiture of 24 theatres outright within two years, two-thirds of which are in New York City, and conditional divestiture of over 40 others. The judgment requires approval by the Attorney General for acquisition of more than one of the N. Y. houses by one purchaser.

The decree provides that within two years all of Loew's theatre assets must be transferred to a new theatre company and that within three years the capital stock of the new company be distributed pro rata to Loew's stockholders.

Because of Loew's outstanding indebtedness, estimated by Justice officials at more than $40,000,000, the decree departs from previous divorcements by permitting Loew's to hold the stock in the new company if it can prove to the court that it cannot arrange financing to divide its present debt with the new company. But in any event the divorcement must be complete within five years.

Approval Due June 6

The judgment is contingent upon stockholders' approval by June 6, 1952, of a plan of reorganization which places Loew's theatre exhibition assets in a company entirely disassociated with Loew's, Inc. once the plan is consummated, it is provided, Loew's and the New Theatre Co. "shall be operated wholly independently of one another and shall have no common directors, officers, agents or employees. Each corporation shall thereafter be enjoined from attempting to control or influence the business or operating policies of the other by any means whatsoever."

The decree prohibits Loew's from expanding its theatre ownership during the two-year period allowed for divestiture. Thereafter, the New Theatre Company may acquire additional houses only after court approval of each acquisition. Stringent restrictions to assure that the new theatre company has no ties with any other motion picture circuit are imposed by the decree. It is specifically provided that "in no event can an officer or a director be affiliated with any motion picture theatre circuit (other than Loew's) which has been a defendant in an antitrust suit brought by the Government, relating to the production, distribution or exhibition of motion pictures."

1,200 Theatres to Indies

The document was hailed by Assistant Attorney General H. G. Morison, in charge of Antitrust Division, as a rounding out of the Department's 14-year fight to assure competition in the motion picture industry by separating the five major film distributors from theatre operation. The net result, he asserted will be to free over 2,500 theatres from control by producers. Of this total, said Mori-, the decrees provide for the divestiture of over 1,200 theatres to independent exhibitors, the remaining 1,300 to be operated by the new theatre companies established by divorcements.

Like the previous decrees entered against Paramount, Warners, RKO and 20th-Fox, the judgment prohibits various trade practices, including minimum admission price fixing, agreements to maintain clearance systems, clearances between theatres not in substantial competition, licenses conditioned on acceptance of one or more other feature films, theatre pools, profit-sharing leases, franchise, formula deals and master agreements.

Options on Divesting

In a number of cities, particularly N. Y., Loew's is given an option of divesting itself of one of two theatres or being subjected to a product limitation if first-run independent competition for a designated number of years exists in the community or zone of operation.

Herewith are the theatres which must be divested and conditions for divestiture:

New York (Manhattan): Sheridan, Olympia, Lexington, 83d St., Victoria and 116th St. must be divested or limited in product. Commodore or Avenue B must be sold or limited in product. Lincoln Square, 42nd St. and 72nd St. must be sold. Apollo, Canal or Delancey must be sold and one of last two sold or subject to product limitation. Inwood or Dyckman must be sold or subject to product limitations. Rio or 175th St. must be sold if certain competitive conditions prevail.

Brooklyn: Metropolitan, Kings, Premier, Alpine, Gates, Broadway, Bay Ridge, Warwick, Oriental and Brevoort must be divested or subject to product limitations. Palace and Melba must be sold. Kameo or Bedford must be sold or subject to product limitations. Pitkin must be sold if reasonable offer is received within a year. Court will determine what is a reasonable offer. If the Pitkin is not sold, Loew's must dispose of two of following: Woodside, Coney Island, Prospect. If the Coney Island is retained it must be limited in product if first-run independent competition in the neighborhood does not exist. Boro Park or 46th St. must be divested if certain competitive conditions do not exist.

Bronx: Paradise, Boulevard, American, Post Road, Fairmont, Elsmere, 167th Street and Grand must be divested or subjected to product limitations. Burland, Burnside and Boston Road must be sold. National or Victory must be sold and the Victory only to a purchaser who will operate on first-run policy.

Queens: Valencia, Triboro, Prospect, Plaza, Hillside and Willard must be divested or subject to product limitations if certain competitive conditions exist.

Out-of-Town Properties

Boston: Fine Arts must be divested by lease or otherwise, with preference to use of house for motion pictures. State must be divested or subjected to product limitation.

Baltimore: Parkway must be divested or limited in product if a competing independent does not have equal film availability for five years.

Cleveland: State or Stillman or Ohio or Park or Granada must be sold. If one of the last three, an additional theatre in Cleveland must be divested except if certain competitive conditions prevail.

Buffalo: Elmwood or Kensington must be sold, but whichever is retained must be limited in product if certain competitive conditions do not prevail for five years.

Columbus, O.: Ohio or Broad must be divested or limited in product if first-run films are not available to an independent competitor for three years.

Bridgeport: Lyric must be sold to a purchaser who will operate on first-run policy. An additional theatre in Bridgeport must be divested or limited in product.

Evansville, Ind.: Victory or Majestic must be sold if regular first-run competition by an independent does not prevail in any year within five years.

Hartford: Poli or Palace must be divested or subject to product limitations if certain competitive conditions do not prevail.

Meriden, Conn.: Poli must be sold. Palace must be divested or limited in product.

Mt. Vernon, N. Y.: Mt. Vernon must be divested or limited in product.

New Haven: Poli or Bijou or College must be sold.

New Rochelle, N. Y.: New Rochelle must be divested or limited in product.

North Bergen, N. J.: Embassy must be divested or limited in product.

Norwich, Conn.: Poli must be divested or limited in product.

Waterbury, Conn.: Poli or Strand must be sold.

White Plains, N. Y.: State must be divested or subjected to product limitations.

Worcester: Poli or Elm Street must be divested or limited in product if certain competitive conditions do not prevail for designated periods.

Yonkers, N. Y.: Yonkers must be divested or subjected to product limitations if independent first-run competition does not exist.

20th's Optimism

up again last week in the Saturday Evening Post.

Message being underscored at 20th's series of meetings with theatremen is that product has shown a marked improvement and the trade should exert unstinted effort to merchandise it.

Exhibs at the initial session at the 20th homeoffice, which was designed to whip up enthusiasm for the upcoming pix and plans, related that for the most part they were impressed with 20th's ideas on long-range promotion effort in cooperation with the company. However, some coupled this observation with criticism of Skouras' dismal portrait of the future. There was sharp conflict between the theatre exec's pessimism and the film outfit's spirited display of confidence, they noted.

Next such exhib conclave has been set for tomorrow (Thurs.) at the Erlanger Theatre, Philadelphia. Ad-pub v.p. Charles Einfeld postponed a trek to the Coast to the weekend to appear at the Philly meet. Originally he planned to be at the studio for product confabs early this week.

Seminars on merchandising subsequently will be held in Atlanta, Dallas, Chicago, Denver and L. A.

20th Story Buys

detective story by Georges Simenon, published in Ellery Queen magazine, drew $22,500 from 20th. In still another deal, studio bought two books from the estate of Cora Harris, who wrote "Circus Rider's Wife," on which the company's highly successful "I'd Climb the Highest Mountain" was based. 20th paid $15,000 for the two books together, which will become source material for a single pic.

Studio also acquired "Brown on Resolution" (Resolution in the title is a boat) by C. S. Forester. This had been made into a picture by Gainsborough in England many years ago. It was titled "Singlehanded." Forester himself made the deal with Gainsborough by which he retrieved his rights and then sold the package to 20th for $10,000.

Otherwise, on the story front during the past week there was great interest by a number of companies in the new Book-of-the-Month Club co-selection, "Jefferson Selleck," by Carl Jonas. It was called by one story editor this week "the tale of a compassionate Babbitt." Rave reviews and big sale of copies is expected to push the screen price close to the $100,000 mark.

Loew's Decree Upsets N.Y. Pattern Further

First-run booking pattern in N. Y. expectedly will be further upset under terms of Loew's consent decree. Judgement directs that as of Feb. 6, 1953, Loew's-Metro pix must be sold to all theatres on a competitive basis, including affiliated houses.

Consequently, non-Loew's showcases in N. Y. will be entitled to bargain for M-G pix which normally go to the State or Capitol Loew's key Broadway houses.

Red Probe Hearings

motion had been immediately denied by U. S. District Court Judge Burnita Shelton Matthews, the same judge who had nixed Buchman's initial attempt to evade questioning. Walter then gave Pepper a final chance to have his client appear. Pepper responded by again pleading for "additional time" to contact his client.

"I cannot answer for my client," he told the committee. "I have sent word asking him if he will appear. I believe the answer will be 'no.' But if given time I will communicate with Mr. Buchman. He will make the determination himself, as he has done up to now."

The drastic step taken by the committee climaxed a weekend of suspense started when Buchman, through one of his attorneys, Lawrence Siegel, tossed a bombshell into the hearings last Friday. Bombshell, first thought to be a "show cause" order, proved to be a dud when it was discovered the proposed restraining order had been denied without a hearing.

By failing to appear today Buchman became the first Hollywood witness to defy a committee subpoena after accepting it. He is also the first witness who has failed to invoke the cloak of Constitutional immunity in refusing to answer a question since the Supreme Court decided that several years ago.

Blankfort's Denial

Michael Blankfort, film scripter and novelist, yesterday "categorically denied charges of Louis F. Budenz, former editor of the Daily Worker, that he had been a "concealed" Communist Party member who had gone to Hollywood to carry party work. Blankfort admitted that he was a contributor to the Daily Worker and the New Masses in the mid-'30's but said he wrote for the left wing papers "only to get tickets for shows." He also confessed membership in a number of Communist-front organizations, stating he joined them becauase of "his failure to recognize" them, disassociating himself as soon as their true character was revealed to him.

Blankfort, voluntary witness whose two and a half hour stint was by far the longest and most grueling in this phase of the hearings, was confronted with the Budenz statement almost immediately after being sworn in this afternoon. Tavenner told Blankfort that Budenz, a frequent witness before the committee, had testified in closed session on Jan. 15 that Blankfort was "well known" to him as a Communist. Hinging his statement on portions of the biography of the late Brig. General Evans F. Carlson, "Big Yankee," Budenz had declared, according to the record, that not only were these excerpts Communist-inspired but "I would also recognize the author of the book as a Communist."

Denies Meetings

Stating that he had "searched" his mind, Blankfort denied that any such meetings as described by Budenz had ever taken place. Reading from notes, he traced his early career as a writer, stating that, during the period mentioned by Budenz, he spent most of his time with a group of friends who were known anti-Communists." It was through association with one of these, V. F. Calverton, editor of the old Martin Quarterly, that he had his sole contact with Budenz. "Budenz was the only member of that group," he added, "to become a Communist." He stated he did not recall ever seeing the former Commie editor after this period.

It was at this point that Blankfort, a graduate of the U. of Pennsylvania and former Princeton U. instructor, stated, in answer to Rep. Moulder's (D.-Mo.) question, "I have never been and am not now a member of the Communist Party."

"Throughout the period Budenz alleges I was a Communist," he stated, "my conduct was inconsistent with that of the party." Tavenner, at this point, confronted the witness with the photostat of an article, allegedly bylined by him, in which "the familiar stereotyped language of the Communist Party was used." This was the first of a series of articles from the Daily Worker introduced by Tavenner to refute Blankfort's statement that he wrote only reviews for the paper. Some of the articles postdated the date on which Blankfort claimed he had stopped writing for the paper.

Blankfort admitted authorship of all the articles submitted, denying, however, that he had deliberately used "Communist Stereotypes," as charged by Tavenner. He defended the use of such terms as "Bourgeois Theatre" and "White Chauvinists" as having been the "language of the times." He also denied that a Daily Worker description of his as "Theatre Editor" was accurate, adding that he "could not be responsible" for the way the paper advertised his association with it. "I never considered myself theatre editor," he said. "I never attended staff meetings or was responsible for anything but my reviews."

Tavenner's Spotlight

Tavenner then proceeded to spotlight long list of Communist-front organizations and activities with which Blankfort's name had appeared as sponsor or member. Blankfort denied membership in most of them, but did admit that he had joined the Los Angeles Chapter of the Civil Rights Congress, adding "I got out of that as fast as I could."

In conclusion, Blankfort told the committee he "appreciated the opportunity" to testify. He stated, in answer to last-minute questions, that his ex-wife Aubrey Blankfort, and his cousin, Henry Blankfort, were his only relatives who were Communists. Latter was an "friendly" witness before the committee.

Despite the searching, and what sometimes seemed like antagonistic questions put to him by the committee and its counsel, Blankfort heard himself kudoed as an "honest and valuable witness." Acting chairman Walter said he had done the committee "a great service" by his "complete testimony."

Earlier in the day, scripter Melvin Levy testified that he had been a "member-at-large" of the Communist Party for the year 1933, but had dropped out, only to later rejoin in Hollywood in late 1944 or early '45. He stated he had quit the party again in '47 and was "not now a Communist."

Recruited by Earl Browder

Levy, who had been named a Communist by Martin Berkeley in the Los Angeles hearings, appeared at his own request. He told the committee that he was first recruited for the party by Earl Browder, by whom he was given a "name and card." He stated he was never required to attend meetings, but merely to report to Browder. He said he broke with the party then because a biography he was writing about Tom Mooney was "being molded by decisions that had nothing to do with the book."

Levy said that talent agent George Filner had recruited him into the party and that he attended "six or eight meetings over a two-year period." He named publicist William Blowitz, writer Lester Cole, scripter Mortimer Offner and Edward Huebsch as fellow Communists during that period. He could not, however, positively identify Screen Writers Guild member Alfred Levitt as a party member, though he "thought" he was.

Levy stated that, although he remained a party member "technically" until 1947, he had stopped attending meetings the year before. He denied that his Commie affiliations had never influenced his work, and said his purpose i joining both times had been "to leave my kids a better world," he added, "when I found this was not the way to do it, I left." He made only small contributions — 25c or 50c—during the Hollywood period of his affiliation, but had never paid regular dues, Levy added.

A third and final witness was wedged in at the close of the day on the promise of his attorney that he would be "brief." This was music composer George Bassman, who made a rather pathetic figure as he stated that he attended some Communist meetings "because his ex-wife asked him to," but he "never really knew what went on."

STRIKE CLIPS BALTO BUT 'DREAMS' $11,000

Baltimore, Jan. 29.

This town is still tied up by a tram strike. Although settlement may come during the week, current entries on the downtown front are taking a beating. "Room For One More" is fighting it out at the Stanley and drawing well against odds. Second week of "Quo Vadis" is also holding up well enough at Loew's Century. UTP's First-Year $1,500,000 Gross Stresses Vidpix Hypo in TV Biz

Chicago, Jan. 29.

The arrival of television film packages as an increasingly important element of the industry the past year, is clearly reflected in the bookings handled by United Television Programs, Inc., during its initial year of operation. UTP, as a major vidpix distributing organization, registered gross sales totalling $1,500,000 during 1951, according to exec director Milt Blink.

And because 75% of this volume was racked up during the last six months of the year, Blink foresees a doubled gross for the current year. So far this month the firm has placed just under $225,000 in bookings.

"As the audit of UTP's year-end sales record proves, quality film product is very much in demand. This record may be regarded by some film producers as a greenlight to turn out films in quantity for TV. I can't emphasize too strongly that, as in any successful business, quality, rather than quantity, is what sells," distrib exec told VARIETY.

Although the firm does handle Mutual Television Productions' package of 93 British feature films, UTP's current portfolio, with this single exception, is made up of reels canned specifically for video. The company has no plans to expand further into the motion picture area, nor does it plan to venture into the vidpix production field.

Hot Properties

UTP's list of producer clients is presently up to eight, and includes 12 different series: Bing Crosby

'Assignment,' 1st Vidpix Financed by NBC-TV, Booked in 23 Markets

"Dangerous Assignment," first series of half-hour vidfilms financed entirely and syndicated by NBC-TV, has been booked to date in 23 markets. Deals have been made either with the stations, who line up their own local sponsors, or with local and regional advertisers, who buy time on the stations. "Assignment" stars Brian Donlevy and is being produced by Don Sharpe.

None of NBC-TV's five o.&o. stations, incidentally, has yet booked the films. In Chicago, in fact, the series is running on WENR-TV, which is owned by the rival ABC video web. While most of the other stations carrying the series are NBC affiliates, web execs see little chance of stations bumping a network show off the air to make way for the vidpix. Stations, for the most part, will play the films in local option, rather than network option time.

With "Assignment" selling rapidly, NBC plans to tee production on "Texas Rangers," the second series it will bankroll and syndicate, in about 30 days. Pilot film on "Rangers," which will star Joel McCrea, was completed several months ago. Web has two or three other vidfilm series in the works.

LAST-MINUTE SPONSOR ON WENR-TV PIX SERIES

Chicago, Jan. 29.

Just when it looked as if it would have to beam them as sustainers, WENR-TV inked a deal with the Sampson Co. to bankroll the first running of its bundle of 26 motion pictures, which were bought through the Snader firm at a cost of $2,400 per pic. Series starts on the Chi ABC station Feb. 12 in the 8 to 9:30 p. m. slot.

Chi rights to the films were purchased several weeks ago, and the sales staff had just about given up on finding a sponsor for the costly reels. The station had scheduled the debut of the pix on a sustaining basis for this week, in the hopes of at least getting some spot revenue. Fact that 17 of the package includes three J. Arthur Rank, 13 Alexander Korda releases and one RKO pic that are first-runs on the local TV circuit, made the projected unsponsored beaming a dubious venture.

Purchase by the Sampson firm, however, came just in the knick of time.

Bill Boyd Pays To Get Hoppys From UA

Hollywood, Jan. 29.

Bill Boyd and his partner, Lewis Pennish, paid an undisclosed sum to regain possession of 12 old Hopalong Cassidy oaters, made in 1947 and 1948 and released by United Artists. Idea is to sell the films to commercial sponsors for low priced theatrical admissions to lure the kids and later turn them into TV channels.

Original productions, according to Pennish, cost about $125,000 each, a total investment of approximately $1,500,000.

ABC-TV Gets 26 Rep Pix for 152G

ABC-TV has leased 26 Republic features for $152,000 for use on the web's five owned-and-operated stations. One of the largest pix purchases by a network, the deal gives the ABC stations exclusive rights to screening them in the five cities for an 18-month period. Price tag is reportedly $6,000 per feature and covers four screenings.

The 26 mysteriosos, all produced between 1942 and 1948, will be built into a whodunit stanza with a live emcee. Contract was negotiated by Slocum Chapin, ABC-TV o.-and-o. stations veepee; Nat Fowler, the web's film director, and Earl Collins, prexy of Hollywood Television Service, Inc., distribution subsid for Republic.

Mull Gaxton Series

Hollywood, Jan. 29.

A telepix series starring William Gaxton is being negotiated by prexy Everett Crosby, Bing Crosby Enterprises disclosed yesterday (Mon). Several properties are being considered. Gaxton will emcee.

Crosby says the Maxon Agency is working on the deal.

PATHE LAB MAKING PITCH FOR VIDEO BIZ

Hollywood, Jan. 29.

New addition to the Pathe Industries laboratory is under construction here to make a pitch for television business through the processing of 16m TV film. William C. MacMillan, Jr., PI prexy, is currently in town from N. Y. to spearhead the new move.

Pathe's N. Y. lab has been processing narrow-gauge film for years while the California plant has been restricted to 35m for motion pictures. Understood the company is spending $250,000 on the new 16m plant, which is expected to open in April with a capacity of 100,000 feet daily. Eventual aim is 300,000 feet a day.

Irene Dunne Set As Femcee for Telepix

Hollywood, Jan. 29.

Irene Dunne has been set to femcee a telepix series for Edward Lewis Productions, series formerly set for Joan Bennett.

Miss Dunne will get $3,250 a telepic, for total of $84,530 for the 26 vidpix, which will be shot at Motion Picture Center studios in about two weeks. She has to wind her chores before reporting to UI Feb. 25 for "It Grows on Trees."

Lewis was repped in the deal by law firm of Brand, Rosenthal, Norton & Miller.

AFM Sez It Will Fight Nasser Bros.' Challenge on Legality of 5% TV Bite

Hollywood, Jan. 29.

Defied by James and George Nasser on legality of its 5% recording trust formula for pix going to television, American Federation of Musicians is prepared to fight the Nassers brothers in the courts, and is certain it will be upheld in such a legal battle, it was stated here by Leonard Horwin, attorney for AFM.

Referring to original agreement signed between the Nasser brothers and the union in 1948, when they began producing four pix involved, and which contains clause regarding rescoring of pix going into video, Horwin asserted, "From a standpoint of law and equity, we stand on the solid foundation of an existing contract, and our case is particularly strong."

The Nassers, owners of General Service studios, have contended through their attorney, George T. Goggin, that the 5% format is not legal, and say they won't conform to it unless ordered to by the courts. It marks the first defy of the AFM's video format.

Union reps and the Nassers and Goggin met Friday in what was described as an exploratory session. It's understood, while the Nassers wanted to learn precisely what union demands are, they don't plan to backtrack a bit from their position.

At the same time the oft-delayed hearing in which the Nassers seek to regain negatives of four pix from United Artists so that they can sell them to TV was again continued, to Feb. 8, after being skedded for Friday. It was learned also that settlement may be in the making between UA and the Nassers.

'Book of Knowledge' As Telepix Series

Jesse J. Goldburg, prez of United Screen Associates, has secured rights to lens vidpix based on the Grolier Society's "Book of Knowledge." Films will be shot at the Hal Roach studios on the Coast, budgeted at $17,500 per show, Goldburg said. It's aimed at being aired cross-the-board in a 15-minute edition or two half-hours weekly.

Show will feature dramatizations during which questions on science, history, etc., will crop up as part of the plot, with answers being shown pictorially.

Eells' Pathe Lot Option Near Up

Hollywood, Jan. 29.

National Film Distributors, newly-formed company which will distribute and handle sales of telepix, has taken 90-day option on Eagle Lion studios as means of cutting production costs for vidpix producers associated with the company, prexy Bruce Eells disclosed here.

Pathe Industries prexy William MacMillen confirmed option deal, and said Eells has about two weeks to meet deadline on option. One proviso in deal is that whether or not it's picked up, National will channel printing of telepix to Pathe lab, he stated.

Eells said he wants the studio for telepix producer clients of his

Pix-to-Video Flood Won't Dampen Vidpic Future, Crosby Aide Sez

Hollywood, Jan. 29.

Surge of pix into television won't hurt telepix, it's predicted by Charles Brown, v.p. in charge of sales for Bing Crosby Enterprises. Brown opines motion pictures will hurt local live shows, but that there will always be demand for the half-hour vidpix geared for national sales sponsors.

He maintains length of average pic precludes many a sponsor from buying, adding they prefer shorter segments. He contends also the telepic, made expressly for TV, comes across much better on the screen that motion pictures, particularly the oldies.

Brown feels major studios will go into telepix production eventually, but says their chief handicap will be lack of knowledge on marketability of product, knowledge of available sponsors and agency setup.

TOWERS TO U.S. FOR TELEPIC DISTRIB DEAL

Harry Alan Towers, who has been predominant in the radio transcription business in Britain for a number of years, is expanding into the TV-film field. Next Saturday (2), he arrives in New York for preliminary discussions on distribution.

As a kickoff, two TV film series are being planned. First, titled "Orient Express," will star Orson Welles. The second is being designed to include many of the name artists already featured on his radio recordings. Among these are Gracie Fields, Margot Fonteyn and Sir Thomas Beecham.

Towers intends to stay only a week in New York on this occasion.

'Best Things' Vidpix Angeled 300G by CT

Hollywood, Jan. 29.

"The Best Things in Life," series of telepix to be produced by Ted Robinson of New World Productions, has been angeled to tune of approximately $300,000 by Consolidated Television, which will distribute the product.

Deal with Robinson calls for 26 vidpix, with options for more, and shooting starts within 30 to 60 days. It marks first expansion by Consolidated in months, and it's indicated more deals of similar nature are in the wind.

ONE RADIO FOR EVERY U.S. ADULT

My Cup Runneth Over

The contradictions and economics that make TV such a fascinating—and unpredictable—business are accented anew by the "penny-wise, pound-foolish" overtones attending NBC programming:

This is the network where, through its "exclusive commitment" deals, Jerry Lester, currently without a show, collects $4,000 a week for the next 26 weeks. Fred Allen, likewise lacking a TV program, dittoes on the weekly coin intake. And the same for Dagmar who, though also lacking a TV property, grabs off $2,000 a week.

But this is the network, too, whose key outlet in New York showcases a "musical breakfast" show immediately following the two-hour "Today" program, which features Ed Herlihy and Milton deLugg. It rates as one of the pleasanter entries in the daytime video sweepstakes. Incorporated into the show is a daily contest feature, in which the winner is permitted to dip a cup into a barrel of pennies and can pocket the amount scooped up.

Because there is no provision in the budget for such an item, although it amounts to about $10 a day, deLugg himself has been obliged to pay for it.

Viewers last week noticed that the cup had dwindled in size.

'Today's' for 'Tomorrow & Next Year,' Sez NBC, Despite Panning From Crix

Despite the thumbs-down reaction of the dailies' critical fraternity to its two-hour, early-morning "Today" TV marathon, and the failure thus far to precipitate a "line forms to the right" on sponsorship deals, NBC's video chieftains are determined to gamble with the costly program on a longterm basis. Web feels convinced that once the kinks are ironed out and the show takes on a more definite, concrete formula, it will establish a pattern for the future in the morning TV sweepstakes.

For one thing, NBC has too much of a financial stake in the undertaking. While there is a $25,000 talent-production nut ascribed to the show, actually this just covers "emcee" Dave Garroway's weekly pay check and out-of-pocket costs for special pickups.

The weekly tab comes closer to $40,000 when the regular NBC staffers who are assigned to the show (all told, there are 100) are taken into consideration. Over and beyond that, it cost $250,000 to outfit the "Communications Center" at RCA Exhibition Hall, N. Y., including $200,000 for control room, electrical equipment, telephone lines and other paraphernalia. There was a $50,000 item, too, for remodeling the studio, due chiefly to the men working on an overtime basis.

Thus far, NBC has picked up four clients for capsule sponsorships. These are Kiplinger's magazine, Changing Times; Kenwill Corp., makers of Magikoter Paintroller, and Ex-cello Manufacturing Co. (milk containers), all of which have bought once-a-week five-minute participations, and Curtis Publishing Co., which is doing a saturation campaign on behalf of Saturday Evening Post and Ladies Home Journal.

Size of the audience tuning in for "Today" has surprised even the

Off the Hook

Life magazine's pacting of Robert Montgomery for his cross-the-board radio news commentary, which started last week, posed a ticklish problem for NBC, in view of the network's long-standing policy forbidding an advertiser from bringing in its own gabber, particularly when it involves controversial political issues. NBC edict rules that if there's to be any editorializing or projection of controversial matters, it's to be done solely by NBC staffers.

As result, Montgomery, heretofore on the NBC payroll as TV producer and actor, is now officially on the book as an NBC newsman as well, thus permitting NBC to cling to its established policy and paving the way for the Life sponsorship deal.

Fear 'Favoritism' Rap for DuMont In Life-Ike Mating

DuMont's teaming with Life magazine on coverage of next summer's political conventions is expected to run into considerable snagging with the Republican and Democratic national committees before it receives their approval and endorsement. Reason is Time-Life's full-fledged backing in the Presidential race of Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower.

DuMont spokesman declared, however, that Life has guaranteed unbiased coverage. "Life," he said, "will furnish its staff but DuMont will control all programming."

Committee members reportedly feel that, even though Life sticks to a straight reportorial job in its coverage, with no prejudice or favoritism to any single candidate, the association in viewers' minds of Life's cover on the screen with its endorsement of Eisenhower will in itself represent favoritism. (Mag is not bankrolling DuMont's

NBC TV'ers Torn By Tulsa Tussle

NBC and its Tulsa TV affiliate have been engaging in a hassle over what the network execs term "exorbitant demands" being asked by the station's owner, Mexican-born Mrs. Anita Alvarez. After cancelling out her affiliation with NBC, Mrs. Alvarez last week reversed herself at the last minute and agreed to play along with the web on its own terms.

However, the agreement to carry NBC shows is reportedly on a temporary basis, with no long-term commitments involved. Meanwhile, NBC-TV's station relations boss, Sheldon Hickox, is due in Tulsa next week in a bid to resolve the differences.

Fact that this is a political year, when single station market coverage is valuable to its Philco client, has cued NBC's decision to cling to Tulsa, but without yielding to the femme owner's demands.

MUTUAL'S 17% GOTHAM HYPO VIA MGM SHOWS

MGM Radio Attractions-produced shows which Mutual has put into its 8-9 p.m. period nightly have increased the web's rating in N. Y., according to Pulse figures showing a 17% gain.

Audience on WOR, Gotham outlet of MBS, in the periods when the 10 MGMRA shows were aired, climbed to 2.8 and share of audience was up 20% during the week of Jan. 2-8, period when the Metro programs kicked off.

9,300,000 MORE RECEIVERS IN '51

Furnishing proof of the broadcasting industry's consistent claim that radio circulation has grown steadily in the face of television expansion, a survey conducted jointly by the four major networks reveals that there were 105,300,000 sets in the U. S. as of Jan. 1, or one for every citizen of voting age. Results of the survey, released yesterday (Tues.), revealed an increase in the total number of sets over the preceding year of 9,300,000, representing a 9.7% boost.

In a breakdown of the study, conducted by the research departments of ABC, CBS, Mutual and NBC, it was shown that 900,000 of the increase represent families which have not previously owned radio receivers. Balance of the increase comprised 4,000,000 "secondary" or portable sets purchased by existing radio homes, plus 4,400,000 new car radios. Of the total number of sets, 42,800,000 represent families with at least one radio; secondary and portable receivers in all AM households total another 34,000,000; radio-equipped cars number 23,500,000, and the remaining 5,000,000 are "in all other places."

Network execs were particularly impressed with the number of secondary sets and those in cars. Such sets, they pointed out, would seldom, if ever, appear in rating figures and thus represent virtually a bonus audience for advertisers buying time according to network ratings. In TV homes, they said,

Political Commentator Criss-Cross Likely to Cause Red Faces, Lopoffs

The cross-currents and patterns involving political sponsors, networks and commentators is already achieving a confusion that threatens to cause embarrassments and some likely cancellations.

What happens, for example, it's being asked, when Philco assumes its sponsorship over the NBC facilities of the political conventions in Chicago in July, when its naturally assumed that John Cameron Swayze, as one of the key men in the "NBC newsroom package," will be giving his all on behalf of Philco. Yet Swayze is also committed to a Sunday afternoon NBC news show which sells Raytheon's TV sets, a rival of Philco's.

The situation at CBS apparently will be just as confusing. Columbia and Westinghouse have a '52 political package, with CBS justifiably proud of the fact that in snaring Bob Trout away from NBC it has at its, and Westinghouse's, command one of the top aces in the AM-TV journalistic arena. But there is also a deal just pacted, whereby Admiral moves into Sunday afternoon on CBS Radio for news roundup show with Trout as the program's key gabber. Further complicating the dual allegiance is the fact that Admiral is staking its political coverage claim with ABC network, while its CBS gabber, Trout, will be doing duty for the rival Westinghouse outfit.

Meanwhile, there are some reports that Philco wouldn't be averse to grabbing off Ed Murrow for the July conventions coverage on NBC. Morrow and CBS are practically synonymous and have been for years. Such a maneuver would be quite a feather in NBC' cap, particularly since losing Trout to CBS. But even though July will find Murrow without commercial commitments, assuming his usual summer hiatus goes into effect, any such Philco-NBC allegiance would be determined by whatever contractual obligations he has to Columbia.

Booz Boys Back

Having completed its "appraisal" of the Fort Industry broadcasting setup, resulting in the recent administrative overhaul (notably the exiting of veepee Richard E. Jones as general manager of WJBK, Detroit), the Booz, Allen & Hamilton boys are back on the NBC scene. This time, however, they're operating within a more limited sphere, effecting one of the major integrated (AM-TV) divisions, with several fairly important jobs reportedly in the balance.

A couple years back the sweeping B-A-H operational blueprint for NBC brought about the present administrative setup topped by prexy Joseph H. McConnell.

Westinghouse's Lincoln, Douglas Debate Updating

"There's one interesting facet in connection with the Westinghouse pickup on CBS-TV of the political conventions, campaigning and elections, that until now has gone practically unheralded, but nonetheless promises to be one of the most intriguing, exciting segments of the overall politico package.

That's the 13-week sponsorship by Westinghouse, sandwiched between the conventions and the election proper, of the "get out the vote" series of TV presentations. As it is currently being mapped, with an assist by both the Republican and Democratic National Committees, it will be translated into a TV updating of the Lincoln-Douglas debates embracing some solid video oratory in which top Dems and Repubs will fight the issues back and forth. Thus, it is planned to use TV for stumping on a coast-to-coast hookup for a politico free-for-all. To this end, both CBS and Westinghouse are enlisting the major parties' national committees in digging up the prominent speakers.

Top Shows' 1,000,000 Home Sag

Despite a four-network survey showing a boost of 9,300,000 radio sets throughout the country during the last year, the number of homes tuned into the top-rated shows has actually decreased during the last year, according to A. C. Nielsen. Comparison of Nielsen's latest Top 10 listings, with the Top 10 for the similar period in 1951, shows a drop in the number of homes tuning in of almost 1,000,000 for major shows.

Networks emphasized in the survey the number of so-called secondary sets and those in cars, which would not show in Nielsen's ratings under his Audimeter system of surveying the audience. It's expected that the nets would argue, consequently, that the Nielsen listings do not represent the true audience. Nielsen's Top 10 are for the week of Dec. 23 for 1950, and of Dec. 22 for 1951. CBS, incidentally, placed eight shows in the list for both years.

Following is the comparison of the Nielsen ratings for the two years:

1951

Non-Fat Dough For Bakers' Show

American Bakers Assn. is going into radio for the first time, buying a network show via NBC for an institutional plugging of bread in a bid to tell the people that bread isn't fattening.

Bakers outfit is buying the "Screen Directors Guild" show and slotting it in the 5 to 5:30 Sunday afternoon period. The Whitehall-sponsored "Scotland Yard" show is currently slotted in the time, but the latter will be shifted to a new time segment. Sponsorship begins Feb. 24.

Deal represents another sale for the networks in which clients are bypassing the "gimmicked up" sales patterns such as "Tandem" operations, etc., to embrace straight sponsorship deals.

Clients Shy Off Buying Menotti's Xmas Opera But Easter Repeat Seen

In the wake of the critical kudos lavished on the Gian-Carlo Menotti "Amahl and the Night Visitors" hour-long opera which was commissioned for NBC-TV, the network has made several attempts to peddle the presentation for a repeat on one of the web's dramatic shows.

However, the clients approached have nixed the offer, agreeing that while the Menotti work represents a unique musical achievement, it nonetheless would not be able to deliver the kind of rating they're accustomed to.

Originally presented on Christmas Eve, under Hallmark greeting card sponsorship, "Amahl" will probably get a network repeat on Easter Sunday.

NBC, CBS Big Wheels on Prowl For Top Tele Talent for Fall

Hollywood, Jan. 29.

Tele's talent tempest will be whipped to new fury this week when the big guns of NBC and CBS are unlimbered in a drive for top names for next season. On the ground are Columbia's Hubbell Robinson, Jack Van Volkenburg and Harry Ackerman, big wheels of the Paley TV empire. Dueling them for NBC will be Norman Blackburn and Tom McAvity, with perhaps "surprise" calls by Fred Wile, Pat Weaver or Manie Sacks.

Especial targets of the sharpshooters are pictures and radio, with stars past and present drawing the heavy fire. That both chains will try to net the biggest game of all, Danny Kaye, is nobody's secret. He's listening to any and all offers but so far hasn't come completely out of his shell. A long term "security" deal may yet spring him for TV in a year or two. Picture stars who fit into comedy formats and are free to make their own deals will also be on the "hunted" list.

Last week the skirmishing was stepped up and both nets bagged new TV talent. NBC landed William Bendix and Walter O'Keefe and CBS countered with Cass Daley, who had been negotiating with NBC but couldn't agree on terms. NBC started talks with Barbara Stanwyck, who is ready to tackle the new medium after scoffing at previous offers. Tom D'Andrea and Larry Blake, who scored handily with their "Shipmates" skit on a recent Eddie Cantor broadcast, were taken into camp by CBS on a term deal and will help bulwark the Frank Sinatra show. Jimmy Boyd, the juve hillbilly, is also wanted by CBS for a "Huck Finn" series and a pilot is being readied. He has been kicking around on local stations but Abner Greshler saw great possibilities in the youngster and took him in tow.

To make sure they don't pass up any sleepers, the Columbians have installed Russ Trost as TV casting director. He had been doing that job at many picture studios.

Changes Seen With WOR Merger OK

With the merger of the Tom O'Neil (General Tire) radio interests with WOR, N. Y., approved by the FCC last week, blending of the two outfits has been made official. Name of the new enterprise will be that under which WOR operated, General Tele-Radio, Inc.

O'Neil was formally introduced to the WOR staff on Monday (28) at a meeting in which he assured the staffers that the new ownership would continue the policies WOR's management has pursued. He added that WOR would remain an autonomous outfit and that no changes in management or operating personnel were planned. He stressed that there would be no change in WOR's relations with Mutual, and said that if anything they would be closer than before.

Insiders feel that eventually there will be changes, chiefly along the lines of integrating the station and the network. WOR and MBS have separate departments performing similar functions—as in

'AMATEUR HOUR' SETS 3D N.Y. GARDEN BENEFIT

June 12 has been set for "Original Amateur Hour's" third annual championship show at Madison Square Garden, N.Y. Three-hour performance, including Old Gold program's regular ABC network Thursday evening radio broadcast, will feature amateur "graduates" and three-time winners of '51-'52 radio and TV season will will compete for cash scholarship wards and runner-up prizes.

Garden show, a capacity sellout in its two previous yearly dates, is to be staged on behalf of the New York Foundling Hospital, which, as formerly, will receive 100% of boxoffice proceeds.

Chalice to Malice

In one of the more surprising program shifts of the current season, CBS Radio this week decided to drop "It's Always Sunday," a Sunday afternoon religious-slanted situation comedy series in which a minister is the lead character, and replace it with "Hearthstone of the Death Squad," a mystery meller series.

Move is effective Feb. 10, when "Hearthstone" dumps "Sunday" out of the 4:30 to 5 p.m. slot. "Hearthstone" previously had been aired Sundays from 5:30 to 5:55, but had to be ousted from that period to make way for the new Admiral-sponsored world news roundup show, which stars Bob Trout. Both "Hearthstone" and "Sunday" have been sustaining.

In another program shift, CBS has dropped "Winner Take All," which had been aired on a sustaining basis cross-the-board from 3:50 to 4:30 p.m. New Radie Harris show and a five-minute newscast are filling the 3:50 to 4 period. Half-hour from 4 to 4:30 will be filled by three network feeds: "The Chicagoans" on Monday and Wednesday, originating from Chicago; "Music by Antonini" on Tuesday, originating from N. Y., and "St. Louis Matinee" on Thursday and Friday, originating from St. Louis.

TV 'Recital Hall' Axed as Stations Grab NBC Period

In another example of local television stations' insistence that they be handed back for their own use any sustaining time on the networks, NBC-TV has been forced to return to its affiliates its Wednesday night 10:30 to 11 period. Now that the move has been made, the web is extremely pessimistic that it will be able to recapture the time.

Period has been sustaining for the last several weeks, since Bristol-Myers switched its "Break the Bank" show over to the CBS-TV week. NBC moved the R. J. Reynolds-sponsored "Pantomime Quiz" from 10:30 back to 10 on Wednesday nights to fill the time vacated by "Bank" and had attempted to program the open half-hour with a longhairish "TV Recital Hall." When no sponsor was forthcoming, the affiliates, plus NBC's o.&o. outlets, insisted on pre-empting the half-hour, and NBC was forced to capitulate.

Web was faced with a similar sit-

'Charlie Wild' to DuMont

DuMont web this week snared "Charlie Wild, Private Detective" from the ABC video web, where it has been airing Tuesday nights from 8 to 8:30. Whodunit preems March 13 on DuMont, where it will occupy the Thursday night 10 to 10:30 slot. Mogen David wine continues as sponsor, through the Weiss & Geller agency.

On ABC, the show managed to pull an 8.6 rating, despite its being aired directly opposite Milton Berle on NBC and Frank Sinatra on CBS. DuMont has lined up more than 30 stations for it.

ABC Follows CBS Lead to NARTB —But Video Only

Washington, Jan. 29.

As anticipated when CBS-TV joined the National Assn. of Radio and TV Broadcasters a month ago, ABC-TV has followed suit, and the video nets are now all represented in the trade organization. NARTB has about $30,000 (in dues from the two nets) more to work with, and Harold Fellows has nearly paid for his first year's salary as president of the association.

With the affiliaton of ABC and its five o and o video stations, NARTB's TV membership now includes 80 of the 108 TV stations in operation, which is a much higher proportion than the association's radio membership—approximately 1,400 out of nearly 2,400 aural stations.

As in the case of CBS, the ABC action was apparently motivated by the NARTB ratification of the TV code and the association's stand against the Benton bill to establish a National Citizens Advisory Board to keep an eye on video programming. NARTB is preparing to strongly oppose the bill when further hearings are held this season before the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee.

Meanwhile, the machinery for putting the code into effect on March 1 is being set. Supscription forms are being prepared and will be sent out to stations in about two weeks.

America's Top Writers Tied Up In Exclusives for TV Drama Series

At a time when TV's entrepreneurs are becoming increasingly alarmed over the dearth of fresh scripts and available material suitable for adaptation to video, Norman and Irving Pincus have hit one of the qualitative jackpots of the season. This is the signaturing of an agreement with the Authors League of America for a dramatic stanza to be called "Theatre of America."

The Pincus brothers, packagers and supervising producers of the presentation, are offering the program, with its access to some of the top names in the show biz-literary field, on the basis of $32,000 for a full-hour stanza. Also tied in with the project will be such subsidiary guilds as the Authors Guild, Dramatists Guild, Screen Writers Guild and Radio Writers Guild. In return, the Authors League of America will receive, upon sponsorship of the show, a weekly flat fee which will go into the organization's fund that aids writers in financial stress.

Thus far the Pincuses have negotiated exclusively pacts with Ernest Hemingway, for one of his major story properties; with Noel Coward, for a video adaptation of his "Conversation Piece" musical; for an original teleplay by Gian-Carlo Menotti, and an original play by Eric Ambler. Negotiations are in progress for a TV version of George Bernard Shaw's "The Devil's Disciple."

Among major personalities within the Author League who will aid in supervising shows, and some of whose properties will be available for the TV dramatic series, are Oscar Hammerstein 2d, Howard Lindsay, Leland Hayward, Moss Hart and Richard Rodgers, with expectations that George S. Kaufman, Garson Kanin, Arthur Schwartz and Joshua Logan will be recruited for the series.

Eugene Burr has been assigned as script editor, a chore he has handled for the Pincus freres' "Ellery Queen" series.

ASR Cuts Up on Skelton

CBS Radio this week tied down its deal for American Safety Razor to pick up the Red Skelton show for 12 broadcasts, starting Feb. 13. Show, under a special one-shot buy-in policy inaugurated by CBS at the start of the current season, goes to advertisers on a packaged time and talent cost of $23,500 per week.

ASR, through the BBD&O agency, will sponsor the first six weeks of the show consecutively under its deal, and then alternate each week for the final six stanzas. That means CBS can still sell the alternate six weeks for the remainder of the season. Skelton program, incidentally, is bankrolled by Norge on a 46-station CBS network specially selected by Norge.

Sale to ASR indicates the razor firm and CBS have buried the hatchet, after the squabble that arose while ASR was bankrolling Robert Q. Lewis' "Show Goes On" on CBS-TV. Originally aired Thursday nights, CBS video moved it to Saturday nights to make way for "Amos 'n' Andy" on Thursdays. ASR opposed the move and subsequently dropped the show.

CBS, incidentally, also wrapped up 52-week renewal deals this week with Longines for both its Sunday half-hours, the Symphonette and the Choraliers.

45G Loeb Payment Won't Deter TVA In 'Blacklist' Fight

Philip Loeb, whose dropping from the cast of NBC-TV's "The Goldbergs" threatened to result in the airer's listing by Television Authority as "unfair," has settled with packager-star Gertrude Berg, taking the show off the hook. At the same time Loeb declared his intention to fight against "blacklisting," and TVA membership meeting in Gotham last week voted for action to prevent a recurrence of similar "political screening."

For bowing out of his contract, which had two years to run, Loeb will get a maximum of $40,000-$45,000, depending on how long the show runs, frequency of airing and sponsorship status. Show starts Monday (4) cross-the-board at 7:15 p.m., fully sponsored. Harry Clark is currently leading contender for the role of "Jake" on the show.

TVA resolution states that at the next negotiations with webs, sponsors and agencies "blacklisting" be declared an unfair practice and a violation of the code, that an anti-blacklist committee be set up to investigate any complaints and with power to report back to the TVA board and recommend that where blacklisting has been found the offender, whether a network, sponsor or agency, be placed in an

Healy Colgate Vamp No Sudden Move; Plans Rest

Bob Healy, who has announced his resignation from Colgate as veepee-advertising director after an 18-year regime, plans spending a month in Hawaii before taking on a new assignment. Although announcement of his resigning, effective Feb. 1, took the trade by surprise, actually Healy, it's known, has been planning the move since last June. Who will succeed him in the Colgate is still being kept under wraps.

What bearing Healy's exit will have on the Colgate radio-television programming rosters is currently cuing trade speculation. It's known that Healy had opposed Colgate relinquishing valuable daytime radio franchises some time back, although he was overruled by the Colgate high command, with the company eventually returning to the daytime AM sweepstakes only to find fringe segments available.

19 Casualties In O'Neil WICC Sale

Bridgeport, Jan. 29.

The most immediate casualties of the sale of WICC by Tom O'Neil to the Bridgeport Broadcasting Co., operators of WLIZ, were 19 employees of the former station, which O'Neil had to dispose of to clear way for his acquisition of WOR in New York.

The Yankee Network will pay the dismissed ex-WICCasters two weeks' or more severance, according to Robert M. Kennett, manager, who stays on O'Neil's staff.

Four AFRA announcers are the only union members whose contract included a protection clause in event of WICC's sale, and their international officers were this week readying for a huddle with the new boss of the 600-kilocycler, Phillip Merryman.

Merryman acknowledges that Yankee Network had an AFRA contract, but does not concede that he has to hire any of the four mikemen and displace his own WLIZ announcers.

LEVER, GEN. TIRE BUY NBC-TV EASTER PARADE

NBC-TV wrapped up plans this week for its hour-long pickup of the annual Fifth Avenue (N.Y.) Easter Parade, with Lever Bros. and General Tire & Rubber signing on to share the cost. Web figures the total time and talent cost for the noon to 1 p.m. package at about $50,000.

Some of the top NBC video talent has been lined up to narrate the show. Dave Garroway will team with Marguerite Piazza to interview name celebs from one stand during the parade, while Betty Furness and Dennis James will ditto from another spot on the avenue. Bob (Elliott) & Ray (Goulding) will be roving commentators, with the cameras cutting in on them from time to time.

ERA OF LOCAL PROGRAMMING

Now It's the 'Visualizer'

This is the era of a new species in television. They call him the Visualizer. He's becoming a "must" in agency-sponsor relations, tagging along with the account executive, who wants to make sure he finds out what the client is talking about.

If, for example, the agency account exec gets a call from the client to "come on over and we'll plan our commercial copy to demonstrate how to fix a gasket in an auto," it's the function of the "visualizer" to interpret by illustration what the client's talking about. That way the account exec gets off the hook. All he has to do is hand the illustration to the copy writer.

D.C. Strong on Radio Origination But Trails as Starter for TV Net Shows

Washington, Jan. 29.

Washington is well up the ladder as a network origination point for radio but trails far in the ruck as starting point for TV web shows. Backbone of the nation's capital originations is a combination of news, news commentary, and the interview and news forum style show.

Until such time as the public demands more of such on their video screens, Washington appears stymied.

A check of the big network stations here discloses that anywhere from 60 to 70 regular web shows, or portions of such shows, come from Washington each week. On the other hand, only 14 to 15 regular TV shows get their start here.

News and news comment form the big dish. They currently provide 33 of the radio net shows and eight of the TV programs.

Rest of the Washington offering —except for an occasional offbeat presentation such as the one-month ABC origination of evangelist Billy Graham on both AM and TV—is composed of Army, Navy and Air Force hours (mainly music); and the interview and comment programs, such as American Forum, Meet the Press, etc. There are several farm hour shows.

Aside from these, Washington's network material consists mainly of special one-shot pickups, like President Truman addressing a joint session of the Congress, or a Congressional Committee hearing.

NBC is currently doing the biggest job of Washington originations. Each week it launches 16 AM shows, of which nine are news and comment, plus eight TV shows, five of which are news. CBS is sending out 13 regular AM shows, of which seven are news; and four

Govt. Curbs Cue Olds TV Cutback

Television was hit this week by another blow from the recent Government-decreed cutback in auto production, when Oldsmobile decided to drop the Tuesday and Thursday segments of its "Doug Edwards and the News" show on CBS-TV. Move is effective Feb. 26, with Olds retaining the Monday, Wednesday and Friday broadcasts, which are aired from 7:30 to 7:45 p.m.

Believed to be the only live TV show to get an actual Coast repeat, the Edwards program has been reprised by CBS-TV at 11 p.m. each night. At that time, it's brought up to date with any late news that might have broken since its original airing and fed on the microwave to the far west, with the repeat broadcast, of course, not viewable on the stations which carried it earlier. Olds had bankrolled the Coast repeats also five nights weekly.

CBS-TV plans to retain the same setup and is now offering the Tuesday stanzas to potential clients at a cost of $4,760 for one evening, or $8,900 for both. Price, which is a gross figure including agency commission, comprises $3,500 for a single segment on the regular run, or $6,500 for both. Cost of the repeat is $960 for one evening, or $1,800 for both, plus $300 per evening charges on the microwave facilities.

Bishop Sheen Series Set

DuMont network this week concluded negotiations for Bishop Fulton J. Sheen, one of the leading Catholic spokesmen, to conduct a new half-hour weekly show.

To be titled "Is Life Worth Living?" the show will be aired Tuesday nights from 8 to 8:30.

Ford Wants Slice Of 'Toast' But Is Bound to Melton

Ford Motor Co., which recently slashed the James Melton Thursday night NBC-TV show from 60 to 30 minutes, and subsequently announced that it was cancelling out permanently at the end of the season, wouldn't be averse to picking up half of the Lincoln-Mercury tab on sponsorship of the CBS-TV "Toast of the Town." That would put the Ford-Lincoln-Mercury dynasty under the same program banner.

Howyever, Ford has a definite commitment on the Melton show extending to the end of the '51-'52 cycle. While there have been some reports that automotive production cutbacks may have a bearing on a continued weekly full-hour Lincoln-Mercury sponsorship of "Toast," Kenyon & Eckhardt, agency on the account, says that present client arrangement extends through the balance of this season. What happens next season, K & E says, depends on the status of the automotive industry.

Ford's exit marks part of a continuing trend among auto bankrollers to vamp the high-priced medium in the face of production curtailments. Similarly, Ford's interim slashing to 30 minutes further reflects the apprehensions among clients over the rising costs of TV.

With Lotsa Sustaining Time, CBS Can't Clear 5-Min. Seg for Com'l

Despite the amount of sustaining time it now has available, CBS Radio again found itself in the strange position this week of having to turn down a sales order because it could not clear the time desired by the sponsor.

Dentyne gum several weeks ago placed an order with the web for a five-minute slot, either once or twice a week, in which it wanted to present "Somebody Knows." Show would describe criminals at large and offer $1,000 to any listener furnishing information leading to a criminal's capture. Bankroller, however, wanted the five minutes in a cream time period, which CBS could not clear on its schedule.

Web ran into a similar situation two weeks ago, when American Bakers sought a half-hour Sunday afternoons. Since the time wanted by the sponsor was unavailable on CBS, it took the order to NBC, buying the Sunday 5:30 to 6 p.m. slot.

BMI CLINIC NOTE: REVITALIZED AM

Revitalization of radio as a potent force in the community and a profit-making and sales-producing ad medium was theme of a two-day shirtsleeve program clinic held this week by Broadcast Music, Inc. The meeting, 18th staged by BMI in N. Y., brought out 141 reps from over 50 stations in 23 states, with sessions on Monday (28) and Tuesday presided over by some top industry spokesmen.

The station personnel who came to exchange ideas stressed the value of creativeness and imagination in sparking AM's power. That point was underlined by J. Leonard Reinsch, topper of WSB, Atlanta, who said that in radio's pioneer era the top man was the engineer, that in the more recent past the commercial manager was top man, but that today the program director is coming into his own.

Important in the programming field is local emphasis, Reinsch declared, pointing out that WLPO, LaSalle, a 250-watter, sells $100,000 of local news annually. He cited WSB, which gets heavy audiences with a show mentioning birthdays of persons over 80; WMBD, Peoria, which lists the names of children born in the previous day; the "obituary column" successful on some outlets; and "The Pastor's Study," on WIOD, Miami, with a minister answering personal questions from telephone callers.

Emphasis was also placed on local programming by Frederic R. Gamble, prexy of the American Assn. of Advertising Agencies for the past eight years. Pointing out that spot radio sales moved ahead of network sales for the first time in 1951, Gamble said that local shows are going to carry greater weight in the sale of station time.

Trend towards more spot biz, 4A's topper declared, means that the stations will have more dealings directly with the ad agencies. He added that the local outlets will have to know more about the national ad structure, and its three major elements: (1) the commission system; (2) agency recognition; and (3) the 2% cash discount.

While virtually all U. S. stations recognize the commission setup, Gamble said, it's also to the outlets' interest to measure the agencies they recognize according to four yardsticks: (1) the agency's free-

Cleve. 'Mothers' March' In Dimes Drive Sets Pattern for Radio, TV

Cleveland, Jan. 29.

This city's radio and television-inspired success in helping the March of Dimes realize a one-night $400,000 goal is being copied now by other cities.

Radio and TV opened the drive with 30 announcements per day on Nov. 15, and stepped up the drive with a 250-announcement per day schedule the week and evening of the drive.

In effect, broadcasters told home owners to leave their porch light on and that mothers would ring doorbells to collect the pledge.

"Radio and television can be credited with 99% of the success of the drive" said polio officials who maintain they'll use a "Mothers' March on Polio" each year.

Also, nearly half of the 22,000 mothers who participated in the drive were recruited through radio. Polio officials undertook the untried "Mothers' March" on the insistence of radio and TV program directors who felt the all-out, one-shot appeal would have dramatic and popular support. As a result of the success, the formula will be repeated next year. Polio drive officials also say Detroit has asked for a blueprint of the program and that other communities also have requested instructions on the "Mothers' March on Polio."

CBS Also Goes to Market in Radio Merchandising Tie With A&P Stores

CBS Radio this week unveiled its version of the sales merchandising plan previously attempted by other networks and local stations, tying in with the A&P food stores across the country for a combination radio-merchandising display. With 4,200 stores operating under the A&P banner, the CBS plan is the biggest yet attempted in network radio, according to CBS execs, who are labeling the idea the "Super Sales Plan."

Under the plan, six non-competing advertisers whose goods sold in A&P stores will be eligible to buy into an hour-long Friday night show, to be aired on the entire CBS network of 193 stations. Each of the advertisers will pay $9,400 per week, for which he is to receive a minute-and-15-second plug on the show, plus feature merchandise display in the grocery stores four weeks out of each 13-week cycle. In addition, he'll get an opening 30-second billboard announcement on the show each week, plus a repetition of the billboard at the half-hour mark, and secondary display in the stores each week when he doesn't get the feature billing.

CBS plans to turn over its "Musicland, U.S.A." to the new policy. Show, starring Earl Wrightson, is now aired Friday nights from 8 to 8:30 p.m. Web will tee off the plan as a half-hour venture as soon as it lines up three bankrollers to participate. When the six advertisers are sold, the show will be expanded to a full hour and probably moved into the 9 to 10 o'clock Friday night slot. At that time also, CBS plans to expand the show by boosting its budget and using top-name guest personalities. All sponsors, incidentally, are subject to joint approval by the network and A&P.

Webs execs explained that they had selected a musical show, since ratings reveal the musicals are growing fastest in popularity among listeners. They also pointed out that Friday night is a particularly good night for the plan, since Saturday is traditionally the biggest marketing day of the week among the average American households.

Cold Is Hot

CBS-TV program veepee Hubbell Robinson, Jr., thinks he's got the answer to what's wrong with video.

Inspired by the 49.7 rating payoff on last week's Arthur Godfrey Wednesday night show, which found all the principals doing their routines on ice, Robinson cracked:

"From now on all CBS variety show headliners get ice skates."

Nets Yielding To Clients' Longer Summer Layoff

The eight-week radio hiatus during the summer, which through the years was generally par for the course except in the case of major comics, who invariably hold out for 13 weeks, appears to be a thing of the past. The networks are yielding to pressure from clients who now want to lay off for the full 13-week cycle, in order to salvage an additional five weeks' savings on time and program costs.

"Lux Radio Theatre" has been a traditional eight-week layoff show, but indications are that this summer it will hike its hiatus to 13 weeks, with CBS going along on the plan. In terms of Lux, it will mean a time-talent saving for the five-week span of approximately $200,000.

Time was when major shows vied with one another for being the first to return for the regular fall season. This year it looks like the situation will reverse itself, with clients competing to see which one can lay off the longest.

Sees Radio Splurging To Develop New Ideas, Talent in Summer Test

Radio networks will be splurging more time and money on the development of new program ideas and new talent during the upcoming summer hiatus period than ever before, in an effort to revive interest of both sponsors and the public for next fall and winter season.

At least that's the opinion of CBS Radio program veepee Lester Gottlieb, who declared this week that radio, to remain active, "must feed on new ideas" and that it's necessary to spend money to develop those ideas. "When we're SRO," Gottlieb said, "We don't worry so much about building programs or new ideas. But now we have a number of sustaining holes to fill in our schedule, so we'll be spending more than ever."

As one of the first steps in that direction, Gottlieb revealed that he's heading for the Coast Feb. 8 to spend two weeks huddling with Guy della Cioppa, CBS programming veepee in Hollywood. Two of them will work out their new program ideas and attempt to blueprint their schedules for the fall and winter season. della Cioppa will then return to N. Y. with Gottlieb, when they'll present their stuff to the net's sales department.

Gottlieb said he is presently working on 22 new program formats.

'Chester's' WTMJ-TV Sponsor

Milwaukee, Jan. 29.

"Chester the Pup," for many months a weekly feature on the ABC-TV network, returns to television Jan. 30 as a local show on WTMJ-TV at 4:15-5:30 p. m.

It will be sponsored as a live program by the Holsum Products Co.

Kate Smith's Night Status Seen Iffy

Failure of the Wednesday night Kate Smith show on NBC-TV to make a dent in the opposition Arthur Godfrey show on CBS-TV, has cued considerable speculation as to the show's status as a permanent network fixture. Fact that only last week Godfrey hit a high mark of 49.7 (Trendex) in the face of "Kate Smith Hour's" 10.2, didn't particularly help to salve uneasy feelings among the web echelon concerning the high-tariffed show, despite the fact that it currently enjoys an SRO status on sponsorship.

Miss Smith's show hit its top seasonal rating a few weeks back, running neck-to-neck with Godfrey, when it departed from its usual format to showcase the multiple stars receiving Look magazine awards.

19th ANNUAL

VARIETY

SURVEY OF

RADIO—TELEVISION

SHOWMANAGEMENT

It's SHOWMANAGEMENT Time.-

For the 19th year, VARIETY is conducting its annual SURVEY OF SHOWMANAGEMENT in American broadcasting.

VARIETY wants to find, in this annual survey, the outstanding leaders and station operations making the most notable contributions in broadcasting. VARIETY wants to single out the imaginative leaders in TV who have played dominant roles in helping the medium achieve its present stature; those who have, over the past several years, helped parlay video into one of the major forces on the American scene. VARIETY recognizes that, for all its progress and profound effect on living habits, TV still remains a pioneering medium, always on the prowl for new techniques, new patterns, new formulas in entertainment. It still doesn't know all the answers. Thus in appraising the contributions of the TV entrepreneurs and creators, VARIETY wants to single out those who are helping to chart new paths of progress for the medium and are applying the highest professional standards. The era of "timid programming" is over. There's no longer room for the cliche.

Similarly VARIETY wants to re-appraise the radio scene; to recognize the leaders and stations helping to perpetuate AM as big boxoffice; to ferret out those radio broadcasters, stations and personalities who during the past year contributed the most toward re-patterning the medium to a new era and who demonstrated that radio is still an effective and potent force in entertainment, education and sales. We want to know about those shrewd and realistic showmen and businessmen who refused to write off their own great medium, but applied ingenuity and resourcefulness in retooling for the future.

As usual, VARIETY has set no categories for awards. They may range from recognition for programming, promotion, public service, to sales effectiveness, technical advances and all-round managerial skill. Above all, showmanship will be the predominant factor in keynoting the 1951-'52 appraisals.

We will also reprise our Phi Beta 'Variety' key awards for outstanding personalities in both radio and TV. So tune up. The overture is March 5. Don't make a fuss over orchestrating your contribution. Keep it short and concise. How it sounds is more important than how it looks.

COY SEES FREEZE LIFT IN MONTH

Coast Sees Paradox of TV-Made Com Going Now Into New Radio Station

By JACK HELLMAN

Hollywood, Jan. 29.

At a time when the radio craft is foundering in a sea of uncertainty, or so the "experts" would have you believe, 34-year-old John Poole has come along to gamble $300,000 in the "dying medium" and with money, his own, he made in tele-

A paradox, to be sure, but any smart plunger would buy a ticket on a deal that parlays faith and youth.

Just now Los Angeles County is dotted with 22 transmitters, seemingly more than enough to service the area as a complement to the seven television stations and numerous FM adjuncts. There's room for one more good one, reasons Poole, and on that tack he'll ride it through. The call letters of his new station, which unsheathes its signal sometime in April, reflects his thinking rather than articulation. The station's identity is KBIG, and those who know Poole say he'll live up to the spirit of the letters.

Poole is not new to radio, having owned stations in Pasadena and Santa Maria to the north. He's not only the money behind the station, but will also be its chief engineer. He's always dabbled in electronics and wants to be useful instead of financially decorative. To surround himself with men who think big, Poole lured Bob McAndrews away from Southern California Broadcasters Assn., and persuaded Cliff Gill, former manager of KFMV, to

Chi TVA Aiding Talent vs. Agent

Chicago, Jan. 29.

Notice has been sent out by the Chi Television Authority local to agent and talent reps that as of Friday (1) it will start policing its stipulation that no commission shall be paid which will reduce the talent's net wage below TVA's minimum pay scale. The edict was adopted at the union's national convention as part of the interim set of standards for agent-talent pacts.

The ruling, designed to assure video performers of take-home-pay based on at least the minimum level, means that in those cases where an agent is repping a client for an assignment that pays only the base TVA rate he'll either have to forego his percentage or negotiate for a higher wage scale. To receive his commission he'll have to up the wage by the amount necessary to leave his client with at least the union minimum after his cut is taken out.

TVA has set 10% as the top aggregate commission that may be paid by an individual talent pactee.

The union is also taking action to forestall or eliminate any talent kickbacks to video packagers. It's ruled that no commission may be charged to a performer by an agent who has a piece of a tele show or who reps a client in the packaging field.

Kills Father in Argument Over 'Suspense' TV Show

Detroit, Jan. 29.

A 15-year-old boy shot and killed his father in an argument over whether the family should watch "Suspense" last Tuesday (22).

The father was John R. Sikron, 46, a Macomb County deputy sheriff. His son, Jerry, shot him in the back with a shotgun while he was arguing with Mrs. Sikron over the television program.

Sikron argued that the program was unfit for his wife and six children to see. The 15-year-old son, Jerry, said he just couldn't stand seeing his father pushing his mother around.

WJZ-TV Autonomy

WJZ-TV, Gotham key of ABC-TV, is getting its own operational setup distinct from the web. A staff of directors and assistant directors assigned exclusively to local shows will work under Bernard I. Paulson, WJZ-TV program operations manager.

Trevor Adams, manager of the vidstation, expects to get five studios exclusively for use of the local operation. These will include the new studio installed in the Hotel Des Artistes on W. 67th St., directly behind the ABC Television Centre.

NCAA Panacea: 'Pay as You View'

Pittsburgh, Jan. 29.

Speaking before the 37th Anniversary International Kiwanis luncheon here last week, Tom Hamilton, Pitt athletic director and chairman of the NCAA committee on TV, said the only feasible solution for televised football was on a "pay as you view" plan. He pointed out that some method of direct collection by a coin in the slot device, or payment to the telephone company, "may offer a solution to the problem of gate losses incurred by the telecasting of gridiron games."

Hamilton told the Kiwanians surveys have shown gate receipts fell off approximately 21% in areas where there was teevee competition. "Only a small portion of this loss of revenue is regained," he explained, "through payments for sponsored telecasts." The heavy losses occur when a big distant game is televised on the day one of smaller importance is being played locally.

Hamilton said "huge amounts of money are being spent by universities and colleges in an attempt to bring about a satisfactory arrangement"

Insurance Agents Union Claims Brushoff By N.Y. Stations on Spots

Insurance Agents Local 19 of the AFL has filed a protest with the FCC alleging that spots it recorded on its strike against Prudential Life were turned down by N. Y. radio stations.

Strikers, who have been out for eight weeks, got some financial backing from the Seafarers International Union, International Ladies Garment Workers Union and other AFL groups to buy time. Spots were produced by WFDR, N. Y. FM outlet of the ILGWU, with AFRA talent contributing their services. However, the strikers claim, stations wouldn't acept the copy due to its being "controversial," although in some cases the order for the time had already been accepted. In some instances the stations said they would air the union's announcements in amended form and with staff announcers reading the message.

Dowling-Stone Teamup

Although NBC has revamped the production setup on the Friday night RCA-sponsored Ezio Pinza show in a bid to hypo its rating, with Edward Duryea Dowling brought in as producer, Ezra Stone, who formerly produced, remains with the show.

New set of production credits now reads: Pete Barnum production supervisor and Dowling as producer, with Stone getting a "staged and directed" credit tag. Leo Solomon, formerly writer-director on the show, has exited.

SETS TIMETABLE FOR APPLICANTS

Cleveland, Jan. 29.

Lifting of the freeze on new tele station construction may come "in a month or close to that," FCC chairman Wayne Coy told a Sigma Delta Chi chapter here yesterday (Mon.). "Our tentative plan is to allow perhaps 60-90 days for filing of new applications and amending of old ones," Coy said. "This would mean that the Commision could begin processing applications between May 1 and June 1."

However, Coy added, due to staff limitations the grants "will not be too fast in coming out, unless we are dramatically rescued" with reenforcements provided by greatly increased appropriations.

Referring to the freeze on color tele, Coy threw some doubts as to the perfection of a compatible system. Predictions of compatible systems, he said, "heretofore have had a way of disappearing into the limbo when they have served their purpose of blocking development by others." He indicated that since compatible color may not come to pass, manufacturers should offer the public the protection of sets that are engineered for quick and cheap conversion or adaptation to an incompatible color system.

TV will play a significant role in the Presidential elections, Coy said, adding that with 16,000,000 sets it was apparent that "expenditures for political time will break all records." He said that Congress had given the FCC a mandate to require broadcasters to make facilities available equally to both sides in a campaign.

Sen. Johnson to Fight Ban

Washington, Jan. 29.

With characteristic vigor, Sen. Edwin C. Johnson (D-Col.) has jumped into the color TV controversy and let it be known that he considers the National Production Authority ban on production of sets "an unwarranted discriminatory policy." In an exchange of correspondence with Defense Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson, made public by Johnson last week, the chairman of the important Senate Interstate Commerce Committee served notice he's prepared for a showdown on the issue.

The Committee, the Senator told Wilson, "has followed and nursed color television development through years of deadly struggle and will not, without protest, idly stand by and see it delayed arbitrarily, and capriciously." He said he felt certain the NPA order (M-90), banning manufacture of color

NEW PUB, DIRECTOR FOR WJBK, BUT NO JONES SUB

Detroit, Jan. 29.

WJBK announced the appointment of a new director of publicity, but still remains mum on appointments of a veepee of the Fort Industry's northern district and general manager, to take Richard Jones' old job, and an assistant general manager and top disk jockey to replace Ed McKenzie, better known as Jack the Bellboy.

New publicity director is Patricia MacInnis who moves up from the television operations department. She replaces Joyce Chapman.

Meanwhile, it's rumored that $100,000 worth of billings are following Jack the Bellboy to WXYZ, where he will have a daily disk show, and a possible ABC spread on Sunday. Miss Chapman has joined McKenzie at WXYZ as his assistant.

The WJBK resignations came after Lee B. Wailes, exec veepee of the Fort Industry Co., had announced Jones' departure because of a basic difference in policy. Meanwhile, Jones is sharing an office with Leo Fitzpatrick, whose resignation from WJR a few years back was no less sensational than Jones'.

NABUG to Mull NABET 'Raiding' Rap Feb. 9; Engineers' Poll Key in Hassle

Outcome of the elections among engineers at CBS's owned-and-operated outlets, to be announced by the National Labor Relations Board in Chicago tomorrow (Thurs.), will be one of the keys to the CIO-AFL feuding in the broadcast field.

Poll, which was taken last week, is between the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers (AFL), which has repped the CBS technicians for many years, and the CIO's National Assn. of Broadcast Engineers & Technicians. AFL union has charged NABET with "raiding."

Meanwhile the National Assn. of Broadcast Unions & Guilds, the multi-union council on which AFL, CIO and Authors League unions have representation, is reviewing the situation. The review committee, which has delegates from the various unions, will meet in Gotham the weekend of Feb. 9.

The review committee was to have convened and issued its report before Jan. 11. However, it was decided at NABUG parley two weeks ago to postpone the committee's meeting until after the crucial IBEW-NABET vote results are announced.

Committee, which is to investigate rather than take action, will get an analysis of NABET's plans. It expected to issue a declaration on what constitutes "raiding" as opposed to legitimate union expansion. If the NABET reps and other unions in NABUG don't see eye to eye, it's likely separate statements will be issued.

Should NABET lose the election at CBS, a peaceful entente could be effected. However, if NABET overturns the IBEW representation of CBS engineers, it's likely that the battle would be hot and settlement more difficult.

Daly's ABC Exclusive

Hollywood, Jan. 29.

ABC has signed John Daly to an exclusive radio-TV contract.

He will be allowed to finish out his present commitments and the network will build another show for him in addition to his current ABC newsreel.

WGN-TV Pacts Chi Cubs at 75G

Chicago, Jan. 29.

WGN-TV wrapped up exclusive rights to the full Chicago Cubs home schedule last week for $75,000. In line with the baseball team's front-office conviction that video has definite promotional values, the rights went for essentially the same fee as a year ago.

With the National League entry now in his pocket, WGN-TV general manager Frank P. Schreiber is drawing a bead on the White Sox of the American League. Because the Chi Tribune station has had an exclusive on the Sox for the past four years, it's considered a foregone conclusion that WGN-TV cameras will again work the South Side park. It's likely the Sox price will be close to the Cubs' tab. The Sox management, however, plans to continue with its policy of only televising day games.

The Cubs last season got $35,000 each from WGN-TV and WBKB. The rights were offered for the same price again this year, with a $5,000 premium proviso for exclusive coverage.

"We want to keep the price within reason so the Cubs can continue on television. Because of the promotional advantages, we consider ourselves really co-sponsors of the telecasts," James Gallagher, Cubs business manager, told VARIETY.

Jack Brickhouse will again be at the WGN-TV mike, with director Don Cook calling the shots.

WJBK Asks Injunction Vs. 'Jack the Bellboy' Switch To WXYZ on Name Snarl

Detroit, Jan. 29.

WJBK asked for a Federal Court injunction restraining Edmund T. McKenzie from conducting a disk jockey show over WXYZ under the name of "Jack The Bellboy." He resigned Jan. 16 at WJBK and was to start his new disk show on WXYZ Monday (28). WJBK, which had operated it, purchased all property and programs from its former owners, James F. Hopkins and Richard A. Connell, in 1946. Although McKenzie incorporated the program under "Jack The Bellboy, Inc," in 1947, the original purchase agreement predates that action, WJBK contends.

Hearing is set for Friday. Rumor is that $100,000 worth of sponsors followed "Bellboy" to WXYZ. He was getting $70,000 a year at WJBK.

Sun Spots in Philly To Recruit Ship Labor

Philadelphia, Jan. 29.

Sun Shipbuilding and Drydock Co., Chester, Pa., one of largest ship construction outfits in east, is using series of one-minute TV participations on WPTZ to recruit workers.

To fill its labor needs Sun Ship is sponsoring daily participations in Ernie Kovacs "3 to Get Ready" show, 7 to 9 a. m. Kovacs handles spots live and points out need for skilled workers, urging those qualified to help defense effort.

Gen. Mills Alters AM Program Setup

General Mills is reported cancelling out on its "Live Like a Millionaire" on NBC in favor of picking up 15 additional minutes daily on ABC.

"Millionaire" currently is backed on NBC Monday-through-Friday at 2:30-2:55 p.m. With this show to be nixed, General Mills will insert a 20-minute show, still to be selected, in the 10:25-10:45 slot the bankroller has on ABC cross-the-board.

"Edward Arnold, Storyteller," which GM now has in the 10:25 a. m. strip, will be cancelled. Sponsor's "Betty Crocker" show, now in at 10:30 a. m., will be moved to 4-4:15 p. m., replacing the "Valiant Lady" sustainer. ABC, which now has 20 minutes of GM biz daily, will have 35 minutes when the shift made, around March 3.

Knox-Reeves is agency for the morning time period with Dancer-Fitzgerald-Sample handling the afternoon show.

LOTSA PAUL DIXON ON ABC'S TV HORIZON

ABC-TV is replacing the Denni James afternoon strip with the Paul Dixon show from WCPO-TV, Cincinnati, starting Feb. 18. Stanza goes into the 11:30 a. m. period, ahead of the Don Ameche-Frances Langford layout.

James, who had done a stanza slanted at housewives on DuMont, moved over to ABC-TV last August. With expiration of his pact, the web is subbing the Dixon airer, which features Dixon, Wanda Lewis and Dotty Mack pantomiming to recorded pop tunes. Dixon team, in addition to its local show WCPO-TV, will continue the weekly eveni tele stint for ABC-TV.

A CITIZEN VIEWS THE NEWS
With Robert Montgomery
5 Mins.; Mon.-Fri., 10:30 p.m.
LIFE MAGAZINE
(Young & Rubicam)

Robert Montgomery, host-producer of "Lucky Strike Theatre" on NBC-TV, has added a cross-the-board capsule commentary on NBC radio for Life Magazine. Montgomery, who has done weekly quarter-hour gabfests on the air in the past, shows up to better advantage in the quickie format. His opinions are pithier and more pointed in the more limited time segment, although the three minutes allotted don't allow much time for the reasoning and background which should go into an editorial analysis.

On Thursday (24) Montgomery discussed Gen. Eisenhower as a Presidential candidate, declaring that Ike's policies, far from being obscure, have been clearly stated. On Friday (25) he teed off with the Gen. Lowe disclosures anent the Truman-MacArthur controversy, scored the "snafu in Korea" which have brought 104,644 U. S. casualties and urged "an end to our weak-kneed policies" in the Far East. His point of view is conservative. Manner was brisk, suited to the briefie format.

Life gets one middle plug, which is a less irritating setup for a pint-sized program than commercials fore and aft. Pitch was done appetizingly, via a wire recording of Life photographer Wayne Miller explaining his hop to get pix of the train snowbound in the Sierras, published in current issue. Bril.

KYLE MacDONNELL SHOW
Producer-Director: Richard Gordon
15 Mins.; Mon.-Wed.-Fri., 6:15 p.m.
Sustaining
WOR, N. Y.

Video's glamor gal, Kyle MacDonnell, makes her bow here on the sightless kilocycles in a straight gab and wax session. Miss MacDonnell registers nicely with a glib line of chatter that breezes over the usual cliches in a spontaneous and natural style. Her province is non-gossipy tidbits about the artists whose platters she spins.

On her getaway stanza (28), Miss MacDonnell played disks featuring the Four Aces, Doris Day and the Norman Paris Trio. It was a well-paced session with enough chatter to establish the show's personality and enough music to pass as a conventional disk show. Herm.

RADIE HARRIS' STARLINES
With Judy Garland, guest; Harry Marble, announcer
Producer - director: Bruno Zirato, Jr.
Writer: Radie Harris
5 Mins.; Mon.-thru-Fri., 3:50 p.m.
Sustaining
CBS, from N. Y.

As the latest in its growing string of five-minute shows, CBS Monday (28) preemed a capsule interview series featuring show biz columnist Radie Harris. It impressed as an okay break in the day's occupation for any listener tuning in and, trailing as it does the Cedric Adams and Carl Smith programs, both also of five-minute length, it should be able to attract and hold an okay audience.

Miss Harris pulled something of a coup in snaring Judy Garland as her initial guest, since it marked Miss Garland's first radio show since she revived two-a-day at the Broadway Palace last Oct. 16. Miss Harris wisely let her guest carry the interview, tossing in pointed questions once or twice to steer the conversation. Nothing startling to the show biz world emerged from the talk, but it underlined Miss Garland's vibrant personality and Miss Harris' knowledgeable way around an interview.

With Miss Harris' background in show biz, the series will naturally concentrate on entertainment personalities. Resultant name value, as in the case of Miss Garland, should be another point in its favor. Stal.

The usual format, heard before on similar such anniversary celebrations, revolved around flashbacks to the standout news events of the past period. The sound clips included a talk by the late President Calvin Coolidge on the Charles Lindbergh feat in 1927, the King Edward VIII abdication speech, some rantings by Hitler, etc. Also a must for every southern station, WMC revived some soundtracks about its role in a couple of Mississippi floods. Herm.

THE ENDLESS FRONTIER
(Our Daily Bread)
With Raymond Massey, Dr. William Murphy, Dr. William B. Castle, Dr. Robert Harris, Dr. Frederick J. Stare, Dr. R. S. Goodhart, others Producer-writer: Wade Arnold
Director: Fred Weihe
30 Mins., Sun. (27), 1:30 p.m.
NBC, from N. Y.

This new series of five documentaries dramatizing major achievements in the fight against disease, judged by Sunday's (27) opener, a script on nutrition ("Our Daily Bread"), is an eminently worthwhile, adult presentation. Jointly produced by NBC and the Health Information Foundation, series apparently aims to caution us against medical ills while stressing latest lab and clinic achievements, and in the main keep us informed and interested in scientific matters of vital importance.

Opener covered a lot of ground in a cleverly written and produced script that packed a lot of copy into a half-hour. There were brief capsule dramatizations that highlighted the presence of hunger and malnutrition in many places. There were tape-recorded comments from important scientists and doctors that gave, in nugget form, the observation and study of years of research. Raymond Massey dramatically and graphically wove it all together.

Interest in the show grew a little slowly, but mounted sharply halfway as it got into the story of the successful fight against pernicious anemia. Dr. William Murphy, Nobel prizewinner, discussed liver therapy against anemia. Dr. Robert Harris discussed food habits as a matter of culture. Dr. R. S. Goodhart warned of the importance of hidden hunger. Dr. Frederick J. Stare stated that there still were foods that contained nutriants not yet discovered, and advised that variety in food consumption was still the best diet. Overweight was stressed as the greatest hazard of Americans, while it was also pointed out that in America hidden hunger also shows its face, in anemia, partly of nutritious origin.

Music background to the program was a little theatrical and annoying, offsetting the simplicity of the various scientists' statements about their studies and discoveries.

Programs for subsequent weeks will be "The Search" (Feb. 2), story of the fight against cancer; "The Trouble Shooters" (9), story of the birth and development of cortisone; "Only One to a Customer" (16), story of the fight against heart disease; and "Pfc. Bill Smith—Man Alive" (23), story of life-saving on the Korean battlefront.

BREAKFAST WITH BOB
With Bob DeHaven, Sally Foster, Burt Hanson, Wally Olson orch
Producers: Earle Steele, Ed Viehman
Director: Bob McKinsey
15 Mins.; Mon.-thru-Fri., 8:45 a.m.
OCCIDENT FLOUR CAKE MIX
WCCO, Minneapolis

This early morning show providing a pleasing melange of music, song, weather information and chatter has the casual manner, informality and unpretentiousness that have helped lift the Arthur Godfrey sessions to such great popularity heights. Given a distinctive character by one of WCCO's ace staffer's engaging air personality, it, too, has amassed a considerable listening audience. The personality is genial Bob DeHaven who emcees the proceedings, unloosens some witty sallies and engages in badinage with other cast members in a way that makes for likable intimacy and propels a commendable spirit of friendliness.

In between the trivial but down-to-earth conversations, firstrate chirpers Sally Foster and Burt Hanson, individually and in duet, beguile the ears with their vocalizing and the Wally Olson orchestra also contributes to the pleasure with its instrumental performance. Show caught included such enjoyable pop songs as "Sunny Side of the Street," "Be Mine Tonight" and "Cry." Even the commercials, handled by DeHaven in masterly fashion and containing baking suggestions for the housewives who necessarily must comprise a large share of the audience for any early morning show, were an asset. All of the program's participants give the impression of being in good humor and having a good time, even at such a comparatively young time of day, and this undoubtedly helps to get them into listeners' good graces. DeHaven frequently kids his compatriots and they kid right back.

There's a cash prize contest in connection with the show, listeners being invited to send in Occiden Flour jingles. The Olsen orchestra, Hanson and Miss Foster, like DeHaven, are WCCO staffers. Rees.

THE REDHEAD
With Mary McCarty, Dick Van Patten, Vinton Hayworth, others
Producer: Leonard Blair
Director: Martin Andrews
Writer: Rik Vollaerts
30 Mins.; Thurs., 8 p.m.
Sustaining

"The Redhead" is one of the few new situation comedy series to bow in on radio this year. It was originally intended as a starring vehicle for Janis Paige (currently in the Broadway click, "Remains to Be Seen") but she turned it down over reported disapproval of the content. That paved the way for Mary McCarty, heretofore a musical-comedienne, to assume her first dramatic role in radio. Judging from the preem (24), Miss McCarty might have been wiser to follow Miss Paige's example.

Script, penned by Rik Vollaerts, presented Miss McCarty in the title role as a brash, wise-cracking young gal from a small Nebraska town out to make her fame and fortune as a N. Y. model. Naturally, although she's always in there fastest with a gag line, she's got a heart of gold. But, on the initialer, the script did nothing to build her or any other member of the cast into a sympathetic character. It seemed, in fact, as though Vollaerts hasn't quite decided yet what tack he wants the show to follow and, as a result, the half-hour came off as rather pointless.

Miss McCarty tried hard but she deserved something better. Under the heavy-handed direction of Martin Andrews, she talked too much and too fast—also too loud. She's supposed to sing on the show only where the music can be integrated, so on the preem stanza, she thrushed a couple of bars of "Stormy Weather" while supposedly taking a shower. Vinton Hayworth, a vet radio-TV character actor, topped the supporting cast as the volatile manager of a department store's dress department, for whom Miss McCarty modeled. Dick Van Patten was okay as her love interest. Most of the humor on the show, incidentally, was either off the cob or blue.

Production was professional, indicating the program is not a low-budgeter. But it's going to require sharper scripting and direction before it will lure either a sponsor or an audience. Stal.

Radio Follow-Up

"Mr. Chameleon," which has been a long-standing feature on CBS Radio, most recently as a Sunday night sustainer, preemed under the new sponsorship aegis of General Foods Thursday night (24). Stanza, titled "The Masquerade Ball Murder Case," labored under some of the tritest scripting, acting and direction that has befallen one of these radio whodunits in many a moon. But the show has been luring a sizable audience with just such scripting, acting and direction since it's been on the air. If that's what the listeners want, far be it from CBS to deny them.

Story was penned by Lawrence Klee, who does a much better job on CBS-TV's "Man Against Crime" each Friday night. With an ending that was telegraphed virtually at the preceding station-break, it told an involved and complicated mystery of a young actress killed by mistake at a costume ball since she was wearing the same costume as her hostess, who was really the intended victim. "Mr. Chameleon," the homicide bureau's "Man of 1,000 disguises," assumed the role of a jeweler after he had ascertained all the facts to unmask the criminal as both a jewel-thief and a murderer. In so doing, he pointed up one of the beauties of radio—to change his character on AM, all he had to do was change his voice. It was never explained how this disguised him from the other characters on the show.

Cast, under the heavy direction of Henry Howard, plodded through their roles. Karl Swenson, in the title part, bore some overtones of Ronald Colman in his voice. Frank Butler, as "Detective Dave Arnold" (anytime someone referred to him on the show, it was with his full title), topped an okay supporting cast, which comprised Toni Darnay, Ann Seymour, Horace Braham, Mary Orr and Richard Newton. Series, incidentally, is packaged by Frank and Anne Hummert and is one of those recently gained by CBS via its "merger" with Air Features.

GF commercials were standard for the course, but were spaced too closely together for comfort.

NBC execs, on the basis of initial ratings. According to a diary recall survey undertaken for the web by American Research Bureau, the show had a cumulative rating during its first week on the air (Jan. 14-18) of 18.0. That, according to NBC, outranks 16 other daytime TV shows.

Rating figure represents any person watching the show or any portion of it during that week. According to ARB, the program drew a cumulative audience rating of 14.3 for the 7 to 8 a. m. period, and 16.2 for the 8 to 9 period, or 18.0 for the two-hour stretch. That, in turn, represents a total of 3,850,000 viewers who watched some part of the show at least once during the week. Curiosity factor, of course, enters into the rating pull.

In a further breakdown of its results, ARB reported that the first hour's 14.3 represented 1,450,000 homes, while the second hour's 16.2 rating represented 1,640,000 homes. Total cumulative number of homes from 7 to 9 o'clock was 1,830,000.

Web will also have coincidental phone call rating results available by the end of this week. Calls are being placed only during the second hour of the show, since the rating services refused to chance phoning anyone on their lists prior to 8 a. m.

Tele Follow-Up Comment

Sealtest's "Big Top" had its first birthday Saturday (26) and did it up with typical fanfare in its noon-time hour-long niche over CBS-TV. Program originates from WCAU-TV in Philly (transmitted out of nearby Camden, N. J.) and, while aimed at the moppet trade, plays in the tradition which gives it appeal for "children of all ages" as the saying goes.

"Big Top" presents more and generally better novelty acts than any block in teevee. With one whole year under its belt, it can easily go on forever with that kind of display. That's natural because there is no dependency on spoken material; and the format, being more or less orthodox circus tailored for camera catching and not merely a show that the medium has to adapt itself to, its own best testimonial.

Last Saturday's teeoff after parade and hoopla was Janet's dogs and ponies, a good turn, with some of the canines cutting up as acros. But that was the extent of animal offerings in the 60-minute frame. It was a display that begged to be put on somewhere in the middle, thus providing a change of pace. Even so, the small-fry audience whooped it up for this and the other performers all the way through.

After that came an interesting succession of ground and aerial stanzas in which even the commercials for Sealtest products were rigged to circus stuff. The Don Wallys, a neat hand to hand and foot perch duo, were followed by the Sils Sisters working on the Spanish web in postures, pullups, one-foot hangs, upside-downery gymnastics and a fine marching whirlaway finale. Next in the processional was the Paris Trio, consisting of two boys and a girl operating with salvo effect on a trampoline.

Linda & Constant, a mixed pair in a repertoire of balancing and tumbling tricks, clicked with a stint on a shoulder perch held by male. Closing act was a real sizzler, the Six Tokayers in fast teeterboard exercises which included a mid-air triple by one of the sextet to the proverbial high chair.

In this and the other aerial performances the cameramen seemed to be at home, working in some good closeups as well as effective medium perspectives that quite a few major variety shows have trouble with regularly when casing circus acts on and off the ground. About midway, the large Quaker City String Band, part of the w.k. Philadelphia Mummers, got in a couple of numbers ending in a razzle-dazzle march in the ring.

Functioning as ringmaster for "Big Top" is Jack Sterling. Although his accoutrements and voice are in circus character, he really works in comparative low key, is as unobtrusive as necessary and is in there pitching—off-screen and on—to intro the acts and to put in a word here and there in pinpointing top tricks for viewers. Clicko production all around.

Jimmy Durante's video splash with Mickey Rooney, more than ever, proves that Durante is a lady's man. He, seems to do so much better with femme type performers, especially when their last names start with the letter "T" (Traubel, Truman, Tucker).

The Schnoz didn't measure up to the usual standards with the Sat. (26) session on NBC-TV. The usual Durantesque flavor was missing, but it's evident to viewers that a fair Durante divertissement is worthy entertainment.

Rooney tried hard to register. He did a bit of everything proving he's versatile entertainer, but his solo material didn't hit too well. Rooney was punching, he tried valiantly, and under other circumstances, might have made a deep audience dent in his video debut.

The inevitable nitery scene provided the highspot of the show. Durante and Eddie Jackson hit it with their usual stride. Bob Hope made a brief appearance. Impact of his surprise entry made any material that he offered anti-climactic.

Broadway's rekindled interest in Eugene O'Neill finds TV tagging along. With "Anna Christie" and "Desire Under the Elms" revived on the stem after an absence of more than a generation, "Celanese Theatre" turned to the former last Wednesday (23) as its fortnightly contribution over ABC-TV. It marked the series' second essayship of an O'Neill play; last October it led off with "Ah, Wilderness!"

A shade more important than the unfolding itself was the decision by producer-director Alex Segal and exec producer A. Burke Crotty to exhume "Christie" for TViewers. There is nothing in this hard-hitting drama to stir the interest of anyone below the upper teenage brackets. There is little or no designed humor in it. The plain fact is that there was precious little in it for the Celanese staff but a letter of commendation—a "well done" and "beyond the call of duty" citation.

The Norman Lessing adaptation of a trio in conflict among themselves and with the basic forces of nature—barge captain Chris Christopherson; his daughter, the prostitute Anna, and her bold and violent lover, the sailor Mat Burke—was faithful in spirit and mostly in letter to the original. The old TV bogey of trying to beat the rap on condensing a full-blown legiter to an hour (less the commercials) was not as successful.

For instance, between the opening scene in a New York waterfront saloon and the barge at anchor in the outer harbor of Provincetown, Mass., there is a 10-day gap. In that period, Anna, portrayed by June Havoc, reacted to her new-found life on the sea with her erstwhile errant father by undergoing moral rejuvenation. The transition was weakly bridged in the face of every possible physical advantage, including decor and the fog to go with it. The whole play depends for its big point on this moral renascence. Nonetheless, the cast managed to overcome this pre-midway obstacle by a lively rendering of the O'Neill lines, and enactment of closeup action.

Miss Havoc, displayed competence in an ultra-serious role. John Qualen, as her father, with his incessant "dat ole davil sea," was effectively restrained. Richard Burton, as Anna's bombastic but simple, honest stoker-man intent on marrying her despite her past, was as dynamic as Dr. O'Neill ordered. Doris Rich did a neat job as Marthy, Chris' mistress.

All the technical aspects of the 30-year-old work were of first-rate calibre.

Jack Benny devoted most of his third CBS-TV show of the season Sunday night (27) to a sketch, and it emerged as one of his better TV programs to date. With Barbara Stanwyck, in her video debut, and Ray Noble on hand to assist him, Benny scored solidly in a funny lampoon of Patrick Hamilton's "Gaslight." Sketch was replete not only with bright lines and dialog but with a number of visual gags, none of which was overdone. And, while the overall effect was slapstick, the trio underplayed the burlesque sufficiently to provide maximum impact.

Benny, of course, played the infamous husband, trying to drive his wife mad in order to get at the jewels he had secreted during a previous marriage in an upstairs room. Dressed in a bowler, long sideburns, etc., he deadpanned the role neatly, evidencing once more his terrif sense of timing to milk each line. Miss Stanwyck, as the wife, might have been essaying a straight melodramatic role, which contrasted excellently with the zany dialog. Noble played the Scotland Yard man who captured the husband, and he too entered into the spirit of the thing.

Benny opened the show with his usual socko monologging, with Noble coming on to register at the piano with a medley of some of the tunes he's composed. Don Wilson was also in for a short bit, to team with Benny in a funny Lucky Strike plug. That commercial, incidentally, was much easier to take than the opening blurb, in which Dorothy Collins again gave out that "sweeping away all claims" routine. Luckies has already worked the plug to death, and it's about time the firm embarked on a new sales pitch.

Ed Sullivan, prior to his "Toast of the Town" via CBS-TV Sunday night (27), ballyhooed that the show would be devoted to the "Ted Lewis Story." But, as the show came off, it was a straight vaudeo presentation, in which Lewis held down the final 15 minutes with a cavalcade of some of the tunes he's helped popularize down through the years with his unique style of selling. Although that style might be considered schmaltzy in comparison with modern-day trends, it's still sock showmanship and Lewis registered all the way with his "Is Everybody Happy?" routine. Tops on the list, of course, was his "Me and My Shadow," but he scored with them all, aided by the show's regular six-girl line miming his

MEET CORLISS ARCHER

With Lugene Sanders, Irene Tedrow, Bobby Ellis, Fred Shields, Lois Corbet, Ken Christy, Gloria McMillan, others
Writer: Jerry Adelman
Producer: Helen Mack
Director: John Claar
30 Mins.; Sat., 6:30 p.m.
Sustaining
CBS-TV, from Hollywood

"Meet Corliss Archer," which preemed on CBS last season as a replacement for the Alan Young show, returned to the net Saturday (26) with a brand of comedy that adds up to a surefire early evening entry. It will have scant difficulty in stimulating the risibilities of either teenage or adult audiences.

Based upon characters created by F. Hugh Herbert, the Jerry Adelman script nicely builds a series of humorous situations in the household of the Archers, who could be called a "typical American family" without fear of inaccuracy. Hollywood originated show leaped from the opening barrier as a mirth-crammed session.

Story-line for the initialer revolved around convalescent Mother Archer, just returned from a hospital; daughter Corliss and boy friend Dexter, who cut up in bonafide teen-age fashion; the well-meaning but interfering maternal and paternal grandmothers, the harried Father Archer and a distraught cook, among other characters.

Action came off in a sprucely decored living room set and a lengthy cast made the most of Adelman's lines. Lugene Sanders is pertly winsome in the title role, Irene Tedrow and Fred Shields are well cast as the parents and Bobby Ellis scores handily as the love-sick boy friend. Other players lend good support under John Claar's breezy direction. This James L. Saphier package should have little trouble in snaring a bankroller. Gilb.

BOUQUETS AND BONUSES

With Steve Douglas, Betty Madigan, Georgia Reed, Nelson Baker, Ray Girard Producer: Nelson Baker
Director: Paul Kane
Writers: Nelson Baker, T. Hamlin Reese, Jr.
30 Mins.; Sun., 4 p.m.
ALLIED FLORISTS ASSN. OF BALTO.
WAAM, Baltimore
(St. Georges & Keyes)

This is a smartly devised quiz show with extra trimmings by way of interpolated vocals and dramatized commercials pointing the importance of flowers in the business of everyday living. Backgrounds are elaborately floral and the queries along with musical backgrounding and highlights, all touch on the pretty things that provide the bankroll for the doings.

Steve Douglas is a suave and boutonniered inquisitor and the guests who are invited from the audience are supplied with cash to put in a bowl when they fluff or add to when they guess right. A final jackpot twister takes all. Pace changes smartly with good vocals by Betty Madigan and some attempt at humor is made in the skits providing the commercials which are enacted by Nelson Baker and Georgia Reed. Latter are a bit contrived but the overall effect is pleasant and completely professional from the teeoff. Burm.

TIME FOR BEANY

With Daws Butler, Stan Freberg
Producer-Director: Bob Clampett
Writers: Lloyd Turner, Gordon Mintner
15 Mins., Mon.-thru-Sat., 5:30 p.m.
FLAMINGO ORANGE JUICE
WCBS-TV, New York

"Time for Beany," a Coast originated show which has been a thrice-weekly tenant on WOR, N. Y., until recently, has moved on to CBS-TV where it goes six times a week. Indications point to the fact that there's enough material in this kinnied series to warrant the additional time. There's a nice sense of humor running throughout the program. Like most puppet shows, lot of it seems to be for adult consumption. Some of the gab seems to be too hep for the kids. The time slot (5:30) will militate against a grown-up set of viewers. Show originates on KTLA, Hollywood.

"Beany" looms like an imaginative bit of finger-manipulation. The characters are fancifully contrived and have some alliterative names such as Cecil, the singing seasick sea-serpent; Caboose Goose and others in that category. There's a thead of a plot running through the story, although each episode seems to be able to stand on its own. Sets are good and the voices by Daws Butler and Stan Freberg give the dolls a deal of character. Jose.

THE CONTINENTAL

With Renzo Cesana; Ivan Ditmars, music
Producer-writer: Cesana
Director: Ed Leftwich
15 Mins.; Tues., Thurs., 11:15 p.m.
CAMEO HOSIERY
CBS-TV, from N. Y.
(Hirshon-Garfield)

In any competition for the most needless program on television, this one would rate high. Obviously patterned as a TV counterpart of radio's widely-publicized "Lonesome Gal," who pitches her dulcet-toned late-night woo to the male listener, this new Tuesday night (11:15-11:30) CBS-TV quarter-hour stanza joins the "libido sweepstakes" in reverse, designed to send the frustrated femme viewers shuffling off to bed with romantic illusions.

It's called "The Continental" and it's a one-man show starring Renzo Cesana, whose business it is to make like Carl Brisson, Ezio Pinza and Charles Boyer all rolled into one. It's more snobbish and silly than sexy, with its visualization of the TV Romeo "at home" with an imaginary dame as he hands her 15-minutes (with time out for Cameo hosiery commercials) of soft-soap fluff. His supposedly old-world flavored verbal romantics are being tossed at the off-camera "babe" as he navigates the swank upholstered "den," albeit designed to create the illusion that the "babe" in question is the home viewer.

He rhapsodizes on the virtues of "champagne that doesn't tickle the nose"; on the wondrous marvels of girl's smile, especially late at night when a guy's making a play for her; and isn't beneath knocking off a couple commercials on his own as he extolls the "babe" in the best traditions of European-accented romanticism on the virtues of Cameo stockings and what it does to the legs.

If one stays with it long enough, one can get the "Late Show" feature pix attraction. Rose.

ELECTRIC THEATRE

With Lawrence Verdier, Thomas Yager, Shelda Sklar, Jean E. Reid, Christime Harrington, William C. Hornhart
Director: Peter Strand
Producer: William Merrill
Adaptor: William Merrill
30 Mins.; Wed., 7 p.m.
DETROIT EDISON CO.
WXYZ-TV, Detroit

This third in a series of "live" presentations of the "Electric Theatre," which features films the other three weeks of the month, did not live up to its predecessors.

The play enacted by local talent was Percival Wilde's "Once to Every Man," adapted for television by William Merrill whose strawhat "Will-O-Way Playhouse" has been a summer theatrical favorite in the Detroit area several seasons.

The main criticism involves the stilted performance of Lawrence J. Verdier as Paul Strickland, the investment broker who was going to head for the hinterlands with his customers' money until smitten by his conscience. Verdier, whose face was before the cameras almost the entitre 30 minutes, was excessively stiff, failing to catch the harried, runaway look of a crook ready to scoot with $300,000.

The other performers were right for their parts but, since Verdier dominated every scene, their efforts were not enough to lift the production out of its straightjacket.

Film clips were nicely integrated into the studio scenes and the direction and camera-work were excellent. Tew.

WORLD ADVENTURE SERIES

With George Pierrot
30 Mins., Sun., 1 p.m.
EARL B. BRINK
WXYZ-TV, Detroit

This is rich escapist fare for an idle Sunday afternoon. One week you're in Alaska, the next in Sweden, next in Brazil, etc. All the pix are topnotch, being taken from films on the travelog circuit, and which will be shown that same afternoon in their entirety at the Detroit Institute of Arts.

The program easily could become a come-on for the Institute show and, to a certain extent, it is, of course. But George F. Pierrot, managing director of the series, has taken care not to let the TV show become a trailer. By judicious cutting and selection, the film for the TV show is complete and satisfying.

During the showing of the film, Pierrot questions the photographer about the scenes, his problem getting the shot, conditions he found interesting in the foreign land, etc. Pierrot's adroit questioning provides interesting and, at the same time, informal commentary.

In the show caught, the film was titled "Alaska's Big Gai ." and the photographer was Cecil Rhode. Tew.

AMERICA'S TOWN MEETING

With George V. Denny, Jr., moderator; Sen. Owen Brewster, Sen. Wayne Morse, guests
Producers: William Traum, Elizabeth Colclough
Director: Robert Doyle
30 Mins.; Sun., 6:30 p.m.
REICHHOLD CHEMICALS
ABC-TV, from New York
(MacManus, John & Adams)

"America's Town Meeting," which has been on the air for some 17 years, has made the transition to tele, and at a time when interest in forum shows is specially high due to hot pro-and-con on foreign affairs and the upcoming Presidential election. In George V. Denny, Jr., "Meeting" has an apt moderator.

Kickoff show was on a political question: "Eisenhower or Taft—What Are Their Chances for '52?" Sen. Owen Brewster (Maine) was in there plugging for Taft and Sen. Wayne Morse (Oregon) was stumping for Ike. Give-and-take was interesting, since each solon quoted the other's past statements against his present views or his candidate's policies. In the main, Brewster hit at the general's lack of a specific domestic program and Morse rapped the Ohio senator's conservatism. They saw eye-to-eye in their denunciation of the Truman administration, which didn't live up to the Town Hall principle of providing a forum for widely diverging views. Denny added, however, the Democrats will get a chance on a future show.

Airer didn't open too smoothly, it seemed to take too long until the show got into the debate. However, the idea of filmed man-in-the-street opinions is good. Departure from the radio format, in which each side makes a formal statement of its views, in favor of ad lib argument makes for a more dramatic presentation. Questioning from the studio audience is also carried over from the AM edition, with 10 minutes allocated for the citizens' queries. On hand for the preem was Socialist Norman Thomas, a frequent guest on past Town meetings. There was a cute (but seemingly planted) bit when one spectator, asked whether he had something to say, quipped, "Me? I'm for Truman."

Show is sponsored by Reichhold Chemicals, which puts most of the major discussion series under the bankrolling of large industrial corporations (Bohn Aluminum has "American Forum" and Revere Copper backs "Meet the Press"). Commercials for Reichhold, at beginning and end, touted the firm's size, its global setup of plants and the theme that creative chemistry serves the nation. Ray Morgan, delivering the spiels, was somewhat stiff. Bril.

ST. PAUL WINTER CARNIVAL PARADE

With Charles McEwen, Daryl Laub
Producer: Sherman Headley
Director: McEwen
120 Mins., Sat. (26), 2 p.m.
SCHMIDT BREWING
WTCN-TV, Twin Cities

WTCN-TV did a highly meritorious camera and descriptive job in bringing to set-owners the huge, colorful daylight parade that got the annual St. Paul Winter Carnival, a frigid mardi gras, off to a brilliant start. Staffers Charles McEwen and Sherman Headley made their running commentary interesting and informative, emphasizing features which wouldn't register on home screens, and adding to viewers' enjoyment. Lensers caught many closeups of beautiful girls on floats and elsewhere and human interest shots among the crowds, despite the 15-above temperature. Interest was held the entire two hours and the time passed swiftly.

McEwen punctuated his descriptions with a recital of the Winter Carnival's legend and by introducing several of the St. Paulites who had played prominent parts in arranging the festival. The "City Beer" commercials, scattered through the telecast, were brief and not at all disturbing. Rees.

MOTOR CITY FIGHTS

With Fred Wolf
60 Mins., Sat., 8:30 p.m.
PFEIFFER BEER
WXYZ-TV, Detroit

The professional bouts on "Motor City Fights" are staged expressly for television. No attempt is made to get a ringside audience at the small Motor City Gym, but since the series started the gym's 400-seats have been filled. Young and promising boxers in Detroit and nearby states are featured in the bouts. While not polished boxers, they work at their work hard, providing plenty of action, which sometimes is lacking in nationally televised fights.

Camera work is especially good. Because of the small gym, the

Bannister Unfolds His 'Fight-Back' Formula to Keep Radio Abreast TV

Formula for running radio and television stations side-by-side, with each yielding equal profits, was unfolded at the N. Y. Radio Executives Club last week by WWJ and WWJ-TV (Detroit) topper Harry Bannister.

Bannister, who said that the AM operation finished 1951 with billings only 20% below '50, after they had been off as much as 40% in some months of the year, revealed his "fight-back" pattern.

(1) For the first time in 30 years the AM outlet's nighttime rates were cut by 20%, "stopping the cataclysmic decline in billings." He added that, while the webs and some cities had previously priced radio too low, Detroit outlets had earned realistic rates. Before the recent rate-slashings, he said, key outlets in Philly (a bigger market than Detroit) had been charging only $500-$600 per hour vs. $800-$1,000 charged by Detroit's cream stations.

(2 Surveys were made of the auto city's AM circulation, including factory and out-of-home audiences and listening in tele homes.

(3) Stress was placed on personalities, and program ratings were de-emphasized. Bannister blasted the nose-counters, saying they had "chained and enslaved the industry to sets of figures that can't show radio's real circulation."

(4) Block programming was developed, with sequences of news, music and dramatic stanzas.

(5) Audience composition was studied, for income, age levels, family size, purchasing power, etc., revealing a healthy cost-per-thousand situation.

(6) Segments were opened in the early morning and evening for the small bankroller.

(7) The outlet joined other Detroit stations to promote radio listening and advertising under the slogan, "Wherever you go—there's radio."

Bannister said his formula did not include cheapening the station or knocking out public service. An advertisement is more potent in a good framework, he stressed. He said that the radio operation had inked a lot of new business in January and had renewed every contract as it expired.

The TV threat is strong, Bannister said, because at the end of '51 Detroit's three tele stations together were grossing $700,000 a month, or $8,000,000 a year. "You can't take that much coin out of a market without consequences to other markets," Bannister said. However, he declared, he's convinced AM will continue healthy if it learns to fight back.

'This Week in Texas' Gets Regional TV Web; Set Own Camera Crews

Fort Worth, Jan. 29.

"This Week in Texas," a new television series, is scheduled to make its bow under the sponsorship of the Humble Oil & Refining Co., on Feb. 4. Series will be telecast over WBAP-TV here; WOAO-TV, San Antonio; WFAA-TV, Dallas, and KPRC-TV, Houston.

Special events, sports, human interest stories and features of special interest to women will make up the newsreel edited by the WBAP-TV staff.

Newsreel men are to be stationed by Humble to gather material in Dallas here, Austin, San Antonio and Houston. All of it will be flown into the WBAP-TV studios for editing and processing.

The series is the first TV series on a year-round basis by Humble.

Renew Philly 'Handy Man'

Philadelphia, Jan. 29.

One of the oldest continuously sponsored TV programs, "The Gimbel Handy Man," WPTZ, has renewed its contract to continue telecasts in the 7:15-7:30 p.m. Friday slot.

The new contract will take the show into its sixth consecutive year of televising over WPTZ. Jack Creamer, Gimbels "Handy Man," has missed only one program during that period.

Dallas Court Clears Up Bakers' Hopalong Hassle

Dallas, Jan. 29.

A dispute over which baking firm had the right to advertise through use of Hopalong Cassidy pictures, was won by the Oak Cliff Baking Co., bakers of Holsum and Butter Krust Bread. The bakers of Wonder Bread were ordered to take Hopalong's pix off all their bread displays and trucks wherever it conflicted with the rival.

The Oak Cliff bakers first contracted to use the cowboy star's pix on their bread.

How 'Comm'l' Are Educators in TV?

Washington, Jan. 29.

Fears by Illinois broadcasters that educators are trying to establish class of "semi-commercial" TV stations were held to be groundless last week by the Joint Committee on Educational Television.

In a brief filed with the Federal Communications Commission, JCET, through its Washington counsel, Seymour Krieger, said that the commercial boys are laboring under misconceptions when they say that the educators want to sell time. What the educators propose, JCET declares, is to make available in major educational centers without commercial TV service certain public service sponsored programs provided by the nets.

"It would be unthinkable," said JCET, "for a noncommercial educational TV station to be classified as a commercial station for any purpose simply because it broadcast programs of the conventions of the Democratic Party and Republican Party which are scheduled this summer and which this year happen to be sponsored by Westinghouse and Philco. It would also be unthinkable for the Commission to prohibit the only station in a community which happened to be an educational, noncommercial TV station from telecasting the proceedings of those two conventions which are of such vital importance to all the American people simply because this year the two networks were successful in securing sponsors for these programs."

JCET points out there are 30 major educational centers now without TV where the Commission plans to assign educational channels. Its desire to carry "a full TV program service" in these cities, it asserts, is only for the interim period in which commercial service is not yet available.

Don McNeill's Eight-City SRO on In-Person Junket

Chicago, Jan. 29.

If further evidence is needed that radio still is a dominant force, particularly in the hinterlands, it was provided by the two-week junket Don McNeill and his ABC "Breakfast Club" crew completed last week through the south. During the road stint over 32,000 persons jammed the 10 broadcasts the "Clubbers" aired in eight cities.

Playing to capacity crowds everywhere they stopped, it's estimated the number of ticket requests that had to be refused because of lack of seating ran into the hundreds of thousands. In Miami, where the show played for three days, Owen Uridge, manager of WQAM, reported nearly 100,000 requests. At St. Petersburg, where WSUN originated the broadcast, the show was piped to a baseball field where 7,000 fans filled the park. The park hookup was arranged after some 25,000 ticket requests came in.

The response was particularly gratifying to McNeill after his ill-fated television experience. Toastmaster and his wife are vacationing this week in Florida with Peter Donald subbing on the cross-the-board early morning show bankrolled by General Foods, Swift and Philco.

CBS' Dual Cincy Spread

Cincinnati, Jan. 29.

WCPO-TV, linked with both ABC-TV and DuMont, has also tied in with CBS-TV by carrying its "Star of the Family" show every other Sunday at 10:30 p. m. The Scripps-Howard station's arrangement with CBS-TV is by approval of WKRC-TV, the web's Cincy affiliate, which is projecting CBS-TV's "What's My Line" opposite "Star of the Family."

Dry Forces Prep For Hearings On AM-TV Liquor Ads

Washington, Jan. 29.

Dry forces, led by the Methodist Board of Temperance, are expected to have a long lineup of witnesses on hand to testify tomorrow (Wed.) before the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce on the Johnson-Case bill to prohibit liquor advertising radio or television. Hearings on the measure may last three to four days.

Broadcasters will probably oppose the measure on ground of discrimination, since no other media besides radio and TV are covered. National Assn. of Radio and TV Broadcasters has been sturying the question and planned to file a statement of its position with the Committee.

Principal opposition is expected from the distillers who contend the legislation is unnecessary since liquor industry is against advertising over broadcast media for public policy reasons. Wine and beer industries may also go to bat against the measure, fearing it may be a foot in the door to broad legislation against all alcoholic beverages, efforts at which were defeated in previous sessions of Congress.

The bill, as introduced by Committee Chairman Edwin C. Johnson (D-Colo.) and Francis Case (R-S.D.) empowers the Federal Communications Commission to revoke the license of any broadcast station which wilfully violates the act. It also empowers the Secretary of the Treasury to revoke permits of distillers licensed under the Federal Alcohol Administration Act.

Violators are further punished by fines of up to $1,000 or up to one year in prison or both.

RCA's Elliott Tells How Improved TV Receivers Penetrate 'Dust Bowls'

Philadelphia, Jan. 29.

Despite the freeze on new stations, television continues to expand and extend its areas of coverage through the medium of improved receivers, J. B. Elliott, vice president in charge of RCA Victor consumer products, told members of the Association Merchandising Corp. in convention here at the Benjamin Franklin Hotel.

"With the broadcasters frozen in their tracks, the set manufacturers have taken over," Elliott stated. "We are expanding television's service area, not by installing more transmitters but by manufacturing better receivers. Some of the sets on the market today can bring in quality reception in fringe areas that have always been considered television 'dust bowls.'"

Representatives of leading department stores throughout the United States attended the meeting and were told by Elliott that the TV shoppers were going to become "increasingly more discriminating."

"Development of these powerful and more sensitive receivers is going to have a profound effect on TV marketing and advertising," Elliott declared. "At one time the television shopper was satisfied just to get a picture. Today, most customers have learned there are wide qualitative differences among different brands of receivers—and they're out to get the best."

Because of this development, RCA Victor is launching next month a comprehensive and intensive sales training program. Through its distributors, Victor will conduct sales clinics for all dealers and their salesmen, Elliott said.

'Today's' Face Reddish As Hungry Camera Picks Up Some Unexpected Items

"Today," Dave Garroway's two-hour morning potpourri of news, last week ran into some of the troubles that industryites were expecting to cause red faces on the NBC-TV show.

At one point the camera, which lenses crowds outside the RCA communications centre, picked up an NBC producer oblivious of the camera and studiously poring over a newspaper.

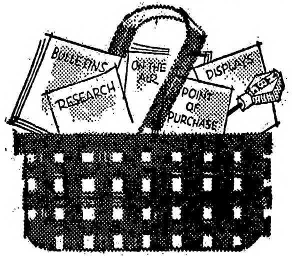
In addition to plugging a rival printed medium, the show gave a competing radio stanza—and on ABC at that—an unwitting boost. When the camera was trained on passersby, two ABC engineers, Bill Steadman and Tom Shea, held up a placard reading, "Listen to Herb Sheldon Mornings on WJZ Radio, 6:30-8:15 a.m." Camera quickly panned away, but the cuffo commercial had already been caught.

Sheldon viewed the incident on monitors in NBC-TV's master control.

Salt Lake City—KSL-TV kicked off a new series on alcoholism last Sunday (27), arranged by station's John Lugt with Alcoholics Anonymous, Salt Lake Committee on Alcoholism and Utah State Board on Alcoholism cooperating. Show, aired Sundays at 1 p.m., is a panel setup, with former alcoholics joining committee and board members in discussing ways of beating the problem.

Now for the first time in Network Radio..

NBC OFFERS COMPLETE NATIONAL MERCHANDISING



Until now no radio network has ever offered advertisers a thorough, realistic service for merchandising their products on a national scale.

Now NBC takes the lead in offering not only the first national merchandising service in network radio, but also the finest, most complete merchandising facilities to be furnished by any advertising medium.

HERE'S WHAT YOU CAN EXPECT:

1 NBC's field experts will train advertisers' sales and distribution personnel in getting dealer support, building displays; make demonstration calls with salesmen on key accounts; make presentations at sales meetings; maintain close liaison with key wholesalers and retail groups in their areas.

2 The NBC Merchandising Plan is approved unanimously by the NBC affiliated stations. Accordingly, the network field experts are working in cooperation with our stations, establishing a chain of merchandising services which should deliver for our advertisers the greatest possible point-of-sale impact.

3 Network on-the-air merchandising programs will be developed which will permit dealer tie-ins for maximum local impact. One series, "Market Basket," is now in preparation for food store advertisers.

4 Point-of-purchase material especially produced for the needs of retailers will be available to NBC advertisers at cost. This material will be designed to take advantage of network and local station identification.

5 All-important research services will be offered with emphasis on attitude surveys, distribution checks, test stores, consumer panel.

6 Bulletins for mailing to retailers will be prepared and supplied NBC stations on a monthly basis.

This is but a partial list of the services planned by NBC's Merchandising Department. Other activities in the display and national trade fields will be presented at a later date.

WHEN CAN YOU EXPECT THESE SERVICES?

- The NBC Merchandising Plan has been in formation since last July under the direction of Mr. Fred N. Dodge, formerly Merchandising Director of "The American Weekly." The nation-wide field offices will be functioning by February 15.

Now is the time to plan your participation. The Merchandising Department is available now for consultation on your particular needs.

In the year of hard selling to come, there will be no better sales combination than the NBC Radio Network with NBC Merchandising. And of all the networks only NBC Radio offers a workable, efficient merchandising service.

head up operations. Others of a like calibre are being interviewed for other berths.

To Poole, KBIG will not be a rich man's plaything. He's got a lot more where the 300G came from, but he's in radio to make money and confidently expects to write off his early losses in six months. He believes that daytime radio (his is a dawn-to-dusk station) offers better prospects of gainful enterprise than nighttime television. Which is why he's using TV-earned coin to finance his AM operation.

Shot-in-the-Arm

How did he make the killing in television? "The family had money," he says, " I went out and bought television stocks right after the war. Shares were depressed at that time, but I had faith in their comeback, and sure enough, within a couple of years I trebled my money. I think radio has a lot of good years left, and that's why I'm in it."

It's the shot-in-the-arm that Coast radio has needed, and the others are beginning to share his enthusiasm. In the early days of radio one of the small indies erected a transmitter on Catalina Island, 20 miles off the mainland. No one else went there, so it was moved back to L. A. KBIG's antenna is now rising out in mid-ocean, and Poole has his reasons that seem technically sound. He never forgets his engineering avocation, and puts it to work like his other hobbies. Electronically, he's on a track that's clear and fast. What he wants to do is make 10,000 watts do the work of 50,000. It can be done, engineers agree.

Knowing enough about engineering to recognize that salt water is a perfect conductor of radio waves, he chose Catalina as the site of his transmitter. Transmission from the Hollywood studio reaches Catalina by relay from a radiation center atop Mt. Wilson. To make the signal all the stronger, it is beamed directionally to the mainland. Poole allows that Santa Barbara, nearly 100 miles to the north of L. A., will get as strong a signal as issues from any station in L. A.

Poole is a young man to be watched, and even if he isn't a huge success against all odds, his presence will be felt by the other station operators. He'll step up the slowing pace, and that's what home radio has needed since television cast its frightful shadow over this placid landscape.

TV Freeze Lift

equipment, was issued without Wilson's "knowledge or consent."

Quoting VARIETY's story of the Oct. 25 meeting in Washington between Wilson and the TV industry, Johnson said it was apparent that Chromatic Television Labs (Par. 50% subsidiary) or anyone else "could go ahead and manufacture color equipment so long as additional materials, other than those duly allocated, were not required." The Senator added he was in complete agreement with that position.

"However," Johnson continued, "I hope you appreciate my consternation and surprise when, after this understanding, the NPA issued an order prohibiting the production of color or attachments designed to receive, permit or facilitate the reception of color television. This order is just another unwarranted crippling blow aimed directly and specifically at color television. It is an attempt to regulate the end product. What difference is there to the defense effort, once you have made the allocation of the materials, as to whether or not the materials are used for black and white or color?"

Cleveland—WGAR renewals included three 52-week stints with Shell Oil signing again for the 15-minute Charles Day 6 p.m. Monday-thru-Friday newscast; Metropolitan Life taking Jim Martin on Monday-thru-Friday 8 a.m. newscast, and Mennen renewing on the Bill Mayer morning disk show.

Navy Vet May Only Get Rebuke for Illegal TV

Houston, Jan. 29.

Henry Menefee, a Navy vet, who helped build and operate an illegal TV outlet at Madisonville, may get only a reprimand from the FCC.

The TV outlet was built to pick up and rebroadcast programs of KPRC-TV. Persons connected with the outlet pointed out to the FCC examiners here that they thought they were rendering a community service. They were boosting the KPRC-TV signal so that viewers at Madisonville could enjoy TV programs.

George E. Sterling, FCC commissioner who was here for the investigation, pointed out that Menefee had a good record in the Navy and an outstanding reputation in his home town. The FCC first proposed to suspend Menefee's amateur radio license.

Radio Set Boom

it's possible that, if one member of the family were watching the video receiver in the living-room, another member of the family might be listening to a secondary radio set in another room.

Joint research committee pinned its total number of radio homes on the 1950 housing census, which showed that 95.6% of all U. S. homes had at least one radio. This, in turn, was applied to a Sales Management estimate of 44,737,900 homes. Estimate of 23,500,000 car radios is based on available surveys, which show that nearly 64% of the 37,000,000-plus cars on the road are now radio-equipped.

Committee this year also included for the first time a breakdown of the number of sets in institutions, college dormitories and armed forces barracks, which totaled 900,000. These sets, too, it was pointed out, represent a bonus for the advertiser, since they are not measured by the usual rating services. The 4,100,000 sets listed as being in "other places" include those in business establishments, offices, restaurants and public places.

Inside Stuff—Television

NBC-TV phoned execs of the rival DuMont web Monday night (28) to seek permission to use a clip from DuMont's "Pentagon-Washington" show for its "Today" program yesterday morning. DuMont show featured an interview with Sir Hubert Wilkins, explorer.

DuMont was willing to let NBC use a clip from the kine but requested that the NBC show credit DuMont. NBC turned down the request and did not use the clip. DuMont, incidentally, claims credit for having been on the air first with the "Today" title, having used it on a news show prior to the preem of the NBC early-bird series.

In the face of persistent beefs from agencies and sponsors about television's skyrocketing production costs, CBS-TV this week is pitching its revived "Mr. I. Magination" show on the basis that it costs no more this year than it did when Nestle's dropped it last season. Gross package price, exclusive of time, is $6,000, and the web insists the show has not been trimmed in production or quality.

Nestle's reportedly dropped the show last season because it felt the price at that time was too high for a program grooved mainly for kids. Pressure from the public and press was a factor in putting it back on the air.

Eugene S. Thomas, former TV operations manager for WOR-TV, N.Y., has been elected a veepee of George P. Hollingberry and will head up sales activities for the station rep's tele outlets.

Thomas was sales manager of WOR (AM) for 10 years, then became general manager of WOIC, the tele outlet WOR launched in Washington, D. C. When WOR sold that station, now WTOP-TV, Thomas returned to WOR-TV. He'll help Hollingberry clients with the TV applications and operations plans.

Television Workshop of N. Y. is opening courses in production for women, designed to train distaffers for program assistant posts.

Program otherwise had its bright spots and some that were not so bright. Nanci Crompton, working against an impressive-looking set, teed off the proceedings with her standard ballet spins, impressing with her speed and precision in variations on the same theme. Cameras cut expertly from her spins to Nelson Sanchez and his top-spinning routine, but his act turned out on the dull side. Lenses failed to capture much of his manipulation and, while he's good in what he does, he didn't do enough. Eddy Howard failed to impress with a visualization of his disclick, "Sin," and a new tune.

Best of the show, besides Lewis, was a short segment of Jan de Hartog's "Fourposter," played by Jessica Tandy and Hume Cronyn, who co-star in the current Broadway production. Duo displayed solid dramatics in the scene wherein the father discovers his children have become adults. Besides providing fine entertainment, the bit served as a socko trailer for the legit production. Bert Wheeler added whatever other comedy there was, teaming with Sullivan in a takeoff on an old burley skit.

NBC-TV's "Philco Playhouse" came up Sunday night (27) with one of the best shows it's done this season, an original by David Swift titled "Segment." Story of the efforts of a group of police, doctors, etc., trying to talk a temporarily demented man out of his threat to kill his wife in a locked hotel room, the play had considerable hitchcockian suspense and an imaginative use of new production techniques to keep viewers glued. It also had overtones both of 20th-Fox's recent "14 Hours" film and of "First Person Singular," a program produced almost six years ago by "Philco" producer Fred Coe, which has since become something of a video classic.

Swift's script left some loose ends dangling, such as why the wife, introduced as a powerful, domineering type, would remain cringing in a corner, instead of trying to fight back against her husband, especially when he had his back turned to her. But such aspects of the story were minor in the overall effect. Coe and director Delbert Mann matched Swift in their imaginative use of TV production techniques, particularly in the way they had an actual video camera operating from what was supposedly a building across the street from the hotel, so the cops could watch the man in his room. One shot, of the camera lens, a cop with binoculars and another with a telescopic-sighter rifle, all tracking the man in unison, was especially effective.

Cast, too, contributed heftily to the suspenseful presentation. Eileen Heckart, as the shrewish, nagging wife, copped the honors in a portrayal that probably had viewers wishing the husband would carry out his threat. Mercer McLeod registered solidly in the difficult role of the husband, and Deirdre Owens was good as their teenage daughter. Joseph Anthony also turned in a masterful performance as the shrewd but human police lieutenant. Story, incidentally, had a twist ending which, while it might have been telegraphed, was nonetheless effective.

uation last year, when Anchor-Hocking dropped its "Broadway Open House," which had been networked cross-the-board from 11 p. m. to midnight. NBC has wanted that hour back repeatedly, but the local stations refuse to give it up. Affiliates prefer to program the time on their own, since by selling it locally, they can get their full card rates instead of the percentage they would derive from taking a network show.

NBC execs, meanwhile, are anticipating some squawks on the demise of "Recital Hall," since the show had been hailed by some critics as a welcome addition to the meagre cultural fare presented on TV. But, just as occurred when it trimmed "Kukla, Fran & Ollie" from a half-hour to 15 minutes, with a resultant outcry from the press and public, the web will be forced to explain that such moves are controlled by the economics of the business.

D. C. Originations

TV shows, three of them news and comment.

ABC starts 14 regular radio shows a week, only six of them news, but has no network TV origination except for the Billy Graham revival meetings. The Mutual springboard here is WWDC, which puts out 18 radio shows over that network weekly, including 11 news and commentary type. WTTG, the DuMont video outlet here, goes in very heavily for local programming, but does manage to offer three Washington shows to its network weekly.

For the time being, at least, the coaxial cables are carrying all the news and commentary out of Washington that the traffic will bear, and nothing novel in a strictly entertainment way seems likely to come from D. C. in the near future. Hence, it is felt that video cannot call for more out of the town until conditions change.

Enterprises is a prime source of UTP product. The distrib is handling the selling of "Royal Playhouse" (subsequent run of previously titled "Fireside Theatre," dramatic series) which is being beamed in 34 TV cities. Also there's "Rebound," another BCE half-hour dramatic pic sold in 17 markets. "The Chimps," novelty quarter-hour reel, likewise is being sold by UTP.

A hot new property now being distributed is Walter Schwimmer's "Movie Quick Quiz," videoversion of his "Tello-Test" radio quizzer, which has been sold in 15 markets. The package was launched just a couple of weeks ago.

Another "best-seller is the half-hour "American Barn Dance" bundle produced by Kling Studios in Chi, which is now riding on 20 stations. Other Kling properties are "Paradox" and "File Facts," both five-minute quickies.

Marion Parsonnet's "Hollywood Off-Beat," starring Melvyn Douglas, has been set in 26 markets. The March of Time has the half-hour tele pix optioned in 17 cities to go with its "Crusade in the Pacific" documentary.

Other films in the UTP catalog are: Clayton Cousens' "Fashion Previews;" Joe McCaughtry's "Sleepy Joe," Stillfilm's "Justice In the Universe," and Telemount Pictures' "Cowboy G-Men." Of the latter series, seven half-hour segments are canned with the balance of the 26-pic package in production.

The organizational expansion of UTP itself, since it was launched in January, 1951, indicates the blossoming of vidpix biz within the past calendar. As the outfit was originally set up by Gerald King and Blink, prexy and veepee respectively of Standard Radio, the vidpix sales force was to be made up largely of Standard and Edward Petry station rep personnel. The Standard and Petry field crews are still used, but UTP has been forced to establish its own individual staff under sales chief Aaron Beckwith. During the past few weeks sales managers have been hired to work out of the Chi and Hollywood offices. John Rohrs heads up the Chi sales staff and Wynn Nathan the Coast office.

new company, that under present plans vidpix producer clients of his new company, that under present plans vidpix producers turning out product for NFD would produce at Eagle Lion and share ownership. Move is aimed at reducing production costs, he elaborated.

NFD is capitalized at $250,000, and Eells said he has assurances from N. Y. and L. A. regarding additional coin for purchase of the studio and financing of production on vidpix properties planned by producers who will distrib through NFD.

Initial product to be handled by National Film are "Little Orphan Annie" and "Gasoline Alley," which will be shot by Este Productions, headed by Arthur L. Stern and William Trinz.

Eells said his plan of operation is basically same as presently exists in motion picture industry in financing, in that banks will examine each vidpix series presented, and if satisfied with entire package, will then okay the financing. Arrangements for long-term interim financing are now in process, with initial underwriting for first two-year period tentatively set at $6,240,000, he says. Bank will okay properties only if satisfied with each deal, plus value of residuals in each case.

Eells, former Federal Bank examiner, KHJ sales manager, and Young and Rubicam exec, plans "spread-of-cost" principle to company sales operation, amortizing costs over five-year period.

He is skying east this week to confab with associates in Chicago and N. Y.

Murray Arnold, WIP, Philadelphia, program director, alarmed over the growing blackout of Vic Damone members on the station's disk programs, issued a directive to all deejays ordering fuller representation for Damone's platters on WIP shows.

A veteran himself, Arnold in his memo declared: "Because Damone is now in the service and is out of the entertainment picture for the duration, it behooves all of us to repay him for the sacrifice he is making and keep his name fresh and alive in the minds and ears of the public."

Arnold directive also applies to others in service such as Eddie Fisher. Latter, however, is more fortunate since he is still in the country cutting platters and has strong managerial representation, it was pointed out. Since Damone has none of these advantages, WIP spinners were asked to see he got his "normal representation" on station's airers.

Newscasts' popularity has jumped nearly 300% among radio listeners in the Twin Cities' area in the last 17 years, according to a KSTP study.

Newspaper logs show that in 1935 KSTP was the only Twin Cities radio station which listed news programs as such. At that time it carried 27 news programs per week, or six and a-half hours' worth, it's revealed.

KSTP today carries 97 radio news programs per week, or a total of 17¾ hours, and newscasts occupy a similarly important place in other Twin Cities stations broadcast activities, Joe Cook, sales promotion head, discloses. Also, KSTP-TV now carries 36 news programs weekly.

Religious groups should concentrate their broadcast efforts on AM rather than TV, Albert Crews, production director of the Protestant Broadcasting and Film Commission told a church meeting in St. Louis Monday (28).

Crews said that while big spenders are leaving radio for tele, religious broadcasters can't "afford the luxury" of pioneering in video. He said that there are more car radios alone than tele sets in the country, and that the Protestant commission will do nine radio shows for each tele stanza. However, he added, the religious groups should watch teevee audience availability and move into the medium as its circulation expands.

CBS Radio held its annual one-day sales clinic Saturday (26) at the N.Y. homeoffice, with top network execs underlining their future plans and problems under radio's current market conditions. No new sales policies were unveiled, with the major emphasis placed instead on broadening the viewpoint of the division sales chiefs.

Prexy Howard Meighan topped the speakers' lineup. Among the others who spoke were sales veepee John Karol; programming veepee Lester Gottlieb; administrative veepee Lou Hausman; sales manager Eldon Hazard, and Allyn J. Marsh, director of program sales.

Broadcast Advertising Bureau membership promotion chairmen have been named in 46 states. They'll take part in the projected BAB recruiting drive, which will include direct mail, personal calls and broadcaster meetings. Group will meet together at Chicago during week of March 31.

In the past month and a half, 41 stations joined BAB, raising the membership total to 962.

Foreign-language airers beamed by WWRL, N.Y., are being waxed by the State Department for broadcast overseas by Voice of America. Aim is to show that language and culture of foreign-born groups here are kept alive without hindering their devotion to the U.S.

VOA also cut interviewed with the indie's foreign-language producers and talent. WWRL carries programs in 13 tongues.

Demos, of course, are expected to be more antagonistic to the team-up, since Eisenhower is a Republican. But backers of the other GOP candidates, including Sen. Robert A. cameras seem to be right on top of the fighters. There also is one pointing up from ringside through the ropes to give an interesting perspective.

Commentary, however, is not on a par with the camera-work. Sportscaster Fred Wolf makes far too many mistakes and then, realizing it, laughs embarrassedly. What's worse, he takes himself to task for his all-too-frequent slips of the tongue, so that it gets to a point where the viewer wonders whom he's talking about most, himself or the fighters.

Wolf doesn't make the mistake, however, of trying to gab all the time. It's not the quantity of his commentary that's at fault, it's the quality. He makes other mistakes, too, which may not be entirely his fault. Between rounds he talks about the background of the contestants and more often than not is not talking about the boxer on whom the camera is focused. Tew.

BILL BALLANCE SHOW
With Harry Suekman, Jean Cordell, Henri Foshee
Producer: Ballance
Director: Phil Bondelli
30 Mins.; Mon.-thru-Fri., 10:30 p.m.
Sustaining
WBKB, Chicago

Strictly a lightweight affair, this nightly half-hour headlined by Bill Ballance is casual to the point of carelessness. Viewer reaction is liable to be likewise, with chances seemingly dim of capturing anything but a casual clientele.

Ballance is a gagster who leans heavily on the incongruous, far-fetched puns, greybeard jokes and switches that have been developed better and earlier by others. On the stanza viewed (23), an occasional gleam of wit broke through to earn a chuckle, and to indicate that once the lad gets his TV bearings he'll score more consistently.

Working with the comic are pianist Harry Suekman and singers Jean Cordell and Henri Foshee. Suekman displayed some staunch keyboarding and his assists on Ballance's gags hinted that maybe the wrong guy is billed as the show's comedian. Miss Cordell is an attractive young lass who's beginning to find herself in the medium. Foshee is a pleasant looking and sounding baritone who smoothly handled his song.

Ballance also writes and produces the session. Perhaps his best solution would be to write himself a regular half-hour script, discard all but five or 10 minutes of the best material, and let Suekman and the two singers fill the rest. Certainly that gagged soap commercial he and Suekman unraveled should have been left in Bob and Ray's discard. Dave.

THE HUBBARDS
Producers-writers: Eddie and Jackie Hubbard
Director: John Berg
60 Mins.; Sat., 11 p.m.
Participating
WENR-TV, Chicago

Eddie and Jackie Hubbard have put together a loosely-knit hubby and wife chin session that has two things in its favor. It's the only local show of its type being beamed on Saturdays, whereas the weekdays are cluttered with Mr. and Mrs. formats, and it's the only live show on the local ether at that particular hour—other three stations are channeling feature films.

Other than that, segment viewed (26) indicated it's a routine affair, with the usual parade of guests and assorted devices presented in a casual, rambling fashion. The Hubbards work the show in a pleasantly relaxed manner, but handicapped themselves this time by attempting to spread about a half hour of material into a full hour.

Program's chief claim to individuality is the mystery guest whom viewers are invited to identify by phone. Idea seems ungainly, since it means that the main name attraction either has to be interviewed with his back to the camera or with just his shirtfront and necktie exposed. Even so, practically all the callers correctly pegged the guest as Burr Tillstrom, campaign manager for presidential candidate Oliver J. Dragon. The payoff on-camera chinfest with the creator of "Kukla, Fran and Ollie" was disappointingly brief because of lack of time.

The other interviews, however, seemed overly padded, although they were fairly interesting. Adolph Valonis, police artist, demonstrated his sketching by drawing a picture of one of the guests from a description provided by the other guests. Bob MacIntire, editor of Photography mag, came on to plug the latest issue with some stills that came off okay. Dave.

Ken Murray's 'Go West' Yen; Plans Spring Shift

Illustrating how more and more of the top television talent are turning their faces westward, Ken Murray, who was most outspoken a year ago about his desire to retain N. Y. as his TV headquarters, said this week that he hopes to return to Hollywood some time this spring. He may do his last 10 or 13 shows of this season from the Coast and then alternate in N. Y. and Hollywood next year.

Murray, whose show is aired Saturday nights via CBS-TV, stressed that there are numerous advantages to be found in both video centres, but he still has his home in California, which he'd like to get back to. He noted, for example, that his "Movietime" program, scheduled for this week (2), could have been lined up far easier in Hollywood, since it requires cooperation of the film studios. On the other hand, many of his civic programs, such as his tributes to the Marine Corps, Air Force, etc., would be impossible to do from Hollywood.

Comedian pointed out, too, that, as a variety show entrepreneur, he must still depend to a large extent on novelty acts to provide the necessary variety. And such acts, he said, are to be found far more in the east than on the Coast.

dom from control by any bankroller or medium-owner; (2) its rejection of rebates, since commissions paid to agency should be used for servicing and developing advertising; (3) adequate experience, which affects an ad campaign's chances of success; and (4) its financial solvency.

Gamble said that the 2% cash discount is the industry's financial safeguard, with the agencies passing it on to bankrollers to spur prompt payment. While the 2% is allowed by 95% of newspapers, 93% of mags and a form of it is in effect at the four webs, less than 10% of stations permit it, Gamble said. "It is little wonder that broadcasters have suffered heavy credit losses, far worse than any other medium," the 4A chief said.

Most of the confab expressed confidence in radio's vitality, typified in the address by Frank E. Pellegrin, veepee of H-R Representatives. Reiterating suggestions he made two years ago, that AM stop supporting rating services until publications offer something similar and that advertisers and agencies demand comparable data from printed media, the station rep represented this summary: (1) radio is bigger than ever; (2) TV has cut into readership of ads in printed media; (3) the longer people own tele sets, the more they return to AM; (4) print media should be forced to produce inch-by-inch readership figures on ads; (5) AM should raise rates and publications should cut them; and (6) AM remains the most effective, most economical ad medium.

Pellegrin cited the paradox that although print media have been losing ad readership, income increase in '51 over '50 was greater than the total TV revenue of all tele stations, and the same is true for mags. He said that both AM and TV should train their guns on the print media.

Calling for more showmanship in AM, Michael Hanna, topper of WHCU, Ithaca, said, "Broadcasters must put their facilities to use with greater imagination, showmanship and courage. Without sacrifice of income, in this crucial election year, we must assume a real responsibility in our communities. Life in a democracy is controversial. Controversy in a democracy is settled by understanding. Radio alone can reinstate the town meeting."

Charles Baltin, veepee of WHOM, N. Y., plugged the value of specialized programming, citing the experience of his Italian-slanted outlet. He said that a Chinese language series, beamed only on WHOM-FM, had brought so heavy a demand for FM sets in Chinatown the area couldn't get enough sets. Some surveys, he said, reveal more listeners to some language shows, than there are people speaking the tongue in the community. The reason is that Italians, who may not understand the language, may tune in on Spanish shows for the music.

unfair status. A committee of nine was elected to implement the resolution.

Video union is also attempting to provide a "fair and impartial" hearing for Loeb on charges made against him. TVA exec secretary George Heller went to American Arbitration Assn. yesterday (Tues.) with request that AAA choose a panel to hear the case. However, this was turned down by the arbitration group which said that it doesn't handle hassles in which there are not two parties contending. Union doesn't want to choose a panel, since that might result in the panel's being labeled "hand-picked." It's now trying to find a non-industry, non-union body which could select a fact-finding board.

Defend Mrs. Berg

TVA position on the question of tagging the series "unfair" was that Mrs. Berg, who is also a TVA member, should not be penalized after having backed up Loeb for 39 weeks and for publicly admitting the reasons for dropping the actor. Union's board felt that Mrs. Berg was not "the real culprit."

Mrs. Berg said she believes in the American principle that a person is innocent until proven guilty and said Loeb was dropped because of "the failure of anyone to assure employment to persons who are merely controversial as contrasted with those who are Communists." She added she regretted that her efforts to make the distinction were unavailing "since this is a problem which can be solved only by the industry" and not by an individual.

Loeb reiterated his belief that a "grave injustice is being done to myself and to others in the industry by blacklisting," but added he appreciated Mrs. Berg's position. He said nothing would be gained by forcing "Goldbergs" off the air. "I have felt compelled to accept a resolution of my case which is unsatisfactory to me," Loeb stated. "This does not mean that I regard the vicious practice of blacklisting as inevitable.

"I believe that the industry and unions must, and can if the will is there, evolve a policy and procedure by which an actor who wishes to maintain his lawful independence of thought and action cannot be deprived of the opportunity to practice his profession. I feel completely free to continue the fight against blacklisting. I will continue to press for a fair and impartial hearing of my case so that my innocence of unlawful or subversive conduct can be demonstrated."

Committee to implement the TVA resolution comprises Bill Marshall, Michael Lewin, Clifford Carpenter, John Randolph, Leon Janney, Frank Maxwell, Alan Manson, Larry Gates and Loeb.

Albany — John F. Jennings, comptroller of WPTR since the station went on the air in August, 1948, resigned to join a public accounting firm here.

WLW-T Wrestling Finals Set for Col. Feb. 9

Cincinnati, Jan. 29.

Finals in the second WLW-Television wrestling tourneys for men and women will be staged Feb. 9 in the Coliseum at Columbus, which has a larger capacity than the University of Dayton fieldhouse where a turnaway occurred last year. Jack Dempsey will be referee.

Series of Saturday elimination bouts has been carried for some weeks on Crosley's TV stations in Cincy, Columbus and Dayton, springing from the WLW-D studios in the latter city.

Challengers meet Ruffy Silverstein and Mildred Burke, last year's title holders, for belts and purses of $1,500 for the man and $1,000 for the woman champion.

news, promotion, publicity, programming, research, etc. It's figured that some streamlining may be effected.

Next Mutual board meeting may prove a crucial one, since it will be the first at which O'Neil, who also has the Don Lee and Yankee networks' ballots, will have a total of 58% of the votes. Although present rules bar any stockholder from voting more than 30% of the stock, this restriction is expected to be lifted.

Another question expected to be examined is a new contract for MBS prexy Frank White. White, who in 1949 succeeded Edgar Kobak, now a consultant, has a three-year pact which expires in May.

On WFIL-adelphia Sets!

Best 4/5 buy in Philly these days isn't 90 proof. It's WFIL's share of the city's radio audience —and it's 100 per cent proved!

Says Broadcast Measurement Bureau's latest survey: four-fifths of Philadelphia radio owners regularly set their dials to WFIL at 560 kilocycles.

That means when you schedule WFIL, 1,400,000 people are listening in the city alone. That means people with $3,682,770,000 in disposable cash hear your pitch.

And if you want to spread around a bit, count the ears lent to WFIL outside the city—in all the 14-County Retail Trading Area. Here are a million more prospects . . . another $3 billion in buying power.

And then there's the huge bonus area beyond . . . but why go on? Just remember, you're first on the dial in America's third market when you schedule WFIL.

ASCAP's Present Payoff Plan Seen Here to Stay, Beefs Simmering

Despite intensive propaganda work by rank-and-file groups of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, likelihood of an early revision of the 60-20-20 payoff plan has all but disappeared. General expectation now is that the current distribution system will remain in force permanently with squawks from the dissident writer groups slowly ebbing away.

Prime cause of the failure of ASCAP execs to come up with a new payoff plan has been the absence of a near-unanimous agreement on any of the proposed amendments. A basic division still exists between those writer elements who want a greater stress on seniority and those who want an even greater accent on performances.

The ASCAP classifications committee, which has been pondering the payoff question since the new system went into effect in 1950 to a chorus of squawks, has been unable to reconcile the views of both wings inside one plan. Whether senority or performance ratings is chosen as the chief classifications criteria, somebody is bound to get hurt and the beefs will start all over again.

ASCAP execs have conducted dry runs on several alternate systems, notably that of the Society's attorney Herman J. Finkelstein, but no results have been announced because it's understood, some unsatisfactory features showed up in the actual operation. In any case, the classifications committee has not shown any readiness to present any new plan before the Department of Justice which must okay an revision of the payoff plan as provided for under the 1950 antitrust consent decree. Such a move will be made, if it is made at all, only when an airtight plan has been devised.

Recurrent grumbles, meantime, are heard in ASCAP ranks from individual writers who are threatening to complain to the Justice Department about "stalling" on the part of ASCAP execs. These gripes, however, are being discounted since the threats haven't been carried through in the past year. It's felt that with ASCAP's growing income, the coin distribution will straighten itself out, despite temporary and, perhaps inevitable, inequities.

L'ville Symph Buildup Of Modern Composers Earns Columbia Pact

Louisville, Jan. 29.

Louisville Orchestra's idea of commissioning works of contemporary composers has interested Columbia Records in signing the symph to make one long-playing record a year for three years. According to Mrs. Dann C. Byck, prez Louisville Philharmonic Society, first recordings will be made in March and will be released in the fall.

Two commissioned works which will comprise the first release will be Brazilian composer Heitor Villa-Lobos' "Origin of the Amazon River," premiered at this season's opening concert, and Norman Dell Joio's "Triumph of Saint Joan," performed by the orch for the first time with dancer Martha Graham last month.

The 50-piece symph, under direction of Robert Whitney, will make all its recordings in Louisville, Columbia sending a crew and equipment to do the cutting. Works to be recorded have been assured foreign distribution. Louisville orch has commissioned 21 symphonic works in three years.

Peer Revamps L.A. Dept.

In a realignment of its foreign division, Peer International upped Miss Provi Garcia to the head of its Latin-American department. Miss Garcia, who is replacing Ferdinand Castro, formerly topped the Puerto Rican department. Castro will now assist Ben Selvin, general manager of the Peer firms.

Al Salinas, who assisted Castro, will head the plugging department of the Latin-American repertoire. Dr. Hugo M. Funes remains overall head of the L.A. division.

Meyer Davis Offspring As Joint Symph Soloists

Bandleader Meyer Davis' kids will do a wholesale longhair job next month. Daughter Virginia and son Emory will appear with the City Amateur Symphony Orchestra in N. Y. Feb. 24, as separate soloists.

Emory will play the Mozart Clarinet Concerto. Virginia will sing three soprano arias with the orch, this being her symphonic debut. Concert, conducted by Franz Bibo, will be broadcast over WNYC.

Mrs. Meyer Davis, incidentally, who is a longhair composer, is writing a special suite of songs, for soprano and string quartet, which Virginia will preem next season. Soprano has just come back to N. Y. from a concert tour on the Coast and in western Canada.

D.C. Passage Of Jukebox Fee Seen By Pubs, Writers

With Congressional hearings on the Kefauver-Bryson amendment to the Copyright Act to resume in Washington Monday (4), reps of the major publishers and writers organizations are confident that the bill aimed at jukebox operators will pass in this session of the legislature. The proposed amendment provides for a 1c per side per week licensing fee on all disks played in coin machines.

Evidence that the writer-publisher optimism is warranted is seen in the strong propaganda campaign launched by the jukebox associations in an effort to block passage of the amendment. Chief point in the jukebox propaganda arsenal is that the coin machine operators cannot afford to pay the annual licensing fee which has been estimated at over $5,000,000 for the jukebox industry as a whole.

Heads of the coin machine associations will testify before the House Judiciary Committee hearings Monday when they will answer the defense of the bill made in December by reps of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, Music Publishers Protective Assn. and the American Music Council. Although not scheduled to testify, spokesmen for the latter organizations will be at hand for the hearings and may request an opportunity to rebut the juke op arguments.

Music pub execs have pointed out to Congressional members that the U. S. is the only country in the world which does not collect for performances in jukeboxes. As a result, American writers are given much better treatment by the foreign copyright laws than is accorded foreign cleffers by U. S. regulations.

FRENCH FEMME PIANIST SCORING WITH U.S. ORCHS

Sock debut of a young French femme pianist in Boston last month, which led to a couple of quick pactings and rearrangement of concert schedules, is causing a stir in longhair circles. Monique de la Bruchollerie, brought to the U. S. by Ernest Ansermet as soloist for his guest conducting stints with the Boston Symphony Orchestra Dec. 14-15, got such a reception that she was immediately signed for BSO road appearances in New Brunswick, N. J., Feb. 12, and Carnegie Hall, N. Y., Feb. 13.

Pianist was then inked by George Szell for his three dates with the N. Y. Philharmonic, March 6-7-9. She'll give her first U. S. recital in Carnegie Hall Feb. 23. The Mertens & Parmelee division of Columbia Artists Mgt. is handling her, with several dates for next season already inked.

Reid 100th Batonist In Roseland, N.Y., Bow

Don Reid, Chicago jazz trombonist and bandleader current at the Roseland dance hall, N. Y., is the 100th batonist to make his New York bow via this terpery. In this spot's 33-year history, such name leaders as the late Glenn Miller, Xavier Cugat, Harry James, Cab Calloway and others made their debut here.

The Reid band has been booked for a four-week stand by Louis Brecker, Roseland's operator.

Small Indies Hit Jackpot With 3 Best-Seller Tunes

Small indie diskers, which have been leading a precarious existence for the past couple of years in bucking the major labels, are still showing enterprise in coming up with hit sides. The minor firms in the last couple of weeks have been responsible for launching three tunes on the best-seller lists with concomitant wide coverage by the major companies.

Top tune coming out of left field has been "Wheel of Fortune," a Bennie Benjamin-George Weiss number which was originally sliced on the Derby label with Sunny Gale vocalling. Tune has broken for a hit and has now about 15 different versions in release or preparation by the majors. Decca alone cut it three ways.

Abbey Records, which started a cycle a couple of years back with its "Old Piano Roll Blues" click, has come up with another best-seller in "Goodbye Sweetheart," cut by June Ward with the Lee Barrett orch. Side has gone well over the 100,000 mark in the last couple of weeks and several major firms are putting in bids for Miss Ward. Another click has been born on an indie label in "Wishin'," sliced by Teddy Phillips for King Records.

Decca's top-selling vocal group, the Four Aces, were pushed off on an indie label, Victoria Records, several months ago with their cut of "Sin." Number is still holding up and the combo has been catapulted into the four-figure coin bracket for personal appearance.

Decca Bids for Longhair Trade Via Rapid Buildup Of Its Classical Catalog

Overcoming a late start in the longhair field, Decca Records is now making a strong bid for the classical market via its rapidly expanding Gold Seal catalog. Plans for Decca's longhair division, under Si Rady's direction since it was launched a year-and-a-half ago, call for a steady buildup of monthly releases and an intensive sales campaign in the diskery's regular pop distribution channels.

In a departure from the thinking of other major labels, Decca is grouping many of its longhair releases into rounded libraries. Company has already projected the issuance of the complete organ works of Bach, the complete piano sonatas of Beethoven and the complete classical clarinet repertory. Latter is being sliced by Reginald Kell while the Beethoven works are being done by German pianist Wilhelm Kempf in 15 long-play platters.

Although Decca launched its longhair division via deals for masters with the European Deutsche Grammophon and Parlophone catalogs, the diskery is now signing up American artists for an extensive schedule of domestically made recordings. Several platters by such U. S. group musicians as Sylvia Marlowe, Julius Baker, Joseph and Lillian Fuchs, the Zimbler Sinfonietta and the Kell Chamber Players have already been released.

Jay Garon - Brooke Associates chartered to conduct a business in managing and agenting composers, musicians, actors and artists, as well as theatrical and radio productions, with offices in New York. Capital stock is $5,050. Directors are Jay Stuart Garon, Joel Ijams Brooke and Harry Buchman, all of N. Y.

British Buyouts of U.S. Tunes Face $ Curb; $3,000,000 Annually Involved

London, Jan. 29.

Possibility of a government imposed curb on dollar expenditure for American song hits is being closely watched by British music publishers. Currently, there is no evidence of fresh restrictions, although Bank of England and Treasury scrutiny is showing signs of becoming more extensive.

The dollar expenditure by the music industry is regarded as being slight when compared with other branches of entertainment, notably films. No concise estimate appears to be available, but a generous overall figure has been computed at around $3,000,000.

So long as the present film agreement, which permits the conversion of $17,000,000 plus each year, is allowed to continue, the British music publishing industry appears confident that the government will fight shy of imposing fresh restriction on the import of American tunes.

Any interference with the free importation of U. S. pops would prove a severe hardship to most publishing houses, particularly those who have not a substantial catalog trade to provide the backbone of their income. While sheet music sales are dwindling, competition among British pubs to get the hit tunes is becoming fiercer, and the payments in advance guarantees and fixed percentages reflect a steady increase.

The British publishing industry, which showed tendencies towards slump conditions last summer, is still in the doldrums, with little immediate prospect of any substantial increase in turnover. The top number on the hit parade is currently doing well if it sells 10,000 per week, whereas a year ago the figure was 40% to 50% higher. There are occasional freak exceptions, such as "Too Young," which sold almost 80,000 in a single week at the height of its popularity. Recently, retail price of this number was doubled, but its sales were unaffected, with a weekly figure still around 6,000.

One of the main publishing problems is the tendency to raise retail prices from the general level of one shilling (14c) to two shillings. Although the extra margin would more than make up for reduced sales, the publishers fear that the best distributors, such as the multiple organizations like Woolworths and British Home Stores, would refuse to handle the more expensive product. In many cases, however, individual houses have found that higher prices have paid off in the long run.

Flock of Disk Execs Converge on Coast

Center of the disk business has temporarily shifted from New York to Hollywood with three major company artists and repertory chiefs currently located on the Coast. Mitch Miller, Columbia Records a&r head, is due to stay in Hollywood about three weeks while Mortie Palitz, his counterpart at Decca, will also conduct some recording sessions on the Coast.

RCA Victor a&r topper Dave Kapp, who left for Hollywood last week, is due back in New York in about two weeks.

Pubs Heartened By Sheet Music Sales, Topping '51 Pace

Paralleling the upbeat in the disk industry, music publishers with currently active tunes are cashing in on a substantial pickup in sheet music sales. Copy sales have been climbing slowly but steadily since the start of this year and have been hitting a better clip than last year despite the spectacular push of "Tennessee Waltz" in the opening months of 1951.

Having been disillusioned too often in recent years, publishing execs are wary about predicting any longterm upturn for sheet music sales. One top pub pointed out that business has been in such a general slump for the past decade that even a mild flurry seems like a boom period these days.

The current upswing in copy sales, however, is showing a hopeful sticking power with some of the top numbers selling at a 20,000 a week clip and better. Some firms with lesser hits have been riding with 4,000 to 5,000 weekly sheet sales on their numbers which is still in a profitable category and a far cry from the disastrous slump of last summer when copy sales came to a virtual standstill.

Peewee King, co-author of "Tennessee Waltz," is again pacing the copy-selling cleffers with his current alfalfa hit, "Slow Poke" and his latest, "Silver and Gold," which has broken through on the best-seller lists. "Cry," "Little White Cloud That Cried," "Shrimp Boats," "Anytime" and "Charmaine" are also selling strongly with such newcomers as "At Last, At Last" and "Wheel of Fortune" also beginning to show up as a result of prominent disk showcasing.

DISK CATALOG FIRM SLAPS SUIT ON GOODY

Sam Goody, operator of a midtown New York record shop, was named defendant in an infringement suit brought in N. Y. Federal Court last week by William Schwann, a Cambridge, Mass., publisher. It's charged that Goody is unfairly competing with Schwann by distributing a long-playing record catalog.

Schwann, according to the complaint, has been publishing a copyrighted LP catalog since 1949. He charges that Goody infringed by coming out with a similar catalog last December. Action seeks an injunction to force Goody to withdraw his publication.

A similar suit which Schwann pressed against Herman Lemberg, operator of Record Collectors Exchange, N. Y., was settled and discontinued in April, 1950, when Lemberg agreed to a consent order. Previously he had been giving away a cuffo catalog which Schwann claimed unfairly competed with his own bi-monthly pamphlet.

Decca artists and repertory chief Morty Palitz planed to Chicago over last weekend for recording sessions while sales chief Sid Goldberg hit the road for an o.o. of Coast distrib points.

Illinois Court Rules Bandleaders Are Bosses; Counters N.Y. Decision

Chicago, Jan. 29.

Bandleaders in Illinois received a setback in the Illinois Supreme Court when it ruled that baton wavers, when they play dates within the state, must pay unemployment levies rather than the ballroom, hotel or nightclub. Court said that leaders are independent contractors, overruling opinion of Chicago Circuit Judge Harry Fisher, who said the Edgewater Beach Hotel should pay members of the Henry Brandon, Jack Cavan and Henry Kisely bands unemployment benefits.

Ten sidemen were seeking funds for being unemployed after being under contract there in 1946 and 1947. It represents a victory for ballroom ops, who particularly have been making a drive against operators being classified as employers.

The Illinois decision also runs counter to a recent ruling of the New York courts which declared that hotels, and not bandleaders, should be considered as employers for the purpose of unemployment insurance payments.

Decca Adds to Blues Dept.

Adding to its blues-and-rhythm talent roster, Decca Records has inked Joe Medlin to an exclusive term pact. Medlin formerly was vocalist with the Buddy Johnson orch.

In the folk division, Decca also inked singers Roland Jackson, Autry Inman and Jim Eanes.

Jocks, Jukes and Disks

By HERM SCHOENFELD

Mario Lanza: "Lygia"-"Temptation" (Victor). Mario Lanza's powerful tenor is being conserved on wax for the big numbers and these sides conform to the pattern of his previous clicks. "Lygia," based upon the background theme for the Metro pic, "Quo Vadis," is an impressive ballad, slightly on the arty side, which Lanza projects with tremendous force and unusual sensitivity. Standard on the flip is natural for the pop-operatic repertory and Lanza belts it across with all stops out.

Willard Cele: "Penny Whistle Blues"-"Penny Whistle Boogie" (London). Two arresting sides based upon the background score for the South African film, "The Magic Garden." Variations of a catching rhythm tune are played on a flagolet, or penny whistle, which could catch on as a fad similar to the zither dithers following the "The Third Man" pic.

Bing Crosby: "At Last! At Last"-"The Isle of Innisfree"; "Granada"-"Copacabana" (Decca). "At Last" is the most likely of Crosby's latest four sides. It's a lilting tune and Crosby gives it an adequate, if not particularly strong, rendition. "Innisfree" a fair ballad with a wordy lyric. Crosby's workover of "Granada" is smoothly handled as is the chile rhythm item, "Copacabana."

Guy Lombardo Orch: "Stolen Love" - "Marshmallow Moon" (Decca). "Stolen Love" surefire material for Lombardo and could develop into one of his big sellers. It's a backwoods-type ballad with a good lyric and the type of melodic line that Lombardo can bounce ingratiatingly. Kenny Gardner and local trio do a nice job on the lyric. Reverse is a fair number from the Paramount pic, "Aaron Slick from Punkin Crick."

Kay Starr: "Wheel of Fortune"-"I Wanna Love You." "Fortune" is getting wide wax coverage but Miss Starr's version ranks among the best. It's an off-beat ballad which she attacks with a powerful blues style. Slated for plenty of jock and juke spins. Reverse is a cute rhythm tune on which Miss Starr again hits with her standard hardhitting style. Harold Mooney orch and vocal chorus back up snappily.

Arthur Prysock: "Wheel of Fortune"-"Till All the Stars Fall in the Ocean" (Decca). In the male division, Arthur Prysock comes up with a potential side on "Fortune." It's a slow, Eckstine-type of rendition that gets the sense of this number. For the straight blues-and-rhythm market, Jimmy Scott's version for Decca is solid while Hene Humes' cut on the same label is disappointing. "Stars Fall in the Ocean" is a doubtful entry which Prysock handles very methodically.

Sonny Calello: "Cindy Lou"-"The King" (King). This slice of "Cindy Lou" could take off big. It's a bright side which Calello vocals with a good feel and excellent backing from orch and chorus under Don Costa's baton. "The King" is a pretentiously dramatic ballad with limited appeal.

Barbara Ruick: "Retreat" - "You Couldn't Be Cuter" (M-G-M). Barbara Ruick, promising new M-G-M songstress, does a neat job on "Retreat," a clever, maybe too clever, hokey-hillbilly number. It's a good side which faces tough competition in Patti Page's original slice for Mercury. Miss Ruick also hits freshly with the oldie on the bottom deck.

Freddy Martin Orch: "The Sweetheart Serenade"-"Honey Lips" (Victor) Freddy Martin orch, is coupled on two pleasing tunes. "Serenade" has a easy melodic lilt and a catching lyric set in a danceable arrangement. Merv Griffin handles the vocal in usual good style. "Honey Lips" is a bouncy rhythm item in a commercial cornball groove, Griffin again vocalling neatly.

Ella Fitzgerald: "Rough Ridin'"-"I Don't Want to Take a Chance" (Decca). Ella's click scat workover of "Smooth Sailing" last year has rated a sequel in "Rough Ridin'." It's another one of those tongue-twisting nonsense syllable lyrics which this songstress gives plenty of commercial meaning. It's a juke natural. Reverse is a change-of-pace slow item projected in Miss Fitzgerald's ace ballad style, Sy Oliver backing up with his usual excellence.

Album Review

Doris Day-Danny Thomas: "I'll See You in My Dreams" (Columbia). One of the top album-sellers in the platter business, Doris Day comes up with another winner in this Columbia package of the score of the Warner' Bros. pic, "I'll See You in My Dreams." Miss Day's lucid ballad style is showcased on such standards as "The One I Love," "It Had to Be You" and the title song, among other great oldies, including "I Wish I Had a Girl" and "Nobody's Sweetheart." Danny Thomas has a minor part in duetting with Day in "Ain't We Got Fun" and "Makin' Whoopee." Paul Weston orch and Norman Luboff choir add firstrate background support.

Blossom Seeley-Benny Fields: "Mr. and Mrs. Show Business" (M-G-M). This set is loaded with nostalgia, Benny Fields and wife Blossom Seeley socking over a flock of familiar oldies. Fields' w.k. style is workout on "Lullaby of Broadway," "My Melancholy Baby," "For Me and My Gal" and "By the Light of the Silvery Moon." Blossom Seeley comes through nicely on "Way Down in New Orleans," "Rose Room" and "I'm Nobody's Baby."

Platter Pointers

Jane Pickens, with Al Goodman's orch backing up, delivers in highly lyrical style on the tunes from the Jerome Kern-Oscar Hammerstein 2d musical, "Music In the Air" (Victor) . . . Jerry Gray orch turns out a craftsmanlike job on a flock of oldies in "A Tribute to Glenn Miller" (Decca) . . . In the Dixieland groove, Muggsy Spanier and an all-star combo dish up great sounds on a "This Is Jazz" set packaged by Circle Records . . . on a more modern, but less interesting kick, Shorty Rogers combo have an okay package in "Modern Sounds" for the progressive set . . . Alan Dale could have a big hit in "Silver and Gold" (Decca) . . Pearl Bailey has only fair material in "I Heard" (Coral) . . . Mary Small's workover of a fine tune, "River Get A Rollin'" rates jock and juke spins (King) . . . Dinah Shore is on a blues-and-rhythm kick in "Warm-Hearted Woman" (Victor) . . on the same label, Ralph Flanagan's orch has a standout side in "More Than Love" . . . Bill Farrell's stylized slice of "Call Me a Dreamer" might make the grade (M-G-M) . . Ken Carson has a firstrate rhythm religioso tune in "There's a Time to Reap and a Time to Sow" (Bibletone).

Standout folk, western, blues, rhythm, religioso, etc.: Drew Miller, "I'm Going Home" (Mercury) . . . Good Lewis, "Lonely Cabin Blues" (Decca) . . . Sister Rosetta Tharpe, "Peace in the Valley" (Decca) . . . Hawkshaw Hawkins, "Be my Life's Companion" (King) . . . Skeets Yaney, "Who's Taking Over" (M-G-M) . . . Joe E. Lewis, "Still Around" (M-G-M).

Diskers to Name RIAA Exec Setup

Final organization of the recently formed Record Industry Assn. of America is expected to take place next week (8) when the member companies will meet to decide the executive setup. Some 40 companies, including all the majors and most of the larger independents in the field, will be represented at the conclave.

At this point, the list of the candidates for the post of exec director, who will actually run the trade organization, has been narrowed down to three names selected by the screening committee headed by Leonard Schneider, Decca exec vice-prexy. The three names will be submitted to the member companies for the final choice.

A permanent executive board will also be elected at the membership meeting. At present, chieftains of Decca, Capitol, M-G-M, Columbia and RCA Victor comprise the temporary exec board and it's expected they will continue to serve with the addition of several reps from the smaller companies.

M-G-M Pacts Fiorino, Sliding Tuba Inventor

Chicago, Jan. 29.

M-G-M Records has pacted Vincent Fiorino, an alumnus of the Paul Whiteman band and for the past 15 years staff musician of radio station WBBM.

He's the inventor of the sliding tuba and for his first two sides last week he cut "The Sliding Tuba Polka" and "Czardas," latter number mainly a violin favorite.

Inside Orchestras—Music

Top jazz musicians, who recently have been picking up lucrative assignments in the longhair as well as pop disk field, are getting additional coin via their move in on juve platter dates. Hecky Krasno, Columbia Records kiddie division head, claims that the jazz beat on moppet platters is finding wide acceptance and to some extent is responsible for the kidisks to be issued simultaneously in the pop division. Among the jazzmen who have been getting the juve platter assignments are Tony Mottola, guitar; Bobby Haggart, bass; Lou Stein, piano; Terry Snyder, clarinet; Charlie Magnato, accordion; Stan Freeman, piano; Specs Powell, drums.

Larry Spier's music firm inked an unusual pact for a French tune recently in which no coin was involved. It was a straight barter deal in which Spier turned over the European rights on his firm's click "Little White Cloud That Cried" to Gallic publisher Raoul Breton in exchange for the latter's "Escala a Victoria," to be titled "Beware" for American consumption. Breton agreed to the swap after nixing coin bids of several other U.S. pubs for the French tune.

Bernie Roth, Gary, Ind. grocery clerk, is getting recognition on his first tune after almost being lost in the shuffle of Xmas songs. Lad penned "Only You" on a Mercury release with the plug side being "My Daddy Looks Like Santa." Billy Wells, Chicago disk jockey on WBBM, played the underside and has been hitting it so hard that Mercury is coupling it with another composition of the author, "Cross Me Off Your List" and reissuing the Russ Carlyle record.

Chicago Zither Club took a slap at the junior upstart, the "Josef Haustein Society of Friends of the Zither" in Vienna. Pointing out that their organization was formed 37 years ago against the Austrian's group's 23, localities said the other zitherers were in the junior class with their instruments. Windy City orchestra has 17 concert zithers, eight violins, three guitars, two 'cellos, a bass, accordion and harp. Club gives two concerts annually.

Television will prove to be the greatest medium yet for standard tunes, opines tunesmith Jimmy McHugh. The evergreens will get the best treatment, he added, because performers on TV prefer to use "song-proven" numbers. Unlike platters, AM or jukeboxes, McHugh feels video widens the impact of a ditty. Other media, he points out, consume so much material that the average song today has a short life.

L'ville's Top Terpery To Convert to Offices

Louisville, Jan. 29.

Lease on Madrid Ballroom, town's largest dance spot, was cancelled as of January 6, and contractors are submitting bids and plans to convert the amusement floor of the Madrid Building to office space. Milton Magel, who also operates Castle Farms in Cincinnati, has operated the Madrid for the past 10 years. Spot has played the biggest name bands at one time or another, and could accommodate as many as 1,800 patrons. Place was air-conditioned, and was considered the top location in town by dance promoters.

Bowout of the Madrid as a dance hall leaves the town without a large downtown dance floor. Some of the hotels lease their ballrooms for dances, but none approach the capacity of the Madrid.

Band Reviews

AL DONAHUE ORCH (10)
With Antonia
Adams Hotel, Phoenix

Al Donahue's three-week booking here represents the start of a new entertainment tangent for the Corinthian Room, downtown nitery which operates only during the winter season. In previous years, manager Jack Kane has been partial to small combos, but new policy calls for succession of name bands over a 10-week spread, with possibility that room will remain open even longer if there's sufficient payoff.

Following Donahue, band lineup includes Alvino Rey, Ted Fio Rito, Joe Reichman, Henry King, and Leighton Noble. No Phoenix nitery, past or present, has ever attempted a sustained name band policy, and if the Corinthian Room can make it pay off, the bandwagon may start rolling here.

For his current stand, Donahue has retrenched his outfit to 10, eliminating two brasses and putting greater emphasis on the reed section, headed by veteran Frank Walsh. Duo of sideman double up on the horns for added unity. Per usual, Donahue's violin is a standout in the rhythm department, complementing the bass, piano, and drums.

Band's musical shadings make for a smooth blend of dansapation, and pace is well diversified for over-all balance. Library is a hefty one to fit in with commitments here, which call for dinner music sesh from 7:30 to 9:00 p.m. followed by dance rhythms until 1 a.m. There's little time out once sidemen get going.

Antonia, a regular with Donahue the last five years, is a stylish exponent of songology and delivers a ballad with sureness and finesse.

Band drew a good turnout for a midweek opening, and word of mouth should accelerate biz during coming weeks. Jona.

RAY PEARL ORCH (12)
With Lois Costello
Hotel Muehlebach, Kansas City

Usually an annual occupant of the bandstand in the Terrace Grill of the Hotel Muehlebach, the Ray Pearl aggregation has recently been away for about 18 months. A six-timer here, Pearl has established a rep as one of the more capable on the hotel and ballroom circuit, and lives up to his notices with a full-blown outfit and, a ready dance style, and entertainers which embellish the proceedings throughout the evening.

The lineup of sidemen is somewhat changed since the previous stand, a sax being added and a guitar dropped. This gives Pearl two trumpets, two trombones, four reeds, piano, drums and tuba, one of the few bands today carrying a horn in the rhythm section. Added reed steps up the fullness for which Pearl is known, output leaning to the sweet side with accent on dansable rhythms. These are kept in a wide variety, current pops being intermixed with standards, Latins, novelties and medleys.

Lois Costello takes the lead in the vocal department, attractive blonde handling current ballads in throaty stylings, chirping novelties and working out in the Three Jewels trio. Bill Wayne, steps out of the crew, to warble a very listenable baritone, to team with songstress in a number of duets, and also work out in the trio. Dick Glerum adds a vocal to his drumming, and chubby Bill Garlow handles novelties and rhythm numbers in the five-by-five vein. Quin.

PEEWEE RUSSELL ORCH (6)
Hotel Buckminster, Boston

Peewee Russell, making his first Hub appearance since his long illness, displays remarkably few ill-effects either physical or musical, and on strength of engagement here appears to be back in his old stride again. Long noted for his ability to handle the clarinet in the Dixieland manner, he seems to have lost none of his knowhow during his enforced vacation and with the sidemen recruited for this stint backing him neatly, the results are par for the Dixieland course.

Pub Charges King With 'Bungalow' Infringement

King Records infringed upon his copyrighted tune, "We'll Build a Bungalow (You Spell It for Two," Norris B. Mayhams charged in a $15,000 damage suit filed in N. Y. Federal Court last week against the platter firm. Waxery assertedly failed to file notice of user when it cut "Bungalow."

Mayhams claims he wrote "Bungalow" and assigned rights to Mellin Music in November, 1949. The following year, the complaint states, the publisher re-assigned the number to Mayhams Music. Tune is said to have been copyrighted in 1949.

Lineup consists of Ruby Braff, a local cornetist with a solid jazz "feel"; Eph Resnick, a slick trombonist: Kenny Johns, drums; "Red" Richards on the 88 and bassman John Field, who goes with the lease, with the individual styles fitting neatly into the jazz pattern. Boys give out with the standards expected by the clientele, "Muskat Rambles," "High Society" et al, occasionally slipping in a melodic "If I Had You" for a change of pace. With the Russell clarinet weaving in and out some exciting jazz sounds are produced. Elie.

Hub Lays Down New Rules for Cafes In Tightening Vise on Lewd & Nude

Boston, Jan. 29.

As aftermath of recent mass suspensions of entertainment licenses here, all bistro operators have been sternly warned by Hub licensing board to tread the straight and narrow. Suspensions, majority of which have been lifted, followed Archbishop Cushing's recent blast via his Sunday Advertiser column regarding "vile, immoral" conditions in many spots.

Ultimatum, issued by the licensing board and mailed to all license holders, reads: "Innholders and common victuallers with entertainment licenses are hereby notified that the board prohibits strip-tease acts and lewd impersonations of the opposite sex. Any exhibition of such acts will result in the summary suspension or revocation of the entertainment license. The use of obscene language, salacious conversation, the portraying of sex perversion, or evidence of sensual performance will result in immediate action against the licensee. Dining rooms must be adequately lighted. Illumination by candles alone will not be approved by the board. Complete cooperation with the police must be given."

In nearby Lawrence, too, Mayor Buckley has applied the screws with an edict that "There will be no more so-called exotic dancing or other entertainment of low moral tone on Sundays." The mayor added that he had received many complaints against such acts on Sundays and believed they were well-founded. What happens balance of week was not indicated.

Meantime, the Mayair (nee College Inn), whose operators (Mayfair, Inc.) voluntarily surrendered their entertainment license for 30 days during the recent cleanup, swings back into action this week. The spot, which as College Inn was one of Hub's plushier niteries, in its present reincarnation will operate on a medium entertainment budget, with a line of six, four surrounding acts and two small musical groups, Morey Saxe orch (5) and the Threetones.

Formal opening is skedded for Thursday (31) with lineup including Lindy Doherty, Libby Bean, Jimmy Casanova and the Fays. Located two blocks from shuttered Latin Quarter, latter apparently out of action for balance of season, Mayfair bonifaces figure on following policy of showcasing seminames who have not appeared in this area recently. Spot will also be only one in town to feature a line of girls.

Ives, Louis Armstrong Set For O'Seas Concert Dates

Associated Booking Corp. is going in heavily for foreign popconcert bookings. Outfit has set Burl Ives and Louis Armstrong & All Stars for a series. Ives is set to play a longhair term in Australia, while Armstrong is booked for a dozen stands in the Hawaiian Islands.

Armstrong, who just wound up a stand at the Hangover Club, San Francisco, with his unit, will replay that cafe as soon as he returns from the concert stand.

Tony Martin's 20G To Copa for 'Out'; Cafe Sets Names

It cost Tony Martin $20,000 to get out of a date with the Copacabana, N. Y. Sum was paid last week to Copa ops Jack Entratter and Julie Podell. Pair is splitting the payoff between Jack Katz, their attorney, and various actor funds, Entratter and Podell both waiving any share of the coi .

Martin's difficulties stemmed from a date at the spot two years ago. Singer, who was let out for a Coast commitment with three weeks to go, has since refused to play the Copa. Nitery brought action against Martin at the American Guild of Variety Artists. Latter ruled that Martin had to play out the balance of contract, and when he refused, the settlement was arranged.

It's likely that Martin will play the Riviera, Ft. Lee, N. J., this summer. Contract isn't yet formalized.

Eyeing Martin & Lewis

Copa has made a tentative name lineup for near future. Spot is attempting to get Martin & Lewis to start there for a six-week minimum, May 1. Jane Powell has been set for a March starting date. Joe E. Lewis will tee off the fall season with a September stand. Johnny Ray will work the Copa for three weeks starting April 10.

There also an effort being made to get Jimmy Durante to play two weeks or more between video takes. Podell and Entratter would like the Schnoz for the show following session of Jan Murray, Toni Arden and Chandra Kaly Dancers, starting tomorrow (Thurs.) for four weeks.

Johnnie Ray Inked For Vaude-Cafe Dates

Johnnie Ray has pushed back some cafe dates in order to do a theatre tour. Singer has a cafetheatre lineup that will take him into the summer, and other dates are still being booked by General Artists Corp. He's being sold on a percentage arrangement in all vaude situations.

Ray is skedded for the Seville, Montreal, March 13; Earle, Philadelphia, March 20; Capitol, Washington, March 27; Copacabana, N. Y., April 10; Stanley, Pittsburgh, May 1, and will arrive in New York for the Decoration Day show at the Paramount.

While dates are tentative because it's not known when the Par session will wind up, Ray has commitments to Loew circuit for a series of stands, including the Oriental, Chicago, and vauders in Cleveland and Indianapolis.

'Holiday on Ice' Skeds Asbury Park Summer Run

"Holiday On Ice" will play throughout the summer at the Convention Hall, Asbury Park, and at the same time break in the new edition to preem in the fall.

It's the same procedure followed by "Ice Capades," which makes an annual summer run at Convention Hall, Atlantic City, while rehearsing the new show.

Scale, $1 to $2.50, was halved for juves.

Twin Cities' Obsequies for Demise Of Nitery Names; Chi Vaude-Cafes Dive

Minneapolis, Jan. 29.

Twin Cities, with a combined 826,700 population (more than 1,000,000 with suburbs included), will not have a single supper club with a name-act policy after this week.

Following the current Billy De Wolfe engagement, the Hotel Nicollet Minnesota Terrace is abandoning the star policy for non-name acts sans cover charge. The other leading local suppery, Hotel Radisson Flame Room, plays name acts only very infrequently. Two years ago the town had three clubs playing the biggest names and acts regularly and several that used them occasionally. Club Carnival, now the Flame and utilizing minor floor-shows, brought in such luminaries as Sophie Tucker and Martha Raye (twice each), Lena Horne, Cab Calloway and many other top performers. The establishment went deep into the red.

Neither of the two leading St. Paul hotels has had any floorshow entertainment for years. None of the lesser St. Paul clubs plays any major acts.

In a Word—"Impossible"

"It's impossible to sustain a name-act policy nowadays because of the acts' unavailability or their steep asking price," said Neil Messick, Hotel Nicollet v.p. and managing director. "Also, we've found that an intermittent cover charge policy—charging during a name act's engagement, varying the charge according to the attraction, and lifting it entirely when there's no name—doesn't work out satisfactorily. As a matter of fact, we find stiff resistance to the cover charge under any circumstances.

"It boosts the already high supper club going-out cost to a height which the local public apparently doesn't want to scale, except in the few instances of exceptionally outstanding performers, and even in those cases the room seldom comes through with a sizable or even any profit. One of the exceptions, of course, is Hildegarde, who for a second time drew capacity during her recent engagement."

Same Old TV Question

Like Abe Perkins, owner of the Gay '90s, a large pop-priced bistro, Messick blames TV in part for the Minnesota Terrace's entertainment problems. He points out that TV keeps most of the stellar performers close to New York and Hollywood for the most part, so that they can nab guest shots. Also, he agrees with Perkins, recently quoted in VARIETY, that video, giving viewers the very best talent for free, "wises up" customers, gets them to expect too much at supper clubs and makes them dissatisfied with ordinary fare. It also helps to up acts' prices, he points out.

With Carl Brisson and Billy De Wolfe opposing each other at the Flame Room and Minnesota Terrace, respectively (and both packing 'em in), this week, Minneapolis at least will be going off the nitery name-act map in a blaze of glory.

Chicago, Jan. 29.

With the booking of "Quo Vadis" for an extended run, the Oriental Theatre drops live shows for the time being, leaving the Chicago Theatre the only house west of the Hudson which is playing vaude on a regular weekly basis. Once the hub of booking activity for the various midwest vaude houses, there was almost a year's playing time around the Chi area for an act. Now, in Chicago proper, with the exception of the Regal, B&K southside colored house which has spot bookings, there isn't even a split week to look at.

Englewood and Stradford, indie and Warner houses, which competed as showcases for acts, switched to pictures last summer, and while there have been other spasmodic attempts to sell weekend fare, it seems to fade after a short trial. Strangely enough, weekend vaude continues strong in nearby areas, such as Palace, Rockford; Emboy, Terre Haute, which just started several months ago, and others.

Another peculiar aspect is the demand for name stageshows around the Chicagoland territory, with the Riverside in Milwaukee and Circle in Indianapolis having a standing offer for star bills. It's also true in Minneapolis and St. Louis, but neither can get names. Latter would rather work the more

Mayor's Home-Grown Toronto Fair Would Eliminate U.S. Names as Lure

Toronto, Jan. 29.

On determination of newly elected Mayor Alan Lamport, the two-week annual Canadian Exhibition here must be all-Canuck, plus midway and other concessions to be thrown open to tender. In addition, it's proposed that the Leon Leonidoff grandstand spectacles of the past four seasons—previously using such sellout draws as Olsen & Johnson, Danny Kaye, Jimmy Durante, et al.—be henceforth discontinued for replacement by a wholly Canadian talent grandstand show.

That was the outcome of a three-hour Saturday evening (26) meeting of civic officials, the CNE directorate, and Elwood Hughes, general manager for many years of the big expo, in the campaign pledge of the new mayor of Toronto that he would present a full "expose" of the CNE management and financial operations.

Mayor Lamport had charged that J. W. (Patty) Conklin and Bill Beasley were each taking some $500,000 out of the exhibition that

St. L.'s 'Jo Baker Day'

St. Louis, Jan. 29.

Josephine Baker will be kudosed next Sunday (3) at her first pro appearance in St. Louis, her hometown. Singer will play a benefit in the Henry W. Kiel municipal auditorium, following a parade and reception.

Miss Baker left here in 1925 for Paris. Since then she has visited here briefly—with her mother in 1940 and again in 1950 while en route to engagements.

Hizzoner James M. Darst has proclaimed Feb. 3 as "Josephine Baker Day."

Henie to Play Bronx Armory As 'Challenge'

Sonja Henie signed a deal last week to play the Kingsbridge Armory, Bronx, some time in March. It's the first time in 17 years that she'll work a New York ice date away from Madison Square Garden.

The star is reportedly going to the Bronx spot in an effort to prove that she's good enough b.o. to warrant the Garden in future despite her tiffing with Arthur M. Wirtz, whose "Hollywood Ice Revue" is at the Garden until Feb. 6.

Miss Henie will bring in her own ice. She's been travelling with portable refrigeration which permits her to open new territory for blades displays.

Aside from proving her b.o. value in New York, Miss Henie's Bronx stand will also have the added value of indicating whether nabes are potent enough to support a big show. Years ago, Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Circus played the Bronx as well as Brooklyn, but in recent years has abandoned them. The Henie stand may cause re-evaluation of the feasibility of revitalizing dormant playdates.

PITT PENN ALIVE AGAIN VIA TONY BENNETT UNIT

Pittsburgh, Jan. 29.

Penn Theatre, Loew deluxer, will play its first stageshow in several months week of March 14, when unit headed by Tony Bennett comes in. Lineup will include singer Toni Arden, Lee Davis as m.c., comedy dance team of Harris & Shore, and the Denvers.

Loew house here gets flesh only for spot bookings. It resumed presentations couple of years ago after a 15-year hiatus. Even in last 24 months, however, Penn hasn't had more than half a dozen shows. Last one there was Frankie Laine.

Sophie Tucker's Palladium And 4 Other Brit. Dates

Sophie Tucker's date at the Palladium, London, has been set for April 21. Booking was made some time ago, but starting time was left open pending finalization of the Palladium's plans.

Miss Tucker will essay a series of stands while in Britain. She'll play the Bagatelle, London nitery, April 5; Empire, Glasgow, June 2; Empire, Liverpool, June 16, and the Hippodrome, Birmingham, June 23.

Singer played London shortly after the war at the Casino Theatre. She had been slated to play the Bagatelle last season, but a foot ailment forced her to cancel the trip.

WIRTZ-HENIE TIFF CUES ROUTE WAR

By JOE COHEN

The ice show industry is fearful that the current year may upset certain unwritten agreements which have permitted all major icers to prosper. The split after last season between Sonja Henie and her producer for many years, Arthur M. Wirtz, is causing an upset in the b.o. balances, resulting largely from allocation of territories which may endanger the entire tank industry.

The maiden season show headed by Miss Henie and the longtime Wirtz icer are currently scrambling for some spot bookings. As result of that wrestling for dates, new alliances are emerging which may seriously affect pulling power of the remaining shows. For example, Miss Henie's show is being booked in some situations under auspices of George Tyson, who operates "Holiday on Ice." Tyson reportedly agreed to promote the Henie show in his own territory in return for the skater starring in the European tour of "Holiday." However, since Miss Henie will not play Europe this season, the reason for the presumed tieup is a matter of speculation.

Tyson is moving the Henie blader into areas where he formerly was the sole icer routed. This is the case in Toledo, for instance,

Miami Beach Cafes Team to Curtail Benefits By Their Pactees as Biz-Saver

Miami Beach, Jan. 29.

Overworked stars by promoters of benefits in this winter resort will not work the affairs, legit or otherwise, in 1952-53. Local cafe operators are clamping down on these fund-raisers after commitments for this season are fulfilled. Crux came last week when such presentations stripped the niteries of any decent partonage for several days.

Complaints of the harried bonifaces in recent years were brought up in a meeting last week at Copa City, with reps of legitimate organizations. Seven top nitery owners attended the conference, along with Jerry Baker of American Guild of Variety Artists.

Decision was to allow the commitments this year to go through, with the Variety Club's big annual show not on the okayed list. Result was moving of the all-star annual for the children's hospital sponsored by the Variety Club to the Olympia theatre from the Miami Beach Auditorium.

Chief plaint of the nitery group was fact that on nights when such all-star benefits are held, their business falls off to a minimum and for the following nights as well. Their proposal to remedy matters was allowance of two or three nights annually, with the affairs staged in the bigger night spots and hotels, they dividing their talent in a round-robin idea. Clubowners told benefit reps they had agreed on a stipulation being inserted in all contracts, barring performers from appearing anywhere in Dade County three weeks before or three weeks after contracted date in any local cafe. Clause would apply only to higher-bracketed talent. Small acts would be permitted to work affairs that might not affect nightclub business, such as at hospitals and similar institutions. Mt. Sinai Hospital, incidentally, has set aside a free clinic and hospitalization setup for acts in need, in appreciation of the aid provided by show biz in raising the original $2,500,000 needed to start the hospital several years ago. It is part of the institution's charter.

Biggest beef came on night of annual Policemen's and Firemen's show at Beach dogtrack with over 5,000 in attendance at $5 a head. Use of the 3,500-seat Beach auditorium for other such affairs is another sore spot. Cafemen pointed out that the 3,500-seat is a municipal project built for conventions and not to compete with them. Recent suit by Copa City ops against its use for musical revues and the like was defeated in State Supreme Court. At any rate, the many benefits run in the auditorium will now have to pay for the acts, if they can get them. Last of the all-star nights will be Mt. Sinai's, Feb. 27, to raise $150,000 to make up for the hospital's free-patient clinic loss.

WHO TOOK NEW YORK BY STORM ?
SHE 'DUNN' it!
★ ELAINE DUNN

"A new star is in the making in this room that has been the springboard for numerous luminaries. She is Elaine Dunn, dark-haired tapster, who has the most tantalizing curves, a graceful, natural rhythm and striking beauty. A sure bet for films."
FRANK QUINN, Daily Mirror

"Elaine Dunn is a youngster who sings, dances and projects an amazing personality in the few moments she is on the floor of the Copa's new show. Brunet has plenty of s.a., a pair of flashy gams and a neat voice, all of which stamp her as fine musicomedy material.
"Miss Dunn is cast here as a production performer, but from the moment she steps on there is no doubt this kid deserves more important position. She exudes sex and personality—and talent—to point up her future potentialities."
Kahn, Variety

"Elaine Dunn, the shapely 17-year-old Cleveland-born pop singer at the Copacabana, will be a big new star."
EARL WILSON
New York Post

"An expert new song-and-dance gal named Elaine Dunn "who's custom-tailored and ready for delivery to a Broadway musical."
HY GARDNER
New York Herald Tribune

"A brilliant bow-in performance by a young ballerina named Elaine Dunn, who gave a dynamic account of herself, not only from the terpsichorean standpoint but vocally in the production number."
ROBERT W. DANA
New York World-Telegram & Sun

"The hit of the productions, however, was Elaine Dunn, a clean, pert brunette, who can dance and sing. In fact, her work was so outstanding that she seemed a cinch for better things out of the Copa."

Thin Boxoffice Ice

where Miss Henie will be presented prior to Tyson's own show.

Wirtz's "Hollywood Ice Revue" has been looking for bookings, it is understood, but may be forced to wind up in Detroit, which follows the current run at Madison Square Garden, N. Y. Wirtz has been unwilling to upset other icers and invade territories which already have their quota of tankers.

A Trio in Philly

For example, Philadelphia, which normally plays two refrigerated shows, will get three this year. The Arena, which hosts "Ice Follies" and "Ice Capades," couldn't afford to take on another icer without hurting the b.o. of shows already committed. As a result, Miss Henie engaged the municipal Convention Hall. It's unlikely that all three shows will emerge from Philly with a profit.

For the past decade or so, the ice show field has been generally stabilized. The industry found that few cities could support more than two shows per annum no matter how they were spaced. There are still a few cities now getting only one major show which could support another. New York, with its "Hollywood Ice Revue" shutout, could easily stand another display. However, multiple-show towns are greatly in the minority. It is obvious that new territory has to be explored, or former good areas redeveloped.

As a result the industry itself was forced to weed out the weak sisters. Displays became bigger and costlier as a natural consequence. Until this year, icers had virtually guaranteed territories. "Ice Capades" and "Ice Cycles" are the house property of the Arena Managers Assn., with latter providing bookings because it controls the playing time. The Tyson shows, "Holiday on Ice" and "Ice Vogues," are able to get their own allocation of playing dates on the strength of carrying their own ice, and have built up a series of stands throughout the years which have given each an institutional name in the territories covered.

"Ice Follies" is also a prestige title in numerous cities. It's been playing the same stands for many years and it's an annual event in plenty of towns.

The Wirtz show has been playing its own arenas plus Madison Square Garden. It usually disbanded following a tour of its own stops. Because of some bad weather breaks in the midwest, which caused a decline on some dates, other stands were sought. Wirtz started seeking these dates when most arenas already had made their commitments. There was little open time available without upsetting other shows.

Booking-wise, Miss Henie is in the same shape as Wirtz. She started after dates when there was little open time. She is getting stands nonetheless. But in her case, at least, it's a more expensive method of operation. For example, she has been playing Texas and jumped to her current stand in Denver. She backtracks to Tulsa after Denver.

Miss Henie also carries her own ice and can play virtually anywhere. She's hitting some stands ahead of other shows and it's a safe bet that she'll upset b.o. for those following her. The Henie troupe expects to be on the road for about 30 weeks. Other icers fear that she can do a lot of damage to the competition in that span.

Saranac Lake

By Happy Benway

Saranac, N. Y., Jan. 29.

A salute to Benny Ressler, Bob (IATSE) Tarr, Wilton (IATSE) Birdsong and John Binkley for swelling our "We the Patients" fund.

Bob Nesbitt, manager Paramount Theatre (Gamble Enterprises), Steubenville, O., checked in as for the observation period. Ditto Ted Brennan actor-director of radio and TV, who shot in from N. Y. for the o.o. routine.

Mrs. Joe Biviano reports top progress at the Hudson cottage on Franklin Ave. here. Her hubby is a musician on WNBC, N. Y., and her brother, Charlie Magnanti, an accordionist the Jack Berch radio show.

"Amazing Mr. Ballantine" took time out while en route from Montreal to N. Y. to hello the shut-in gang. He also sponsored a banquet at the Melody Lounge for many of the up patients —a nifty gesture from an ex-patient.

Paul Hein, musician, drew his first OK for a 10-day furlough and is now sapping up Broadway air and reminescing with former coworkers at AFM Local 802 headquarters.

Charles "Chick" Lewis, Variety Clubs-Will Rogers Hospital executive, in from N. Y. for the first 1952 general inspection tour. He was elated over the general progress of the patients.

Gang is all agog over the announcement that RCO and General Electric engineers are skedded here to put up a master aerial so that the patients can get radio reception at their bedside.

S. Coleman Houff, technician from the Pitt-Roth circuit, took the thoracoplasty operation and is back at the Variety Clubs domicile resting comfortably.

Isabelle Rook, musician of yesteryear and an ex-Will Rogers-ite, reports from Raybrook, N. Y., sanatorium that her condition is showing vast improvement. This gal spent 18 months in a plaster cast and is celebrating her coming out of confinement.

When John Langstaff, concert baritone, appeared here as a special booking on the annual program of the Saranac Lake Concert Society, he was billed "By Courtesy of Dr. Warriner Woodruff." Dr. Woodruff is surgeon for the Variety Clubs Hospital. During the last war, Langstaff was wounded by a sniper's bullet that lodged in his lung, an emergency operation was needed to save his life, so he was rushed to Guam where Dr. Woodruff was staff chief medico. The operation was successful, after a year of resting Lang resumed his singing career.

The 1952 bridge tournament started in full at the lodge with the following patients taking part: Shirley Handler, Ruth Burke, Genie (Legit) Reed, Audrey Lumpki , Henrietta Allan, Patricia Payne, George (Elephants) Powers, Otto Hayman, Paul Hein, Jeff Clark, Rufus Weathers, Don Wright.

lucrative and less tiring forms of show biz, notably television and niteries.

Chez Paree Solo

Chicago is also falling off on the cafe front, with only one major spot, the Chez Paree, which suffers acutely when names are not available. Chez does tremendous when it has Durante, Martin & Lewis, Danny Thomas, Sophie Tucker and Joe E. Lewis, but lulls in-between with semi-name fare draw little or no biz. The type of act for this bistro is strictly limited.

Other than the Chez showcase, there are only three hotel rooms with revues. Of these, the Conrad Hilton (Stevens) uses an ice show; the Palmer House, mainly the same names for most of the year with the exception of four months for an original show. Palmer House uses Evelyn Knight, Billy De Wolfe, Dorothy Shay, Kay Thompson & the Williams Bros., regularly, although Merriel Abbott, director of entertainment, is open to new headliners for this spot and others of the Hilton chain which she books.

Edgewater Beach Hotel, far northside hostel, seems more progressive than some of the other inns. Although relying mainly on bands like Freddy Martin, Xavier Cugat, etc., room brought in Hildegarde last fall for six weeks of fine take. Sherman Hotel last year reverted to society orch and same management sliced one act in Buttery to orch quartet. Blackstone, which tried revival of acts for one month, went back to small band.

Only other bistro which used names, Vine Gardens (which established Joey Bishop and booked Myron Cohen, Lind Bros., and others) is down to a four-night operation. Blackhawk Restaurant has had a book revue for the past two years, and doing well.

It's Different Elsewhere

Out of town, however, there is a real battle for names, with the Chase, St. Louis, booking the Andrews Sisters, Celeste Holm and Tony Martin in last few months. Milwaukee is having a real competitive hassle between the Tic-Toc nitery and Schroeder Hotel. Tic-Toc has booked Sophie Tucker and Larry Nixon for Feb. 15 and has used Harry Richman, Myron Cohen, etc., in the past few months. Schroeder is countering with names and is reported to have offered Mario Lanza $12,500 for a week's stay in February, possibly opposite Miss Tucker. Billy DeWolfe comes into the hotel April 1. Lake Club, Springfield, Ill., when it can get attractions, has had some phenomenal weeks, taking in as much as $40,000.

About the only thing that saves the average act in Chicago, other than those playing circuses and fairs and the dates on TV, are regular club dates. This winter seems to have reached a new peak, with some acts working as many as three a night due to the huge demand. Of course, much of this business once belonged to the nightclub, but now companies rent out ballrooms and such for their own private parties. Besides being cheaper, it's easier to deduct as an income tax expense.

PAUL-FORD SKEDDED FOR NINE VAUDERS

Les Paul & Mary Ford have been tapped for a series of Loew theatre dates. Twosome have been set for Cleveland, April 11; Rochester, April 18; Pittsburgh, April 25, and Providence, May 2.

Other dates lined up for the pair include the Paramount, Buffalo, June 5; Fox, Detroit, June 12; Oriental, Chicago, June 19 or 26, and the Riverside, Milwaukee, and the Circle, Indianapolis.

All dates have percentage clauses. In most spots they're getting 50% from the first dollar.

Lou Walters Stymied On 'Peep' for LQ, N.Y.

Lou Walters' deal to import the London Palladium tenant, "Peep Show," for his Latin Quarter, N. Y., has been called off. Walters will bring over another offering by Val Parnell, managing director of the Moss-Empire Theatres, which controls the Palladium. Deal was cancelled because the Prince of Wales Theatre, London, needed a revue and "Peep Show" was shifted into that house.

Walters subsequently felt that he wouldn't be getting a fresh show. He didn't want a layout to preem in the U. S. with six-month-old costumes and sets.

Walters, who just returned from a quickie to London and Paris, stated that he saw no acts for his spot. All those he was interested in have either been signed for a U. S. showing or have played this country recently.

Walters will take his current display at the Latin Quarter, Miami Beach, and bring it into the N. Y. spot in April. There will be several additions, including the Seven Ashtons, a British turn.

Medium-Coin Cafe Units as Gimmick To Meet Video's Name Challenge

Following the success of the Versailles policy of producing its own units, other cafes in New York and elsewhere are set to follow suit. The Latin Casino, Philadelphia, is now plotting a homegrown package. Georgie Hale, who produced the Versailles unit, is charting a similar show for the road. General Artists Corp. also is producing a unit which will be submitted to niteries.

Heavy package activity is another indication of boniface dissatisfaction with the present situation regarding names. Many feel that the big prices being asked for topnotchers are too heavy a gamble. Even if they are willing to pay the tariff, they cannot overcome video's competition for the handful of headliners.

The package price is frequently lower than that of a drawing headliner. For example, the Versailles unit, should it go on the road following its run at the eastside N. Y. cafe, will be peddled at $5,000. The GAC package is being submitted at $3,500.

The difficulty in the cafe packaging field lies in the fact that a considerable amount of time must be lined up in advance, if the package cost is to be amortized. It's a little more hazardous now that the Kentucky gaming spots are not buying as lavishly as they used to because of recent raids. However, there are still a sufficient number of clubs that can shell out heavy coin for shows.

Without names in the lineup, it's a tough proposition to work up a route far in advance. Packagers still have to gamble, hoping that word-of-mouth and trade notices will stimulate bookings.

Chi's $1,000,000 Drive for Fair

Chicago, Jan. 29.

Plans for a permanent Chicago lakefront fair got underway here last week with a drive to raise $1,000,000. Unless money is forthcoming in next few weeks from civic groups and merchants, Maj. Lenox Lohr, head of the Museum of Science & Industry, who says that he will manage the exposition, will drop out of the picture. Lohr managed the Chi fairs of 1933-34 and also headed the Railroad Exposition of 1949. He resigned from that post, and the Lakefront Fair of 1950, which was a flop, was held without his aid.

State of Illinois last session passed a bill taxing racetrack revenue, with most of the money to go to agricultural fairs. Share of the Chi fair would be about $800,000, but as bill was passed last summer, only about $450,000 would be available for the 1952 show.

Lohr is asking for the $1,000,000 in order to get the grounds in shape and erect some new buildings. Most of the structures were temporary.

HENIE'S SUPER-HOT 144G DENVER ADVANCE

Denver, Jan. 29.

Sonja Henie is credited with busting all records for a show in Denver via a reported $144,700 advance in the till before she opened in her ice revue last Thursday (24) at the Coliseum. The building is this town's newest showplace.

Based on the advance alone, the Henie run shapes as a $230,000 grosser. Show is here to Feb. 3.

Abe Schiller's Talent Prowl Plus 'Fresh Face' Gander

Abe Schiller, talent buyer for the Flamingo Hotel, Las Vegas, is currently talent-shopping in New York. He hit town from Miami Beach, where he gandered names playing there.

Schiller plans to book more new talent for the Flamingo. He's seeking a crop of fresh faces to be booked in conjunction with names.

Ex-La. Gov. Jimmy Davis Floor-Showing in Texas

Dallas, Jan. 29.

Jimmy Davis made one of his few nitery appearances, playing the Bridgeport Club here last Friday (25). It's expected to be one of several visits to various cities by the singing ex-governor of Louisiana.

Davis is skedded for five other Texas cities before touring Canada.

Own Rink Saves Sonja From K.C. Ice Shutout

Kansas City, Jan. 29.

Kansas City is to have its annual spring ice show, even though it no longer has a regular rink. The Sonja Henie icer has been booked to play the Municipal Auditorium Feb. 14-20. The Henie revue carries its own rink, the only way in which such shows can now play this town.

Ice shows heretofore played the Pla-Mor Arena, leased recently to a commercial firm as a warehouse. "Ice Capades" played there annually, but will not hit town this spring.

Henie is being booked by Continental Ice Promotions and brought in here by John Antonello. Sked includes Tulsa before the K. C. date, with Toledo following.

Sinatra, Gleason 25G N.Y. Par Duo

Frank Sinatra and Jackie Gleason, who have teamed on video for several shows, are being paired for the Paramount Theatre, N. Y., for late March or early April. Packaged by Music Corp. of America, combo will include a name orch and surrounding acts and is being sold for around $25,000 plus percentages. Twosome are going in with Sinatra's pic, "Meet Danny Wilson."

The Sinatra-Gleason booking is another example of theatremen attempting to cash in on combos developed in television. Attempt had been made to sell Gleason at the head of a package for $17,500, but there were no takers. Tandem with Sinatra was then formulated.

It's the only date that will be played by this twosome. Both will be in New York at that time, and both will be tied up by respective video shows. Sinatra has been doing his program from the Coast and he'll come east for about five weeks.

Mpls. Cops See, Okay Zorine & Ingagi; St. P. Brass No See, No Want

Minneapolis, Jan. 29.

A self-constituted censorship board, comprising the police department's purity squad head and three members, one of them a policewoman, passed on Zorine & Ingagi, "queen of nudists and Hollywood film gorilla," at the Minneapolis Flame nitery and gave the act its approval.

In St. Paul, the police chief himself banned the act before it opened at the St. Paul Flame. He hadn't seen it, but found the advertising objectionable and "misleading" and said he had had complaints.

When, afterwards, it was billed for the Minneapolis Flame, the local police chief said he'd have to see the act before passing on it. He sent the four department members to the opening. Neither Minneapolis nor St. Paul has any official censor board or censorship.

The Morning Tribune ran a picture of the four police department members sitting at a table watching the act—with just cups of coffee in front of them. Underneath was a pic of scantily clad Zorine and her male dancing partner who appears in the guise of the gorilla. It was a great publicity break for the bistro.

In Minneapolis, the advance advertising was toned down and did not refer to Zorine as "queen of the nudists," but simply called the offering "the most sensational act in the show business."

Agency offering the act states in its literature, "the act can be arranged to conform with local censorship."

Sennes Gets Todd's 'Peep' Title for Nitery Package

Cleveland booker Frank Sennes has completed a deal with Mike Todd for use of latter's "Peep Show" title for a layout to be pared down to unit proportions for nitery exhibition.

Sennes plans to play the package in spots which he books. These include Desert Inn, Las Vegas; Beverly Hills Country Club, Newport, Ky., and Lookout House, Covington, Ky.

Garland's Sudden Feb. 17 Notice Puts Palace in a Name Dilemma

Judy Garland's sudden decision to cancel out of the Palace, New York, two-a-day has left theatre execs in a terrific quandary. Circuit toppers are at the moment caught short without a headliner to follow the singer's final show, Feb. 17.

Offers have been nixed by Jimmy Durante. Noel Coward similarly cabled refusal inasmuch as he'll be in Bermuda putting the finishing touches to a book.

Deal was almost concluded with Sophie Tucker, but she too turned down the proposition. Miss Tucker felt that inasmuch as she hasn't played a vaude house in many years, she needed a new act to fit the situation. She didn't want

'Skating Vanities' Nabs OK 30G in Salt Lake City 6

Salt Lake City, Jan. 29.

"Skating Vanities of 1952" opened a four-day stand here last Thursday (24) and hit an okay $30,000 for six performances at the Coliseum. Weekend clearing after two days of rain upped the Saturday and Sunday matinees to brighten the b.o. picture.

Roller outfit came here from Sacramento where the turnout was reportedly strong. Show plays Des Moines next, still without producer Harold Steinman, who is bedded down at the Flamingo in Las Vegas with a virus infection.

"Thank you Ralph Snider and Al Taxier for an A-1 Engagement at BRADFORD HOTEL."

KEN BARRY

BOSTON DAILY RECORD
JANUARY 18, 1952

GEORGE CLARKE
Around Boston

HE'S A QUIET LITTLE GUY, with an easy-going way about him, so you sort of settle back and listen, neither enthused nor bored. Then, little by little, you realize that he's getting laughs, not just snickers, real, honest-to-goodness laughs.

And you realize, too, that the audience is raptly attentive; that, using a show business phrase, he "has 'em eating out of the palm of his hand."

His jokes are good, too, and his little piece of business using hats and caps to dramatize the words, is truly funny, hilariously funny, so funny that he has to beg off with a speech to bring the show to an end.

New Comedian

And then you know that a bright, new comedian has come to town, one of whom you are sure to hear more of later, a tyro Jackie Miles, one day, will be up there in the big money as a natural-born humorist.

He's KEN BARRY and he tops the bright, new show at the Bradford's Circus Room, which is, with all due credit for those which have gone before, the best of the season.

And one of the nicest things about the show, particularly so as to KEN BARRY, is that there isn't even the suggestion of a smirk in the program from start to finish, further proof that smut and blue jokes are wholly unnecessary.

BARRY is so easy-going and so casual in his performance that it is actually difficult to say "this is a routine," or "that is a set joke." His whole effort is so informal as to seem ad lib. He did particularly well, for instance, with a large group from the Harvard School of Nuclear Science, there with Al Pote. And they are pretty sharp people.

Waldorf-Astoria, N. Y.

(EMPIRE ROOM)

Bob Fosse, Gloria DeHaven, Nat Brandwynne Orch, Mischa Borr Latin Band; $2 cover after 9:30.

Filmster Gloria DeHaven, with songs, and hoofer Bob Fosse comprise the current Empire Room bill, and the playing values are not all that they might be. The big minus lies in the performance of Miss DeHaven.

Sporting a poodle haircut, Miss DeHaven has lots of verve, and she's cute-looking as well, but she lacks the vocal ability to get by in a class spot such as the Waldorf. Using an even mixture of ballads and rhythm numbers, Miss DeHaven does better on the latter, as indicated by such numbers as her opening "Love Is Just Around the Corner," "Love Isn't Born," "Let's Misbehave" and "Love Is Here to Stay."

Fosse is a talented young hoofer with a future in musical comedy, but his act as done here is out of sorts. He does some specialty hoofing for a starter that is the kind of stuff for the midway mark, with Fosse's apologetic acknowledgment of that spotting being no face-saver. This opener includes a medley of an East Indian bit, combined tango and paso doble, and "Old Soft Shoe."

Fosse's "Time of Your Life" bit, a la Gene Kelly, seems too palpably a concoction to suggest to the audience (any producers present?) that here is another prospect for Gene Kelly roles. Fosse's dance interpretation of "Slaughter on 10th Ave.," which Kelly did in the Metro musical, "Words and Music," emphasizes that thinking. This is not to discredit Fosse's ability; it's just that he should rely on new material to stress his own individuality. Otherwise, he is a nifty hoofer, and he can handle talk as well, in addition to indicating a dramatic flair in "10th Ave."

Nat Brandwynne's orch plays neatly for the show, and alternates with Mischa Borr's band for the dancing. Kahn.

Ciro's, Hollywood

Hollywood, Jan. 24.

Liberace, Dassie Bros., Dick Stabile Orch (7); $2 cover.

Keyboarder Liberace is not new to this smart clientele but always welcome. He opened in a downpour and closed in a gale of applause. Water-logged Coasters never venture far from the home hearth, but Liberace must have a magnetic pull. The room was well filled at opening and he rewarded their storm-braved presence with an engaging session of pianology.

The fast crowd that frequents this watering hole are suckers for his artistry, especially the backroom beat. His flying fingers and fidgety feet never slacken in their melodic cadence, whether it's "Warsaw Concerto" or "Piano Roll Blues," a classic in barrelhouse rhythm. He projects not only a virtuosity that few pianists of his genre have mastered but an infectious charm that spreads a warming aura over the room. At times he's tempted to vocalize to break the steady diet of key tapping, and while it's easy to take, it's a secondary attraction.

His brother, George, takes over Dick Stabile's band for the main staging and whatever the mood, he strokes a fiddle or shakes a gourd. To the credit of both the Liberaces, there is little time wasted on intros or patter. The only break between numbers is to rest his digits and flash a smile over his white tie.

Dassie Bros., who have been much teeveed of late, have a tumbling act that is as fast and novel as any that's been around the nitery time. Their falls are the acme of precision and timing, speeding them through the stint for solid returns. Helm.

Baker Hotel, Dallas

(MURAL ROOM)

Dallas, Jan. 23.

Sophie Tucker, with Ted Shapiro; Pierson Thal Orch (8); $3 cover.

Sophie Tucker's half-century in show biz encompasses Texas vaude dates in 1913-14-15, but a new generation was on deck to appraise the grand lady. R. J. O'Donnell (Interstate Theatres topper), on opening night, introed with "meet an old friend, for more years than Sophie and I care to remember—'Mrs. Show Business' — Sophie Tucker'." She came on with a kiss for O'Donnell, she saw the packed room and she conquered the crowd. Factually, she was greeted with an ovation at opening—and it never stopped. Closing lines of her songs were inaudible due to the heavy advance mitting of the mob.

From her opening talk-song stint, it's solid entertainment—not an offering, not a selling, but a projection of showmanship that is thrust down their throats, for which they're waiting with open mouths.

Bulk of the act comprises special material—so much so that it's difficult to chart her course. Spirit of the songs is nostalgic, but Miss Tucker gets fresh as a daisy at times. She gets yocks in confessing she's known to men as "open house Soph" and to hepcats as "hot rod Soph."

Spicy lyrics are cleverly sold; there's no affront, but the blush can be felt in the darkened room when she sings ribald advice about mink coats to young ladies, and narrates the saga of "Horse-Playing Papa."

She sings of her golden anni, "That Old Gang of Mine," and prop-caricatures Ted Lewis, Jimmy Durante, Harry Richman, Eddie Cantor and Joe E. Lewis. In the pop field, she gets the mob with her, singing "Dinah," "Shine On Harvest Moon" and "Let Me Call You Sweetheart." Clincher is a dramatic Yiddish number, sung in English, "My Mother's Sabbath Lights," which quieted the crowd.

Ted Shapiro's piano accomp and banter-swapping are exceptional. At piano or dialog, he proves his worth to Miss Tucker. Bark.

Edgewater Beach, Chi

(MARINE ROOM)

Chicago, Jan. 25.

Xavier Cugat Orch (16), with Abbe Lane, Los Barrancos, Dulcina, Candy DiMalig, El Gringo; $1 cover, $2.50 minimum.

Xavier Cugat is practically a household phrase at this hotel. It's his third visit to Marine Room within a year's span, and opening-night biz indicated the Latino entourage remains a strong magnet. The combo of Cugat's smooth hosting, the band's intricate south-of-border tooting, brightly plumed specialties and, of course, Abbe Lane, makes for first-rate nitery fare.

Prime lure for the conventioneers and fatigued business men is Miss Lane and her agile curves. Her physical repertory remains as well rounded as ever and her showmanship likewise has smoothed out into competent projection. Her poise and timing are clicko throughout, making a pleasing complement to her natural endowments. She garners rapt concentration from the patrons as she scorches through "Jack, Jack, Jack," "Acapulco Polka" and a Latin medley.

The fast paced acro-terping of the Los Barrancos alerts the diners in opening spot. Lad and gal duo skip off to a big mitt after their frenzied mambo. Dulcina, Spanish chirp, is eyecatching with her gyrations through "Rhumbane." El Gringo scores effectively with his tambourine pyrotechnics on "Tico, Tico." The midway pacer features fluter Candy DiMalig and the orch in an intriguingly tropical flavored "Jungle Flute" oddity that comes off neatly.

It's a colorful package destined to keep the Edgewater welcome mat out for the Cugat assemblage for seasons to come. Dave.

Mocambo, H'wood

Hollywood, Jan. 23.

Rose Murphy, with Red Callendar; Al Sheff-Chuy Hernandez Orch (5), Stewart Hart, $1.50, $2 cover.

Patrons of this strip spot are sometimes accused of being members of the chi chi set, but apparently not enough so to indicate any great returns for the fortnight stand of Rose Murphy, the "Chi Chi Girl." Stylist's voice and name are too thin to mean much here. Stint she's offering won't do anything to build word-of-mouth since it's more what might be expected in a cocktailery than as the solo show fare in a major room.

Miss Murphy rockets through a dozen numbers in her 25 minutes, hardly pausing for breath. Turn, however, needs better pacing, and her preoccupation with evergreens makes the stint just a little too heavy on nostalgia. Some special material or one or two newer tunes would help considerably. Best attention-getters are "Honeysuckle Rose," "Stormy Weather," "Time on My Hands" and "Twelfth Street Rag." Even these, however, were inaudible beyond ringside on opening night, chirp failing to realize that the button mikes operate best at close quarters.

Opener appeared to be the first time all component parts of the floor-show had been put together, adding to the difficulty. Even Miss Murphy's accompanist-arranger, Red Callendar, seemed to be unsure of what was coming next—and the drummer in the Sheff-Hernandez five-piece orch managed to stay a shade behind the beat throughout the show. Kap.

Monte Proser's La Vie En Rose, with its current two-act bill of Dorothy Dandridge and Carl Ravazza, may have hit the correct formula after floundering on its show policy since its opening less than a year ago. The eastside French-decored cafe has been on a spot for the kind of medium-bracket names that could bring 'em in, and this is the first two-ply combo that fills the bill from both an entertainment and biz standpoint.

The light-skinned, colored Miss Dandridge, a slim s.a. looker in the Lena Horne tradition, goes over strongly with a flock of tunes that she sells especially from the personality standpoint. Miss Dandridge is weak in putting over a ballad but this is the type of tune that she does infrequently. But when she bounces the rhythms, she comes pretty close to Lena Horne at her best, though without some of the manifestly phoney gyrations that seem to have encumbered Miss Horne in recent years.

Miss Dandridge is an interesting performer to watch as well as listen to. Her opener, "Love Isn't Born," sock and bouncey, though somewhat slowed by the too-dramatic blues number that follows. But then she's back where she starts with a rhythm novelty in which she really projects her s.a. for the first time. "Blow Out the Candles," "Old Devil Moon" and "Gonna See My Baby Tonight" follow in order and click strongly; then her second weakie, the ballad, "Someone to Watch Over Me."

Miss Dandridge is an attention-getter all the way, and no small factor in her socko is the backing she gets from Phil Moore's instrumental trio, with Moore at the piano. Moore does her nifty arrangements.

Ravazza has been a holdover of the last couple of weeks, and he, too, is selling s.a., which makes it a nifty parlay for one bill though, perhaps, it's somewhat anomalous having two singer on a two-act layout. There's no obvious conflict, inasmuch as they're doing different types of numbers.

Ravazza is still selling the pink-cheeked, boyish charm, and he leans towards novelty tunes intermixed with the standards. He's a personality singer in every sense of the word, and he knows how to use his voice effectively. The early portion of his performance is devoted to novelties, while he gives over the tailend of his stage stay to sock standards such as "Wrap Your Troubles in Dreams," "September Song," "Blue Heaven" and the like. His earlier portion includes a rhythmic opener, while moving into the spotlight from the rear of the room, followed by "Old Master Painter," "Rock, Rock," a light Calypso and his inevitable "Pedro." He does ballads and rhythms equally as well, but could possibly shorten his stay by several minutes. Kahn.

El Rancho, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, Jan. 23.

Luba Malina, Borrah Minevitch Harmonica Rascals (5), with Johnny Puleo, Lenny Kent, Jerry Pedersen, Joy Walker, Louise Burnett, El Rancho Dancers (7); Ted Fio Rito Orch (10); no cover or minimum.

Combination of Luba Malina, Harmonica Rascals and Lenny Kent links layout of fair proportions which shape as ditto biz for El Rancho Vegas.

Staging underwent changes following opening show to place Harmonica Rascals in closing slot, Luba Malina deuce, and Lenny Kent, as emcee, tossing his turn over at top. Latter name was added in last-minute booking.

Miss Malina's material misses fire, although most of her specials are cleverly worded and sung. Expressive face, odd accent and presence should make for more returns in laughter division. Parodies "Old Actors Never Die," "Marriage Is a Girl's Best Friend," "Ghost Writers in the Sky."

Harmonica Rascals have better showcase here than in local previous stand at a much more capacious room. Audience gets a chance to gander capers of little Johnny Puleo as he gets slapped about. Doing comedics and knockabouts, lads put forth some creditable harmonica work on "Sabre Dance," "Poet and Peasant Overture," "Nightingale," and "Peg O' My Heart." Reaction is terrif, with yocks pulled from Puleo's pantos.

Lenny Kent uses similar material he did in sortie at this room a month ago. Collection of smart patter is employed during emcee introing, plus 20-minute period on his own. Tosses over steady stream of hep gags, culminating in Texan lampoon with "Buddy Buddy." Impresh of Billy Daniels in "Old Black Magic" rounds off segment for solid palms.

El Rancho Dancers preem this packet with couple of fair routines. Opening fling features male terper — warbler Jerry Pedersen. Looker Louise Burnett hits stratosphere with some coloraturing. "Spanish Boogie" is best of choreo pair. Standout in both showcases is blonde Joy Walker with solos. Ted Fio Rito orch hits off capably, with maestro stooging from keyboard for some of Kent's setups. Will.

Chez Paree, Montreal

Montreal, Jan. 24.

Johnny Howard, Clark Bros. (2), Wally Aspell, Boots McKenna Line (7), Palm De Luca Orch (8), Peter Barry Quartet; 85c admission.

Johnny Howard, heavy fave in this town, is a logical bet for the Chez Paree management to rustle up a little biz that has been sadly lacking around local saloons for the past month.

Returning with new material but basing it entirely on his old routines, Howard whams over a rousing 50-minute session that runs the gamut from his ringside heckling, through a brace of vocal offerings, to a socko windup featuring his impresh of Cab Calloway, Louis Armstrong, Rose Murphy, et al. Last-named is probably newest item in the Howard catalog and guy does fairly convincing job despite inevitable Howardisms.

After so many appearances in Montreal and establishing a rep for being bluer than the average comic, Howard has difficulty breaking in any new stuff, with the customers yammering for the oldies regardless of the quality. However, for a performer well out of his 20s, his stamina and overall adlibbing more than make up for the occasional bomb he drops.

Layout tees off with Clark Bros., a sepia team of young hoofers who spin out four routines for plaudits. Boys maintain a hot pace, mix their tap work with plenty of eccentrics, but kill impact with a gab interlude midway through terping that offers nothing. Kids would do well to get some material if they intend doing a comedy spot during their breather.

The McKenna line, sporting a few new steppers, does only a couple of routines, cutting out the finale because of Howard's lengthy stint. Palm De Luca's orch cuts show music easily with Wally Aspell emceeing and baritoning a few production numbers. Peter Barry's combo spells De Luca with some okay Latin tempos between shows. Newt.

L'Abbaye, Paris

Paris, Jan. 23,

Gordon Heath, Lee Payant; no cover, 220 francs minimum (75c).

Off St. Germain Des Pres, this intime boite run by two Americans shoehorns in the faithful and the tourist elements every night. Gordon Heath and Lee Payant alternate and pair in an impressive repertoire of English, French and American folk numbers. Drinks are reasonable and this is a good spot for an after-dinner pause or after-theatre relaxing. Atmosphere is informal and cordial. Heath and Payant gladhand their clientele with warmth that pays off in return visits and word-of-mouth.

Heath starts the proceedings at 9:30 sharp and the door is firmly closed until each number is finished. Any interruption is quickly hushed by the audience. He holds the floor until 10:30 with fine renditions of spirituals, folk songs and novelties. Seated on a dias, he maintains a good guitar accompaniment and commands attention by fine voice and delivery.

Payant nicely complements Heath's serious style with clever little deliveries. Has a good sense of timing and puts over the numbers well. Last part of evening has the boys doing some good duet work on a series of numbers. Their French is impeccable, which pleases the Gallic clientele. Mitting is muted to the snapping of fingers due to the kids sleeping upstairs plus police complaints.

Heath and Payant have both done legit work here and in London. The clientele is mostly a young French set with a big smattering of American, English and Scandinavian tourist. Club holds 40 but squeezes in 100 during the night. When caught, place was strictly SRO. Mosk.

Clover Club, Miami

Miami, Jan. 26.

Lena Horne, Jay Lawrence, The Dunhills (3), Joy Skylar, Gene Griffin, Arden-Fletcher Dancers, Tony Lopez Orch (15); beverage minimum, $3.50 & $6 at dinner; $6 food or beverage, supper show.

For the first time in a decade a mainland nitery is packing them in to the point where there are turnaways every evening. Topper came Saturday night (26) when over 1,000 were jammed into the Clover Club to see Lena Horne, with over 400 nixed on accommodations.

In this, her first appearance in the south, Miss Horne marks the season's hottest attraction, with big ad displays in local dailies, plus that inevitable word-of-mouth after preem night last Wednesday (23) building the score for the first weekend climax of the tremendous overflow.

Here is a sock show all the way, from entre' acts such as the Dunhills, who wham with their triple-threat hoofery encompassing ace precision top work, to the acro flips of the more muscular member for the topper.

Jay Lawrence works up a well handled albeit slow starting—stint that builds from a series of weak opening gags into his standard impreshes, okay for the average mitts. Then winds into a palm-pounding finale via his character impreshes of sports, TV and broadcast types. In a tough spot, as are all acts—with the tableholders awaiting Miss Horne's entrance—he rates kudos for his work.

The Arden-Fletcher line work is sprightly and colorful to make for continued pace with Joy Skylar a standout on her lead-routinings that easily rate her the solo spots for the group. Production singer Gene Griffin is a handsome, affable lad who handles his song assignments well, and emcees capably.

Entrance of Miss Horne was embraced by the hep opening-night crowd with an extended reception. Nervous at first, she warmed quickly and soon had them won through her series of nine artfully blended arrangements, delivered in the original sultry style that kept them entranced throughout.

Tees off with 'Ridin' On The Moon," follows with intelligent balancing of rhythm, ballad and torch to rapt attention. Trick of working to all the aud, despite stage setup which made her circle to reach them, added to aud impact. Standouts were her "Deed I Do," "Can't Help Lovin' That Man," "Lady Is A Tramp" and the demanded encore, "Stormy Weather." The 35-minute stint labelled her one of the top performers to have played this resort city, which has seen only the best. Had to beg off.

Tony Lopez and augmented orch, from seven to 16, including Miss Horne's own trio of piano, bass and drums, is tops on the backgrounding. Lary.

Ciro's, London

London, Jan. 16.

Mumford Puppets, Helen Cordet, Ronnie O'Dell's Orch, Francisco Cavez Rhumba Band; $5 minimum.

Current layout at this lush West End nitery strikes a more original note by neatly blending a vocal act with the Mumford Puppets. Combination makes a pleasing entertainment, and although they won't need to put the ropes out, should attract steady biz.

Helen Cordet, resident at Ciro's for some months, winds her current engagement with this stint. Her style and the quality of her voice have improved considerably, but her principal asset is a gay, vivacious personality that infuses life into the most staid of customers. Opening with a medley of French tunes, she goes through a neat Anglo-French routine. Two or three of her numbers, designed for audience-participation, are frankly unsophisticated, but get required response.

Frank & Maisie Mumford have an intriguing act with their puppets, but much of the illusion in some of the numbers is spoiled by topheavy lighting. There is no attempt at concealing their technique. The Mumfords are on stage while their marionettes dance to a Fats Waller number, sing an operatic aria and take part in a Paris nitery scene. One item in which one of the puppets dances across the floor is performed with great skill and charm. The one unsatisfying note in the entertainment is the musical accompaniment vi disks. The vocals demand mor than the marionettes could giv. Straight-forward backgrounding would have been more satisfactory.

The Ronnie O'Dell aggregation provides sterling accomp for Miss Cordet and alternates for dancing with Francisco Cavez's Latin-American combo. Myro.

Desert Inn, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, Jan. 22.

Dagmar, Facundo-Rivero Quintet, Sid Gould, Anthony, Allyn & Hodges, Danny Dayton, Alan Gilbert, Arden-Fletcher Dancers (8), Carlton Hayes Orch (11); no cover or minimum.

Dagmar is the marquee name pulling in more than capacity crowds every show and keeping the casino jampacked with gamesters. Every night is New Year's eve as long as she's around these parts.

Curiosity which acts as magnet seems to be satisfied somewhat as tab-grabbers ogle her torso. As a performer, she offers light talent superimposed on nerve. From walkon, attired in gowns designed to reveal the muchly-touted promontories to best advantage, Dagmar goes about her job of entertaining with gusto. Natural flair for dumbdame comedy is keystone upon which writers Lou Meltzer and Allan Walker have built her routine.

Intro gab is wide-eyed amazement of Las Vegas culture before chirping "Ballin' the Jack." Sid Gould, recruited from teevee, comes on this juncture to point up situations. He's clicko as foil, with mugging and ad libs pulling big yocks. Gould seeks autograph in character of tourist from Alabama. Brings on Danny Dayton as newspaper reporter with sketch based primarily on measurement theme, which segues into Gould-Dagmar duetting of "A, You're Adorable."

Highlight is sketch roping in maestro Carlton Hayes, a moonfaced musician from orch, and Gould and Dag yockworthy sight script scanning. "Dagmar for President" theme leads into "If I Should Be Elected President." Return is ringside undulation and trib to audience, "I Think You're Wonderful," to solid plaudits.

Facundo-Rivero Quintet wraps up casement with fiery Latin roundelays and terps. Cuban combo has legit flavoring, but with positive aural and visual nitery embellishments. Facundo-Rivero stands at keyboard while two good-looking femmes and two males go into momentum attired in West Indies frills. Songalog consists of "Pachita Eche," "Majarete," "Jelenque" and "United Cafe." Response builds into closing ovation.

Gould has solo fling deuce, pouring forth a frantic monology good for plenty howls. Active comic divests occasional blue gem, Yiddish stories, and standards. Warbles parodies in trick gargle, meanwhile hurling taunts at hapless ringsider. Makes subject uncomfortable, but Gould keeps situation well beneath exploding point.

Anthony, Allyn & Hodges prep stanza with ballroom lampooning. Gorgeous redhaired gal gets tossed about after three begin romp with serioso glides. Hokum builds into rout, but with terrif tricks displayed all the way and especially at climax. Trio's begoff gab is neat touch of comedy.

Arden-Fletcher line waves pseudo-collegiate opener, but clicks on "Peruvian Mambo," with titian-tressed, pigtailed Fluff Charlton's sexy hip-tossing. Alan Gilbert vocalizes production rounds and emcees smoothly. Will.

Palumbo's, Philly

Philadelphia, Jan. 26.

Stone & Shine, Jaye Bros., Holly Warren, Senor Cortez, Frederick & Tanya, Tony Leonard, Spic and Span, Howard Reynolds Orch (9); $2 minimum Sat.

Two-hour show is right in line with long-established Palumbo policy of giving 'em all the entertainment they can take. Big 600-seat room, which makes definite play for banquet and dining-out trade, has always specialized in variety and copious acts. Napkin-wearers are usually in mellow and receptive mood and performer can always knock himself out and still be called back for more.

Dance and comedy duo, Bert Stone & Eddie Shi , who scored in their previous appearance at Palumbo's, are back as headliners of the current revue. They did 35 minutes at end of long show and had to beg off. Stone acts as conferencier, while his partner breaks up the spieling with fast terp sessions. Stone has an easy floor presence and an amiable style of story-telling. His dialect bits range from Yiddish to Texan. Shine steps nimbly and scores with impresh sequence that lists okay takeoffs of Astaire, Bolger and Bill Robinson. Pair work well together in the comedy bits, showing result of long association.

Boys still have tendency to hold obsequies when a bit they like misses the audience, and point up the joke's demise instead of socking right ahead. They also could drop the voice-training, face-slapping business.

Second spot on bill goes to the Jaye Bros. (New Acts). Senor Cortez, a Mex peon outfit, comes through with a swingy mandolin and contagious rhythm that rocks room. Senor's singing of items like "Cumbachero" and "Mule Train" is not in the same groove, however.

Flashy and effective is the dance team of Frederick & Tanya, the gal a tall, arresting blonde. First offering is conventional ballroom terping in Latin time, with Tanya suspended in air for whirling close. Second number is boy-and-girl business to variety of steps, with lady tossing gent around for finale.

Other acts are Holly Warren, a soprano of the light operatic school, who warbles "Because" and a "Showboat" medley; Tony Leonard, who does the intros and knocks off a couple ballads, and Spic & Span, sepia hoofers (boy and girl), who kick off the proceedings in fast tempo. Gagh.

Billy Gray's, Hollywood

(FOLLOWUP)

Hollywood, Jan. 24.

Rotund Buddy Hackett holds over for another four frames at this Hollywood humor harbor, surrounded by a new layout that continues the variety format which is standard at Billy Gray's Band Box. Show needs smoothening here and there, but should be successful.

Hackett continues to please with fresh stuff and an easy approach. One of the best new comics to hit these parts in some time, he has built enough of a following to guarantee him a place among the group of funsters booked regularly by Sammy Lewis.

Heading the newcomers is Alice Tyrrell, singling again after her professional and marital split from Dick Winslow. She obviously got custody of some of the material and she uses it well. Opener, however, is on the ragged side and needs more emphasis on the comedy stuff which she socks. Best of her stint is her now-familiar "Audition" song i which she takes off Garland, Durbi and Pons.

Skylarks, vocal quintet, earn attention with fast five numbers. Nick Castle has stepped in to aid their routining since they were last seen locally, and the results are easily noted. Group features some okay close-harmony arrangements of standards and a special "Vaudeville Is Back" that clicks. One or two more in the same vein wouldn't hurt.

Show opener young Tommy Gumina, a squeezebox specialist who's going places. Deft fingering and arrangements back a repertoire that ranges from opera to boogie and is soulfully sold. Youngster looks promising, especially for TV. Kap.

Eddys', K. C.

Kansas City, Jan. 23.

Jackie Green, Consolo & Melba, Tony DiPardo Orch (8); $1 cover.

It's a repeat date for the club of the Eddy Bros., identical bill playing the spot about a year ago. Biz was good at that time, and the setup repeats on that score again, the Friday night opening (18) being before a sizable gathering. In 45 minutes, the show proves to be well stacked with entertainment and effectively paced for mounting response from customers.

Orch leader Tony DiPardo begins session with a Dixieland instrumentation on "Jazz Me Blues," and follows with his own trumpeting of "Hot Lips." Dance team of Consolo and partner Melba are on for sextet of numbers done with vocal background and variety of lighting effects.

They step in lively fashion through a Cuban mambo, and wind with their established sock finish, a romantic routine to "I'm Forever Blowing Bubbles" as real bubbles from a battery of overhead gadgets flood the floor. Patrons give them a rousing sendoff.

Jackie Green draws comedy from a half-hour round of songs, dialects, stories parodies and impressions, starting at a moderate pace and building to a sock reaction on his Jolson and Durante bits. Enroute he kids the Irish with song and brogue, tells a flock of yarns, most of them for good share of laughs, and sings a comedy parody to "On Top of Old Smoky." Interlude as Giuseppe La Motta proves a vocal workout in both dialect and effects, and yanks a string of laughter from U. S. history as encountered by an Italian immigrant.

Green then shifts to impressions, doing Cantor in good fashion, followed by Jolson which gets him a heavy accolade for "Rockabye Baby." Round of chatter and vocal of "Inka Dinka Doo" in accredited Durante style get him his biggest response of the evening, and for a chaser he closes with a briefie on Barry Fitzgerald. He shows himself the seasoned performer all the way, has the house readily in his pocket, and wisely closes while they're hankering for more. It's hep entertainment. Quin.

Chase Hotel, St. L.

(CHASE CLUB)

St. Louis, Jan. 23.

Another of the occasional departures from the long standing policy of this swank westend spot of fetching back the same personalities is the current thrush Mindy Carson and Eddie Garson, ventriloquist. Both are making their local bow. The blonde singer easily cops top honors.

Despite a red face occasioned when she frankly admitted that she had forgotten the lyrics of "Mad About the Boy," a ditty she said she has been warbling for two years, Miss Carson quickly overcame the embarrassing situation when she swung into "All the Things You Are." The well filled room dished out a resounding mitt.

Her interp of "Boutonniere," during which she tossed carnations to the ringsiders, was outstanding in her repertoire at session caught. Attired in a gold tulle off-the-shoulder gown, her initial offering was "Meet Me In St. Louis" with the lyrics switched to give the hotel a bally. Instead of winding up with "Meet Me at the Fair," she worded it "meet me at the Chase." Then she copped a solid hand for her "Cry," "Fools Rush In," "Continental" and, for encores, "I've Got a Crush on You" and the faux pas on "Mad About the Boy."

Garson has novel manner in introducing "Chico Chico," extracting the dummy from a large cylinder instead of toting him in his arms. Using a neat Spanish dialect for the dummy, Garson wins a few chuckles but some new stuff would help considerably. Fina's tooters score solidly with "Bumble Boogie" to tee off the proceedings, and backs the acts neatly. Sahu.

Nautilus Hotel, Miami

Miami Beach, Jan. 27.

Archie Robbins, Stella & Jose Reyes, Beverly Fowler, Ralph Font Orch; $2 minimum.

This mid-Beach hotel has brought Archie Robbins into the big Driftwood Room, fresh from his click at Copa City; and marking return of the better name idea after a several-month hiatus which featured local acts and orchs. That the idea is a good one was proved by the crowds turning out with the smooth laughmaker setting up a sock 40-minute sesh.

Most of his material is fresh, even to routine on hotel owners and their over-priced ideas for rooms; sustains with newies on marital relations, then on special-material songology he wraps up with "Basement in the Bronx" based on "Manhattan Towers" and screwy French chantoosey routine. Tops with original on how TV commercials would sound with a Met-opera company projecting them. Encore sequence was another original on Las Vegas and gambling there, "Las Vegas Under Your Skin." Could have stayed on all night. He's an obvious bet for the video guest shots, and from stuff shown, his own TV spot.

Dances in the Latino groove by Stella & Jose Reyes and their group are well handled and not as frenetic as the usual hip-swingers hereabouts, to make for a refreshing stint. Songs of Beverly Fowler are adequate. She needs plenty of work to build her vocalistics, as shading and projection are weak. Ralph Font orch handles the showbacks in fair fashion. On the dance segments they set up smooth arrangements. Lary.

Embassy Club, London

London, Jan. 17.

Claude Marchant's "Tropical Rhythms," with Kathleen Stanford, Ted Bardett, Charles Moore, Marina Billingsby, Berne Byers, Ruth Ham, Joan Smith; choreography, Claude Marchant; musical director, Luis Cardenas; Don Carlos Samba Band, Billy Sproud's Orch; $4.50 minimum.

With the presentation of this revue, the Embassy Club introduces a major change in policy. Normal cover charge ($3 entrance fee) has been dropped and minimum prices scaled down to a more competitive level, making this Bond St. nitery one of the most reasonable late night spots in town. And they made an auspicious start with a near-capacity house for the opening night of the Afro-Cuban Dances.

The Claude Marchant troupe have, in past years, achieved considerable fame for their Cuban style rhythm dancing on the Continent, but their presentation at the Embassy marked their London debut. This is a vivid, exciting and expressive dance combination, with original routines, a high sense of rhythm and first-rate timing.

The Afro-Cuban team are first-class, but their limitations must be obvious in cabaret. The ringside diners, who get a full view of the show, are the only ones able to appreciate fully the intricacies of the routines, whereas others are only able to follow movements from the waist upward. This is inevitable in any room sans rising floor.

The company have trimmed their act to keep it within the standard half-hour limit, but in that time are able to give some vivid examples of their colorful terping styles. Their opening piece, "Romanza," with the full company, is a gay romantic item, in contrast to the next number, "Voodoo Moon," which is a solo spot for the stars, Claude Marchant and Kathleen Stanford. Follows a clicko solo dance by Ruth Ham, labelled "Mumbo Jumbo," and then Duke Ellington's "Solitude" provides a fascinating vehicle for the two principals in a routine danced in New Orleans apache fashion. The full aggregation combine to bring color to the final number, a three-piece routine entitled "Mumbo Cien," an original arrangement in the full Cuban tradition.

Musical backgrounding, under direction of Luis Cardenas, captures the spirit of the dancers, and is rhythmic without being monotonous. The Club's two house bands, Don Carlos and Billy Sproud, provide the dance tunes in fine style. Myro.

Hotel Nicollet, Mpls.

(MINN. TERRACE)

Minneapolis, Jan. 26.

Billy De Wolfe, Maurice & Maryea, Cecil Golly Orch (12), with Mildred Stanley; $1 cover, $2.50-$3.50 minimum.

Laughter has its biggest inning of the season at this plushery as Billy De Wolfe again disports himself as Mrs. Murgatroyd, gives his other inimitable impressions and engages in highjinks generally. It's once more a hilarious fun session.

In making with the merriment, the comic only repeats the shenanigans rated his initial Terrace appearance two years ago, an almost historic local supper club highlight. More of a genuine characterization than a caricature or burlesque, his Mrs. Murgatroyd continues to be a welcome perennial and his trademarked comedy classic. Paradoxically, the oftener one sees it the funnier it becomes.

This and other De Wolfe efforts retain their bellylaugh and yock values, too, because the performer wisely embellishes them with enough new pieces of clever and zany business and lines.

At show caught, De Wolfe, panicking the customers continuously, also came up with conceptions of Lon Chaney, a dame arranging her hair and apparel, Boris Karloff, a ringside occupant, a lone flossie at a cocktail bar, and a cheap cafe's floor-show. After concluding the act proper, he emerged as a flunkey to sweep the stage and replace a light globe, and as a clumsy waiter dropping dishes, engendering more hilarity.

Classy ballroomologists Maurice & Maryea evoke plenty palm-pounding as the male member swings and balances his partner aloft while spinning at full speed. Pair also revive "Darktown Strutters' Ball."

The Cecil Golly orch with eyeful songstress Mildred Stanley is the usual click. A packed room at supper show. Rees.

Southern Mansion, K. C.

Kansas City, Jan. 23.

Jayne Manners, Billy Williams Orch (8); $2 minimum.

Tall, blonde Jayne Manners makes her Kansas City cafe entry in the Mansion, and comes off with a moderately entertaining show to her credit. There's some able as-This session proves her best bit and is made entertaining by her handling and gestures. "Why Hasn't It Happened to Me" is the pop song with her own words, decidedly on the sexy side, some of sistance in getting the show started by Billy Williams on the m.c. end and singer Milt Minor, of the orch, with a deep-voiced, rhythmic "Ol' Man River."

Miss Manners' 25 minutes are taken up with songs and parodies given something of a fillip by her carefree approach. She makes a lively opener out of "You Can't Take It With You," and follows with "I Wish I had a Daddy in the White House," a satirical bit.

Mid-show she does a song montage from "South Pacific," with parodies such "Some Expensive Evening," and "There Is Nothing Like a Man" of her own penning. them a bit rough. Quin.

Lookout, Covington, Ky.

Covington, Ky., Jan. 26.

Merriel Abbott's "Shooting High," with Georgie Kaye, Louise Hoff, Bambi Linn & Rod Alexander, Tommy Wonder, Margaret Banks, Th Cabots (3), Jody Miller, The Songsmiths (3), Bob Snyder Orch (10); $3.50 minimum.

Sparkling with a baker's dozen of young stars and near stars, Merriel Abbott's "Shooting High" zooms to stratospheric heights for nitery revues.

Enriched by special music, scenery, smart material and modernistic choreography, the intact moved into Jimmy Brink's plush Lookout House after 16 weeks in Chicago's Palmer House and after a four-week stay, proceeds to Las Vegas. Current locale is in northern Kentucky nitery belt across the Ohio from Cincy. Dick Barstow is the writer, director and choreographer; Hessie Smith, music; Jan Scott, scenery, and John Baur, cos ming.

There's not a hitch in the running time of close to an hour. Bob Snyder and his house combo do excellent job of playing 13 tunes for singing, dancing and specialties while shut off from the action by sets. Scrims would ease things for both the acts and band.

Georgie Kaye, rapid-fire and keen-edged comic, romps home with top plaudits in two brief spots for songs, "Reprise" and "Woman," and gay takeoffs of femmes squaring off for separate checks after a luncheon, and of psychiatry patients. Louise Hoff's drollery sprinkles laughs through the proceedings. Jody Miller, beaut chirper, and the Songsmiths (Dave Smith, Dan Needham and Ray Ballard), do well in their paces.

Terp chores are capably handled by Bambi Linn & Rod Alexander, Tommy Wonder; Margaret Banks, lovely ballerina, and the Cabots (Dick Beard, Marlonne Sanders and Sabella). Koll.

Home Grown

should go into the city treasury—with the city owning the CNE and paying for its annual maintenance.

Said the mayor: "Midway millionaires are being created at the expense of the city's taxpayers. It is time the czar-like powers of Elwood Hughes, with complete power over the midwy concessions and grandstand show, were halted and the authority returned to the directors, civic-appointed, in whom it is invested. I have not at any time questioned the honesty and sincerity of the directors; but, too long has Mr. Hughes led them by the nose and kept them in the dark as to what was happening. It has been a one-man show for years."

The city fathers also criticized the "run-down condition of certain so-called permanent buildings, some of which are in dangerous condition and in a state of deterioration." Backed by buildings and parks commissioners, Mayor Lamport claimed that some structures had reached a stage where barricades would soon have to be erected to protect the public from falling bricks and mortar.

Building Commissioner Gillies said it would cost $500,000 to put the Automotive Building in proper shape and that temporary repairs for this year's CNE would bring total outlay on renovations to $800,000.

Meanwhile, a meeting between city fathers and the CNE executive was called-for today (Tues.) to consider the appointment of an assistant general manager to Mr. Hughes; and the exec board also agreed at last weekend's meeting to strip Hughes of his "power to interpret the Conklin contracts." The mayor also won the right to slap a city tax-paying assessment (some $20,000) on all buildings on the CNE grounds owned by Conklin and Beasley, these i the past being exempt.

Main item taken out of the Conklin midway contract is the big bingo concession. Civic approval of the other important bingo concession, held in recent years by Beasley, is also withheld. He was expected to return to Toronto from Miami to present his case at today's further meeting in a series.

Conklin still holds the CNE midway contract, but the clause to conduct bingo games is revoked and will be thrown open to tender, with expo percentage to be paid into the city coffers. Also deleted from the long-standing Conkli contract, and now open to tender, are his eatery concessions, candy floss, popcorn, frozen custard, etc.

Ice Review

Ice Vogues

(MOSQUE, RICHMOND)

Richmond, Va., Jan. 23.

George & Ruth Tyson's 1952 edition of "Ice Vogues" rang up a healthy gross of $35,000 for a six-performance stand (18-22) at the Mosque. The 4,865-seat house was scaled to a $3 top, but majority of seats were in the $1 and $2 range.

Richmond engagement marked the U. S. preem of the show, streamlined for indoor presentation after its European tour. First night show had a narrow squeak since costumes, flown in from Germany, didn't arrive in New York until the morning of the icer's opening here. Rushed through customs, and trucked down (with some of the wardrobe crates breaking open on the way), the costumes were delivered to the cleaners a short while before opening curtain and were sent over piecemeal as the show progressed.

Opening - night jitters made chorus lines a bit ragged, and musical director Milton Blakely had a few rough moments as local tooters hadn't had sufficient time to rehearse with company's key instrumentalists. These difficulties were smoothed out by the second performance. Wayne Thompson handles the vocals and some running chatter in good voice and easygoing comedy.

Production, heightened by Billy Livingston costumes and Marie Carr's smart choreography, moves at a smart clip. Pace has been speeded by shortening some of the production numbers and introducing fresh and novel routines, such as a skating interpretation of soft-shoe rhythms, and a cowboy number with a rodeo flavor in the manner of the "Oklahoma" ballets.

Big ensemble numbers are dazzling and smart. They include the opening minstrel-show spectacle; a whimsical "Candyland" opus that winds up with peppermint soldiers, wintergreen babies and lollipop men whirling in strob effect; and a lush "Winged Rhapsody" that stars Donna Jeanne and turns the old feathered-fan routine into a show-stopping display of massed color and cannily used lights.

There also is a "Persian Escapade" that backs Bobby Blake and Anne Schmidt with the Glamour-Icers and Ice Squires for some traditional Oriental torso-tossing, then spotlights the duo for a hot Persian burlesque.

Post-intermission opener puts the ensemble into abbreviated Indian garb as an intro to the speed-skating act of James Caesar. His leaps over drums, totem poles and girls are given a sock climax when he vaults over a blazing "camp fire." "Reflections in Gold" is another novelty production with the girls in gold-spangled, bell-shaped gowns, and a finale on a dark stage with illuminated, plastic violins to give the only light. Show closes with a big red-white-and-blue number that brings on the entire cast for an energetic end to a fast performance running two and a half hours.

"Vogues" this year is headed by Donna Jeanne and Tony LeMac, who had the cash customers cheering for their pairing in "In Gay Paree." LeMac's "Human Top" interlude is a show-stopper. Bobby Blake's "A Girl in Every Port" is a high spot of good skating and fine fun as he and assorted partners race through various national dance rhythms, winding up with Blake's torrid jive single. Susanne and Tommy LaVonne in their "Apache" and the LaVonnes with James Caesar in an acro-adagio also are standout. The Perky Twins, a couple of Dutch lovelies, are attractive in a precision duet, and plenty of trick and comedy stuff runs through the show on the skates of Buddy & Baddy, Jack Rose, Bill Wallenborn, Doc Carlin, Fred Holly, George Simpson and the Kusters. Lind.

Selznick-Jennifer

Miss Jones' boxoffice draw as a lure, precious rehearsal time was passing," he said yesterday (Tues.). "Finally, when they failed to meet my final deadline, we called off the whole thing."

Another of Miss Jones' representatives blamed the breakup of plans on Lee Shubert. He declared that the theatre owner-producer, currently vacationing Florida, had withdrawn his offer to underwrite the deficit from the play's New York run and finance the tour "because he suddenly decided he didn't like the scheduled route," despite the fact that Elias Weinstock, his own booking representative, had arranged the dates.

This interpretation was denied by a Guild official, who said that Shubert had not been a major factor in the cancellation. "Selznick himself called off the tour," this spokesman said. "We worked day and night for weeks on the project. It was one of the most exasperating headaches I've ever been involved in. But Selznick kept changing the terms of the agreement and making new demands and stipulations.

"Shubert's position was merely that the tour should be long enough to give him a chance to get back the money he advanced for underwriting the New York deficit and sending out the production," the Guild rep continued. "When the repeated failure to reach an agreement with Selznick delayed the start of rehearsals, it became apparent that we couldn't book the 14-week tour Shubert wanted. But it was Selznick who actually decided to cancel."

'Increasingly Nervous'

Selznick declared that the delay in reaching an agreement on terms made him "increasingly nervous" at the prospect of allowing Miss Jones to go on tour with insufficient preparation. Also, he said, he kept discovering facts about the situation that were not originally revealed to him, such as the fact that it would be necessary to go to Actors Equity for a concession to permit extended rehearsals.

Moreover, the film producer asserted, he had been assured that Margaret Webster, who staged the show, would concentrate on directing Miss Jones in rehearsing the show for the road. However, the company "began falling apart," he added, and it was obvious that Miss Webster would have to direct almost an entirely new cast. It would be unfair to Miss Jones, he indicated, to permit her to make her return to the stage in such a long and demanding role as Joan without adequate preparation.

Selznick said that there was nothing to reports that he and Miss Jones were reluctant to face the critics in Chicago after the stinging personal notices handed out there recently to Olivia de Havilland in "Candida." He remarked that both audiences and critics in the various touring stands had seen only Miss Jones' finished performances via films, and that it would be unfair to have her judged on the basis of an insufficiently prepared portrayal.

With the collapse of plans for a spring tour of "Joan," the show may or may not go out again with another star taking over for Uta Hagen, who has played the title part on Broadway. The latter edition closes, as already scheduled, Saturday night (2) at the Century, N. Y. Meanwhile Miss Jones, who has been nixing film offers in order to do the legit stint, will probably return to the Coast.

NT's 'Latuko'

many former subscribers to the PCA changed their stand. Charles Skouras, NT prexy, has been one of the leaders in this change.

Among pix that have had widespread bookings despite lack of a seal were Howard Hughes' "The Outlaw" and the Italian "Bitter Rice," both of which later accepted changes to win a Breen okay. Another which never won approval was "Ecstasy," the early Hedy Lamarr-starrer.

Objections to "Latuko" have been based on the completely undraped males shown in the pic. It was shot by Edward Monsanto Queeny, board chairman of Monsanto Chemical, on an African expedition sponsored by the New York Museum of Natural History, which owns the rights. Distribution is by Producers Representatives, Inc., N. Y.

At the Par Hollywood, "Latuko" did better than $19,000 the first week, almost double the $10,000 that Samuel Goldwyn's "I Want You" did at upped admissions the previous stanza. It also handily beat the two pix prior to "Want You." They were the Dean Martin-Jerry Lewis- starrer, "That's My Boy," and Bing Crosby's "Here Comes the Groom."

to come in with her nitery material, fearful of being slammed by the critics.

Sol A. Schwartz, RKO Theatres prexy, arrived Monday (28) on the Coast in an attempt to line up a headliner. Schwartz has several possibilities open to him. He is reportedly in a mood to approach several top film names to combine in a short dramatic vehicle. Theatre had been eyeing Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne, but were turned down.

Search for a Palace headliner has become nationwide. With Schwartz on the Coast, booker Danny Friendly is combing the east.

As of Feb. 17, Miss Garland will wind up 18 weeks at the house, record for any U. S. vaude engagement. It's estimated that she will have grossed close to $550,000 during her run. She started out playing 13 shows weekly and will finish playing eight or less. There were several occasions when she was unable to perform because of laryngitis and other ailments. Last week; house scored a tremendous $28,500 for six performances.

Most of all, Miss Garland proved that two-a-day can be sold at $4.80.

Coyne's TOA Post

10 constituent organizations in COMPO to be a natural for the exec v.p. spot, particularly in view of the difficulty in finding a candidate acceptable to everyone and willing to accept the arduous full-time post. Allied, however, feels that his former association with the national exhib organization (with which it competes for exhib support) is a disqualifying factor.

Aside from Coyne there appears at this time to be no major figure at all in prospect for the COMPO job. Mentioned in some quarters has been Col. Wiliam McCraw, exec director of the Variety Clubs. However, it is understood that he will not be a candidate, since it would mean giving up his lucrative Dallas law practice and hi Texas roots.

among witnesses at the FCC proceedings are in line with his recent promise to the MPAA board that he'd devote all his time to the industry's domestic problems and spend more time in New York and Hollywood and less in Washington. Company prexies nevertheless have given approval, on the basis that it's a good public relations move, to Johnston's acceptance of the chairmanship of the International Development Advisory Board. Government post was recently vacated by Nelson Rockefeller.

MPAA topper said the new job would only take one or two days' time each month. It's non-paying.

New Acts

JAYE BROS.
Songs, Comedy
25 Mins.
Palumbo's, Philadelphia

Better known in the musical bars where they worked as a piano and combo drum team with vocals, the Jaye Bros. have stepped out on the floor as a singing-comedy duo and come on strong. They have a jump number for a getaway, but register with a medley which includes impressions of Billy Eckstine, Frankie Laine, Vaughn Monroe, Bill Kenny, Rose Murphy and Perry Como. Perhaps not sensational impressionists, the Jayes tally with their good humor and drive.

They have strong voices and can work with or away from mike, which allows for leeway in movement. Better takeoffs go back to Joe Howard, Van & Schenck and minstrel days to woo oldsters in audience. Forte piece is "Rag Mop" routine with piano and drum, topped by a rendition of tune in Italian. It's socko for spot, and should be funny anywhere.

Encore finds pair singing opera against swing in a duet which couples "Toreador Song" with "Dinah." Bit has possibilities, all of which are not realized as yet, but makes for fine bowoff. Gagh.

PILARIN TAVARIN
Flamenco
10 Mins.
Chateau Madrid, N. Y.

Pilarin Tavarin, a cute Spanish import, is a flamenco singer and dancer who will have a great appeal to the aficionados. Work has authentic flavor, she's a skilled terper and she creates a degree of excitement with the native songs.

Miss Tavarin is petite and padded. Her costuming is excellent and her rhythms rate attention. She hits maximum effectiveness in a farucca and the bulerias. It's a colorful turn for spots with Spanish trade. Miss Tavarin would have to get more commercialization into her routines to enlarge her employment sphere in the U.S.

MARINETTE & ANDRE
Apache Dancing
7 Mins.
Colonial, Albany

Team, announced as making debut in the U. S., does an Apache dance turn with skill, thrills and chills that should soon make it solid for theatres, niteries and TV variety show bookings. Brief act is presented on full stage without any scenery or other production embellishments, but it moves with a speed, sureness and daring that alternately produce gasps and applause.

The man rotates partner around his body; she does knee, arm and other spectacular swings and catches. In one toss to the floor, she spins rhythmically on her abdomen, in another, she rolls over several times.

Spotted fourth, between two comedy acts, the couple registered unmistakably. Marinette (from France) is an attractive, redhaired gal neatly dressed. Andre, who reportedly served in the U. S. Army although foreign-born, wears the conventional cap, sweater and trousers. A little story line might build the offering.

Distrib Overhaul

water still to be squeeezed out on production exec levels, it is felt in New York, but whatever success is achieved on that score is immediately soaked up by new union contracts, such as the 15% increase the musicians won two weeks ago.

Thus, with little chance of cutting the cost side, company toppers naturally turn to attempts at increasing income. They feel that profit margins are too slim to make for safety if the b.o. should slide any more and that, in fact, all possible pressure is probably needed just to hold even.

Sales chiefs have been familiarized in one way or another with this demand for greater income and they have thus been constrained to give their staffs a critical o.o. Sentiment has been given the go-by as they've ordered pared from payrolls anyone who it is felt has not been able to carry a full load.

That includes some industry vets, who have just become too old or too poor in health to slug the way they used to. Some of them have been dropped and others have been shifted into easier berths.

Many Switches

Even more important has been the recognition given men in the ranks, with many promotions and switches to bigger territories. What's actually happening is similar to what's occurring in production—where the changes are more dramatic because the names are better known. There a whole new generation is moving into top exec posts.

While there's always pressure for better terms from exhibs, recent sales meetings have made terms more or less secondary. Sales chiefs apparently realize that there is a limit to the percentages to be asked and the number of pix for which top terms can be demanded.

Emphasis has been more on getting a maximum number of contracts for each pic, getting playdates for them as rapidly as possible, getting preferred Saturday-Sunday playing time and getting extended playing time. Accomplishment of these objectives gives a company greater return without actually putting the squeeze on the exhibitor for higher film rentals.

Squeeze comes, of course, with every company seeking the same objectives. Obviously, there's only 52 weeks' playing time per year and only 52 weekends, so if one company gets more of them, another must suffer.

did not know the real reason for the withdrawals, but indicated that there was a feeling that the NBR was duplicating the self-censoring activities of the Motion Picture Assn. of America. Hart, however, pointed out that MPAA was industry-controlled while the NBR, though supported by the industry, was not under its jurisdiction.

Hart explained that the NBR had received such wide acceptance that many states and cities had ordinances which required the Board's seal before a pic could be shown. During the years when the NBR was inactive, Hart said, this requirement had been discontinued in many areas through the efforts of the MPAA. Florida, Rhode Island and many municipalities still have the law on their books. Although none of these places has turned down a pic because the NBR seal was missing, the Board indicated that it would not come to the support of a non-active film company should a censorship problem arise. The majority of the states accept pix without a seal, since Hollywood's own strict MPAA code is highly esteemed.

on terms, will hold preliminary confabs Monday (4) to discuss arbitration. Myers submitted an arbitration plan to the group several weeks ago and the committee will agree on a report and recommendations to be made to the full board. Agenda calls for a definite arbitration plan to be drawn before the termination of the sessions.

Other questions on the agenda will be the Council of Motion Picture Organizations, repeal of admission taxes, theatre collections and television. Group is expected to reaffirm its 1946 resolution opposing theatre collections.

tivities Committee launched its probe of asserted Communist activity in Hollywood.

Plaintiffs charge that the action, in effect, blacklists their members by threatening to destroy a free market for sale of their works. Moreover, it's claimed, the practices adopted by the majors at the 1947 conclave infringe and endanger members' civil liberties. Suit asks an injunction to restrain the defendants from enforcing the agreement.

Chicago, Chi

Chicago, Jan. 25.
Tong Bros. (3), Martin Bros. (2), Cy Reeves, Blackburn Twins & Pam Cavan, Louis Basil Orch; "Westward the Women" (M-G).

Current Chicago Theatre bill plays in fine fashion, but has one fault in that several of the acts are repeats. In fact, one has played the house three times within the year, and while good, still uses the same material. However, with the dropping of vaude by the Oriental, producer Nate Platt should be able to avoid that in future.

Tong Bros. is a smooth acro act with musclemen doing some salvo balance work. Trio's head to head on and off a table is a sock trick topped only by terrific body turn and switchback while holding two men aloft. Turn gets a big mitt.

Martin Bros. are doing their third turn here within the year. While lads go over well, especially the tragic clown, some new marionette skits might be added for punch and change of pace.

Cy Reeves, droll faced comic, punches from the start with a series of medical quips and has a honey of a paraphrase. He's a bit rough for a morning audience, about Brooklyn done to backing of Stephen Foster tunes. His standard finale of jivey "Old Man River" registers well.

Blackburn Twins & Pam Cavan also are returnees, and working with much of same material as last time around. Twins capitalize on resemblance to each other in patter opening and mirror dance before bringing on femme, who sells "Walking My Baby Back Home" and salty "One Man Woman." Group has a fine piece of closing business, "Movies Are Better Than Ever," depicting course of film business to advent of TV.

Louis Basil returns from two-week vacation with the orch doing excellent job of pacing the acts.

Apollo, N. Y.

T-Bone Walker Orch (13), Tab Smith Band (6) with Chuck Young, Frank Culley; Jack Meyand & Jeannette, Cook & Brown, Derby Wilson, Spider Bruce & Co. (3); "Cargo to Capetown" (Col).

Lively blending of standard turns at Harlem flagship this week gets okay results. It's a well-rounded bill that moves at clicko pace. With T-Bone Walker and Tab Smith headlining, house has one of its best bets in some time.

Walker captures pewholders in his blues shouting set which he self-accomps with an electric guitar. Works loud and effectively on "On Your Way Blues," "I'm Gonna Find My Baby" and "Stormy Monday." His guitaring hypoes the blues mood for solid impact. The orch he fronts gets little more to do than cut rest of show.

Smith's crew, comprised of three rhythm, one brass and one reed with maestro on sax, display firstrate rhythm and blues styling in their set. Belt out "Can't We Take a Chance," "Because of You" and "Sunny Side of the Street." Smith's saxing is standout. Chick Young does a pleasant vocal workover of "My Mother's Eyes" and Frank Culley whips out a fast jive tune in his saxing solo stint.

Jack Meyand & Jeannette, white unicycling team, open the bill with some cute stunts. It's a pleasing entry which includes effective balancing and juggling bits on the cycle. Cook & Brown click with their comedy terps. Lads work easily and project plenty of stage savvy.

Spider Bruce and his guy and femme aides nab some moderate yocks in a so-so sketch. It's done neatly, however, and builds to an okay blackout. Derby Wilson, a house fave, displays his smooth tapping line in a standout turn. Wilson wins house with his ingratiating style, getting good mitt for his top terping.
Gros.

Olympia, Miami

Miami, Jan. 27.
Rosemary Clooney, Buddy Rich, George Hopkins, Alex & Galina, Burns' Birds, Les Rhode House Orch; "No Place For Jennifer" (British).

Current Olympia layout is okay fare for the regulars here, with lineup building nicely on mitt action.

Topliner Rosemary Clooney clicks handily with her songology, plussed by visual appeal. Offers a well balanced assortment of the better pops, arranged in colorful style to accent her vocal talents. Ranges from "Because of You" through the expected topper, "Come On-A My House," for sock reception.

Buddy Rich, quondam orch leader, working solo, handles the emcee chores smoothly and efficiently, and in own spot angles up his skin-beating talents to win them.

Trained birds of William Burns are a cinch in this house. The feather-company do everything from tight-wire walking, trapeze stunts, baby carriage pushing and assorted acroantics to keep them giggling and amazed, with Burns' chatter helping build values.

George Hopkins, a local lad discovered here by Arthur Godfrey, is playing his first vaude date and shows plenty possibilities. Obviously needs more experience, but act as currently constituted tabs him a comer. Some of the gag stuff is original and rest are top grade carbons of w.k. vocalists.

Musical acro work of Alex & Galina is okay. Pair offer instrumental sequence, then add balancing stuff to round out stint. Les Rhode and house orch are okay on the showbacks.

Palomar, Seattle

Jan. 24, 1952.
Louis Armstrong All Stars, with Barney Bigard, Cozy Cole, Joe Sullivan, Russ Phillips, Dale Jones, Velma Middleton; "The Magic Face" (Col.).

Louis Armstrong's All Stars includes three new faces added since his last appearance here—Joe Sullivan on piano; Russ Phillips, trombone, and Dale Jones on string bass. New personnel hasn't hurt any, with same solid brand of jazz and showmanship on tap right through hour stint.

Band socks over "Royal Garden Blues" for opener, with each featured, and Armstrong reprises vocals on "Blueberry Hill" and "C'est Si Bon" for nice returns.

Barney Bigard's masterful clarinet is featured in "Muskrat Ramble," followed by Russ Phillips shining in "Little Coquette." Phillips and Louis team up for "Old Rockin' Chair," with Phillips taking part formerly done by Jack Teagarden. There's only one Jack T., but Phillips is right at home with the standard, socking it over nicely.

Velma Middleton wows 'em with vocal and familiar clicko terping on "Mama's Back in Town." She and Satchmo garner a bid hand for duet on "You're Just in Love."

Joe Sullivans' powerful, rhythmic 88ing shows to good effect in "Gin Mill Blues"; Bigard wraps up "Just You" in standout clarinet solo, with Louis belting over vocal on "I Get Ideas" in familiar manner.

Cozy Cole displays top drumming in "Bugle Blues" and Dale Jones does nice job with old Bert Williams' classic "Nobody" for change of pace.

Band bows off with solid rendition of "Saints Go Marching In" to enthusiastic palm younding, with only most rabid of jazz purists finding fault with stint's bow to current popularity of cornball in certain spots.

Biz big, with prospect of bettering record set about a year ago.
Reed.

Casino, Toronto

Toronto, Jan. 25.
Tony Bennett, Martha Ann Bently, Ladd Lyon & Co., Chet Clark, George Kirby, Jimmy Cameron, Archie Stone House Orch; "Chain of Circumstance" (Col).

Neatly diversified 65-minute stage package, with all acts over to hefty response when caught, is packing them in here. This is partly due to a civic holiday spirit engendered by the end of a three-weeks bus and trolley strike that had given biz a heavy slugging. However, once the customers are in, they're getting plenty for their money and are enthusiastically demonstrative in their appreciation. No artist is being slighted on this bill and, on top-calibre, the aud response is richly deserved.

Tony Bennett is the marquee lure and pulling the teen-agers with his sultry style. Opens with "I Can't Give You Anything But Love" and then into "Blues in the Night" and "Cold, Cold Heart" for terrif returns. Works a set of "Solitaire," "Always" and "Sing, You Sinners," with a wham finale of "Because of You" to the usual moans and squeals of the kids, with adults also pleased. Bennett is backed by the house orch on stage; brings his own Jack Madoff on the piano, Bill Exinor on drums; and also gets workmanlike support from Archie Stone and the house band.

Full stage proceedings are underway swiftly with neat on-toes work of Martha Ann Bently for top ballet speed and precision; Chet Clark for his outstanding harmonica playing; Ladd Lyon for comedy balancing on tables, chairs and bottles, and George Kirby for smash personations. Jimmy Cameron, as m.c. knits everything together neatly.

Empire, Glasgow

Glasgow, Jan. 21.
Hammorcourt Corp., Ltd., presentation of "Dick Whittington on Ice," devised and produced by Gerald Palmer. Book and lyrics, Stanley Lloyd and Gerald Palmer; music editing, Reginald Swinney; music conductor, Gordon Ritchie; dances and ensembles, Beatrice Livesey. Cast: Alma Cookson, Ron Branchi, Howard Knight, Hamilton Brown, Jock McConnell, Anne Rogers, Claude Zola, Joyce Pacini, Richard Thorpe, George Stevens, Arthur Woodjetts, George Miller, Eddie Ward. At Empire, Glasgow, twice nightly, at 80c admission.

This is a pleasing ice musical woven around the traditional British fairy story of Dick Whittington's walk to London to see fortune in a city whose streets, he believes, are "paved with gold." Settings and costumes adorn a graceful production in which the skating prowess is better than the comedy.

Show is in two acts and nine scenes, opening in Ye Olde Cheapside in 15th-century London and closing with a grand parade of the City of London craft companies.

Standout acts are the Cat (Whiskers) of experienced Claude Zola and the comedy cycling of the Wonder Wheelers, an act already known to U. S. audiences. Latter comprises a lanky, amusing male who wears Scotch kilt and tammie (Highland hat), cycling on a dwarf-sized bike in company with two attractive girl cyclists, a brunet and a blonde. Girls' gravity-defying bicycling is solid entertainment, and act is a sure bet for further U. S. markets.

Comedy is in the hands of two Scots, Hamilton Brown, as Idle Jack, and Jock McConnell, as Sarah. With limited appeal in patter and accent, their comicking is weak, and they get by only on skating ability. Anne Rogers' Dick Whittington is poised and confident.

Gordon Ritchie wields the orch baton. Vocal backing to skilled skating numbers is supplied by a group of girls and men seated in the orchestra pit.
Gord.

Oriental, Chi

Chicago, Jan. 24.
Four Step Bros., Mickey Sharp, Connee Boswell, Brian Farnon Orch; "I Want You" (RKO).

With this three-weeker the Oriental drops vaude for a run of "Quo Vadis" and maybe beyond that. This leaves the Chicago Theatre as the sole regular week stand for talent west of the eastern area.

While only a three-acter, it stacks up much stronger than some of the bills built around so-called "hot" disk names. Four Step Bros., who have been touring Europe for the past two years, are still one of the strongest opening (or closing) acts with their terrific unison work. Among the fastest in the terp field, with little letdown, lads really start stepping out in a challenge session with flying overhead splits, triple taps, fast kneebends, and slide walks. Quartet get a heavy hand at dance-off.

Mickey Sharp, a local comic, has acquired loads of polish since last seen several years ago. His forte is in the satire field, but most of his aren't in the established book. He does the old push-button radio bit, but has a fresh approach with a local Polish disk jockey doing the interpolations. His Harry Truman impression is the White Houser to a T. The Durante swiftie is followed by his Joe Stalin visiting America skit. The Presidential bit would be stronger close.

Connee Boswell, who hasn't been seen around the Loop for about three years, is almost a new act in that she has acquired additional projection with her mobile chair. Lass also seems younger and voice stronger than per last visit. There's no apologies offered and none sought for her wheel-on, gal selling herself with voice and personality.

She beats out a fast "Smile" medley intro and upbeats "Begin the Beguine." Versatile artist really sells the ballad, "Little White Cloud." Then she doffs her crinoline type dress, revealing a sequined evening gown, and switches to the piano to display a fine backroom fist in "Old Piano Roll Blues." Mickey Sharp returns garbed a la Bing Crosby to sock across "Basin Street Blues" with Miss Boswell.

Brian Farnon does a medley of Irish tunes for the curtain-raiser and sings "Danny Boy," which is right in Gallic leader's groove.

ATPAM Waives Its Rules to Admit Apprentice P.A.'s Balked by Quotas

The Assn. of Theatrical Press Agents & Managers has made an exception to its rules, to admit a number of apprentice pressagents who would normally be kept waiting by quota restrictions. The move settles a controversy that was blowing up because certain applicants, about to complete the required apprenticeship, faced the prospect of being denied admission pending a quota vacancy, perhaps several years hence.

Under the special waiver, which was worked out by the union's governing board and accepted last week by the pressagent chapter, Robert Ganshaw has been admitted to full p.a. status as of Jan. 19. He had completed his apprenticeship as assistant to Bernard Simon.

Due for admission within a few weeks is Merle Debuskey, assistant to Wolfe Kaufman, pressagent of "Paint Your Wagon" and vice-president of the union. Other prospective entries soon under the temporary setup are Max Eisen, assistant to Samuel J. Friedman, pressagent of "Anna Christie;" Martin Schwartz, assistant to Barry Hyams, p.a. of "I Am a Camera" and the ANTA Play Series; and David Powers, assistant to Jean Dalrymple.

Special Formula

The formula under which these candidates will be admitted provides for them to have full pressagent status as soon as they qualify by completion of the required apprenticeship, but to be assigned to entry quotas of future seasons. Thus, Ganshaw is admitted under the 1951-52 quota, the next two to qualify will be accepted immediately under the 1952-53 season quota and subsequent qualifiers admitted two each under later seasonal quotas.

The waiver applies to all apprentice candidates, but no additional applicants will be registered until seasonal quotas again become available. However, the whole matter will be reconsidered, at least norminally, every year. Under the standard rules now in abeyance, ATPAM accepts six candidates a season, and admits two who have completed the apprenticeship of three seasons of 20 weeks employment each.

That formerly worked out reasonably well, as sufficient candidates dropped out. But in recent seasons nearly all candidates have been completing the apprenticeship, so the qualified entries have exceeded the two-admissions-per-season quota and a waiting list became imminent.

DALLAS OPERETTA INKS BOOTH FOR JUNE 'TREE'

Dallas, Jan. 29.

"Tree Grows in Brooklyn," with Shirley Booth in her original starring part, is tentatively set for two weeks, starting June 23, as the second production of the Starlight Operetta season at the State Fair Auditorium here this summer. It's the only production set thus far.

Charles R. Meeker, Jr., managing director of the series, expects to have the same production staff back this summer, including Mary Hunter as stage director, and Lehman Engel as musical director.

Denham-Orr Tryout Set For Bucks County in June

"Be Your Age," comedy by Reginald Denham and Mary Orr, is slated for a tryout week of June 2 at Theron Bamberger's Bucks County Playhouse, New Hope, Pa., as the third bill of the season. Denham will direct.

The play is under the option to Alexander H. Cohen and Robert Joseph for Broadway production in the fall.

De Mille's 'Dumbarton'

Agnes de Mille has pacted to do her first choreography for the N.Y. City Ballet, set to Igor Stravinsky's "Dumbarton Oaks" Concerto. Ballet will be titled "Dumbarton Oaks," and will be built around a Pearl Mesta-type character. Caricaturist Saul Steinberg will do the sets.

Ballet will have its world preem in Scotland this summer.

'Remains' Backers Paid One-Third; Rest Due Soon

"Remains to Be Seen," Leland Hayward's production of the Howard Lindsay-Russel Crouse comedy, now in its 17th week, at the Morosco, N. Y., has just repaid one-third of its $75,000 investment and is about to return the balance. Even without the $125,000 film sale to Metro (the management and backers' share of which is 40%), the show will soon be in the black.

The show, produced at a cost of $75,263 plus $8,352 tryout loss and $3,802 pre-opening expense, had earned an operating profit of $40,323 as of Nov. 24, and its assets included $12,000 in bonds and $10,000 sinking fund. According to the accountant's statement, the company payroll at $23,206 gross was $4,590, (including Jackie Cooper's 5% of the gross over $15,000 against $500 guarantee).

The author's royalty is a straight 10% and the director royalty is 2½%. The theatre's share is the usual 30%.

'Porgy' May Go On With 150G Budget

The Blevins Davis-Robert Breen revival of "Porgy and Bess," to be cast and rehearsed in New York with the physical production built in Germany and final rehearsals held there, may be done for as little as $65,000. It will be budgeted at $150,000, and although Davis will probably supply most of the financing, some money will be sought from his friends and associates.

The producers are talking to Jose Ferrer about staging the show, which may be cut a bit. The tentative plan is to open in Germany, play a few festivals on the Continent on a guarantee basis, go to London for a run in the fall and bring the Gershwin-Heyward folk opera to the U. S. next January or February.

Meanwhile, Breen, with the silent association of Davis, is making tentative arrangements with various stars for possible guest appearances with a modified stock setup. Depending on the names he's able to line up, he plans to lease a New York house, possibly beyond the Times Square area, and has made preliminary deals with the Brattle Theatre, Cambridge, Mass., and professional stock represntatives in other towns for a circuit for such productions.

Ballet Theatre Prepping Six-Month '52-'53 Tour

Ballet Theatre, which winds up its current tour in New England in mid-March, already has inked plans for its '52-'53 season. Troupe will tour from Dec. 25 until end of April, 1953, with trek starting in the south and hitting the Coast by February. William Fields will continue to book.

Troupe currently playing Pittsburgh and Detroit, then going into Canada for the first time since 1945. Tour this season, the troupe's 13th year, is running six months, covering 60 cities.

Management is mulling either a Mexican or European trip for this fall, prior to the new domestic season.

Bercovici's 'Holiday' Preeming in L.A. Feb. 27

Los Angeles, Jan. 29.

Leonardo Bercovici's new comedy, "Accidental Holiday," will have its world premiere at the Players Ring Theatre, Feb. 27, with Charles Korvin directing.

Original plan was to revive "Anna Christie" on that date, but the group failed to get an okay from the Dramatists Play Service until the current N. Y. run of the Eugene O'Neill drama is completed.

Music Circus Is Prepped At Allentown, Pa., Suburb

Easton, Pa., Jan. 29.

A strawhat copied after the Music Circus at Lambertville, N. J., is planned by Manuel Davis, owner and manager of the Lyric Theatre in Allentown, Pa. Davis said he plans to erect a tent on an eight-acre tract along Route 222 near here, for presentation of musical comedies this summer. His plans call for an in-the-round stage and seating capacity of more than 1,000.

The tent will be put up on a knoll, and will be fireproof and waterproof, Davis said. He plans to start work next month on grading and other improvements on the tract, and to open in June. Lights and other equipment have already been purchased.

'Banana' to Pay Off By April 1

"Top Banana," playing to near-capacity business at the Winter Garden, N. Y., is likely to earn back its investment by about April 1. The musical comedy, now in its 14th week, is currently netting about $10,500 a week. It has already returned $35,000 to the backers, representing the 20% overcall on the original $175,000 investment. Also, Anthony Brady Farrell has been repaid the $40,000 he advanced as union bonds and theatre security. The production cost was $180,000.

As indicated by an accountant's statement, the theatre terms are 30% of the first $25,000 gross and 25% on the balance, with the show paying $1,195 for company crew, $222 for extra stagehands and $2,900 for musicians (plus $275 for the conductor). At a gross of $51,439, the payroll for principals was $7,958 (including 7½% of the gross for Phil Silvers, the star) and $2,920 for chorus.

Royalties are 5% to Johnny Mercer for the music, 3% to Hy Kraft for the book, 1% to Jack Donohue as director, $200 a week to Ron Fletcher as choreographer, $100 weekly to Jo Mielziner as scenic designer and $35 weekly to Alvin Colt for the costumes. The show, which consistently has standees at all performances except the midweek matinee, may get a slight increase in the gross now that theatre parties are over.

ATPAM Salary Hikes to Be Shared With Associates Under Present Formula

Recent salary increase received by the Broadway pressagents under the arbitration agreement between the League of N. Y. Theatres and the Assn. of Theatrical Press Agents & Managers will be shared with their associates under the same formula already being followed. That is, the entire $10 increase will be passed along to the associate on a second show, and $15, representing half the additional increase on the third show, goes to the associate on the second and third shows.

The decision to continue the same formula as before was reached last week at a meeting of the union's pressagent chapter. Under the new setup, with the senior pressagent minimum upped from $200 to $210, the new basic rates for associates are $135 for the second show and $182.50 for the second-third shows. The old rates were $125 and $167.50 respectively.

Under the union's first contract with the League, effective from 1938 through Labor Day, 1942, the minimums were $150 for senior p.a., $75 for the associate on a second show and $100 for the associate on the second and third shows. For the next four years the rates were increased $15 each.

For the two-year period from Labor Day, 1946, the scales were $190 for seniors and $115 and $152.50, respectively, for associates. Three years ago these figures were upped to $200, and $125 and 167.50, respectively. All these rates have been minimums. In the case of senior pressagents in New York, most are believed to get above scale.

Inside Stuff—Legit

John McClain, drama critic of the N. Y. Journal-American, was unintentionally literal in a recent Sunday feature story about the headaches of legit production. He opened the piece, "So you want to do a show, do you? You're going out and pick up a nice property, hire some actors and rent a theatre, and the first thing you know you're just sitting back counting the weekly gross and pulling down maybe $2,000 for your share. Funny thing is, it could happen—but it would be largely luck. Usually it's a matter of painstaking preparation and planning and inhuman perseverance. And even then it may flop."

After outlining the delays, difficulties, discouragements and, at last, the opening of the production, he concluded, "You still think you want to do a show? You should have your head examined!" To illustrate his point, McClain cited an actual musical on the upcoming Broadway schedule, thereby proving himself more prophetic than he imagined. Production was "Month of Sundays," which folded during its Philly tryout the weekend following publication, at a loss of around $175,000.

Actual figures on the Cincinnati engagement of "Guys and Dolls" now available disprove the old advance agent bromides that that town is bad for show biz and pre-Christmas week the worst in the year. According to the accountant's statement, the touring edition of the Cy Feuer-Ernest H. Martin production had a gross of $62,995.50 for the week ending Dec. 22 at the Taft Auditorium, Cincy, for a net profit of $20,117.10 on the stand. For the two previous weeks (the period covered in the latest batch of statements issued to the show's backers), the musical grossed $53,006.50, for a profit of $12,761.71, for the stanza ending Dec. 8 in Minneapolis, and drew $40,483.44 for a net of $7,985.70 for the next frame in Columbus, For the same three weeks the Broadway company, which regularly grosses exactly $44,400, had respective profits of $10,186.52, $9,428.54 and $9,401.01, bringing the total net on both troupes for that period to $69,880.58.

Backers of "Pal Joey," the current Broadway revival of the Rodgers-Hart and John O'Hara musical comedy of 1940-41, include theatre owner-producer Anthony B. Farrell, $30,000 (plus providing the bond money); souvenir program agent Al Greenstone, $2,500; singer John Conte, $2,500; author Adolph Green, $1,250; Elaine Perry, daughter of the late director Antoinette Perry, $250; the show's co-producer Jule Styne, $22,500, and composer Richard Rodgers. Styne has said that his investment totals $33,000, but the $10,500 difference between that and the listed $33,000 is presumably listed under the names of other individuals. Styne is the sole general partner of the $125,000 venture, but Leonard Key has program credit as co-producer and Farrell is billed as associate.

John Mason Brown, drama critic for the Saturday Review, in St. Paul for a lecture, told reporters that "only one new Broadway play, 'I Am a Camera,' is good, and Julie Harris, a young actress, makes it so. Otherwise, the theatre is living largely off revivals, and that's not a good thing. We should have a large reservoir of writers the theatres can draw from, as we had in the '20's. Instead, our better playwrights now are older people. Can't some young people write plays again?"

Compared to last season, Nixon Theatre in Pittsburgh is in clover already. Legit house only had a total of 12 weeks during the whole of 1950-51 and so far this year, at the half-way mark now, has matched that. More attractions are on the way, too, with every indication that the Nixon will get around 25 weeks, more than the city has had in a long time. Successful subscription drive recently of the Theatre Guild-ATS has been a big shot in the arm.

'SUNDAYS' FOLDO CUES 180G INVESTMENT LOSS

"Month of Sundays," which folded Saturday night (26) after its tryout run in Philly, will return only a nominal amount on its $180,000 investment ($150,000 plus overcall). There is figured only a remote chance of the show being done again next season, after rewriting, recasting and refinancing.

A musical version of Victor Wolfson's 1936-37 play, "Excursion," the show had a book and lyrics by Burt Shevelove, music by Albert Selden and additional lyrics by Ted Fetter. The staging was by Shevelove (with Margaret Webster providing an assist during the tryout) and dances were by Anna Sokolow. Gene Lockhart and Nancy Walker were co-starred. Carly Wharton produced.

Jacob's Pillow Unit, With Shawn, Set for Fall Tour

Columbia Artists Mgt. already has started booking dates for next fall for the Jacob's Pillow Festival Co., summer dance institution headed by vet dancer-director Ted Shawn at Lee, Mass. Tour, first for the outfit, is being handled by Columbia veepee Andre Mertens, and will run from six to eight weeks, in the east and midwest only.

Troupe will consist of about 10 people, of varied talent symptomatic of the variety of dance specialties presented each summer at the Berkshire Mts. spot by Shawn. Group will include Richard & Flora Stuart, ballroom dancers; Myra Kinch, dance satirist; La Meri, ethnic dance specialist; Shawn, and others. Unit will be under Shawn's direction, and latter will also serve as narrator for the group, akin to the format at Jacob's Pillow.

Unit was the idea of Mertens, who visited the Shawn setup for the first time last summer. He sees it as educational as well as entertaining, and is aiming the tour largely towards school and college concert series.

Old Atlantic City Nitery To Be Legit House With Summer Stock Season

Atlantic City, Jan. 29.

Plans to convert the Gateway Casino in nearby Somers Point into a theatre for summer stock were announced here last week. The Casino, built some 25 years ago, was at one time called the largest night club in the world, with nearly all of the great name bands playing there during summer seasons.

The spot will be remodeled to accommodate a stage and seating capacity for 800. Stanley Pontiere, an Ocean City real estate man, said work would begin within the next few weeks and that four musical shows and four plays would be put on. Rehearsals will start early in June, with the shows to be offered to the public during the height of the summer season, July and August.

John F. Dwight, New York promoter and associate of Oscar Hammerstein 2d, is president of the Gateway Musical Playhouse, as the theatre will be called. Pontiere is vice-president, while Edrie Sellick, also of New York, is secretary of the stock company.

Dwight will manage the house, which is located on the road leading into Ocean City. House will draw from both Atlantic and Cape May county summer population, being some 20 minutes drive from the Atlantic City area. It will have accommodations to park some 400 cars on its grounds. Facing the bay, it is located on one of the coolest spots in the area.

Casino for many years has offered summer nightclub fare. Pontiere declared that the site might be used one night a week to attract dancers, with a name band imported. Stock prices would range from $2.20 down. House thus would be scaled at a little above $8,000 per week.

Richard Kemper, manager of the Erlanger, Buffalo, says that mail orders now represent about 60% of the business for touring shows here. They used to comprise about 40%, he estimates.

'Blondes' Hitting Sock Grosses On Tour Following Dreary Chi Run

After its disappointing Chicago run, "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes" is now getting big grosses on tour. The Herman Levin-Oliver Smith production had the most profitable weeks of its history stanza before last, netting around $27,000 on a gross of $81,125 for seven performances in St. Louis and one in Des Moines, ending Jan. 20. The profit is figured to have been around $6,000 last week on the $48,000 gross for eight performances spread over Des Moines, Omaha and Minneapolis, ending Saturday night (26).

Prospects for the musical are also good for the next few weeks. It remains all this week in Minneapolis, where the advance demand was so big that the local theatre manager had to have his private phone disconnected to avoid "house seat" requests from acquaintances. The Saturday night (26) opening there drew $7,500. The advance is also hefty for next week's stand in Milwaukee, after which the show goes to Detroit for three weeks, with lively interest reported.

In-and-Out for a While

Business for the preceding weeks was uneven. Following the engagement in Chicago, where the loss was around $50,000 (including preliminary tour expenses), "Blondes" had a profit of $4,634 on a gross of $77,656 for 11 performances Dec. 25-Jan. 1 in Dallas, and an estimated net of $5,000 on a $37,179 gross for five performances Jan. 3-5 in Houston, but spent Jan. 6-7 in travel and had an estimated loss of around $3,000 on a gross of $33,447 for six performances Jan. 8-12 in Kansas City.

One of the unfortunate aspects of the Chicago stand was the way business nose-dived in the final weeks, after arrangements were finally completed to take to the road again. Thus, for the week ending Dec. 1, the loss was $1,971 on a gross of $36,018; week ending Dec. 8, the loss was $3,939 on a gross of $32,376; week ending Dec. 15, the loss was $7,611 on a gross of $27,023, and for the closing week ending Dec. 22, the loss was $11,240 (after deducting $2,020 for souvenir book royalties) on a gross of $20,298.

As of the end of the Chicago engagement, the show's pressagent was replaced and the whole publicity policy, which had emphasized a suggestive angle, was revised.

Order Pre-Trial Exams On Blanche Ring Claim For Tax Refund Checks

Albany, Jan. 29.

Pre-trial examinations in Catskill, N. Y., and in Beverly Hills have been directed by Supreme Court Justice Kenneth S. MacAffer in connection with a legal tangle between Blanche Ring (Winninger), former musical comedy and vaudeville star, and Frank B. Meseke, Coxsackie attorney. Mrs. Winninger, 74, and now a Coast resident, started suit to recover $25,505 in U. S. Government and California checks representing tax refunds, and to obtain all papers concerning her tax matters. Alleging that Meseke has wrongly withheld the checks and papers, she seeks $50,000 damages for alleged malpractice.

Meseke, counter-suing, asks $50,000 for alleged defamation of reputation and requests the court to dismiss Mrs. Winninger's suit and to grant him a lien against the tax rebate checks. This is for legal services to her. The lawyer also challenges her right to revoke a power of attorney which, he claims, she gave him.

Justice MacAffer last week (23) directed that Meseke produce certain books and records at an examination Feb. 11 in Greene County Court in Catskill. He ruled that a pre-trial examination of Mrs. Winninger shall be held in Beverly Hills, at a date to be fixed later.

Dickie Moore, former moppet film star appearing in support of Fredric March and Florence Eldridge in "Autumn Garden," plans to change his professional name to Richard Moore. Following his tour in the Lillian Hellman play, the actor heads for the Coast for a part in the screen edition of "A Sound of Hunting."

'Stalag' Profit Now 48G On 50G Investment

Backers of "Stalag 17" received a $18,000 dividend last week, bringing the total distributed profit to $48,000 thus far on the $50,000 investment. The latest payoff includes the balance of the show's end of the $110,000 film sale to Paramount, plus further net from the legit run.

Additional assets include about $15,000 in undistributed profits and $10,000 sinking fund (money for the union bonds was supplied personally by the show's producer-director, Jose Ferrer). The Donald Bevan-Edmund Trzcinski comedy-melodrama, currently in its 49th week at the 48th Street, N. Y., breaks even at a gross of about $12,000.

With the film edition of the yarn not due for release until March of next year, plans for a tour depend on how business holds up on Broadway. Last week's gross was just over $17,000.

'Point' 8½G Profit Cues Early Payoff

At its current capacity-plus boxoffice pace, "Point of No Return," now in its eighth week at the Alvin, N. Y., is due to earn back its production cost by late March. The Paul Osborn dramatization of John P. Marquand's best-seller, starring Henry Fonda, is making a weekly operating profit of around $8,500, which will presumably increase to approximately $9,000 when some extra-space advertising is amortized and certain equipment rentals are paid off.

H. C. Potter, who bowed out as stager of the show during the tryout tour, is reportedly getting his regular royalties as per contract, amounting to 2½% until the production is in the black and 3% thereafter. Also, provision is understood being made for Elia Kazan, who went out of town several times to make restaging suggestions after Potter's exit. Fonda gets 10% of the gross, with a guarantee of $1,500 a week.

The author royalty, a straight 10%, will be shared by Osborn and Marquand on a sliding scale. The adaptor gets 7½% on the first $5,000 gross, 6¼% on the next $2,000 and 5% on the take above $7,000, with the novelist receiving 2½% on the first $5,000, plus 3¾% on the next $2,000 and 5% on everything over $7,000. There is a slightly different split on the British rights and a 50-50 arrangement on all other rights.

The Leland Hayward production, regularly topping a $38,200 gross, was financed at $100,000, plus 25% overcall. It cost about $109,000 to bring in, including around $15,000 tryout profit.

Big 'Grass Roots' Public Still Awaits Legit: Abel

Springfield, Mass., Jan. 29.

City's newly-formed commercial legit organization, the Court Square Co., Inc., was given an open invitation to call upon the resources of ANTA when it formally goes into action next month, by Walter Abel, who spoke here last week (23) before the College Club.

"We would be only too happy to give our talents to Springfield to accomplish here what has been done in Hartford, Pittsburgh and Cleveland," he said adding, "there is no reason why we couldn't have opened in Springfield."

Abel told his audience "We have lost two generations of theatre tradition. Movies, and now that 'monster', television, are seducing whatever young talent the theatre so desperately needs."

Actor blamed pix houses for replacing the road show circuit, but said that even limited experiments in the "back to the grass roots" field have shown that there is still a big, enthusiastic audience awaiting the return of legit on the road.

Say It Ain't So!

Producer Kermit Bloomgarden, whose interest in the N.Y. Giants baseball team is only slightly less intense than his concern with the theatre, is off to a bad year. "Irene Selznick beat me out for 'Flight Into Egypt,' the George Tabori play," he explains. "Then Arthur Miller couldn't finish his new script in time for production this season. On top of that, we were evicted from our apartment, when the landlord won court permission to cut it up into smaller units.

"But the crusher was when they drafted Willie Mays."

Complex Production Tale On Click 'Shrike' Is Due To Off-And-On-Again Ferrer

One of the wrinkles in the involved production history of "The Shrike," Joseph Kramm's click melodrama at the Cort, N. Y., is that when Aldrich & Myers had the script under option, they made several attempts to get Jose Ferrer as male lead. Latter is now playing the part in his own production, which he staged. Judith Evelyn, who was sought by Aldrich & Myers for the femme lead, is costarred.

When Richard Myers (his partner, Richard Aldrich, was then and still is on duty with the Navy) tried to do "The Shrike," the author was slated to direct. After Ferrer turned down the show, Arthur Kennedy, Gregory Peck, Alfred Drake and Van Heflin were among those to whom it was offered unsuccessfully. Then Otto Preminger, associated with Aldrich & Myers in the presentation of "Moon Is Blue," suggested that he might be able to "deliver" Ferrer, but he also failed. During all this time, Miss Evelyn was in line for the title part.

After Aldrich & Myers relinquished their option on the script and Ferrer had it agai (he had originally optioned and then dropped it before Aldrich & Myers had it), Jed Harris acquired the meller and sought John Garfield, among others, as star. However, he also couldn't cast it, and the script was picked up a third time by Ferrer, who this time produced and directed it himself, co-starring with Miss Evelyn. The play drew seven-to-one favorable notices from the first-string critics and has made a promising boxoffice start.

Meanwhile, Kramm has completed a new script which Aldrich & Myers are interested in producing.

'SHRIKE' SEEN EARNING COST BACK IN 7 WEEKS

"The Shrike," Joseph Kramm melodrama which has made a promising start at the Cort, N. Y., is a prospect to earn back its production cost in about seven weeks' operation. The show cost approximately $35,000 to produce and can net around $5,000-$6,000 a week, the exact amount depending on stagehand requirements and the advertising budget.

Last week, the first full stanza, grossed just over $25,000, despite the play's small advance sale and lack of theatre party bookings. Moreover, the advance sale is building and prospects are that this week's gross may approach the $27,700 capacity.

Jose Ferrer, who produced (in association with Milton Baron), directed and is co-starring in the show with Judith Evelyn, is due to leave the cast i 16 weeks, for reasons not fully explained. However, he figures that a satisfactory replacement should not be hard to get and that the meller should be good for a long run.

Kenwith to Manage for 3d Season at Princeton Barn

Princeton, Jan. 29.

Herbert Kenwith, who operated the Princeton Summer Theatre for the last two years at the McCarter Theatre, will have the spot again this summer. Iit's understood that the deal calls for a rental of $1,000 a week. Rate was $300 a week last year and $100 i 1950.

Okay for Kenwith to manage the campus playhouse for another season was voted at a recent meeting here of the Princeton U. board of trustees.

Nat'l 'SP' May Return to Coast Teeoff; Touring 'King' Production Is Nixed

Touring company of "South Pacific," originally produced two seasons ago on the Coast under San Francisco and Los Angeles Civic Light Opera Assn. auspices, may return there this summer for subscription engagements under the same sponsorship. It would be the first time any production has played a return date for the groups.

The Rodgers-Hammerstein-Logan show, currently in the last four weeks of a record-breaking Chicago run, will play other midwest cities before working west for the summer engagements. It's figured that by playing all the available territory, including split-weeks and possibly even some one-nighters if arangements can be made for the moves involved, the musical may be able to continue through next season. Janet Blair continues as femme star, with Webb Tilton having succeeded Richard Eastham as co-star.

Meanwhile, tentative plans for a Coast production of "King and I" have been dropped. According to Richard Rodgers, composer of the show and co-producer with lyricist Oscar Hammerstein 2d, the production would be too tough to cast and there's no hurry, so they now figure on waiting to tour the original edition after its current Broadway run, with Gertrude Lawrence continuing as star and Yul Brynner as top-featured male lead. A factor in the decision, Rodgers says, is his and Hammerstein's desire to "spread out the profits."

The producer-authors expect the original company of "South Pacific" to continue on Broadway at least through the current season and possibly well into next, after which it will also be toured. Enthusiastic over the standee-limit boxoffice response to the early-curtain performance of the show Monday night (28), Rodgers thinks the once-weekly 7 p. m. curtain will tap a huge potential public. He expects it to extend the Broadway run of "Pacific" and hopes to institute the same arrangement at "King and I."

When the subject comes up for discussion at tomorrow's (Thurs.) board meeting of the League of N. Y. Theatres, Rodgers will be present to urge that the early opening Monday nights be permanently scheduled for all Broadway shows.

Who's Afraid of Chi Crix? Not Uta Hagen, She Sez

New York.

Editor, VARIETY:

In last week's (23) VARIETY, you allege that one of the reasons I did not wish to tour in "Saint Joan" was the fact that Chicago critics did not like Margaret Webster productions. I don't know how such a statement could have come to you. Certainly I never made it. Miss Webster and I have been colleagues since 1938, and have always had a happy working relationship.

I also never have said anything about the Chicago critics, since my theatre experiences in that city have been among my happiest.

My reasons for not touring in "Saint Joan" are completely personal, and have to do with the upbringing of my daughter and the necessity to be with her at this time.

Uta Hagen.

Three 'Moon' Cos. Sure Look Rosy

Payments totalling $80,000 are being made this week on the three companies of "Moon Is Blue." Included are dividends of $25,000 on the original production and $30,000 on the second edition, plus an initial return of $25,000 on the third troupe. The three versions of the show are set up and capitalized as separate corporate entities.

In the case of the third company, it is expected to get into the black in two or three more weeks at its current boxoffice rate. Besides the present $25,000 payoff, the show has around $12,000 in undistributed operating profits and cash reserve, plus about $3,000 in bonds, leaving approximately $10,000 to be earned back on the $50,000 investment.

The current $25,000 dividend on the original production brings the total profits on this $75,000 venture to $105,000. It continues to play to near-capacity business at the Henry Miller Theatre, N. Y., where it is in its 47th week, but will probably be moved intact to London late this spring or early summer, with Barbara Bel Geddes, Donald Cook and Barry Nelson going along as stars. It will be replaced on Broadway by the second troupe, now in its 39th week at the Harris, Chicago. The latest $30,000 divvy on the second company brings the total profit to $130,000 so far on the $60,000 investment.

"Moon" was authored by F. Hugh Herbert, and staged by Otto Preminger, who is associated in the production with Richard Aldrich, Richard Myers and Julius Fleischmann.

Evans Marking Time With B'way Legit; Nixes Pix

With no professional plans for the balance of the current season, Maurice Evans will go to England soon to see the London shows and visit relatives. He has turned down several Hollywood offers, and a projected television production setup probably won't be ready to go before next fall.

The actor-manager's plans for a Broadway production of the novel, "Teahouse of the August Moon," depend on the dramatization being written by Elma Huganir, and matters are in abeyance regarding "Ceremony of Innocence," the other item on his schedule. However, the star is still trying to complete arrangements to produce and play the title part in a film version of Shakespeare's "King Richard II," one of his successful stage vehicles.

Meanwhile, Evans has sold his place at North Salem, N. Y., and has bought a new home at Wilton, Conn., where he's continuing his hobby of raising West Highland white terriers. He will exhibit in February for the first time at the Westminster Kennel Club show at Madison Square Garden, N. Y.

Olivia Yens B'way; Taking Minimum 'Candida' Road Dates Despite Okay B.O.

Because she wants to get to Broadway this spring with "Candida," Olivia de Havilland is playing only minimum engagements on her current tour in the Thomas Hammond revival of the Bernard Shaw play. That explains why the show stayed only the scheduled three weeks in Chicago and is booked for only single weeks in such multiple-week stands as Boston, Philly, etc.

The production is due April 14 at an unspecified Shubert house in 45th Street, N. Y., for a limited run. The actress has no intention of playing into the summer, but may do a picture. Plans for fall are indefinite.

Despite savage reviews, the star was a boxoffice powerhouse in Chicago. Moreover, the strong grosses for the show were apparently not due to its being on Theatre Guild subscription, since the show played to bigger attendance the second week than the first, and hit a maximum on its nonsubscription third week. Engagement had been booked in advance for only three weeks, and despite urging by the local management, that schedule had to be maintained if the April 14 date on Broadway is to be kept. Tour has been consistently profitable, and is due to get back balance of its investment in the next couple of weeks.

In what was probably Philly's most important and anxiously-awaited legit preem of the current season, "Venus Observed," latest Christopher Fry play to reach American shores, and produced by the Theatre Guild in association with Sir Laurence Olivier (who directed), was greeted by a generally favorable attitude but with plenty of dissenting votes by a large, but not-capacity house at the Shubert last night (28).

Philly did not see "Ring Around The Moon," but has had a chance to evaluate Fry by both "Lady's Not For Burning" and "Sleep For Prisoners." This newest piece, although strictly in modern dress, is bound to have to stand comparison with his "Lady." Whether it can duplicate the latter's financial as well as artistic success on Broadway is very problematic, despite the fancy array of names—Guild, Rex Harrison and Lilli Palmer as stars, Fry as author, and Olivier as director.

One thing is sure. This one proves once again that there is nobody writing for the theatre today who has a surer or more delicately-attuned hand when it comes to writing lyrics or drama. Time and time again there are passages in "Venus" that have the poetic lift and the fervor and what might be called the classical sense of Shakespeare. Miss Palmer has one speech in act two that not only wins her a justified salvo of applause, but that should be read and studied intently by all devoted drama students.

There is the usual Fry talent for fine writing—a species of writing, by the way, that so carries away the listener that he hears and is enthralled and then has to admit, candidly, in the intermission, that he doesn't know what it is all about. There is also the same elfin, fanciful touch of the English writer which he mixes with what seems like almost diabolic shrewdness, with robust and strictly up-to-date humor.

Plot of "Venus" concerns the English Duke of Altair who, getting a bit along in age, is principally concerned with two things—acquiring a second wife and following his beloved hobby of astronomy. On a propitious day—when there is to be an eclipse of the sun—he invites three possible femme prospects in matrimony to his observatory and intends to bestow on one the classical apple of victory. However, by chance, the young and glamorous daughter of one of his employees arrives on the same date, and when she finds her daddy has been stealing funds from the Duke for some time and is, she thinks, in danger of exposure, she decides to offer herself as a sacrificial bride.

The Duke, who knows all about her father's fraudulencies, is entranced and in a moment of extreme danger (the burning of the observatory) it seems that the rather mis-matched romance is set. But later the gal realizes that she cares much more for the Duke's handsome son, and the Duke is sensible enough to understand and agree. He finally decides upon his future wife who, it so happens, is the femme who, for slightly confused reasons, started the conservatory's conflagration.

The title, although possibly a little vague, is of course to be found in the combination of the Duke's two major interests.

"Venus" has a top-flight first act, a second that starts well and then has numerous ups and downs, and a last act that again reaches the original heights in final scenes that should be long remembered by those who see them. Here it must be admitted even more than in "Lady's" that Fry's brilliance at writing far transcends his skill as an actual playwright.

The cast plays a big part in putting this one over, most especially the two stars. Miss Palmer, as Perpetua the heroine, contributes a gorgeous combination of sex magnetism and sound acting. Harrison matches her most of the way as the Duke, and there are fine performances by John Merivale as the Duke's son, John Williams as Perpetua's father and Hurd Hatfield as her brother. The women, who seem on occasion to have more trouble in delivering the near-classical cadences of the author, are Joan Haythorne, Claudia Morgan and Eileen Peel.

The lighting of the play leaves a great deal to be desired in all but a few of the later scenes, and Olivier's direction sags most noticeably at times, notably in act two.

Fry is admittedly caviar in his writing, and this one's no exception. But it has enough important names lined up on its side to put it over. Waters.

A Gift for Cathy

Dallas, Jan. 26.

Theatre '52 production of comedy-drama in three acts (five scenes) by Ronald Alexander. Features Edwin Whitner, Evelyn Bettis, Norma Winters. Directed by Ramsey Burch. Set and costumes by Tony Deeds. At Theatre '52, Dallas, Jan. 21, '52; $2.50 top.

Mike O'Donnell	Edwin Whitner
Brian Foley	Peter Donat
Flo O'Donnell	Norma Winters
Mary Foley	Marion Morris
Ann Carson	Mary Dell Roberts
Cathy O'Donnell	Evelyn Bettis
Tom Blake	Charles Braswell

Ronald Alexander's amusing comedy-drama, third new play in the sixth season of Margo Jones' arena here, reveals—in three acts and 11 days—the intimate lives and the loves of a sometimes wacky Irish family, the O'Donnells. Setting in the tenement district of a large U.S. city neatly serves as a vent for the frank dialog, as the cast indulges in free love, drinks Irish whiskey copiously, and harps on Hibernian legends.

The O'Donnells, man and wife, had been active in the Irish revolution. Driven from Eire, they live in a small world of their own in the third-floor flat, but keep one eye on the land of the shamrock. "Iron Mike" rejects all newspapers except his beloved Irish Echo. He toils as a day laborer, imbibes freely, and after 30 years of wedded life, he and Flo openly boast of their sex life. Their amorous sessions together well-nigh embarrass the viewers.

Less rational, though, is their daughter Cathy, whose immoral behavior they sanction. She has been living for seven years with an insolvent poet of the tenement. A non-Irish millionaire wants to marry Cathy and she at first accepts him, then sends him away when he fails to produce the intangible "gift" she craves. But when Cathy really slips off her rocker, and insists upon becoming a call-girl, the suitor returns, threatens the spanking her parents neglected, and wins her with his caveman tactics. And everybody is happy.

Cast is excellent, and provides dramatic interludes as well as tagging laughs throughout. There's little plot to work with, but this is padded with colorful, irrelevant banter and reminiscing. Edwin Whitner's role as "Iron Mike" is a standout, and no less shining is Norma Winters' role of wifely dominance. Cathy is beautifully mimed by Evelyn Bettis. A prostitute role gains sympathy as played by Mary Dell Roberts.

Play is entertaining, earthy and at times almost fantastic with Irish fetish. Set and costumes by Tony Deeds are authentic and colorful. Bark.

The Local Angle

Atlanta, Jan. 29.

Atlanta Civic Theatre presentation of comedy-drama by Lee Fuhrman. Stars Jackson McBride, Jacque Jones, Jennings Hertz, Jr., Joe Ewing, Jr. Directed by Tom Chadwick. At Women's Club Auditorium, Atlanta, Jan. 24, '52.

With Joe Ewing, Jr., Carl Rose, Jr., Joe Dayan, Hoke Smith May, John Nelson, Jennings Hertz, Jr., Jacque Jones, Richard Kress, Jackson McBride, Marilyn Davison, Charles Frasch, Sandre Fulle, Sam Pinson, Ernie Lang, Lila Kennedy, Sam Edwards, Dean Baxter, Rose Roffman.

Billed as a comedy-drama, the forte of this piece is its laughs, with melodrama coming in a poor second.

The story concerns newspapering in a small town, with a high-powered managing editor (Jackson McBride) riding herd on a group of staffers, who range from an idealistic reporter (Jennings Hertz, Jr.) to a lush (Hoke Smith May) and a naive cub (Richard Kress).

Author Lee Fuhrman (this is his first play) makes his characters credible and this no mystery, since he's a veteran newspaperman himself, having started his career on the old Philadelphia Ledger. He's worked on a bunch of newspapers in the South, including a city editorship stint on The Atlanta Constitution.

Action of "Angle" takes place in the newsroom of a "typical" small Southern town. The setting, designed by Gordon Miller, is fine.

Fuhrman has worked into the action just about all the foibles that characterize small-town newspaper publishing, including screwball visitors. Play, as it unfolds, is too long. There's a bit too much sermonizing on the lofty ideals of journalism by Hertz. An outstanding job is done by Joe Ewing, Jr., as Sam Hornsby, the printer, who makes the most of a fat part.

On the whole, the Civic Theatre thespians did a good job with "Angle," which has definite possibilities. Luch.

Toronto, Jan. 29.

National company of "Guys and Dolls," with a first week's gross of $47,300, broke the house record of the Royal Alexandra here, with the 1,525-seater scaled at $6 including tax. This was a complete sellout with exception of a few Wednesday matinee seats. With all nights sold in advance, second week will go clean for over $48,000, to beat its own record. Earlier record for this 45-year-old house was just under $45,000 set by Sadler's Wells Ballet last January.

'MOON' SOCKO $25,000 FOR PITTSBURGH WEEK

Pittsburgh, Jan. 29.

Biggest take the No. 3 company of "Moon Is Blue" has had yet, since it hit the road a few months ago, came last week at the Nixon when the show did a shade under $25,000. It had Theatre Guild-American Theatre subscription backing on the session, and that's a healthy factor around here these days, nearly $12,000, as a result of the recent drive in cooperation with the Council of Living Theatre.

"Blue" is sticking this week, an extension having been added so comedy wouldn't have to compete with opening of "Bell, Book and Candle" in Detroit. "Student Prince" follows Monday (4), with Olivia De Havilland's "Candida" in after that.

'Tattoo' $14,700, Det., Jose Greco Ballet 11½G

St. Pete Operetta Hits 18G With 'Brigadoon' Opener To Augur Good Season

St. Petersburg, Fla., Jan. 29.

With a gross of $18,000 for "Brigadoon" during the first week of the 1952 winter season, indications are that Pat Hurley's Operetta here will surpass its 1951 record by a wide margin.

House is dark this week for rehearsals of "Three Wishes for Jamie," which premieres here next week (4-9). There's a substantial advance on this one, which is playing at a $5.40 top.

'Sundays' $18,100, 'Jane' 15G, Philly

Philadelphia, Jan. 29.

Most of the local legit attention this week here in Philly is centered on "Venus Observed," Christopher Fry play which made its American debut last night (28) at the Shubert.

Opening against "Venus Observed" was Cornelia Otis Skinner's newest melodrama, "Paris '90," which is playing a single week at the Locust. "The Student Prince," which did such sensational biz during its two weeks at the Shubert just recently, advertising its positively "farewell tour," is back at the Forrest, this week only, and also opened last night.

Estimates for Last Week

"Month of Sundays," Forrest (2nd week) ($4.55; 1,760). Never got started here, with added handicap of universally bad notices. Scant $18,100 in final stanza, which was musical's first full week. Show closed Saturday for repairs. "Curtain Going Up" next (Feb. 16).

"Jane," Walnut (2nd week) ($3.90; 1,340). Guild production disappointed by not picking up in second week as indicated. Bad notices hurt here too. 'PRINCE' $14,000 IN D.C.; CANCELS SECOND WEEK

Washington, Jan. 29.

Blows from the local drama desks crippled the "farewell" run of the "Student Prince" here, forcing Gayety manager Bernie Ferber to cancel the second stanza of the musical. Critics rapped the shoddy production put on by the Shuberts, though they praised the individual stint of lead Glen Burris. Show racked up $14,000 at a $3.60 top.

Cornelia Otis Skinner, in her new monolog routine, "Paris '90," is due in next Monday (4) for a week.

'Darkness' Okay $19,100 In Indpls.-Columbus Split

Indianapolis, Jan. 29.

Edward G. Robinson in "Darkness at Noon" grossed a good $9,600 in four performances at the Murat here Jan. 24-26, even though biz was clipped by heavy rains Saturday matinee and night. Top was $3.60. House reports healthy advance for Olivia de Havilland in "Candida," here Jan. 31-Feb. 2.

"Darkness" did $9,500 for four in Columbus, at the Hartman, Monday-Wednesday (21-23), for week's total of $19,100. The previous week's take in Detroit was $16,400.

'Gertie' 12G, Hub

Boston, Jan. 29.

Hub legit is on the upbeat this stanza, with three offerings unveiled Monday (28). Advance sale for "Autumn Garden" at the Colonial is reportedly very healthy, with the refurbished "Merry Widow" at the Shubert shaping okay and Emlyn Williams' Dickens readings at the Plymouth opened last night to unanimous critical raves.

Last week's lone entry was the comedy, "Gertie," which wound a two-weeker at the 1,200-seat Plymouth with almost $12,000, a drop of $1,000 from the previous frame. House was scaled at a $3.60 top.

B'way B.O. Afire, Hottest in Years; Barton $45,200, 'Joey' SRO $39,700, Ferrer 25G, 'Age' 36½G, 6 Sellouts

For the third consecutive frame, business spurted on Broadway last week. Virtually all shows registered rises, a few having their best week to date, exceptions being the already-solid sellouts with no margin for improvement. With the average-against-capacity reaching the highest level since such figures have been compiled, indications are that the boom may continue and perhaps even increase this week.

The total gross for all 23 shows last week was $745,700, or 91% of capacity (for the corresponding stanza last season, the total gross for all 23 current shows was $692,000, or 85% of capacity, a rise of 3% from the week before).

Week before last the total for all 23 shows was $720,900, for a corrected average of 87% of capacity, a rise of 8% from the previous week.

Of the recent openings, "The Shrike" pulled a strong $25,000 for its first full week, despite a small advance sale, indicating it as a click potential. The ANTA-presented "Desire Under the Elms" was a near-sellout and has been extended an extra two weeks, while the City Center's "Come of Age" also proved a vigorous draw and will play a third week.

This week brings two openings, "Gertie," arriving tonight (Wed.) and "Jane" due Friday night (1).

Specialty Attractions Saving the Day For Local Mgrs. as Single Artists Flop

Local impresarios around the country—longhair, pop and legit alike—are complaining about falling off in biz so far this season. They state that special attractions alone, like the Duke Ellington-Sarah Vaughan-Nat (King) Cole combo, Rodgers & Hamerstein Nights, "Don Juan in Hell" and Sadler's Wells Theatre Ballet, have been their life-savers.

Concert people especially have been complaining about the drop-off in biz, as much as 30% from last season, with 20 to 25% the average. This drop has been variable, from 5% in some areas to the 30% in others. Most of the losses have come with single artist attractions, including the best. Even a Jascha Heifetz drew only half a house last fall in Houston. The public, instead, has been buying group attractions.

Biz has been bad in Houston, Pittsburgh, Rochester and elsewhere. A Cincy manager reports this to be his worst season ever in the single recital field. Definite lack of public interest in the concert biz has been felt even in the citadel of music, New York City, where a Boston Symphony or Philadelphia Orchestra no longer sell out as they used to. On the other hand, biz in D. C. is reported good.

There is business around, managers say, but the public, with less coin to spend for amusement, is shopping for price now. The SRO of "Don Juan" and Sadler's Wells, say the impresarios, proves there's business around.

Artist Fee Cuts,

Single artists aren't the draw they used to be, aver these managers. There are no giants around any more, as there were 20 years ago, with rare exceptions, like a Vladimir Horowitz or Artur Rubinstein. Specialty attractions seem to be the only thing keeping the local impresarios in business.

Managers claim that single artists on their series have been successfully carried the past few seasons only due to the group attractions. They want to drop these single artists now, because the latter don't want to cut their fees in the face of the realities of the situation.

A Horowitz won't cut his $4,000 fee per concert, but he's an exception; he can always fill a hall. He's one of the very few artists every local manager is after. His manager has had 140 requests for dates next season already, while Horowitz can or will only play 38. An Artur Rubinstein at $3,000 to $3,500 and a Solomon at $1,500 can still make the local manager a profit.

But a Heifetz at $3,500, a Leonard Warren at $2,000, a Nathan Milstein at $1,750, a Marian Anderson at $3,000 (or $2,000 plus percentage) or a Margaret Truman at $1,500, can't pay off for the local entrepreneur, because they don't draw overflows or full houses. Not when he can get a "Don Juan in Hell" for $3,500 to $4,000, a Shaw Chorale for $2,500, a Rodgers & Hammerstein Night for $3,000, or a Sol Hurok "Fledermaus" for $3,500, and have SRO biz more often than not.

Stubbornness of artists in cutting their fees was manifest again last week, when Met soprano Bidu Sayao left Columbia Artists Mgt. for National Concert & Artists Corp. Soprano wanted a guarantee next season of 20 concerts at $1,800 per, which Columbia couldn't promise.

'Wedding' $19,800, P'tl'd

Portland, Ore., Jan. 29.

Ethel Waters in "Member of the Wedding" grossed an excellent $19,800 for five nights and three matinees at the Mayfair Theatre here last week. The 1,500-seater was scaled at $3.60.

Edward G. Robinson in "Darkness at Noon" is due as next attraction.

'Okla.' $22,100, K.C.

Kansas City, Jan. 29.

In its sixth time around, "Oklahoma" was still good at the boxoffice here, a week's stand at the Fox Midwest Orpheum Theatre garnering $22,100 at a $4.27 top.

Edward G. Robinson in "Darkness At Noon" plays the Orpheum this week.

This is no "Pal Joey." Like the Rodgers-Hart musical, this Clemence Dane-Richard Addinsell doggerel drama-with-music has been touted so much since its original production that it has become a legend. But where the "Joey" revival has thus far been a bigger click than the original, "Come of Age" merely makes sentimental softies of its diehard boosters. In this case, obviously, the critics and disinterested public were right the first time.

Apparently the only notable difference between this revival and Delos Chappell's initial presentation 18 years ago, is Judith Anderson's performance in her original part. According to the reviews, the star's playing then was impressive, even memorable. But as the years have matured her as a person, they have also given her greater stature, emotional depth and authority. Except that it offers virtuoso playing by one of the distinguished dramatic actresses of her generation, however, this "Come of Age" revival is a clinker.

For the most part, the supporting players are only passable. Robert Brown is acceptable as the Boy in the prolog, but is a stick of wood in the major scenes. Melville Ruick is competent in the straight part of the heroine's wealthy admirer, Marian Seldes is plausibly sharp-clawed as a feline friend, and Robert Harrison intones as if the Shadow of Death were a train-caller. Muriel Rahn, who also was in the original cast, impresses with an on-stage vocal and, with Beverly Hosier and Thomas Motto, repeats with the offstage singing.

Original 'Age' Cast

Delos Chappell production, staged by Clemence Dane; settings, James Reynolds; orchestra conductor, Macklin Marrow. At Maxine Elliott, N. Y., Jan. 12, '34; $3.30 top.

Boy	Stephen Haggard
Shadow of Death	Frederick G. Lewis
Woman	Judith Anderson
Man	John W. Austin
Friends of the Woman: Edna James, Clara Palmer, Dorothy Johnson, Mabel Gore, Virginia Volland, Katherine Tracy, Helen Wills, Alice Swanson, Malcolm Solton, Jeremy Bowman, Judd Carrell, Harold Webster, Wheeler Dryden, Ralph Stuart
Singer for the Woman	Dorothy Johnson
River Music	Helen Wills
Singer for the Boy	Ralph Stuart
Entertainer	Muriel Rahn
Pianists	Morton Gould, Bert Shefter

Richard Addinsell's background music, giving emotional color to virtually the entire play, is so good that it suggests what the theatre normally misses in this regard, but the fact that it is scored for 18 pieces makes it commercially impractical. Generally, the rhymed couplet writing only aggravates the pretentious quality of the play. But the yarn itself, about the 18th century boy poet, Thomas Chatterton, who suicides and is allowed to return to life in the 20th century to come of age by knowing love, jealousy, and hate, is dated, musty and tiresome.

Especially in the pokey prolog, Guthrie McClintic's staging seems casual to the point of slackness. Raymond Sovey's settings, based on the original designs by James Reynolds, are handsome, but rather expansive in conformity with the barnlike City Center stage.

VARIETY's original review (by Abel) said the show "reminds of Rodgers and Hart gone LeGallienne." Except for Miss Anderson's high-voltage performance, that goes for the revival. Hobe.

Legit Follow-Ups

South Pacific
(MAJESTIC, N. Y.)

Although "South Pacific" has turned out to be not quite indestructible, it remains after nearly three years and numerous cast replacements an impressively hardy and vigourous show. The Rodgers-Hammerstein-Logan musical is no longer even approximately what it was originally, but it is still unforgettable entertainment.

Replacements among the leads include Martha Wright as Ensign Nellie Forbush, George Britton as Emile de Becque, Odette Myrtil as Bloody Mary and Irma Andre as Liat, the native girl. Remaining from the original cast are Myron McCormick as Luther Billis, William Tabbert as Lt. Joe Cable, Martin Wolfson as Capt. Brackett and Harvey Stephens as Commander Harbison. In some cases there has been a succession of changes; for example, Britton is the fourth singer to be co-starred as the French planter, the role played originally by Ezio Pinza, who was followed by Ray Middleton and then Roger Rico (not counting understudy substitutions).

All this has inevitably hurt the show, just as the long run has naturally brought a subtle but perceptible performance disintegration. The difference is more apparent in the case of some of the replacements. For obvious example, no one has ever compared to Pinza and Mary Martin as stars. Britton, recently promoted from understudy and a regular Seabee role, is acceptable vocally, but no hair-whitening and "characterization" can make him old enough for the part, and he lacks the stature, confidence, air of authority and the personal magnetism that Pinza had. He is quite intelligible, both in the songs and dialog, in contrast to Rico, who was dropped for that reason. But like all the others, he brings nothing of the Pinza vitality and excitement, especially in the love scenes.

This latter lack is accentuated by Miss Wright's passionless quality as the romantic lead, Nellie. A pleasant enough singer, Miss Wright gets across with such tunes as "Cockeyed Optimist," but never succeeds in making the theatre pulsate with rapture the way Miss Martin did with "Wonderful Guy." And there's no longer the same irresistible joy or poignance that Miss Martin gave to the emotional scenes.

Miss Myrtil has an infectious style as Bloody Mary, possibly the best comedy treatment the role has had, and her singing is good. Miss Sandre hasn't the indefinable style that Betta St. John brought to the part of Liat. But if McCormick's playing of Billis has broadened a bit, he remains a standout, while Tabbert, Wolfson and Stephens are still excellent in the remaining principal roles.

There's no escaping the fact that with this replacement-riddled cast and after almost three years' run, "South Pacific" has lost much of its unique depth, color and affecting impact. But it is still one of the great shows of legit history. Hobe.

The Moon Is Blue
(HENRY MILLER, N. Y.)

After nearly a year at the same stand, this F. Hugh Herbert comedy concoction still seems an intermittently diverting, somewhat juvenile and vastly popular operation that should go on minting profits more or less indefinitely for everyone concerned. Since putting first nighters in stitches and drawing unanimous critical raves in the spring of 1951, it has spawned two touring facsimiles and is a cinch for films, etc.

The performance generally holds up remarkably well, and so does the physical production. As the relentlessly garrulous, disconcertingly frank young heroine, Barbara Bel Geddes seems just as direct and disarming as ever, and has perhaps acquired even more poise and authority during the long run. Barry Nelson remains convincing and likable in the difficult part of the young architect, pretty much a straight for the others. And as the remaining co-star, Donald Cook seems a bit less mannered and not quite so busy as at the opening. His comedy timing is superb, but his mugging, progressively exagerated throughout the evening, misses the real humor of the character and settles for easy slapstick laughs.

Following after "Kiss and Tell" and "Love or Money," this play makes it something like seven hours of dialog that Herbert has devoted to the general topic of virginity. Unless he's a pressagent for it, that should be about sufficient. Hobe.

The Happy Time

Edinburgh, Jan. 21.

Laurence Olivier & Gilbert Miller presentation (by arrangement with Richard Rodgers & Oscar Hammerstein 2d) of comedy by Samuel Taylor, based on book by Robert Fontaine. Directed by George Devine. Sets by Vivienne Kernot; costumes by Motley; music arranged by Herbert Menges; orchestra under direction of Tod Boyd. At Lyceum, Edinburgh, Jan. 21, '52.

Bibi	Andrew Ray
Papa	Peter Finch
Maman	Rachel Kempson
Grandpere	Ronald Squire
Uncle Desmonde	Peter Dyneley
Uncle Louis	George Devine
Aunt Felice	Ann Wilton
Mignonette	Genevieve Page
Sally	Patricia Fryer
Doctor	Geoffrey Bayldon
Alfred	Michael Redington
Mr. Frye	Aubrey Dexter

Scot audiences are seeing the British preem of this comedy before London. Cast is good for this happy piece of comic enchantment about a little boy's growing pains and his attitude towards growing up. Play has opened here to highly successful reaction. It's the first 1952 managerial project of Sir Laurence Olivier, who is presenting the comedy in association with Gilbert Miller.

Strongest piece of casting is that of Peter Finch, a recent Olivier discovery, in the role of Papa, the head of this lovable French-Canadian Bonnard family. Finch, harried on every side by the whims of a quaint family, acts with quiet strength and restraint.

Greatest audience interest centers round the performance of the British juve actor Andrew Ray, 12-year-old son of British radio comedian Ted Ray. It's his first stage play, and he acquits himself with great confidence and much charm of acting, playing with dash and spirit and an attractive French-Canadian accent that only stumbles on occasion. (He was the urchin with Irene Dunne in the pic, "The Mudlark").

Ronald Squire does fine as the elderly Grandpere, philosopher and amorist, who defies old age and goes off to meet the gay widow nightly. George Devine, who also directed, is well-chosen for the part of the wine-loving Uncle Louis, and is suitably bulky, nonchalant and touchy about his failings.

For the part of Mignonette, the unexpected visitor who does duty for the crazy Bonnards as maid, the Paris stage has sent over Genevieve Page, a 23-year-old actress with much charm and a wealth of good looks. She's suitably pert, pretty and enticing.

The role of the cautious Presbyterian mother, Maman, a Scotswoman who has married into the unruly Bonnard family and tries hard to keep its members in order, is well played by Rachel Kempson (in private life Mrs. Michael Redgrave). She doesn't quite master the Scottish accent, but this is a fault only evident to critical Scottish ears.

The bashful suitor (Alfred) of Michael Redington is a little acting gem, and little Patricia Fryer, another juve player, is nicely cast as Sally, the girl from next door. Settings of the Bonnards' living-room, and of the school principal's office, are okay, and the direction has lively pace and spirit, particularly towards the end.

Judging by its out-of-London opening, "The Happy Time" seems set for happy times in the West End of London. Gord.

The Loving Elms

London, Jan. 16.

Anthony Hawtrey's production of drama in three acts by Patrick Cargill. Directed by Andre Van Gyseghem. At Embassy Theatre, London, Jan. 15, '52. $1.50 top.

Ronald Bradley	Robin Hunter
Joan Bradley	Joan Forrest
Lydia Waring	Valerie White
Robert Baxter	James Carney
Sheila Wilton	Betty Lucas
Thomas Wilton	igel Arkwright
Colonel Mackwood	Julian D'Albie
Mrs. Mackwood	Sylvia Coleridge

With just a little polishing and quickening this could be a good whodunit. It has sufficient dramatic suspense to hold interest but is marred by a slow first act that gets it off on the wrong foot. Its appeal will be only local, and doubtful if, in its present form, it would prove profitable as a West End entry.

Mystery centers on a group of people spending a weekend at an old country inn. Bored with bad weather, they reluctantly mingle in a parlor game Alibi suggested by one of the men. He assumes that an unseen visitor has been murdered and accuses them all of fabricating evidence of their activities. The questioner than discloses that the man really has been killed, and he is determined to find the guilty person. The victim, an internationally famous millionaire, although supposed to be unknown to the other guests, turns out to have been directly or indirectly connected with the suspects and it is a question of who had the biggest motive. The game inquisitor, who had come to act as a bodyguard for the victim, pretends to be the killer, and fakes another murder, which finally traps the slayer.

Cast is generally well chosen, with Valerie White outstanding as the ex-girl friend. Julian d'Albi and Sylvia Coleridge characteristically depict regular army types. Robin Hunter and Joan Forrest make a timid pair of trial marriage experimenters with Nigel Arkwright and Betty Lucas supplying good local color as the innkeepers. James Carney as the avenging inquisitor would make his role more impressive with steadier handling of the part. Piece was ably directed by Andre Van Gyseghem. Clem.

La Valse des Toreadors
(Waltz of the Toreadors)

Paris, Jan. 20.

Claude Sainval production of comedy-drama in five acts by Jean Anouilh. Features Marie Ventura, Sainval. Directed by Roland Pietri; sets and costumes by Jean-Denis Malcles. At Comedie des Champs Elysees, Paris.

General	Claude Sainval
General's Wife	Marie Ventura
Gaston	Francois Guerin
Estelle	Anne Vitrac
Sidonie	Marie-Therese Rival
Doctor	Gabriel Gobin
Maid	Genevieve Morel
Mlle. de Saint-Euverte	Madeleine Barbulee
Mme. Dupont-Fredaine	Denise Perret
Padre	Lucien Arnaud
Pamela	Solange Certai

Jean Anouilh is offering another variation on a perennial theme which is perhaps boringly familiar to French audiences, that of fake morality crushing the purity of first love. In fact, "La Valse des Toreadors" is a variation based on two characters, the General and his lady, who appeared in another Anouilh play, "Ardele."

Whatever the French reaction may be, in view of the English vogue Anouilh is enjoying, it is possible there is something to salvage from this rewarmed mishmash. Ostensibly, the plot deals this time with first love grown old and useless, but Anouilh changes the pace and makes of it a barracks-room ballad with farcical trimmings, in which the General and his lady hate each other and the General airs his views on amorous conquest.

The play is no great shakes, but it's made painless by flashes of Anouilh's colorful dialog and paradoxes. It is uneven in mood and a bit talky, and some of it aggressively vulgar. However, since the talk is about sex, this may be a commercial virtue if the play were retouched. French critics are offended by it as a portrayal of French depravity, especially now that the UN is sitting (they said as much about the Anouilh film "Deux Sous de Violettes"), but Americans can afford to take a lighter view of French vices. It is possible something could be done with this in the States in a stepped-up burlesque version.

As the General, Claude Sainval is best in the farcical mood. Marie Ventura's session of telling the General about himself is a strong bit of acting. As the freethinking doctor, Gabriel Gobin lacks stage presence needed for the role. Watt.

Lait Steps In For WW

With Walter Winchell dropping his syndicated column and ABC Sunday evening commentary program after being ordered by his doctor and heart specialists to take "an immediate and complete rest from all activities," New York Mirror editor Jack Lait has taken over the column. Lait, who for years has been pinchhitting on the column during Winchell's vacations, stepped into the breach immediately and will do the stint daily except Fridays.

Meanwhile, the N.Y. Post, which had been serializing "The Winchell Story" as an "expose," dropped the feature from Monday's (28) edition and announced it will postpone publication of the last six installments of its 24-article series until Winchell resumes writing. Post frontpaged the explanation, "We believe in the old journalistic principle that a newspaper should not argue with a man while he isn't in position to answer back."

Winchell will not do his ABC gabcast this Sunday (3). Another ABC gabber, Drew Pearson, whose syndicated column also appears in the Mirror, volunteered to sub for Winchell on the air. Pearson called the web Sunday (27) evening, immediately after Winchell announced his hiatus, offering to do the program cuffo or with the coin being donated to the Damon Runyon Cancer Fund, which is headed by WW. He similarly wired Winchell in Miami the following day. Pearson said he has enough material left over from his 6 p.m. Sunday show to provide the nucleus for a second newscast in Winchell's 9 p.m. slot.

No decision has been made as yet on a radio sub for Winchell, which will have to be cleared by WW, the network and Kenyon & Eckhardt, agency for Warner-Hudnut, the sponsor.

Mag Insurance Setup

Plan in effect at Redbook magazine, whereby writers and photographers working on assignment are insured for $25,000, may be adopted at two other magazine groups, according to the American Society of Magazine Photographers.

The $25,000 is paid in the event of death or certain other specified injuries, and there are several other protective clauses. Insurance plan recognizes the hazards of freelance scribblers and lensmen who have to expose themselves to the weather, exigencies of travel and tempers of reluctant interviewees, etc., while on assignment.

Denis' Cook Book

Paul Denis, former N. Y. Post and Compass columnist, has hit on a new angle in the hope of helping the American housewife make her cooking at least as attractive as her kitchen. He calls it the "Celebrity Cook Book" (Rockport Press, N. Y.), and lists recipes of everything from appetizers to nightcaps of more than 300 people whose names are news.

Recipes are well arranged, with plenty of pix to liven the scripts, even leg art. Margie Hart, for instance, gets half a page for her pot roast and half a page for her gams. Book is well indexed.

Three VARIETY muggs get listed as authorities on eating and drinking. Two of them need some practice in teamwork. Frank Scully lists a cocktail containing 50% vermouth and 50% vermouth, and Abel Green wants those who are long on vermouth and short on whiskey to be guillotined. Joe Laurie, Jr., contributes a tomato soup cake which requires 11 ingredients and an oven that will stay at 350 degrees. Scully tosses in a foreign dish called pan bagnet. But shouldn't that be pan bagnat?

Denis has hit on the best use of celebrities since Simon & Schuster used them to sell crossword puzzles nearly 30 years ago. Scul.

Israel's Radio

for transformers by hand, to save scrap iron and tin foil from which they can ingeniously make their own electronic devices.

Behind the nation's hunger for communications material is the fact that when the British pulled out and the Arabs were forced out, the radio equipment was smashed. Two years ago two 50 kw RCA transmitters, one long wave and one shortwave, were smuggled past the British blockade, but they arrived water-logged. Then, as they were being unloaded, the cranes slipped and they hurtled into the sea. When retrieved they had to be dismantled, dried, practically wire by wire, and reassembled. It's expected they'll be on the air in nine months.

Military Security

Problems besetting VOI are headed by the questions of military security in an area where attacks are feared, Enright said. Transmitter buildings have to be constructed with an eye to withstanding enemy action and sites desirable from an engineering point of view may be rejected as not defensible militarily. Similarly, since Jerusalem is in a salient projecting into Arab territory, studios, equipment, even record libraries are dispersed in less exposed cities.

Israel is unique in that alongside the VOI stations (Jerusalem, Tel Aviv and Haifa, plus two shortwave transmitters for overseas beaming), the Army has three stations of its own, directed at Israeli troops but actually getting bigger general audiences than VOI shows. It is not a militaristic setup, however, Enright explained, because the army is new, without cliques, and is a citizen army in which all Israeli men serve one month a year in uniform.

Army stations have greater mass appeal due to the fact that their programs, aired 6-10:30 p. m., are chiefly entertainment. Army picked up the best VOI shows and added a diet of pop music and artists (Danny Kaye disks are current faves, for example). By contrast, the VOI sked was mostly educational, with heavy emphasis on cultural talks. Further, VOI broke up its programs in Hebrew (spoken by 40% of the population) for airers in Arabic, French, Yiddish, Persian, Polish, German, English, etc., for those minorities.

To meet the problem of boosting VOI's audience, Enright recommended dropping of the broadcasts in other languages, which are now going out on the Army's wavelengths in the daylight hours when the Army outlets were previously silent. Enright blueprint for the next three to six months also called for trimming the talks to only two a day, with the remainder of the time devoted to more popular stanzas. Meanwhile, the cultural series are being studied for ways of making them more palatable.

Organization has also been tightened. Previous practice of announcers doubling as producers, directors, etc., has been changed to a policy of specialization, with a definite chain of command.

Chief engineer in Jerusalem, Enright related, was once a radio operator for the British. While working for the British he built a secret transmitter for the underground Jewish army, which he operated from his home at night.

During the day it was tended by his wife. To monitor her output he used a home-made set in his office, and when the signal was not strong enough would send her a message to boost the power. Since he did not have a telephone, and an Arab co-worker did, the Jew would ask the latter to phone home and relay the message, "I'm going home early tonight, turn up the gas under the potatoes." Unknowingly, the Arab, no sympathizer with the Jews, was transmitting a signal to step up the illegal Jewish transmitter. The Arab, incidentally, is now chief engineer of the hostile Transjordan network.

"Domino" and "I Get Ideas" while the reaction to his latest recording "At Last! At Last!" points to hefty returns this year. Miss Shore was repped on last year's best seller list with "Sweet Violets."

Columbia's standbys Doris Day, Jo Stafford and Frankie Laine have also come up with regular winners. Miss Day scored prominently with her etching of "Shanghai" while her album releases have topped the 250,000 sales mark. Miss Stafford is still running strong with "Shrimp Boats" and Laine's "Jezebel" and "Jealousy" are holding over from last season as sock platter bets.

Billy Eckstine continues to pay off for M-G-M Records. It's anticipated that his current "Weaver of Dreams" will repeat last year's click "I Apologize." The Les Brown-Ames Bros. tandem for Coral remains a top entry for the diskery. Their etching of "Undecided" is still rolling after a smash sales year in '51. Although Decca's perennials didn't come up with any smash hits last year, the company is rolling high this year with Louis Armstrong's "A Kiss To Build A Dream On." Guy Lombardo and the Andrews Sisters are also showing strength on current releases.

SCULLY'S SCRAPBOOK

By Frank Scully

Hollywood, Jan. 29.

I have an idea. And if I had the push-push click-click of Sid Skolsky, I could get it into production immediately and watch everybody else make a million dollars out of it—all save Skolsky. So rather than go through all that I am tossing it into the open arena.

It is nothing less than "Jolson Lives Again," and I got the idea from reading "Mistah Jolson," the life of Harry Jolson, as told by Alban Emley. It's as honest a biography as I've read in years.

My idea would put Larry Parks back in biz. It would also clear up a lot of current mythology concerning the Jolsons and possibly contribute a bit of philosophy and understanding to the feudalism that passes for civilization in show biz. Nobody ever understood Al Jolson better than Harry Jolson. Nobody had more fights with him. Nobody made up with him more often. They began as devoted brothers and after many splitups they ended their days as inseparable as they began.

So many stories have become The Jolson Story that by now the true story becomes an original—romantic, dramatic, pathetic, too. Actually, Al's right name was not even Yoelson. It was Hesselson. In the village of Srednike, a little Lithuanian town without a railroad, up the river from Kovno and Tilsit, where Napoleon of France and Alexander of Russia signed a treaty on a raft in midstream, first Harry and then, three years later, Al were born.

Name-changing was part of the technique of survival in those days. The Hesselsons had five sons. Under the law only one on was exempt from military service. With the aid of bribed officials one son permitted to change his name to Yoelson. He grew up to become Moses Reuben Yoelson, the only son of parents who would have been impossible to find if an official search had been made. He switched from opera to the synagogue, became a devout rabbi and cantor, fathered five children and lived to be 90.

The fourth child was called Hirsch, and Hirsch's first memory is of a beautiful day in Srednike, May 26, 1885, when his father led him to his mother's room. She was lying in bed, which was strange to Hirsch, because it was mid-day. By her side was a small bundle. She smiled.

"Hirsch," said the father, "here is a little brother for you to play with and to care for and protect. His name is Asa. Because of his lusty voice I'm sure he will become a great cantor."

"There'll Be Some Changes Made."

Hirsch eventually became Harry, Asa became Al. Yoelson was changed to Joelson and eventually, to fit theatre marquees, when every letter counted, it was changed to Jolson when their act became Jolson, Palmer and Jolson. That gave each partner six letters.

Harry's story of how their father escaped from Russia into East Prussia on a lumber raft, his being lost thereafter to his family for four years, and his eventually cabling from the New World one word, "Come," is the best version of all to date.

Their boyhood in 19th Century New York and their father's elevation to a synagogue in Washington, D. C., where their first tragedy befell them—the death of Mama Yoelson—was perhaps clearer to Harry than Al, though Al seemed to have remembered it best when it came to singing about it. Without a mother the boys, in Rabbi Yoelson's opinion, were fast becoming loafers—and that's lower than lepers to an orthodox Jew.

Harry was the first runaway. He got to New York. Derelict kids were not bothered in those days—unless tied in with crime. He sold papers, became a capper, a come-on, for a knife peddler, outlived his welcome at the Newsboy's Home and was fast heading for oblivion when one day he heard his name called, turned and ran into the arms of Runaway No. 2—Al.

From now on Harry had to provide for two. He couldn't do it. Relatives sent Al back to Washington. Al was picked up by cops in Baltimore, not as Al but as Hirsch, for whom a police call was out.

Al used to say later when he wanted Harry to do him a favor, "Don't forget, I once did time for you."

There is no doubt that in their teens Harry was the big shot of this strange dynasty which began as pure Jewish in Srednike, Russia, and ended 70 years later as mixed American in Hollywood.

Tossed on the conveyor belt of life before Al, Harry had perfected a style of singing which subsequently became common to both of them. For this he had to spend the last half of his life under the ironical charge of an imitator.

Now that all those who played most important parts in the Jolson story are dead, except Harry, and Harry can still sing, it seems to me that all Columbia spent preparing the third Jolson story can be salvaged on a much higher level.

When I was a kid one of the most touching ballads of two-bit vaude ran something like this:

> "Brothers, brothers, brothers are we,
> We were kissed and caressed on the same mother's knee,
> Good luck had you, misfortune for me,
> Brothers, brothers, brothers, are we."

I doubt if there is a family in all America that this sort of sadness has not touched. It seems incredible that similar genes should come to such far different ends. That two brothers of almost identical physical appearance, talent and environment should end their days millions of dollars apart remains an enigma that none of this earth can ever completely explain away. And there really is no need for their explaining it to each other, if they take the view that it's all ashes on a windy day and that fame itself is not important but how we treat each other.

Two-Way Al

Al blew hot and cold more often than anybody else, I suspect, in his time. One day he would say, "Why should I save money? I am the greatest entertainer in the world. Some day I'll be a millionaire. You watch and see if I'm not right." The next day he was sure his voice was deserting him and he would soon be a deaf-mute, with a tin watch and a tin cup.

Harry, on the other hand, remained on an even keel practically all his life. He climbed steadily up the vaudeville ladder to become a headliner billed as "the operatic coon" in America and as "America's singing comedian" in England, and stayed up till the treadmill stopped moving and vaudeville died.

Twice in their lives, after a quarrel, Harry and Al Jolson met by accident and forgot completely the cause of their separation. In both instances, according to Harry, Al was the worst transgressor, and the first to ask for forgiveness. Twice as a beau geste he gave Lillian and Harry a new car to show how sorry he really was.

Al ran through a lot of marriages, but Harry and Lillian remained happily married for 32 years—until her death, in fact.

Lillian cured Harry of swearing, but it's a fact that Al was never cured of it by anybody. "To all this I give the answer that if any of us were perfect he would not be here upon this earth," writes Harry. "For our hasty words and many disagreements I had his full forgiveness and he had mine. I like to remember him as he was when I first looked into his tiny face in Srednike. I think of the fabulous figure that he became, and as one who made the final sacrifice to bring a moment of entertainment and encouragement to our struggling fighting men abroad. I like to think of him as he was when he again found his brilliant career and knew the happiness of a lovely wife, children and a home. I like to think of him changing from boyhood to manhood."

the past. They feel the time isn't ripe to break those precedents now.

Promotes TV Competitior

Murray acknowledged the fact that, in promoting the film industry, he's also promoting competition for TV, including his own show. In effect, by ballyhooing to the public the good films they can see in their local filmeries, he'll be telling them to leave their video receivers to patronize pictures. This idea, carried to its extreme, could also be harmful to his sponsor, Anheuser-Busch. Murray, however, voiced conviction that there are enough people in the country to provide an audience for any good entertainment. "In addition," he said, "entertainment is a selective business—well all have to stand or fall on our own merits. It's going to be the survival of the fittest and I'm not afraid of the competition."

Show itself, which is being scripted by Jean Holloway, will trace the development of the industry from Thomas A. Edison's earliest studio, the "Black Maria," down through the emergence of films as an entertainment form and finally to their present stature as a new art form. Among the live talent to appear, Buster Keaton will team with Murray to reprise the first sketch he did in films, with Murray essaying the role played originally by the late Fatty Arbuckle. Ramon Novarro will also be on the show, along with Ruby Keeler, who will reprise her "42d Street" dance routine.

Murray will have clips from his own collection of film memorabilia, and also from the Museum of Modern Art, N. Y. Among the feature product he'll show will be scenes from "The Awful Truth" and "You Can't Take It With You," plus perhaps "Jolson Story," "All the King's Men" and "Death of a Salesman (all Columbia), and Disney's "Snow White," plus the first Mickey Mouse cartoon ever turned out by Disney.

government would use the time before September to consider economies which may well have to be made in the future. Cuts disclosed by the official include a limitation on production of radio and TV receivers, fewer imports, halving of tourist allowance and charges of health services.

Overall effect of the austerity measures, observers believe, will be to raise living costs with an inevitable blow at the boxoffice. Meantime, the budget date has been fixed as of March 4, a month earlier than usual, when further economies are anticipated. Government is also expected to i troduce a new admission tax pla and-facilities-for-all-candidates" provisions as laid down by th FCC, is cueing some headaches among the webs' time clearance boys.

The NBC "political pattern" scheduled for announcement this week recommends, for example, that no single sponsored show should encounter more than two pre-emptions through the pre-convention TV campaigning. Thus, with the network enjoying an SRO status, it would necessitate relegating a candidate to an offbeat fringe period, should he desire a regularly scheduled series.

There is even greater apprehension, however, over the snarls likely to develop over candidate's demand for choice middle-of-the-evening time, which, if exercised to meet the exacting "equal tim and facilities" requirements of the FCC, may have alarming repercussions and throw the commercial rosters into turbulence. If supporters of Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, for example, put in a bid for the Tuesday at 9 (following Berle) half-hour period, in order to get a maximum carryover audience, it would be obligatory for the network to offer the same time period to the other candidates—assuming they wanted it and could afford to pick up that kind of a tab.

In the event that all the candidates clamor for the same time (Tuesday at 9) segment, it's recognized that it would put NBC in an awkward, embarrassing spot with the pre-empted client, which happens to be Procter & Gamble. And P & G spends more money in radio and television than any other bankroller. On the other hand, NBC has no alternative but to make the time available to all candidates desiring it, in order to get off the FCC hook.
